DR. D. R. CAMPBELL AND ELDER A. CAMPBELL

REPLY OF DR. D. R. CAMPBELL

ELDER A. CAMPBELL — Dear Sir: Your last response, published in the Harbinger for March, is before me. Let me briefly notice it as it deserves. It presents your scholarship and your candor in a sorry light.

Respecting your scholarship, shall I tell you that, through your dulness, you have utterly misconceived the point of my illustrative example, and consequently have most ludicrously stultified yourself. By the mere presentation of my first examples, "preached the duty of immersion for the remission of sins," I designed to expose and set aside the false principle upon which you attempt to extract the dogma of baptismal remission from the words, "preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." This you did not perceive, but stupidly enough conceived that my object was to illustrate the import of the passages, whereas my obvious and avowed object was to illustrate the falsity of your principle of criticism! You went to work, and what cutting and slashing!—at what? Simply at your own dull misconception—your own stupid, uncritical ignorance! It was a ludicrous mistake, to be sure. Many have perceived it, and many a smile it has been impossible to repress. What critical powers!—what learned labor!—to do what? Simply what I had hoped every one of ordinary perspicuity would intuitively do for himself the moment the two sentences were seen side by side, namely, pronounce them so unlike, though grammatically the same, and substantially the same in sense, at least in your estimation; that to get your dogma of baptismal remission out of both, you have to abandon your critical principle with respect to one of them!

Your criticism is, that the passage cannot teach that repentance secures the remission of sins, inasmuch as the word is in the genitive case; that, on the contrary, it must teach that remission of sins is secured in baptism, inasmuch as baptism is in the accusative; that is, that the only admissible relation in the case is to connect eis aphesin amartion with baptisma—"for the remission of sins," with baptism in the accusative, never with repentance in the genitive! From this you laid down the principle, that any sentence having a transitive verb, followed by an accusative, and that followed by a genitive, and that, again, followed by "for the remission of sins," or a like phrase, must be interpreted by connecting the last phrase with the accusative, not with the genitive, as expressing the condition on which the end is to be obtained. The example I furnished is precisely such a sentence as your criticism calls for, and yet to make out your dogma from it, you are compelled to connect the phrase, "for the remission of sins," with the word immersion, which is in the genitive, and not with the word duty, which is in the accusative; and thus you contradict and abandon your own boasted criticism and the principle which underlies it. To allege that the mere grammatical structure for which your criticism calls, necessitates such a meaning as you give the passage in question, appeared to me so palpably preposterous, that I thought it would be only necessary to cite the familiar words, "preached the duty of immersion for the remission of sins," to dispel your delusion for ever. It never occurred to me that any labored argument would be necessary, so self-evident did the matter appear. But you have labored most strenuously to show, that anybody else would see at a glance, that though the illustrative example possesses all the grammatical attributes your criticism calls for, and is in this respect precisely like the sentence in dispute, it is yet unlike it—you have not shown in what respect, nor do I believe you know—so unlike it, indeed, as to stultify and overthrow your rule. For this gratuitous service, bearing the Billingsgate abuse interspersed with it—occasioned, and therefore to be forgiven, by your mistaking your own ignorance for mine—I feel disposed to thank you. But do you see your own self-stultification?

With a mental obtuseness equally astonishing, you also misconceive the point in my second illustrative example. You seem not to have the slightest idea of what its true design is, nor of what it is in the disputed passage that needs illustration. Your eye seems to be so completely filled with the word baptism, that you are incapable of seeing anything else in the sentence. All your criticism and abuse of my illustration proceeds on the mistaken assumption that it has special reference to baptism. But instead of this its whole design is, to show the relation of "repentance" to "remission of sins." To this use it is intentionally restricted and its correctness defended. It seems impossible to get this fact into your head. Let me try it again.

In the sentence, "preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," the word repentance is in the genitive as it is in the Greek. "In my example, 'The commissioner urged the recording of the vote for the enlargement of the canal,' the word vote is in the genitive case. The question is simply, what secures the enlargement of the canal? Is it the vote, which is in the genitive?—or is it the act of the recording, which is in the accusative? The vote, certainly; the recording only gives formal evidence of the existence of the vote as a fact. So repentance, which is in the genitive, secures remission of sins, and baptism is the formal outward manifestation of this repentance. In giving the import of this illustration, though ignorant of its design, though giving it under an intense jealousy as to its bearing on your favorite dogma of baptismal regeneration, you repeatedly and uniformly show, without being conscious of it, that the vote is that alone which secures "the enlargement of the canal," and not the recording of the vote. But if the vote, which is expressed in the genitive case, secures "the enlargement," as you repeatedly affirm, is not the conclusion fully warranted by the illustration, that repentance, which is also expressed in the genitive, secures remission of sins? What, then, becomes of all your fustian criticism about the genitive case? Your blundering misconceptions, your unconscious self-refutations, taken together with your egotistic pretensions, degrade you as a claimant to respectability for critical acumen among Christian scholars. Were you endowed with common sensibilities, and did you possess as large a share of modesty as you do of vanity, such ignorant, and yet such confident blundering, would oppress you with an insupportable mortification. Be thankful that you are "not as other men," at least in this respect!

As a specimen of your uncandid and unscholarly inconsistency—originating, perhaps, in ignorance—I call your attention to the fact of your misapplied abuse of me in a previous response, for speaking of repentance as "a genitive case" instead of a possessive, while in this last response you gravely tell us yourself that it is a genitive and not an "English possessive!" Don't you think yourself sufficiently cool in this little affair? Who can respect such a critic? The feeling of disrespect is in danger of reaching beyond the critic to the man. May it not be hoped, that you will soon abandon your shallow pretensions to accuracy and scholarship, and curb your foul tongue within the limits of decency, and prevent such a result?

In view of your charlatanry, your empiricism, I no longer wonder at the humiliating ordeal you have been made to pass within the last few years. Your vain assumptions and pretensions to a scholarship which you were found not to possess, occasioned the mortification. That was a sad day for your pride, when your work came into comparison with that of true scholars in the hands of competent judges! From that moment the long worn mask was removed, the long kept-up delusion was dispelled. The stern stuff of true critical knowledge, of accurate scholarship, was discovered not to be there! It was found that whatever Alexander Campbell claimed or pretended to be, he is not a scholar. He has had to learn that, beyond the pale of his own communion, the days of fustianism are gone. He has been weighed in the balances and found wanting. His followers and himself are obliged to submit, and endure the mortification quietly, and without a murmur. He had created false expectations among them; they have been in the habit of indulging in the most fulsome boasting of his critical attainments; the mortification is, therefore, the more intense. Nor is there any escape from it, except by his assuming a modest silence on the subject of scholarship, and quietly devoting himself to such duties as lie within the sphere of his competency. For him to assume to read lectures to any one on a subject in which he himself proves to be so radically defective, is a burlesque on propriety. It can only recoil on his own head and that of his denomination. It might be in place, indeed, for him to improve his own sad experience, and exhort his brethren, who may have imbibed too much of his own spirit, to addict themselves to the patient study of the elementary principles of true learning, if they would enjoy the permanent honour of being ranked among true Christian scholars.

It is worthy of note, that throughout this preliminary discussion, it has been impossible to drag you from behind the thicket of your vaunted pretensions as a critic. It matters not how I may have exposed your theological inconsistencies, and how earnestly I may have urged you to reconcile them, not not a word could I get out of you except on this criticism. The logical inconsistencies of your theology, English readers could perceive, and any honest attempt you might make to harmonize them, they could appreciate. Why not gratify them by a display of your logical skill on points within their comprehension—matters which have really perplexed them, and by which they are still greatly embarrassed? The queries which I put to you in my last, every one sees, demand explanation. All honest men feel that they need explanation, and that it devolves on you to endeavour to furnish it. If you see no difficulty in comprehending and believing them as they are, you must not measure other men's perceptions by the unquestioned dulness of your own. Other men only wish to cherish a rational faith; you may be satisfied with a blind and inquisitive one. If you mean to claim respect for, or belief in, what you profess to teach, it is incumbent on you to endeavour to make your teachings plain and consistent. I am aware that Paul enjoins that we eat what is set before us, "asking no questions for conscience' sake," but I would regard it an unwarrantable extension of its application to require us to swallow whatever monster you may be disposed to serve up for us—hide, hair, hoofs, ears, diseased parts and all, in unbroken silence and in unsuspecting acquiescence! Come out, then, from behind your ignorant, arrogant rubbish of pretended scholarship, and discuss what the people want to know, and can know, if properly discussed. You have thus far made a pretence of it to shelter you from fatal exposure on these exceedingly vulnerable points. You know and feel your inability to satisfy a discerning public as to their tenableness and consistency.

You say I dare not meet you in an oral discussion. I say that such is the inconsistency of your views, that you dare not so explain and define them as to prepare for either an oral or written one. You are already whipt; and all men who have watched the progress of the correspondence believe it, except such as may not believe that you are "the first scholar in America!"—Your's, &c.

D. R. CAMPBELL.

RESPONSE TO DR. D. R. CAMPBELL.

DR. D. R. CAMPBELL—Dear Sir: Let me beg you to be calm. Another article like this last of your's will ruin you. May I ask you to re-consider it? Is it not unworthy of your position, both in matter and in manner. I know it passes some very rough judgments upon myself, and uses some very severe and coarse language in expressing them, and I am very sorry that you have inflicted so severe an injury upon yourself as you must suffer in the feelings of disgust, which I hear everywhere expressed against such vulgar ventings of your rage. Rest assured, that save the natural regret which I feel, at finding myself the occasion of such humiliating displays of clerical coarseness, neither your low, nor your high flings, move me in the least. If brutal abuse, vulgar satire, coarse epithets, unmannerly ridicule, malignant irony—one or all, could deter me from the defence of the truth, I had long since been silenced. But I thank God, that He has given me a power within, stronger than these engines of my enemies without, and that I, too, if I do not smile, can, at least, pity and bear it all.

I feel, that I need say but very little, in reply to this climax of your exasperated resentment. You must have been greatly moved, or you would not have thrown yourself on such desperate courses. But consider,—It does not relieve a man in your position, to indulge in such bitterness of passion. It is out of character in a scholarly clergyman, and I trust, you will acknowledge yourself ashamed of it.

Equally idle would it be to point out again the confused jargon by which you labour to cover up the mistakes I exposed in your efforts at classic criticism. These are sufficiently clear to every one who, having read, will or can exercise an independent judgment in the case. You labour under a sad delusion, if you think I did not see "the point and drift of your illustrative example." I not only saw the "point," but broke it—I not only perceived the "drift," but turned it, with all the rubbish it bore, back upon its source. You say, your "obvious and avowed object was to illustrate the falsity of your (i. e. my) principle of criticism." Well, was not the sentence under criticism a Greek sentence—and did you not attempt to illustrate it by an English sentence, and did I not show you, that, through ignorance of Greek, you had taken an English sentence, which, when correctly translated into Greek, was not like the Greek sentence we were criticising, and that, therefore, it could not critically illustrate the meaning? Yet, you persist in saying, that your "example is precisely such a sentence as my criticism calls for!" Let me again tell you, it is precisely no such thing, but that when reduced into Greek, neither does the word duty occur in the accusative, nor the word immersion in the genitive!

But, to make it still more evident that your illustration is no critical test, let me ask you—if "preach the duty of immersion for the remission of sins" means "to preach immersion for the remission of sins," then would not "preach the duty of the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," mean, by parity of construction, "to preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins?" And if so, what has been gained by introducing the word "duty?" The fact is, in all such expressions as this, with which you have so much confused yourself—the word "duty" is a sort of apposition to the word related to it by the preposition of. To preach the "duty of immersion," is the same thing as to preach "immersion, as a duty." The "duty of piety"—the same as "piety, as a duty." But the "baptism of repentance" is not the same thing as "repentance as a baptism." The conversion by apposi-tion shows the nonsense of your critical jugglery.

Equally absurd, could I again, and in other ways, show your other illustrative examples to be ; but what need of this reiteration of what, I am sure, is already sufficiently plain to every one ! I may be dreadfully "obtuse," but what must be that obtuseness, which even my dull vision has not only discovered, but pointed out to the satisfaction of every one, even moderately acquainted with English ! We think it best to let this matter stand just where we have placed it. Further exposure, it is said, would most probably excite a sympathy against me — and while we must vindicate the truth — we should not retaliate unkindness.

I do not know, Dr. Campbell, that I should have thought it worth while to have noticed this last outburst of your mortified resentment, had it not been for the inconsiderate and injurious attempt you have made to involve my supposed labours, in connection with the American Bible Union, in this controversy. In no respect can this course be justified. Regarded as to its intended bearings upon me, it can only be understood, as the gratuitous expression of vindictive personality. It is gratuitous, because not only are your statements made without warrant or authority, as to their substance, but the whole allusion is foreign to the controversy in which we are engaged. In my criticisms upon your critical ability, I have confined myself strictly to the points at issue between us, in this correspondence. You surely had enough to do, and much more than you have done, or, as I believe, can do, to reply to my strictures — to vindicate yourself on the points under examination. Why lug in an insinuation without authority, contrary to fact, and totally foreign to the topics under discussion ? It could only be from a malignant design to injure me. But your diversions only involve you in worse predicaments. It is a shameful subterfuge, to which I am satisfied, nothing but your desperate rage could have driven you. But it shall not cover you. Dull as my powers of perception may seem to you, through the muddy medium of your maddened vision, I can still discern the signs of malice, when thus unguardedly exposed. Regarded as to its bearings upon the Bible Union, your course is indelicate, officious, and disparaging. As a member of the Bible Union, and heretofore somewhat prominent among its friends, a delicate sense of propriety would have forbid you making public allusions to the agencies and labours of that body, which the managers themselves had not thought proper to officially announce. They have never announced to the public my name, in connection with anything they have either adopted or rejected. The work of their labourers has been their private property, and their publications have been made upon their own judgment. If they have condemned any work, as unworthy of publication, they have done so upon grounds and for reasons satisfactory to themselves, but in no way exposed or referred to the knowledge or the criticism of the public. What they have thrown before the public, they have published upon their own judgment as to its merits. In the light of these facts, how does your conduct appear ? In proclaiming me, as one of the revisers employed by the Bible Union, you have, as a member of that body, gone behind the scenes, and announced that which it has never pleased them to make known, and thus shown yourself wanting in a delicate sense of honorable propriety, and at the same time, licentiously officious ; and in the unmanly way in which you seek to belittle the work that you thus ascribe to me, you are, to the full extent of your influence, throwing disparaging odium upon the managers of the Bible Union themselves. More than this : — To the full extent to which the uncalled for outrage upon propriety may excite jealousy or distrust among the friends of revision, as to the fairness or the ability of its management, to that extent fully, as you well know, will this artful insinuation of yours injure the cause of the Bible Union itself. How can you be a friend to a cause, which you are thus willing and ready to disparage, for the sake of throwing a cowardly slur at me !

It is true, you do not mention the Bible Union, nor specify any particular work which they have rejected or published, as mine. But this makes your insinuation all the meaner. You would wink, and nod, and mutter, what you still felt it would be shameful and false openly to say, hoping, at the same time, that everybody would understand your allusion, or, perhaps, guess it to be worse than you even dare insinuate; while you would leave the implied charge so indefinite, that it would be very difficult for me to repel it. You prate flippantly about "definiteness," and "indefiniteness," but what are we to think of your innuendoes on this subject? Will the reader recur to them, and with me, ask Dr. Campbell what "humiliating ordeal I have been made to pass within the last few years?" You do not state when it was found that I did not possess the scholarship that I so vainly assumed to have? You did not say "who made the discovery?" You did not disclose. When "did my work come into comparison with that of true scholars, in the hands of competent judges?" You do not tell us. Who are these "true scholars in the hand of competent judges (!)" You do not name them. What "work of mine," do you refer to? You do not designate it. All is darkness.

Yet you can be understood. Even my dull eyes can see through you. You know that the impression is abroad, that I have been engaged in assisting to accomplish that noblest labour of the age, the Revision of the Holy Scriptures, and that our readers will readily understand your allusion to refer to this. That with many, who know but little about the proceedings of the Bible Union, your insinuations will be construed to mean, that I have offered to the Board a "revision" which has been submitted to their criticism, and rejected, because deficient in scholarship, &c. But let me say emphatically here, and by privilege too, that if any should thus conclude, the insinuation is absolutely false. No work of mine performed for the Bible Union has ever been rejected by them. Again, you knew that there are many who think that "the Acts of the Apostles," as published by the American Bible Union, was "revised" by me — and that with these, perhaps, or some of them, you could excite the suspicion, that some way or other, known to you, the final "revisers" had examined it, and condemned it, as deficient in scholarship, &c. Let me say emphatically again, and by privilege too, that if any one has come to this conclusion, it, too, is absolutely false. On this point, I am happy to be able to place before you and our readers, the following letter, addressed to Prof. Pendleton, by Bro. Wyckoff, from whom, he has also liberty to publish it.

"NEW YORK, June 16, 1859.

PROFESSOR WM. K. PENDLETON, Bethany, Virginia.—My dear Brother: The plan of the Bible Union does not allow to the Board or its Officers, the privilege of adopting or rejecting any revision. Nor is any such privilege exercised, or expected to be exercised, by the Final Committee. They are bound to examine each, and to derive from each all the benefit that they can in the final revision.

The Revision of Acts was published about a year ago. It is in the same category as our other published revisions of the New Testament. The chief object, as you know, of all these publications, is to call forth criticisms which may conduce to elucidate the truth. No judgment upon these criticisms, or upon the revisions which called them forth, is ever given by the Board or its Officers. We have no knowledge, and no reason to believe, that the Final Committee have yet taken Acts in hand; and, if they have, we should not expect from them any opinion upon the published revision, or any other revision of the book placed in their hands. Whatever they find in it superior to the common version, and incapable of improvement in their hands, they are bound to retain and incorporate in the final revision.

No statement at variance with these views has ever been made by us. — Very affectionately, W. H. WYCKOFF, Corresponding Secretary.*

Thus, all the ground is swept from under your insinuations, and upon what do you rest them? Whatever work I have done for the Bible Union has been fully honored; they have rejected nothing that I have offered; and I wish the world to know that I have the fullest confidence in its managers and their management. They have shown me no disrespect, but the highest honour—they have caused me no "mortification," but, on the contrary, are continually affording me the greatest satisfaction and pleasure by their noble, impartial, and disinterested devotion to the great work which, under the providence of God, a generous public have confided to them.

* I am requested by Professor Pendleton to say, that this letter was elicited by him, as a friend to the Bible Union, and that it is furnished simply, as a statement of facts, which all should know.

Let no friend of mine be alienated by these poisoned javelins, thrown from the dark, at a cause so good and great as this. I can bear them—let no one else suffer.

It ought to satisfy you, Dr. Campbell, to know that so far as the revision of the Acts is concerned, the judgment of the Board in deeming it worthy of publication, has been satisfactorily endorsed by the large circulation it has received, and the still increasing demand for it. I am informed that they have had to order a new edition very recently. Let me assure you, that from this source, and in connection with this work, I am all unconscious of having suffered any "mortification." The "sad day for my pride," which you throw at me with such taunting exultation, exists only in your own imagination. I have never experienced it. There is need for your sympathies nearer home!

And now, Sir, I have a few words of parting. I invited you more than a year ago, to an oral discussion. You declined it, and tendered a written discussion. I gave you, what I deemed sufficient reasons, why such a discussion would not only not accomplish the good ends I desired, but showed you that it was rendered unnecessary by my past writings, and at the same time, that it would be impracticable for me to conduct it, promptly and regularly, owing to the necessity laid upon me by the burning of Bethany College, to be much of my time from home. The force of this, all will see, when I state that your letter given in this August number of the Harbinger was published in the Recorder, April 6th, and is now noticed by me at my earliest opportunity! What interest could attach to such a discussion?

When I invited you to an oral discussion, I was induced to do so by the good opinion of your candour and fairness, which I had received from our mutual friends in Kentucky. I knew but little of you personally. I now know you better. This correspondence has established, that as a scholar, your acquaintance with Greek is crude and superficial—as a gentleman, your bearing is coarse and vulgar—as a Baptist, you are shy and wary in admitting or defending their principles and practice—as a disputant, you are evasive and discourteous—and as a would-be leader in Baptist ranks, a crafty charlatan, a mere clerical pretender, of limited learning, much narrow and sectarian policy, dogmatism arrogant enough for the blindest bigotry, and recklessness in assertion sufficient to supply the widest deficiency in other requisites of a partizan debater. With such a character, I have no desire to debate anything, in any way, either orally or by writing, and therefore, dismiss you, in this respect, at once and for ever, as unworthy of any further consideration. Should I at any time henceforth notice you at all it will only be to expose your perversions and injurious inuendoes, fabricated out of a mischievous spirit of mortified pride, that may yet provoke you, in a moment of unguarded passion, to show, still further to the public, to what low artifices clerical dignity can stoop, and how far beneath the gentleman, the merely sectarian partizan may sometimes fall.

Till such necessity shall arise, I bid you a final farewell. A. C.

P.S. Why do you persist in representing me as unwilling to answer your artful questions, designed to make me appear inconsistent with myself, and yet withhold from the readers of the Recorder, my note to you, printed along with my last response, proposing and offering to answer them all from my published writings? If you must have written replies to them, I am still willing and ready to have these searched out, neatly copied, and forwarded to you. If your object is really to discover the truth in these premises, you cannot object to this. Again, I ask, will you have them published in the Recorder? You shall have your quibbles answered to your heart's content, and greatly oblige me by rendering to me the common justice that I thus again demand of you. It will be an easy, and for me, a most grateful work, and on your part, an act of generosity and fairness that will, doubtless, as much surprise as gratify many readers.

Truth carries the prestige of victory, and there is no end to its triumphs.

Science, to be useful, must be seen and understood through the light of God's word.

CHRIST'S CHURCH IDENTIFIED.—No. IX.

"Upon this rock will I build my church."

RELIGIOUS partyism or sectarianism, as it exists in our self-styled Christendom, is a sin of fearful magnitude. Its evils should be called legion, for they are many. I cannot better present them in one group, than in the language of the Report of the Christian Union Convention.

"We solemnly believe," say the members of this convention, "that sectarianism, wherever it exists, or under whatever circumstances found, is a sin of the first magnitude. It is a daring encroachment upon the Divine prerogatives—a bold assumption of unauthorised and irresponsible power—a determined war on the divinely-constituted arrangements of the church of Christ—an open and a perpetual infraction of the rights of conscience—a ruthless sundering of the ties of spiritual consanguinity—and is utterly and for ever repugnant to the genius of the Gospel, and every feature of the Christian system. It sets up new and antagonistic interests in the kingdom of God, which are made paramount to the common interests of Christianity—assumes the legislative functions in the church—imposes new and unauthorised tests of church membership—supersedes the divine constitution of the church by a code of laws of its own enactment—breaks up the household of faith into endless warring factions—disturbs the peace, destroys the symmetry, mars the beauty, wastes the energies, and endangers the existence of the body of Christ, by making it the seat of strife and of perennial wars—robs the followers of Christ of the distinguishing badge of discipleship—grieves the Spirit—betrays the cause to the enemy—promotes every species of error—arms infidelity with its most deadly weapon with which to assail Christianity—abets most effectually the Papal usurpation—endangers our natural and Christian rights—defeats most effectually the ends of Christian discipline—opens the doors of the church to hypocrites—creates and maintains a worthless, unevangelical, and time-serving ministry—appropriates the substance of the church to the maintenance, strengthening, and perpetuity of its own interests—stays the conquests of the cross—renders the gospel powerless—hinders the conversion of sinners—destroys the force of Christian testimony—prevents the cultivation of Heathen fields of labor, by monopolizing the services of ministers—opposes the prayer of our Lord—puts an embargo on the intellect—prohibits the increase of spiritual knowledge—obstructs the march of moral improvement—impedes all moral enterprises—checks a growth in grace—calls forth and strengthens the baser passions of fallen humanity—genders pride, aversion, and jealousy—scatters the seed of these appalling evils on Pagan lands—robs heaven of its rightful inhabitants, and peoples perdition with countless beings for whom Christ died. These we regard as some of the deadly and direful fruits of this pernicious tree. Such a tree, producing such fruits, should not, most certainly, be permitted to occupy a place in the garden of the Lord."

Now, reader, if you are not spell-bound by sectarianism, put your hand upon your bosom, and look to heaven, and as you shall answer at the last great day, ask yourself—and decide the question for eternity—is sectarianism an evangelical tree? Is it not rather the deadly upas? Do not bloody and filthy fruits cluster on all its boughs? Has it not, first or last, produced all sorts of sins, and peopled hell with unnumbered myriads? "Behold, before God, I lie not." I do verily believe, that every charge exhibited against sectarianism, in this report, can be sustained by irrefragable evidence! Observe—I say sectarianism! I know that a great multitude of the people of the sects have done much good; but this good has been the fruit of the spirit of truth, in just so far as they have been actuated by the Spirit of Christ; and in no one instance by the spirit of sectarianism! This, in every generation, has been antipodal to the Spirit of Christ—an unclean—a restless—a lying spirit, going about through dry places, seeking rest and finding none—nurturing self-righteousness—cherishing party pride and denominational selfishness—preparing brands for the eternal burning; but never did, never can, in any possible instance, operate in the purification or conversion of one human soul!

But to demonstrate that sectarianism is a sin of fearful magnitude, we need not limit ourselves to its spirit or to its fruits; the Scriptures, themselves, unmistakably testify against it. It is, beyond rational contradiction, in bold, if not diabolical antagonism to the spirit of Christ, and the whole genius of Christianity, because the Saviour, in one of the chief petitions of his valedictory prayer, poured forth his soul against it—that all who should believe through the word of the apostles might be one. Think ye that this is a good thing, against which the Saviour prayed? Is that spirit, the spirit of Christ, which Christ's spirit deprecated, with Judas, and Pilate, and the cross, and the nails, and the spear, and the crown of thorns, and all the accompaniments of a most horrible death, just before him? The Master praying against divisions, and the disciple fomenting and vindicating them! It cannot be, until truth and falsehood blend—until heaven and hell unite—until light and darkness shall be composed of congenial elements!

When schism began to manifest itself in the church at Corinth, Paul lifted up his voice against it. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same things, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." And he says, referring to their divisions, that he "would not speak unto them as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal." "For, whereas, there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men?" Envying and strife were then, as now, the fruits of division, and proofs of an abounding carnality. Are not carnality and its fruits sinful? Hence, Paul (Gal. v. 20) ranks sects—the original rendered heresies, is the word for sects—among the abominable works of the flesh, and declares that "they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." And to the church of Rome, he says, "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which you have learned; and avoid them; for they that are such, serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly, and by good words and fair speeches, deceive the hearts of the simple" (Rom. xvi. 17-18.) John, too, the beloved John, is a bold witness against sectarianism. "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out that it might be manifest that they were not all of us" (1st John ii. 19.) And Jude says, "These be they who separate themselves, sensual, not having the Spirit." Paul had exhorted the brethren "to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace"—styled by him, in another place, "the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God." When any become schismatical, and separate themselves from the apostolic church, Jude affirms that they were sensual, and had not the spirit of God. John says, "they are not of us." Paul says, they "are carnal," and alleging that "sects are a work of the flesh," declares that "they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God;" and that to be carnally minded is death;" and finally, that division makers are to be "marked and avoided," &c. What a fearful array of evidence against sects and sect-makers! It is a good thing, is it? Then put Jude, and John, and Paul, and the King of kings, and the Spirit of Truth under your feet—and if you dare to risk it, "by good words and fair speeches, continue to deceive the hearts of the simple." Put God's Word under your feet, and the blood of the everlasting covenant, and then talk of charity!—will you?

To the intelligent and unprejudiced reader, the grand characteristics of Christ's church have, it seems to me, been clearly exhibited in the preceding numbers of this essay. If the reader cannot see them, the fault must be in his eyes, not mine; for, the facts which I have presented, are, in the general, so obvious, that I cannot mistake. If I could be convinced that I might mistake in matters so plain and tangible as are those which I have presented, then I might equally mistake in reference to anything, and everything else; which would be tantamount to an inglorious plunge into universal scepticism. But I am wandering from my subject.

That we may perceive the more distinctness and sinfulness of sectarianism, I will examine, specifically, some of the charges preferred against it by the Union Convention.

1.—Its expensiveness.—In the town in which the writer resides, consisting of not more than two thousand inhabitants, there are no less than nine churches. What a squandering of the Lord's money, in the building of meeting-houses, and the paying of preachers? Two houses and two preachers would suffice for our population, were it not for our unchristian divisions; and the surplus, both of preachers and of money, might be sent to other fields of labour and of usefulness. "The silver is mine," says God, "and the gold is mine,"—"the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;" and Christians "are not their own, they are bought with a price." We are stewards of all that we have and are—God is the sole proprietor! As stewards, what use are we making of those means of well-doing with which God has entrusted us? Wasting it upon our lusts—squandering it in the building up of belligerent sects unknown to the apostles, and unauthorized in the New Covenant—prostituting it in the waging of party wars, not only against one another, but in very many instances, against the Lord and against his Christ. How many millions of the Lord's money, and what a vast amount of talent, and of influence and labour does sectarianism thus waste annually, in our own country, to say nothing of the old world! What will we say when we shall be called to give an account of our stewardship? Will it not appear that we have robbed God? Shall we not be speechless? The gossamer fabric of our sectarian excuses will fall off, and we shall, if found guilty of unfaithfulness, stand trembling in our nakedness, in the appalling presence of Him whom we have wronged. When the fiery bolt shall be driven into the souls of the guilty, and they shall hear the denunciation, "thou shalt be no longer steward," then will they learn to place a righteous estimate upon the obligations of the Christian stewardship!

2. It paralyzes the arm of discipline.
—The great mass of professors seem to have scarcely any conception of the solemnity and fearfulness of that act, by which a member of Christ's church is cut off from the body of Christ, by the authority of Christ, and consigned to the world lying in wickedness, as his only appropriate place. Surrounded, as we are, with a multitude of voluntary associations denominated evangelical; and having been educated amid the uproar and confusion of the heterogeneous principles, and defences of principles, out of which these associations have grown, and by which each each is supported, to the disparagement, and at the expense of all the others, it would be strange if the minds of men had not partaken of the general dimness and confusion. Hence, it has been no uncommon occurrence for members, when under censure, in one church, to run into another, of a different order; and sometimes immediately, or shortly after excommunication from one of our congregations, for acts of great disorder—perhaps, high-handed knavery and meanness, we have known them, as if they could change their religious principles with the same facility with which they could change their clothes, to be in a few days, or weeks, members with some of the sects, looking daggers and all sorts of impudence on those who had executed the law of Christ in excluding them; and pouring torrents of putrid vituperation on the heads of their quondam brethren, who had, perhaps, treated them with a hundred times more lenity than they deserved:—and who, being countenanced and encouraged by their new associates, never dreamed of the sore displeasure of Him whose laws they had despised, and upon whose authority they had trampled. Add to all this the fact, that the sectarian condition of Christendom engenders in the bosom of each sect, a morbid hungering for numbers, even at the expense of principle, and we need not wonder that the arm of discipline should be proportionally weakened. But had the voice of God been permitted to rule among those who professed to be the followers of Jesus, the church would have remained one; in which case, in every instance of exclusion, the excluded party would have been driven from all church relationship and privileges, into the wide perishing world; and not having any other church into which, as a city refuge, he might run, nor any altar, but the Lord's, on which he might lay hold, his circumstances of obvious and unmitigable rebellion against God, would far more probably, than under present circumstances, bring him to conviction, humility, penitence, and the church. In proportion, therefore, as sectarianism paralyzes and enervates the church, in regard to Christian discipline, without which spiritual health cannot be preserved in the body of Christ, it is a sin; and if so, a sin in the ratio of all the manifold and multifarious evils which grow out of it. Who can enumerate them? Who can calculate their temporal and eternal consequences?

3. Calls forth and strengthens the baser passions.—How much anger, hatred, evil, malice, jealousy, emulation, strife, trick, has sectarianism called into requisition! What a prolific source of artifice and hypocrisy! Each sect striving for the mastery, not over sin, but over the other sects, who can tell the amount of low cunning and legerdemain which have been the result? If only the opposition to the Reformation is taken into the account, of how many hundreds of millions of falsehoods has it been the occasion! And these, too, from the tongues of men, too holy, in their own esteem, to fellowship the objects of their vituperation. It is a humiliation to think of it. Like a lawyer employed on the wrong side, they must say something; and as, in such a case, truth would not avail, the opposite to truth has to be resorted to. It is useless to writhe, and give a fresh proof of the truth of this paragraph, by getting angry. The case is notorious. It blots and pollutes a great part of the religious literature of the last thirty years, as it regards opposition to us; and as respects the general warfare among sects, over the whole area of Christendom, since sectarianism had its birth—dips from the whitest lie, down through all the strata of evil affections and works, to the infernal fires of persecution! But the picture is too dark for my pencil. The words of gloom and of doom, which shall proceed from the mouth of Him that sitteth upon the throne, can alone do justice to this soul-revolting and heart-sickening subject!

4. It is a sad hindrance to the exer- cise of Christian love.—Take, for example, two good men—the one belonging to one denomination, and the other to another; do they love each other, as if they belonged to the same denomination? It is difficult, if not impossible, for them to do so! But let anything disagreeable intervene between the two congregations—a controversy—a contest, of any sort, for church aggrandizement, and how will the question stand? I have known preachers, of different sects, to hold, seemingly, very loving revival meetings in partnership, who, at the close, in the division of the converts, became alienated, and were never friends afterwards. The sectarian name, to those of the same sect, flings a mellow—a fascinating halo around each individual of the same party; and at the same time, a cold and murky obscurity around those of all other religious parties. The semblance of love which the sects often manifest towards each other, when in combination against us, is but a semblance! It is as when Herod and Pilate made friends! Take us out of the way, and they would box and scratch as they had done before. Without going farther into this subject at present, I think I may say, in harmony with all observation and experience, that sectarianism is a great sin, because it is a great hindrance to the free flow and full exercise of Christian love.

5. It is a fearful hindrance to the conversion of sinners.—It is so, in part, because of its diversity of contradictory doctrines—in part, because of its deficiency of love—the endless wranglings of belligerent partizans. "Union is strength, division is weakness." Sectarianism, therefore, brings only its weakness, or at least, its strength, incalculably diminished, to bear against the kingdom of Satan. When sinners could say with surprise and heart-felt admiration, in apostolic times, "See how these Christians love one another," then the Word of God ran and was glorified in their conversion. Hence it is that the Saviour prayed that his disciples might be one, that the world might believe! O, what millions are going to hell in consequence of our unsanctified and cruel divisions! But sectarianism, like all other sins, hardens the heart. Even the prayer of the Saviour fails to soften it. It is a bottomless vortex of interminable selfishness. United, we could, in a few years, carry the conquests of the cross to the ends of the earth, and cause the wilderness to be glad, and the desert to blossom as the rose. But, no! our selfishness must be gratified—our means expended in sectarian warfare. Roll on, old Heat iendom, your mil ions down to hell, while we rejoice our hearts with denominational idols!

6. It endangers our civil and religious liberty.—If the foundations of our government shall ever be sapped by the moral corruptions of our politicians; or if the iron heel of Papal despotism shall be placed upon our neck—we have the reason, in the oft repeated aphorism, "United we stand, divided we fall!" But my space is exhausted.

A. RAINES.

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH.

LETTER TO BRO. FRANKLIN.

HALLONEA, Texas, June 4, 1859.

DEAR BROTHER,—Some of the brethren seem inclined, anxious, and determined to get as close as possible to sectarianism. True, they cannot yet venture to step off the old platform—the Bible—to accomplish their cherished purpose. But it seems to me they twist, and stretch, and wrest the Scriptures somehow to make them harmonize with the views and practices of sectarianism, as, for instance, on the subjects of prayer and spiritual influence. (Speak a little louder, Bro. H.)

Some of the brotherhood seem to dread the frowns, or to be courting the smiles of sectarians. When we were few, and feeble, and persecuted, we stood in solid phalanx and battled manfully for the truth—the whole truth. Now that we are numerous, and rich, and popular, and are feared and courted by the sects, some who could not be driven by frowns and opposition, appear to be affected by flattery. Light has no affinity with darkness; truth can make no compromise with error. We have drawn the sword of the Spirit, and thrown away the scabbard. We have either to fight during the war, or basely desert our floating banner. Can we dastardly fly on the very eve of victory?

As an humble advocate of the truth, I would ever treat all men, even our bitterest opponents, with courtesy and respect; but in their errors we should show them no quarter. We cannot compromise the truth. We want no alliance with sectarianism of any name or grade. Our mission is to restore the ancient gospel and ancient order of things, and on the apostolic platform to unite the now divided and scattered people of God, in order to the ultimate conversion of the world. God has entrusted us with his truth. Let us keep it pure, unmixed with sectarian, or our own traditions.

The slightest approximation to sectarian grounds will be an injury—an insult to the truth. Let us uniformly urge the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Let us do this boldly, but affectionately, in love, giving no offence to Jew or Gentile, or to the church of God.

Sectarianism is not Christianity, although sectarians may be Christians, and many of them doubtless are; but they are not made Christians by their sectarianism, but by the truth, apart from, and in spite of sectarianism. (A little louder, if you please, Bro. H.)

I wish to be a Christian—nothing else. If I am not that, I will be nothing else. I will wear no other name. I am an "old brier." I am opposed to all the new-fangled, half-fledged, sickly, whining, sectarian, and popularity-courting schemes. I ask of the devil and all his sectarian legions and allies no quarter. I will show them none. I have no authority from my Captain-General to show them any. Till he bids me hold, I am into the work. I go for the truth, flat-footed, bald-headed, and whole-hearted. When I fall, I hope to fall with my armour on, sword in hand, and the name of Jesus inscribed on my banner. I can't explain away the truth—I will not do it. I can't soften down the heaven-received temper of my two-edged sword. No, Sir, I cannot muffle the drum and choke up the bugle. Nor would I needlessly nor imprudently brandish the sword of controversy, or roll the ball of strife, but would ever be ready to defend the old Jerusalem, day of Pentecost gospel, against the attacks of any man, all men; to attack all sin and sectarianism, and carry the war—into Africa. "Kind words, but hard arguments." (A little louder, Bro. H.)

Bro. Franklin, I believe your positions in the main are right. In a few unimportant points I may differ somewhat from you. But this makes me like you none the less. I love a man, full grown, bold, independent, whole-hearted, afraid of nothing but to do wrong. God bless you.

My little sheet is full, and I have not reached the main point I had before me when I sat down to write you. It is yet before before me—how far I cannot tell. Battle on for God and his pure truth, fellow soldier, and may God sustain you! Farewell!

B. F. HALL.

Thank you, Bro. Hall.

B. FRANKLIN.

"CHRIST IS NOT GOD."

THE Harbinger, for the month of August, contains an article by W. T. H. entitled: "Christ's Religion—its Basis." That our holy religion has the Messiahship and Divinity of Jesus as its basis, I sincerely believe; but that Christ is God, as asserted at the head of that article, I cannot believe; because it is, in my humble opinion, not only contrary to the plain teachings of Jesus, but also opposed to the dictates of revelation and reason. If there be a truth in the volume of revelation, which is more clearly and emphatically taught than another, it is that Christ is not God. With all due deference to the opinions of W. T. H. I humbly submit a few remarks, as subversive of his theory, hoping their defects, if there be any, he will endeavour to show.

First, then, if Christ is God, follows it not that what is said of one will also be true when applied to the other? Christ is called the Son of God, the sent of God, the Mediator between God and man, and that God raised him up from the dead. Will this language hold true, if applied to the supreme Jehovah? "Whatever is indicated by the term 'the Word,' it must have existed prior to creation, since it created all things; therefore, it must be uncreated, eternal, having the attributes of God." Will W. T. H. endeavour, by some logical process, to show how he comes at the conclusion of his therefore? Where would have been the disqualifications of the Word, supposing it to have existed ten thousand years prior to creation? It does not follow that because Jesus possessed the attributes of God, that he was God. His power and attributes were delegated unto him, himself being judge. He possessed the attribute of life, but this, he tells us, was given unto him by God. "For as the Father hath the life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, and hath given him authority to execute judgment, because he is the Son of Man." Read the 5th chapter of John's Gospel, from the 19th to the 31st verse, and show me how such language, by any just rules of interpretation, can be made to agree with the sentiment that "Christ is God." "And now, Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was," &c. From these, and a few other quotations, he infers the absolute eternity of the Word. The language, I think, will favour no such conclusion, when interpreted according to our Saviour's design and purpose for which he uttered it. I will give W. T. H. for his mature consideration, an exposition by an eminent individual.

"It has been too hastily and erroneously concluded from this part of Christ's prayer, that he is asking Almighty God to bestow upon him something of which he had been in possession before the world was; but which he had voluntarily relinquished when he had his birth from his mother Mary. How little foundation there is for such a conclusion will appear by attending to the following circumstances, pointed out by our Lord himself in this prayer, viz.:—1, The date and commencement of that glory which he requests. 2, His manner of speaking concerning the share which his disciples were to have with him in it. 3, The nature of the glory itself. For 1, He himself says, verses 4-5, 'I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do : and now, O Father, glorify thou me,' &c. This shows that the glory he prayed for was to be subsequent to the faithful discharge of his duty to God in this life, and the reward of it. He declares the same, Luke xxiv. 26, 'Ought not the Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory.' And so, also, Peter i. 10-11, 'Of which salvation the prophets have enquired, searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified before hand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.' So that this glory was something hitherto unpossessed and future. 2, Verse 22, He says, 'The glory which thou gavest me I have given them.' Observe his words carefully. The glory that he speaks of, God, he says, had given to him. Not that it was already bestowed upon him : for then there would have been no occasion to pray for it. But the Heavenly Father had promised to bestow it, and therefore, he speaks of it as already given, because, by the promise of God, which can never fail, it was as fully his own as if he had been in actual possession of it. And in like sort he had given this glory, he saith to his disciples, i. e. promised it to them, (John xiv. 1-2-3, and at other times) had given it them by promise, and thereby ensured it to them as much as if they had been already possessed of it. And, therefore, as our Lord says, that his Father had given him the glory he prays for, though it was not yet bestowed, but only promised to him, so does he say that he had glory with God before the world was. Not that he had really been in possession of it before the world was, but because it was destined for him by God, known unto whom are all his works from the beginning. In the same manner, 2 Tim. i. 9, Eph. i. 4, God is said to have chosen us, and to have given us his grace, before the foundation of the world, before the world began, although we had then assuredly no being. And Mat. xxv. 84, where our Lord describes the blessing of those who shall have promoted his Gospel, 'Come ye blessed of my Father,' &c. This interpretation receives further confirmation by the petition which he offers up for his disciples, verse 24, 'That they may behold my glory which thou hast given me, for thou lovest me before the foundation of the world.' He here, again, speaks of the glory which God intended to bestow upon him, as already given him. In verse 23, preceding, he had said to his disciples, 'Thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me,' i. e. hast intended the same honor and glory for them as for me. 3, What is the glory that Christ here requests the Heavenly Father to bestow upon him? We may assure ourselves, that as all prayer ever ought to be, so Christ's prayer now would be suited to his character, present circumstances, desires, and expectations. What then, so proper and natural for the benevolent and Holy Jesus, at the close of life, to ask of the Supreme Father, and Sovereign Disposer of all things, as the success of that Gospel, by which the virtue and happiness of mankind were to be promoted, which had been his sole aim and pursuit, for which he had lived, and for which he was about to die! To suppose him to pray for his own private happiness and advancement, and to animate himself with a prospect of that from God, as is the common opinion of the glory he sought would not be suitable to that perfection and moral character which we ascribe to him."

This interpretation of our Saviour's prayer, which I conceive to be harmonious with the scope and context of the passage, entirely deprives it of all support in that cause for which W. T. H. has adduced it, viz. : The absolute eternity of the Word. He next supposes the proposition placed beyond all doubt (but I should suppose only to his own mind) because the Apostle says, "The Word was God." Now, I think, direct revelation does not say that Christ was God in the supreme sense of that term. Although the Apostle employs the word Theos in the supreme sense of that term when he says, "And the Word was with God," he employs it in an inferior sense when he says, "And the Word was God" (in the Greek, a God.) As W. T. H. evinces an acquaintance with the Greek, he ought to have shown this difference in the usage of the term Theos by the Apostle, as it is evident by his employing the term Theos in two different articles, that he employs it in different senses—the one supreme the other inferior. But even if the application of God be at times given to Christ it does not follow that he is God in the supreme sense of that term. Such an argument would prove too much, I think, for W. T. H. Is it possible that God could invest a creature with omnipotency, creating all things, (himself in the catalogue) and taught to worship him, in harmony with the article, that our hearts are to be placed supreme upon God? When the term all is used in the Scripture, does it necessarily follow that every thing is included? It appears W. T. H. thinks so, by his including God in the catalogue. Christ ians are said to have an unction from above, and know all things. Does W. F. H. believe it, that they do know all things? But I must be drawing to a conclusion by stating a few plain matters, utterly irreconcilable with the opinion that Christ is God. 1st, It is plainly said that "it is eternal life to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." What propriety in our Saviour's language, I would ask, when he said, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me?"—"But of that day knowest no man, not the angels which are in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only." If such language does not emphatically teach that Christ is not God, it will be difficult to make language teach anything. Though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there are gods many and lords many) but to us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the world." "God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." Will W. F. H. reconcile these from a host of others, with his idea of "Christ is God?" Will he shew me the fallacy also of my conclusion, that if "Christ is God," then it follows that the term Christ is but another for the term God? J. ELLIS.

Stannington.

[Bro. W. T. HORNER, whose residence is, we believe, Canada West, has contributed two additional essays on the "Basis of Christ's Religion," which appear in our present number. Should the critical observations which Bro. Ellis offers come under his notice, he will no doubt reply to them, and we will present it to our readers.—J. W.]

THE MANIFESTATIONS OF GOD.—No. III.

PROBABLY we can best bring out a narrative of divine manifestation in Gen. xviii. by sustaining the following proposition: viz. That one of the "three men" who appeared to Abraham as "he sat in the tent-door in the heat of the day," was YAHVEH. In support of this affirmation we adduce the following particulars.

(1) The title of the narrative. Such is the opening clause of the chapter:—And YAHVEH appeared to him in the plains of Mamre. When, therefore, the narrative proceeds by saying, "Lo, three men stood by him," we are prepared, in a measure at least, to discover that one of these three was YAHVEH.

(2) The precedence of one of the three. The patriarch runs to meet the three travellers, but specially salutes one of them (verse 3.) The three conjointly accept Abraham's invitation (verse 5) to partake of the feast, (v. 8) and inquire for Sarah, (v. 9) but it is one only who, with significant dignity, promises to return and cause the aged Sarah to have a son. "And he said, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and lo, Sarah thy wife shall have a son" (v. 10.) Such precedence is natural, on the supposition that one of the three was YAHVEH.

(3) The assumption of sovereign authority and miraculous power, without any mention of a higher will, which is conspicuous in the words just quoted, confirms our belief that YAHVEH was the speaker.

(4) The narrative, without any discernible break in its continuity, designates the preëminent One who holds principal converse with Abraham by this striking name, "And YAHVEH said, Wherefore did Sarah laugh," &c. (v. 13.)

(5) As if broadly hinting to the patriarch who he is, the Prince of the embassy goes on: "Is anything too hard for YAHVEH? At the appointed time I will return," &c. Does not this language intimate pretty clearly, "Because I am YAHVEH, nothing is too hard for me?"

(6) The account next mentions that "the men rose up from thence and looked toward Sodom; and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way." Admit that one of the three thus escorted was YAHVEH, and how naturally the subsequent particulars follow.

YAHVEH, "as Lord and Prince," takes counsel with "the other two, as his ministering servants," about communicating to the Patriarch his intended judgment on the cities of the plain (verses 17-19); and then informs Abraham of his intention (20-21.) To suppose that these intimations were made by YAHVEH, as invisibly enthroned in the heavens, is to intercept the narrative, and involve the reader in inextricable confusion.

(7) According to the foregoing remarks, we may now expect Abraham to be prepared to intercede with the Princely Traveller for the devoted cities. As if aware of a desire in the patriarch's bosom to plead with their Divine Superior, "the men," i. e. the two created angels, with the most delicate perception of propriety, step forward on their journey towards Sodom, leaving Abraham alone with YAHVEH, their Prince. Thus, says the writer, "But Abraham stood yet before YAHVEH"—the particle yet indicating that, already, in accompanying the three on their way, the Patriarch had stood before, or been in the immediate presence of YAHVEH. This can be understood only on the hypothesis that one of the three was YAHVEH.

(8) Though YAHVEH has not revealed himself to the Patriarch suddenly, yet doubtless the latter is now fully aware with whom he has to do. It is true, indeed, that Abraham is not reported to have addressed his illustrious Guest by the name YAHVEH, at least according to the commonly received Hebrew text. Still, the title by which he does address him is so respectful (Adonai—Lord, Sovereign); the manner of his petitions is so profoundly reverent (verses 30-31); and the recognition of Him whom he addressed as "the Judge of all the earth" is so emphatic, that no argument adverse to our proposition can be drawn from this circumstance; but the whole nature and spirit of the Patriarch's intercession afford a strong additional argument in favor of our main position.

(9) Can any reader yet doubt that YAHVEH, before whom Abraham yet stood to intercede (v. 22), to whom Abraham drew near and addressed himself (v. 23), who by name is mentioned as the respondent (v. 26)—can any doubt that He was one of the human-like travellers who had been so hospitably entertained by Abraham? As if indubitably to identify YAHVEH as the third of the three men who were on their way to Sodom, (v. 16) the closing verse, says distinctly, "And YAHVEH went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham; and Abraham returned to his place."

(10) The mention, in the first verse of the next chapter, of two angels coming to Sodom, is beautifully accounted for by the position that YAHVEH, who remained behind with Abraham, was the remaining one of the three who at first visited the Patriarch's tent in the plains of Mamre. If rendered, as it unquestionably should be, "And the two angels, (or, two of the angels) came to Sodom at even," no doubt can remain that these were two of the three who had visited Abraham. It only remains to account for the absence of one of the three. Recognize in YAHVEH, with whom Abraham is interceding, that one, and his absence from the two is explained at once.

(11) Not less striking is the after-coming of YAHVEH, as the third Angel, to Sodom, and his otherwise unexplained introduction into the scene there, his quiet assumption of superiority over the other two, and Lot's changed style of address. "And while he (Lot) lingered, the men (the two, v. 1) laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; YAHVEH, (the third) being merciful unto him; and they brought him forth, and set him without the city. And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he (YAHVEH) said, Escape for thy life," &c. "And Lot said unto them, Oh, not so, my Lord: behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy which thou hast shewed unto me, in saving my life; and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die: behold now, this city is near to  flee unto, and it is a little one: oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live" (verses 16-20). Then, with what autocratic dignity does the Angel addressed reply, "See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken. Haste thee, escape thither; for

I cannot do anything until thou be come thither" (verses 21, 22.)

(12) The concluding item of proof we adduce is the singular language of verse 24: "Then YAHVEH rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from YAHVEH out of heaven." Here is expressed a distinction in the divine nature which facilitates the reception of the truth as to divine manifestations to men on earth. Does YAHVEH, indeed, whose is the throne of the universe, come down to man and appear as a wayfarer?—and is that throne then meanwhile vacant? Nay, the YAHVEH who appears is MALAK (Messenger) YAHVEH, who, at once, as we learned from chapter 16, bears the absolute name YAHVEH, and the relative name MESSENGER YAHVEH. Such are the riches of the Divine Being, such the distinctions (call them personal or otherwise) involved in it, that there can be "a parting-off," as it were, so that YAHVEH shall send, and MESSENGER YAHVEH be sent; the One visibly acting on earth, the Other reverentially adored as concurring in heaven. Just as, in the Oracles of the New Covenant, the Father is God—the Son is God; but the Father sends the Son, not the Son the Father; and the Father creates all things, manifests himself, redeems man, judges the world, through the Son of his love—the Messenger of the Covenant in whom his soul delights. So here, YAHVEH in heaven concurs in the punitive visitation upon Sodom and Gomorrah of MESSENGER YAHVEH on earth. Thus the language becomes not only intelligible, but intensely interesting when the historian concludes this narrative of divine manifestations by saying—"Then YAHVEH rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from YAHVEH out of heaven." With this distinction before the mind, the reader can the less hesitate to admit that YAHVEH—MESSENGER YAHVEH—did, indeed, condescend to manifest himself to Abraham in the form of humiliation and circumstances of lowliness incident to a way-worn traveller's visit, repast, and departure.

We must leave the reader to follow up these remarks by such reflections as may profitably arise from this narrative. Let him reflect on the lowliness of YAHVEH, that he should appear to Abraham as a man; and let him think of the same YAHVEH as the man of Nazareth. Let him behold the Prince of the embassy as (apparently) wearied in the heat of the day, and let him think of the same Personage when, really worn with fatigue, he sat on Samaria's well. Let him contrast the conditions of MALAK YAHVEH when promising Isaac, and when himself the babe of Bethlehem, the child of promise. And, above all, let him remember the divine might and right of Yahveh Christ, whether to answer the prevalent intercessions of his people, (John xiv. 13) or to take vengeance on them that know not God, and them that obey not his Gospel (2 Thes. i. 7-9.) And as we attempt to trace the goings-forth of the Ruler of God's people Israel from of old, from the days of antiquity, may we all learn how easy is his yoke, and how complete his great salvation. J. B. R.

THE BIBLE

WHAT sort of a book is this, that even the winds and waves of human passion obey it? What other engine of social improvement has operated so long, and yet has lost none of its virtue? Since it appeared, many boasted plans of amelioration have been tried, and failed; many codes of jurisprudence have arisen, run their course, and expired. Empire after empire has been launched on the tide of time, and gone down, leaving no trace on the waters. But this book is still going about doing good, leavening society with its holy principles—cheering the sorrowful with its consolations—strengthening the tempted—soothing the pillow of death, and pointing to an immortality of bliss beyond the tomb! Can such a book be the offspring of human genius? Does not the vastness of its effects prove the excellency of its power to be of God? Concede this point, as indeed we must, and how poor an evidence of wisdom—nay, what positive proof of folly—does he exhibit, who cavils over its obscurities, and refuses credence to the whole, because he cannot comprehend its mysteries!

LETTERS TO THE PEOPLE—No. I

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN,—With comparatively few exceptions, you admit the Bible to be the Word of God—Heaven's one revelation, which points out the only way of life eternal. This admission brings you under the gravest of responsibilities to that book. It implies not only that it is your duty and wisdom to peruse its pages, but to study and obey its discoveries and requirements. If it be what you generally allow it to be, indifference is madness: if it be true that God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to the Gospel, it is utter folly to neglect the intimations and terms of that Gospel! If God has highly exalted the once humbled, despised, and crucified Nazarene, and given him the name which is above every name, expressly that every knee should bow to him and every tongue confess his supremacy, it cannot but be a false and fatal security which prevents an immediate and unqualified surrender to his sovereign authority. If, by the resurrection of Jesus, God has given assurance to all men that he has appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by Him whom he has ordained; and if, in view of the coming judgment, he now commands all men everywhere to repent, there can be nothing better than foolhardiness in impenitence! If all have sinned, and if the wages of sin be death, and if he that believeth not is condemned already, and if Christ shall come to yield vengeance on all who know not God, and who obey not the Gospel, it must be highest wisdom at once to accept the mercy of which the obedience of the Gospel gives possession! If it be that every man shall bear his own burden—that every one must give account of himself to God, certainly it is nothing more than prudential that each do search, learn, believe, and obey for himself. Some talk of the Irish who are being awakened to a sense of their sin and danger as insane—but, pray, is it not quite the other way? Is not he the lunatic who, admitting the Bible to be true, refuses to flee from the wrath which it predicts? There is no insanity in a sinner feeling and confessing himself to be what he is, and imploringly entreating to know what he must do to be saved. Readers, our first advice to you is, take the Bible into your own hands, as God's own word to yourselves—trust not to the interpretations of any church or party, priest or minister—but learn, obey, and enjoy the truth for yourselves. Faithfully yours, Edinburgh. T. H. MILNER.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE CHURCH IN WORTLEY.

MR. JAS. WALLIS.—Dear Friend: I find in the Harbinger for this month that you have included the church at Wortley in your list. Why you have done so I cannot tell, but of this I am certain, that no person has had authority to propose such a thing. You have just the same right to insert in your list Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle? In fact, the question of forming a union with the brethren of the Reformation, has not been brought before the church, and if it had it would not have been carried. There are some very cogent reasons why. To mention only one. You have those who deny the personality of the Holy Spirit, and who affirm that the Word alone is all that is required to regenerate the sinner. Now I, and others with me, believe the Scriptures teach very differently, and it appears to me that those who deny the personality of the Holy Spirit are half-way on the road to Unitarianism;

and I most cordially agree with the sentiments expressed by A. Campbell, in his Christian Baptism, page 289, on this subject (and he is no mean authority.) He says, "Without it, (viz. without believing in the Divine Three) no one can believe in, or be reconciled to, the remedial policy, as developed in the apostolic writings; and, indeed, I have no more faith in any man's profession of religion, than I have in the sincerity of Mahomet, who does not believe in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Spirit, as coöperating in the illumination, pardon, and sanctification of fallen, sinful, and degraded man." And a little further on he says, "I could not, indeed, esteem as of any value the religion of any man, as respects the grand affair of eternal life, whose religion is not begun, carried on, and completed by the personal agency of the Holy Spirit." These sentiments I approve, and they are, I believe, in strict accordance with Scripture. I trust that you also approve them. If you do, how can you send forth and sustain one who denies, with respect to sinful man, that the religion of Christ is either begun, carried on, or completed by the personal agency of the Holy Spirit, but by the Word alone? You style yourselves brethren of the Reformation; why, then, be instrumental in spreading corrupt doctrine? The above is one of the reasons why I cannot unite with your party. Other reasons there are, which I cannot at present state. My earnest desire is, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son, Jesus Christ.

I remain, dear friend, yours truly,
Leoda, Sept. 2. SAM'L. SWAN.

RESPONSE.

BROTHER SWAN.—Dear Sir: In reply to the foregoing letter, which is evidently intended by you for the readers of the Harbinger, I beg to remind you, that the church in Wortley, of which you are one of the pastors, sent a report, by some authority or other, to the annual meeting of our brethren held in Manchester in the year 1854, stating that the church then contained 26 members, and that it was organized in the year 1834 (See B. M. Harbinger, volume 8, p. 454.) The church has been since retained in the list issued by the Disciples. It has not fallen to my lot, for several years past, either to receive the letters from the churches, or to prepare the annual report of the meeting; I cannot, therefore, inform you on what authority the Wortley church is placed in the list of this year. Bro. Roberts, who is a member of the church, was present at the meeting, and perhaps he can satisfy your apparently anxious mind on the subject.

If I am not mistaken, it was about the year 1832 that you and I became acquainted. You were then, and I presume still are, a rigid Scotch Baptist, nearly up to the perfect standard of A. M'Lean and his brethren. But you are not now quite so strict in your opinions as you were then, or you would not have fellowship with any individual who is in communion with our brethren, although we observe weekly the same divine institutions as yourselves. This is a pleasing circumstance, and is not to be overlooked by us. It is high time that all the true-hearted disciples of Jesus in Great Britain were united in pleading, as the basis of Christian union and coöperation, in all sincerity and love, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, one body, one Spirit, and one hope. Is not this the original and unchangeable foundation of Christian union, coöperation, and love for the church of God? But you have some "cogent" reasons in your mind why the church in Wortley cannot be united with us as disciples of Jesus. You mention one of these, "That there are some among us who deny the personality of the Holy Spirit." This may be true, though individually I have no knowledge that it is so, and as you supply no instance in proof of your statement, the subject cannot now be debated. You admit that Bro. Campbell is orthodox on this point, while some who form part of the same brotherhood, are not so, in your opinion. Now supposing Bro. Campbell were to visit Wortley when the brethren assembled on the Lord's day to commemorate the death of Christ, would they unitedly bid him welcome to this feast of love? I fear not.

With regard to the subject mooted, the abstract personalities of the Deity, we are not aware that it is presented to the disciples of Jesus in the Book of God as a ground of faith, hope, and love. In Jesus our Lord dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He is the temple of God, the ark of the covenant, the true tabernacle which Jehovah erected and not man. Here, in one personality—the man Christ Jesus, seated at the right hand of God, the Ruler of the universe—we have exhibited to our view Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, into which sacred name every penitent believer is commanded to be immersed for the remission of sins, with the promise that the gift of the Holy Spirit shall be bestowed, and that eternal life shall be the reward of those who are faithful to the end.

I have no faith in abstractions, humanly devised from the revelations of God. We have not the Father alone, the Son alone, or the Spirit alone, presented for our implicit acceptance; but we have Jesus revealing the Father as identical with himself, and promising to send the Comforter to remain with his people. Nor will faith alone, nor hope alone, nor love alone, be regarded with complacency by Him who is the Judge of the living and the dead; but that harmonious action of the whole which is the true characteristic of the renewed life. Yours truly,

JAMES WALLIS.

Sept. 19, 1859.

LETTERS FROM AMERICA.—No. III.

ALLEGHENY City, May 24, 1859.

Through the fine and revered State of Pennsylvania, the English traveller roams with ever increasing delight; he finds the path of Nature adorned—her rusticity and rural beauty less violated by the appliances of art, by reason of her vastness and the deficiency of the element of ornamentation in the composition of her lands. Onward, far onward, for the space of 355 miles from Philadelphia—mountains, valleys, lakes, streams, forests, orchards, gardens, meadows, bridges, and every variety of homely houses, which this good land is so celebrated for, are interspersed to entertain the traveller to Pittsburg; whilst gazing upon this provisional feast of nature, he cannot fail to enjoy it, and to breathe with greater freedom the peculiar spirit of liberty, which is very marked here. He feels that all good men are equal here, that none are distinguished from others in honor and reputation, unless they merit it; and as all, in point of character, are placed on the same level, he feels that the energizing and hallowing lips of success may touch his brow as well as others; and the smile which God gives to those alone which he approves, might shine also upon his soul, and lead him to action, and in the object of his pursuits, to victory. 450 miles S.W. of New York, the Allegheny, Mononcahelia, and Ohio rivers form a trio junction. The waters, which have travelled their long courses respectively, meet together here, and blend with friendly communion and indicative congratulations. On the S.E. side of these confluent streams stands the city of Pittsburgh, so called by the English forces who captured the city 100 years ago, Pitt, first Earl of Chatham, being then Prime-Minister of England. Pittsburg is termed the Birmingham of the United States. As Quakers are the prominent people of Philadelphia, so here the Dutch, or Germans, whilst being scattered abroad over the State of Pennsylvania, are the most prominent people there. The various sections of the religious community are powerful in numbers and in influence, and are probably as much equalized as in any other place. The Episcopalians, Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Catholics have fine places and fine preachers. The terms clergyman and minister are not current among the sects in this country, such designations being universally changed into that of preacher. The American brethren do not differ from this usage with regard to their paid servants, and when particularizing their chief officer, they are less timid than our British brethren to denominate him bishop. But the circumstances under which our brethren here live and labour, as disciples of Christ, are proportionately dissimilar. The now have not the crushing and contempt-heaping partyism, which ever and anon is assailing the efforts of our British churches. They have long overcome their share of uncharitable prejudices, and have, by their gigantic and indomitable endeavors, achieved for the cause in America, the task which still remains to be completed in England. The disciple, in his Christian capacity, enjoys all the privileges which appertain to others in any sphere, and will not suffer the detraction of one iota from the importance of his position; and the people generally regard their meetings with favourable consideration. Having endured the heat and burden of the conflict, and by a course of persistent resistance to defeat and compromise raised themselves as a church and denomination to a situation of corresponding importance and vigorous influence, they may participate, if desirable, in the spiritual relations which are reciprocated by religionists, and co-operate to the same extent which they allow each other to do. Our brethren here are also in constant receipt of expressions of good will from the sects, which they faintly interpret as the handwriting on the wall, portending the dissolution of partyism, and the sign of ultimate fraternization. They willingly lend our brethren their more convenient and spacious buildings, when any brethren of note and super-ordinary abilities visit them. For instance, the Baptist meeting-house was cordially offered to the church two months ago, for our Bro. A. Campbell to preach in, and from what I have heard it is a common virtue in this country. On the N.W. bank of the Narrow Water, the Allegheny City begins, and there, on its verge, with the steamboats approaching and departing from its face, stands the disciples' meeting-house, a solitary and unassuming structure in appearance, yet comfortable and commodious in its interior. The number of brethren and sisters is 200, and on the Lord's-day morning they are attentive to their duties and privileges. The church has two elders and two deacons, 70 scholars in the morning, and about 40 of the members meet in the afternoon to study the Living Oracles, under the direction of one of the elders. The church has also a pastor, which they independently sustain. Bro. Grey, if not successful in having effected numerous accessions to the church, has attracted a large concourse of hearers, and is universally esteemed by the brotherhood. Our American churches have each their preacher, who is engaged and paid by them, and of course monopolizes the speaking in the church, thereby absorbing the time and opportunity which would otherwise result in developing the gems which lie hidden in some rude and unpolished caskets within the church. The pastor of this church has been out West for several weeks; therefore, as no brother felt qualified to address the congregation which usually came, the house was not opened in the evening. There was a church in Pittsburg until five or six years ago, when most of the members united with the Allegheny church, and others went to the Baptists. There is also a small church of disciples at the South-Western extremity of Allegheny City.—Your's in the truth,

THOS. BUTLER

NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CRITICISMS, &amp;c.

REVIVAL IN IRELAND—
RESULTS AND CAUSES.

HAVING printed over three pages on this topic in our August number, it may be considered that enough has been said for the present. But those pages were written when we knew the revival only upon hearsay. Now we can testify what we have seen, and feeling able to account for the remarkable physical phenomena of which so much has been said, the reader shall have opportunity to consider our conclusions.

The word "Revival," as applied to the state of things in Ireland, brings before us three important features—

1. Deep and wide-spread conviction of sin, accompanied by great fear and anguish, which, in thousands of instances lead to a feeling of pardon and security.

2. Great moral results.

3. Lamentable bodily affections.

Such is the Revival, and a very general opinion is, that the Holy Spirit, by direct action upon mind and body, (which perhaps might be illustrated by the movement of the pointers in communicating a telegram, which movement depends upon, and results from, the immediate action of the electric fluid) produces these results.

As our intention is to devote this paper chiefly to the bodily affections, we shall only make two brief statements in regard to the wide-spread conviction of sin and the moral results following. In regard to the former, great care has been taken, by close conversation with a number of convicted and stricken persons, to arrive at satisfactory conclusions, and the result is, that no case has been found in which Bible truth, recently heard, or more remotely learned, and now, by favoring circumstances, brought before the mind, does not account for the conviction, fear, and subsequent peace. Of the moral results we have only to say, that they prove the genuineness of the change in a large number of cases, and so extensive are they, that the general character of some towns is clearly changed for the better, while everywhere the people are ready to listen to the man who has anything to say of sin and Christ. Surely these are results, to perpetuate and extend which every lover of God, of man, and of truth, should labor.

Coming to the physical phenomena, we must in the next place, to some extent describe them. There are—

1. Bodily prostration so complete, that the subject falls, and remains helpless for a longer or shorter time, without any other remarkable conditions. The third case which occurred under our preaching was of this kind. The fall is, in some instances, the first outward indication of conviction; in others it follows previously expressed anguish. We however conclude that in the first class of cases conviction has been resisted, hidden, and perhaps stronger, and the struggle consequently more severe than when the true state of mind has been fully revealed. The following remarks by James C. L. Carson, M.D. if applied only to this class of cases, will very fairly express our mind:—

"Some who advocate an exclusive spirituality have difficulty in accounting for the corporeal results. This again, I imagine, is a mistake. Suppose the strongest hearted of your readers were sitting at their ease and comfort in their own houses, and that they were suddenly informed, on evidence they could not doubt, that they were condemned to death, and the gallows on which they were forthwith to be executed was already brought within their view, would the mental impression produce no bodily results? I rather think they would. The sudden and unexpected news would tell on the bravest of the brave. There would soon be the faltering voice, the quivering lip, the tottering limbs, and the wild look, or yell, of despair. It could hardly be otherwise. If such, then, would be the result of the fear of mere temporal death, what might we not anticipate as the consequence of a sudden view of eternal damnation on an individual who had hitherto totally disregarded the state of his immortal soul? Is it any wonder, when they see themselves hanging on the brink of destruction, that they should be physically affected? The real wonder is, that such a sudden and terrific sight should not at once extinguish the vital spark."

And yet such prostration did not follow apostolic preaching. Why not? Because the inspired preachers first proclaimed salvation by Christ, and then the wages and guilt of sin — first set forth the love of God, and then the terrors of the Lord to those who would not accept of His love; and they were prepared to direct to an ordinance in which the believer in Jesus' death and resurrection, whose heart was turned to God, could have sealed to him the remission of all past sin. "Repent (change your mind) and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 38.) But we are accounting for things which occur, not in Jerusalem, but in Ireland, where the apostolic examples are not much followed; and we think under these circumstances, the remarks of Dr. Carson are quite sufficient, so far as the class of cases now under consideration is concerned.

2. Numerous cases, of which two occurred while we were calmly reading the Acts of the Apostles, to about a dozen people, on the day of our arrival in Ireland. A girl, some time under conviction, lost at once all bodily strength, and was placed upon a bed; soon there was a turning of the body and lower limbs, with occasional violent movement of the arms. There was a frequent pressing of the hands to the upper part of the body, and, though the persons present were seemingly not recognized, there were oft-repeated, though not freely expressed, calls for Jesus to come and take her load of sin away, the hands indicating that a load or weight was felt at the chest. Some remain in this state for hours, some for days, some, with intervals of partial recovery, for weeks, and some are stricken several times before finding peace, and some after they have obtained it.

3. Cases in which, in addition to the above or similar symptoms, the power of speech is lost for hours or for days. In some instances the sufferer tells with perfect accuracy how long she shall remain dumb, and when she shall be stricken again. Though such predictions have failed in some cases where the hands of the clock have been moved and the parties deceived, there can be no doubt that genuine cases are known.

4. Cases in which, in combination with some or all of the features above named, "visions" are seen. Heaven is seen, or hell—the Saviour appears and speaks or touches, or puts a robe upon the sufferer, or tells when, or how often, she shall be stricken.

5. Cases in which a remarkable and singular change comes over the face, indicating that the transition from fear to peace has taken place. We mean not merely that ordinary indication which is seen when the soul passes from death unto life, but a far surpassing and extraordinary condition, which transforms for the time a plain countenance into one approaching the perfection of beauty. With this state, or even preceding it, there is often remarkable fluency of speech, and unusual power of memory reaching back to long forgotten things, all of which is attributed to Divine influence. The Revival, a weekly record, thus speaks—

"Poor, uneducated, wretched creatures, who previously could scarcely tell who the Saviour of sinners is, or anything about the terms of salvation, or the gracious promises of the glorious gospel, seem to know Jesus as by intuition, and with an humble, holy, sweet, confiding familiarity, they remind him of his character and promises. A smile of celestial loveliness plays over the countenance, though perhaps naturally plain, and pervades it with a sweetness—a charm far transcending the loveliest smile of the loveliest countenances on earth, in ordinary circumstances. The hands are often raised upwards as if beckoning the Beloved to come, and then are they clasped energetically over the bosom as if embracing him to the very heart. The feeling at this moment, whether uttered or unexpressed, is 'Oh, my sweet Jesus: 'My beloved is mine, and I am his: 'Tell me, ye daughters of Jerusalem, is there any beloved like unto my beloved?' A very remarkable physical feature, wondrously displayed by some, especially females, when enjoying these celestial scenes and society, is, that every movement, every gesture of the person, the countenance, the head, the hands, is the very perfection of gracefulness, though the party be utterly uneducated, and naturally most uncouth and awkward. How is this? Oh, the transforming power there is in seeing Jesus as He is."

6. Cases terminating in lunacy or death. Of these there are many. One young woman stricken, for the fourth time, while we were speaking, wandered much, and called for persons well known to her, but when they appeared, declared they were not the persons. A gentleman who spent a short time in looking into reported cases of this kind writes—

"In a very brief space of time, and in a very limited circle of inquiry, I saw or heard of more than twenty cases. I fear a little more inquiry would have extended it largely. Some of these cases were of a shocking character.

"In one lodging in Belfast lived a man, his wife, and daughter; all three were 'struck': the father is now raving in the lunatic asylum—the wife is a hopeless idiot—and the daughter, from grief and horror, nearly as bad as either.

"I was taken to see a heart-rending case of a very interesting girl, verging on insanity from a practice I have noticed above; but some faint hope of her recovery restrains me from telling that fearful story.

"Some seven or eight cases were in the lunatic asylum, several of whom I saw."

In a house near to where we stayed, three were stricken, two daughters and their father. The girls recovered, the father died.

This shall suffice in the way of description. Probably our reader will say, I have no wish to be stricken—none whatever to see my neighbour in the state described. We must, however, tell him, that thousands desire, pray for, and strive to produce it—that the feeling that conversion is not satisfactorily got through without something of the kind, is fast increasing, and that many preachers endeavour to excite it. This, of course, is correct if these results are directly from God; but, if not, then it is a crying evil. That it is not thus from God we confidently affirm. Years back we had to do with persons who were now and then severely attacked with many of the symptoms noted above, but not at all in connection with religious views or feelings; consequently, opportunity to examine a few cases, was all that we found requisite on our arrival in Ireland, to bring us to the conclusion, that hysteria is the proper word to designate most, if not all, the cases seen by, or reported to us, and included in the six classes set forth above. In support of this assertion we give the following from a standard work, Hooper's Medical Dictionary:—

"Hysteria appears under such various shapes, imitates so many other diseases, and is attended with such a variety of symptoms, which denote the animal and vital functions to be considerably disordered, that it is difficult to give a just character or definition of it. * * * The disease attacks in paroxysms, or fits. These are sometimes preceded by dejection of spirits, anxiety of mind, effusion of tears, difficulty of breathing, sickness at the stomach, and palpitations at the heart; but it is more usually that a pain is felt on the left side, about the flexure of the colon, with a sense of distension advancing upwards till it gets into the stomach, and removing from thence into the throat, it occasions by its pressure a sensation as if a ball was lodged there, which by authors is termed globus hystericus. The disease having arrived at this height, the patient appears to be threatened with suffocation, becomes faint, and is affected with stupor and insensibility; whilst, at the same time, the trunk of the body is turned to and fro, the limbs are variously agitated. * * * The patient recovers the exercise of sense and motion, with or without recollection of what has taken place during the fit; feeling, however, a severe pain in the head, and a soreness over the whole body. In some cases, there is little or no convulsive motion, and the person lies seemingly in a state of profound sleep, without sense or motion. * * * * *

"They are readily excited in those who are subject to them, by passions of the mind, and by every considerable emotion: hence sudden joy, grief, fear, &c. are very apt to occasion them. They have been known to arise from imitation and sympathy."

Let the reader judge how far the physical phenomena described above coincides with the symptoms of hysteria given by Hooper—let him look at them side by side:—

STRICKEN CASES.

1. "Complete prostration"—helpless for a longer or shorter time, without other remarkable conditions."

2. Deep anxiety precedes most stricken cases.

HYSTERIA.

1. "In some cases there is little or no convulsive motion, and the person lies seemingly in a state of profound sleep, without sense or motion."

2. "Sometimes preceded by dejection of spirits, anxiety of mind," &c.

3. Turning of the body and lower limbs with occasional violent movement of the arms.

4. The hands indicate that a load or weight is felt at the chest.

5. Visions are remembered and told.

6. One case seldom occurs alone — it is evident that others are greatly influenced by almost every occurrence.

3. The trunk of the body is turned to and fro—the limbs are violently agitated.

4. A sensation as if a ball was lodged there, (in the throat) which is termed globus hystericus.

5 They recover with or without recollection of what has taken place during the fit.

6. They have been known to arise from imitation and sympathy.

Any person looking into Hooper will find other points of similarity, but not having the volume at hand, we can only compare the statement of the above short extract.

After expressing these conclusions at public meetings in Lancashire, a gentleman sent us a review of a pamphlet recently published by Archdeacon Stopford, which review clearly indicates that the pamphlet was intended to establish the conclusion to which we have arrived. Having written to Dublin for a copy, we shall use the author's testimony, as he records what he has seen and heard, and having in past years received medical instruction and had much to do with hysteria, he must be received as a competent witness. What he undertakes, and in our opinion accomplishes, is expressed in the following words:—

"I shall have to show—(1) That the usual bodily and mental affections in this movement are only the ordinary phenomena of a well-known form of disease, which, though it seldom prevails to its present extent, is yet quite capable in its nature of such extension. (2) That in its very nature it is antagonistic, and not favourable to true religion. (3) That the present results of this disease and its natural consequences are injurious to woman's nature, and subversive of the Word of God as the sole foundation of our faith. (4) That this affection is only accidentally, and not properly connected with true conversion; and that religious revivals can be, and ought to be, wholly disconnected from it."

After thus marking out his course the author says—

"On reading the earliest accounts of the bodily affections, I found nothing but what I had been previously familiar with in cases of illness of which, in the course of my professional duty or at the call of personal friendship, I had had the management under medical direction. The same observation applies to the account which I have since read.

"By personal observation I have satisfied myself of the identity of the cases now occurring in Belfast with those which I had formerly attended. The movements of the hands, arms, head, &c. in these cases—the expressions of the countenance—the sounds of the voice, cries, screams, moans, coughs, &c. have each a peculiar character, unlike to anything else. Once duly noticed, these can never be mistaken. To ascertain whether these indescribable, yet unmistakable, signs of the disease which I suspected, did really exist, was one purpose of my visit."

"All the 'cases' I saw in Belfast were clearly and unmistakeably hysterical; and as far as it is possible to judge from description, so was every case which has been described to me.

"I have heard attempts made to prove that medical men are doubtful, or disagreed, as to the nature of these bodily affections. As far as I had opportunities of examining, all these attempts rested on one story, which proved only this, that in one case (not in Belfast) it was considered doubtful, or obscure, whether the girl were hysterical or not.

"I have found no reason for believing that the medical profession are in doubt on the subject. I have been told by a person likely to know the fact, that there is no difference of opinion among medical men in Belfast.

"The fact that all the present phenomena have been witnessed before, in cases which did not arise in connection with religion, at least meets the assumption so naturally, almost unavoidably, made by those unacquainted with the subject, that these phenomena are unaccountable except on the assumption that they proceed from the work of the Spirit."

"The prevalence of hysteria in connection with religious revival, is by no means so unaccountable as it may at first sight appear. It is of the nature of the disease—(1) To attach to any idea connected with self—(2) To be propagated by sympathy—(3) To imitate any form of hysterical action seen or heard of. I shall show that it is only accidentally connected with religious revival, to any extent. Suppose such a revival to proceed, as the last and best of the American revivals did, without any hysterical accompaniments:

and suppose one girl in a revival meeting to become hysterical, even from any cause not connected with religion; her hysterical feelings will, from causes which I shall explain, naturally attach itself to the idea of religion in connection with 'self.' That one case may probably produce at the time, by sympathy, many more; and the form of that case will probably determine the form of all the rest. If strong counteractive means be not then employed, and still more, if hysteria be encouraged, it is not only not surprising, but it is a natural consequence of the nature of the disease, that hysterical affections of this particular form should then spread generally among those who take part in the revival; yet, in all this, the connection is only accidental."

"The remarkable characteristic of this disease to copy and imitate other cases, is also important to be considered here. An incautious inquiry by a physician whether the patient has a particular symptom, which she was before ignorant of, will very often be followed by that symptom. I believe that if any case of hysteria were now to arise in Belfast, from any irritation, actual or reflex, of the brain, or from any functional derangement, wholly apart from religious excitement, it would at once assume the form of trouble on account of it; and I also believe that in such a case, on recovery, no trace or consequence of any sorrow for sin would remain."

Facts are also recorded, apart from religious impressions, fully answering to the cases of radiation of countenance, liberty of speech, and increased power of memory.

"Nothing seems more relied on, or more naturally perhaps, as a proof of spiritual operation in this illness, than the heavenly light and joy which is said to shine upon the countenances of those who have found peace.

"I have not myself witnessed this in Belfast; but I fully believe the accounts that I have read of it. I should rather be surprised if such appearances did not now present themselves in some of those affected.

"Few, perhaps have seen this wondrous light shine so brightly as I have seen it in times past. But a knowledge of the realities of life is the greatest restraint on its delusions. The recollection of what I have seen makes it impossible for me to accept the 'spiritual' solution now offered of this phenomena.

"I have, in former times, seen a countenance, not plain, and yet hardly pretty, transformed, after a paroxysm of distress, into a perfection of personal, moral, and intellectual beauty, such as I have never otherwise witnessed—such as I had never before conceived—such as I can now but imperfectly realize in memory. Time after time I have gazed for a moment in entranced admiration upon that resplendent vision of all that is beautiful in woman, heightened as it was by a brilliancy of intellectual light, and a flow of words of inexpressible beauty. But the stern call of duty interfered (for that case was entrusted to me by a friend) and I soon found that my control was as necessary then as in the paroxysm of distress. How movingly she would entreat me to let her brilliant thoughts and words have flow, as being the source of the most exquisite happiness she had ever experienced! An absolute injunction of silence and quiet never failed to bring it to a close. Many a time I have thus destroyed a vision on which I could have gazed for ever, and which I never expect to see again in like perfection.

"The highest perfection of that beauty was the expression of heavenly peace and joy. Yet in that case this had nothing to do with religion. It is not for me to attempt to explain it; but it evidently proceeded from natural causes, and cannot be regarded as a proof of spiritual illumination.

"In another case I have repeatedly seen a square and angular face assume the form of a perfect oval.

"Such fleeting beauty as this is commonly followed, and perhaps for a long time, by a haggard countenance, a muddy skin, and purple or brown hands and wrists, of which I noticed many instances in Belfast.

"Of the kindred phenomena, the excitation of ideas and words, and the unconscious perception of beauty and of grace, I did witness something in Belfast.

"I also witnessed a striking instance of the gift of prayer (as it is thought) in a girl at whose bedside I sat while she was engaged in vision. She was very ignorant, and could not read; at least, she said so. The flow of ideas and the power of expression were great indeed; yet not rising to anything really above what she might have heard at ordinary meetings. This was a case in which I afterwards had the clearest evidence that her heart had never experienced any work of grace. I shall have more to say of this poor girl when I come to speak of visions. This case seemed to me decisive as to the absence of spiritual, and the effect of physical, action.

"The remarkable flow of ideas and words often produced by the merely physical influence of strong drink, up to a certain point, is a good illustration of the physical nature of this phenomena."

On the vision cases the author remarks:—

"Visions and delusions of the sight or mind are one of the most ordinary phenomena of hysteria. Almost every girl now 'struck' in Belfast has 'visions,' and would be greatly disappointed if she had not: she would think it only half done, and would probably pray to be 'struck' again.

"When the hysterical affection is mistaken for the operation of the Holy Spirit, these visions are naturally mistaken for revelations from God; and this is the more natural, as these visions are often attended with the remarkable flow of ideas and words which I have before noticed as being so easily mistaken for the gift of prayer.

"It is easy to imagine of how little consequence the Scriptures become to ignorant persons who believe that they have a direct revelation from God, as the ground on which they believe in their own personal salvation; careful conversation proves the existence of this evil.

"During my visit to Belfast, I sat by the bedside of a young woman ('struck' for the third time) recently cataleptic, and when I saw her, in a state of ecstasy. She was at first in prayer, with a power of utterance I have before described; then in thanksgiving for spiritual operations in herself—then in ardent desire of visions and revelations—then describing aloud the vision, as she saw it. I carefully weighed her words, as the best evidence of the source of the vision. She said as follows:—'Thou knowest, O Lord, that this morning, ere I went out, (she was struck shortly after going out) I said that I would this night sing the song of praise for the vision of glory that would be revealed to me.' Here was distinct evidence that she had been working herself up to seeing a vision, and that she had herself previously determined the time. The evidence was equally strong throughout that she had been working herself up to the particular idea which she hoped to see realized in the vision. And then she went on, in a singularly impressive tone of voice—*'Oh, now it opens, and I see Him now, and He is beautiful; and, look! the angels open out, and He comes forward, and He comes to me; and what has He in His hand? Oh, it is a gown! and how beautiful it is! What a beautiful gown! And it is a gown of glory. And it is for me. And, look! He comes straight to me! What is He going to do now? He is going to put it on me Himself. And now he puts it on. * * * * Where am I now? What a beautiful seat! No, no, it's not a seat. I am sitting on the throne of God, and Jesus sitting beside me!'* But let us drop the curtain on the sick-bed of a diseased imagination and a deluded soul; and let us consider her state upon recovery. I visited her three days after; she was recovering, but still very weak. She had a succession of visitors; for she was considered one of the most wonderful cases. I expressed a hope that it was not too much for her. She replied, 'I am glad to see so many coming to me; for I am not so wrapt up in my own glory but that I think it good for others to pray for me, too.' The conversation that followed was dark indeed. She related her careless life; for nine years she had been but twice in a place of worship, the want of good clothing being her north-country reason. Up to the moment of her being first 'struck' (she said) she had no thought or care about her soul; but while she was insensible (on her first being 'struck') she was led through a dark valley, and had a vision of hell, into which she was about to fall; and then the Saviour touched her hand, and she turned and followed him. From that moment she had peace and happiness.

"I had heard that in every case the burden of sin is felt and bemoaned; she said nothing of this; so I put every question that could draw it out, and at last asked her plainly of it; it was quite evident, and was acknowledged by herself, that she had felt nothing of this. I inquired about her future attendance at public worship; she replied that when she got some proper clothes she would go, but not till then. I told her of the warning in Scripture against the sin of forsaking the assembling of ourselves together; and I asked would she have kept from Christ when on earth, on account of her clothes; she replied that it would be easy before Him, but it was hard to do it before man. I pointed out to her the trial that she now was brought to, between conformity to the will of Christ, and being governed by the fear of man; she said tartly that she knew all that, but she never would go to a house of worship till she had proper clothing to go in. Her countenance was now dark and angry, and she showed very plainly that she wished to have no further conversation with me."

"The nature and source of the visions of light so common in hysteria, and now so prevalent in Belfast, may be best illustrated by the disgusting practice adopted by the monks of Mount Athos, to produce in their minds what they supposed to be the light which shone upon Mount Tabor.

"The directions of the Abbot Simon for producing these visions (supposed to have been written in the 11th century) are still in existence.

"'Alone in thy cell, shut thy door, and seat thyself in a corner; raise thy mind above all things vain and transitory; recline thy beard and chin on thy breast; turn thy eyes and thy thoughts toward the middle of thy belly, the region of the navel; and search the place of the heart, the seat of thy soul. At first, all will be dark and comfortless; but if you persevere day and night, you will feel an ineffable joy; and no sooner has the soul discovered the place of the heart, than it is involved in a mystic and ethereal light.'

"In the bitter controversy which followed in the fourteenth century, about the nature of 'the light of Mount Tabor,' the monks of Mount Athos were never accused of imposture; and this was right, for they were guilty of none. Anticipating the researches of modern physiology, they had discovered, if not the theory, yet certainly the effect of enervating the great centre of the ganglionic system. They did thus produce in their own minds visions of darkness and of light; those visions were hysterical: the fruits of the supremacy of the nervous system of the belly over the mind. Perhaps most of the religious delusions which have since appeared in the world (so far as they were not actually impostures) have the same base or origin. The present state of things is not new. The history of religion is full of such things. Dr. Cheyne speaks of those 'who have mistaken unequivocal symptoms of hysteria for manifestations of the Holy Spirit.'"

It has been said that laughter, most common in hysteria, is not found in connection with revival cases. This, however, does not appear correct. The deeply solemn character of the convictions—of all that is said and done—would certainly lead to the expectation, that the feelings and imaginings would be of a dread or peaceful order, and therefore not calculated to evoke laughter. But exceptions are met with. A Belfast clergyman says—"Just as I had commenced my sermon a girl who had been repeatedly struck, left the church. Mrs. — followed her to a house close by, where she burst out into a most fearful fit of hysterical laughter accompanied by violent jerkings of the arms and legs. So fearful was it that several persons were obliged to leave the room. * *. Dumbness ensued."

It is due to Archdeacon Stopford to give a few lines for the purpose of shewing, that though he most heartily opposes those who promote these bodily affections, or consider them desirable and from the Holy Spirit, he does not lightly esteem the good of the revival, but prays that the wide-spread conviction of sin may far extend, and holds that the Lord is now doing a great work in Ireland. He writes—"I desire earnestly, before I conclude, to enter my protest against any who may attempt to argue from what I have written, that there is no real good in the present movement in the North of Ireland. I have written nothing that can support such an argument. I see a great work for good, as plainly as I see a great evil. That thousands who never thought before of religion, should think of it earnestly now, is a great good. That there should be an opportunity of proclaiming the way of salvation, and a readiness and desire to hear it, such as we have never known before, is a great good. I oppose the evil with any power I possess, merely to purify the good. If any should argue, from what I have written, that this movement is wholly evil, there are facts enough to confute them; and it may be useful that I should here declare my deliberate conviction, that those who seek to deny or to discourage the good in this movement, are acting as much against the best interests of man as those whose perversions and abuses of that movement I have undertaken fearlessly to expose."

"That there is much good in this movement has been denied by none that I have met. All whom I have conversed with in Belfast—clergy, laity, persons of all classes of society, and holding all varieties of views in respect of the physical phenomena, do all agree that there is widely awakened a serious attention to religion in the minds of thousands who never thought seriously of it before; that there is an access to men's minds on the subject of religion, a readiness and desire for instruction, and for joining in the worship of God, such as never was known there before; that churches and other houses of public worship are now filled as they were never filled before; that instances are numerous of persons whose outward life is changed; that in some places the outward face of society is changed (as far as we can yet see) by a visible reformation: all this is admitted without question by those who see most to blame in the conduct of the movement.

"Even a stranger cannot fail to be struck with the earnest concern about religion which appears to pervade the people: as I listened to a street preacher during the dinner hour of the working men (the best sermon which I heard in Belfast) it was impossible not to be impressed with the earnest and reverent expression of countenance in all the working men and lads who gathered round, perhaps 150 in number; faces so earnest I never saw before in any congregation. From house to house I saw much of the same feeling."

We have just seen reports of a considerable awakening now going on in Newcastle (England); many are under convictions of sin, meetings are held every night, in fact, there is the Revival as it is in Ireland, but without the bodily affections. The recent American Revival, though wonderfully extensive in its range, and remarkable for its results, is also free from these objectionable phenomena. But an enquirer says, "If conviction of sin, which you wish to become general, results in bodily affections, whether hysterical or not, should we not accept such results, and may they not terminate in good, both to the persons affected and to those who witness or hear of them?"—"Is it not wrong in us to seek to prevent them?" Without doubt many who have been led to think of sin and Jesus, and consequently to comprehend their state in the sight of God, rightly attribute that consideration and its results to impressions which have grown upon the public mind in consequence of stricken cases seen and heard of. In this we behold God, as ever, bringing good out of evil. But to enquirer we would further say, that, If the propagation of hysteria, and the educing of its symptoms, are legitimate effects of preaching the gospel—if the conviction of sin properly resulting from that preaching tends to produce hysteria—let it come, and let sinners learn that God gives a slight foreshadowing of the evil consequences of sin. But then, those who know something more of hysteria than its symptoms—who know what that condition of the nervous system is which produces those symptoms which the lookers on call hysterical fits, very well know, that the preaching of Jesus and the Apostles could not tend to produce such symptoms, and not only so; but that its tendency was directly antagonistic, and, to the entire extent of the effect produced upon the hysterical subject, curative. Into this topic time and space will not now permit us to enter, but should it be found requisite, another article may enable us to do so. In the mean time, if our reader is in Doubting Castle, he will please to remember that their preaching did not produce such a result—that they "went about healing (not producing) all manners of sickness and all manners of disease among the people." No trace can be found of anything of the sort, except in the execution of judgment upon sinners, as in the case of Elymas, and in that of Ananias. Saul was "stricken to the ground," but by a light and power from heaven seen and heard by others, and in every way unlike modern cases. On the day of Pentecost, which day is constantly referred to in revival preachings and prayers, three thousand were "pricked to the heart," but no trace of hysteria. On the contrary, the best exercise of their moral and intellectual faculties stands out in full view.

And now let every believer in the Lord Jesus lift up his heart to God for a revival of Apostolic Christianity—for preaching and results such as we read of in the scriptures of the New Covenant—and may it come soon, and everywhere, to the glory of God, and the salvation of men. D. KING.

---

"THE kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field; but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." Such was our Lord's prophetic description of the condition of His church until the time of the harvest. Let it be no cause of offence if Belfast be now subject to this common condition, and if the mingling of evil with good in the work in progress there, should perplex us not a little, and "crave our wary walking."

WHEN the Apostles had, by making known the good news in any community, made a number of disciples, they associated them together as an assembly of God, and proceeded to teach (not to preach) them all things, whatsoever the Lord directed them to teach such disciples. In the performance of this part of their duty, they were teachers, not preachers or proclaimers.—E. P.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM, WORTLEY, LISBURN, CASTLEWELLAN, AND OTHER PLACES.

The second Tuesday in August and the six days following will not soon be forgotten by those brethren who tasted of the fellowship of that week. Our happy Annual Meeting is over, the report posted to the Harbinger and 'ere this printed; the meeting of the church in Birmingham on the following Lord's-day, the tea-meeting in the afternoon, and the stirring proclamation in the evening by Bro. Inwards, are also among the past, but not easily forgotten things. On the Monday we gave the parting hand to the last visiting brethren, and entered somewhat into the feelings of a sister who wished we "could have annual meetings quarterly." As my course has been this month somewhat unusual, and as particulars of some little interest have presented themselves, I shall note events somewhat in the order of their occurrence. On Monday and Tuesday, August 15 and 16, I had much conversation with several interesting enquirers, attracted by the special meetings; among them were two preachers, one of whom, upon leaving, declared his intention to preach no more in his present connection. An interesting young female, who has been long seeking to make herself fit to come to Jesus, was enabled, after much instruction, to see the way of salvation. On Wednesday afternoon I immersed her into the ever-glorious name. On the next evening we had a larger meeting than usual of the members of the church, and I put before them reasons which had led me to conclude that the Lord had willed me to visit Ireland, and as the arrangements I suggested were unanimously adopted, I felt at liberty to take my departure on the following day. Accordingly, the next morning Sister King and myself were on rail to Manchester, where, among the loved ones of the church of that place, we had arranged for her to stay during my absence. Having stayed one night in Manchester, on Saturday, August 21, I found myself in Wortley, near to Leeds, and called upon to do the work of a mason; the earth had been removed, the stone prepared, the people collected, and we laid the first stone of a house in which it is expected that the primitive gospel will be preached, believers immersed, and God worshipped according to apostolic order. Brother Fawcett, one of the elders, gave the history of the formation of the church in Wortley by himself and three or four others, some twenty-six years back, I addressed the people on the purpose to which the building is to be devoted, and after a comfortable tea-meeting in the present house, proclaimed the gospel to an attentive company.

The next morning, Lord's-day, August 22, I delivered a discourse in the same place, and at twelve o'clock retired to the Wellington swimming bath, Leeds, and in a large sheet of water, in the open air, Bro. Swan (elder) immersed two females into the death of Jesus. About one hundred persons were looking on, to whom I gave an address on Sin, Death, and Life in Christ. In the afternoon the church attended to the ordinances, and in the evening I again preached the gospel in the meeting place, after which, one female, with streaming eyes and contrite heart, confessed her faith, and also her sin, in so long neglecting Christ. Leaving the brethren to arrange for her immersion, I hastened to the train, and after midnight arrived in Manchester, and by seven o'clock the next morning was on the rail for Fleetwood, from whence, at seven p.m. I left by steamboat, with Bro. R. Hay, for Belfast, at which place we landed in safety on Tuesday morning, after listening to an hour's preaching on board the boat. On the quay we were met by Bro. Sinclair, and after taking refreshment, having obtained a letter from Bro. Tener, we hastened to meet him at one of the Belfast railway stations, where our plans were in part arranged—Brethren Sinclair and Hay agreed to spend the night in Belfast, and I determined to go immediately to Lisburn, where, at about three o'clock, I found myself kindly received in the hospitable mansion of Mr. Stewort, who owns a considerable mill in Lisburn. Of Mr. Stewort I must say he is one of the Lord's gentlemen; recently brought to believe in Jesus, he turned to God, he made no cold profession while intending to move on pretty much as before, but he gave himself to the Lord. Formerly he managed the mill, and it required his time, but now he employs a manager, and gives it his own attention only about two hours in each day, and every day does he teach and preach Christ from house to house, holding every evening a meeting, in doors or out, according to circumstances. Recently he learned that believers should put on Christ in baptism, and he has been baptized—that the Lord's death should be commemorated in the breaking of the bread every Lord's-day, and he does it. My stay at Mr. Stewort's, at this time, was not a long one. I needed refreshment, it was supplied, and in an hour we were on our way to the abodes of sinners convinced of sin. Presently I found myself in a bed-room, reading the Acts of the Apostles to about a dozen men and women. While reading, one who had been some days anxious, called aloud for mercy, and soon became prostrated, and had to be placed upon the bed. We continued to read and speak to the others, and presently another, who had paid marked attention, was "stricken," after the manner of the first. Having called at several houses where were awakened sinners, and the shades of evening coming over us, we made way to an elevated spot at some distance, and there found a considerable company of people waiting. After singing and prayer Mr. Stewort informed the meeting that Mr. King, from England, would address them in place of himself. I told them of the death and resurrection of Christ—of Jesus the sacrifice, and Christ the priest. Many appeared to hear as though much affected, and while I continued speaking, one, and another, and another were, to use the language of the time and place, "stricken"—they cried aloud, and had to be supported or carried out of the crowd. After dark we concluded the meeting, or rather tried to do so, for here you may say when a meeting shall commence, but not when it shall close. There were present many persons who had recently felt the arrows of conviction, and subsequently the love of God shed abroad in their hearts. Drunkards sing, "We won't go home till morning," and they mean it, and it comes from their hearts, and so these people sing, hand in hand, and evidently meaning what they say. On this occasion they stood in the darkness and sang, in lively strains, "Our Jesus has done all things well," "I love Jesus! yes I do," and like songs of praise.

After prayer at Bro. Stewort's we retired to sleep, thankful that through the goodness of Almighty God we were of the number that rejoice in Christ Jesus.

The next morning Mr. S. and myself were on the rail for Antrim; on arriving we were conducted to the house of Mr. James O'Niel, who, with his truly amiable wife, heartily entertained us. We had much conversation on the things of the kingdom, and I found that this good brother and sister had recently left a Baptist church, and either had commenced, or were about to commence, meeting every first day to break the loaf and for mutual teaching, &c. One thing only did I regret, that our good brother as yet, has failed to recognize that the Lord's kingdom on earth is not regulated by the laws of the eternal kingdom. He sees persons brought to love Jesus, the evidence that their hearts are changed is before him, they have not (to use the language of the day) seen baptism, had they seen it they would obey. Our good brother would not for one moment fellowship the man who understands the Lord's command and leaves it unattended to, but he allows his kindly feelings to guide him where the Word of God alone should direct, and though he admits that the Lord's table is within the kingdom, and that the Lord himself has declared that "unless a man is born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter," yet when they do not see the water to be requisite, he undertakes to place them where the Lord says they cannot come. In the evening of this day I addressed a company in the Market-place upon the one hope of the Gospel, and afterward Bro. Stewort delivered a discourse and held a prayer meeting in the Primitive Methodist chapel, lent for the purpose. After the meetings Bro. O'Niel had conversation with several anxious souls. Further conversation and prayer closed the day, when, covered by the roof of Bro. O'Niel's abode, and kept in safety by our Almighty Father, we were refreshed by sleep, and prepared for moving by an early train. It was my intention to go on to Ballymena and Connor, having introductions to the leading friends among those with whom the revival commenced, but by this time my voice had entirely failed, public speaking was for two or three days out of the question, and therefore, and as our time was short, I determined to retrace my steps and get to the brethren in Castlewellan. Rail to Belfast, a walk through the town, rail to Ballynahinch, and omnibus some nine miles, brought us to the house of Bro. Mitchell, which we found filled with people listening to a discourse from Bro. Hay, on rebinding to God. Here application was made for the Market Hall, that I might address the people on the next evening. The Magistrate referred us to the clergyman, and that gentleman conferred with the legal functionary, and then it was refused. Had we blacked our faces and proposed to sing "Jump Jim Crow," or "Hoop dee doden do," &c. it would have been at our service, but as we intended to preach the ancient gospel, and talk to sinners as the apostles did, of course the magistrate and the parson of Castlewellan could not wish us God speed. On the next evening Bro. Mitchell's two rooms were filled, reminding us of a description on one occasion of Rowland Hill's chapel—"filled like peas in a bushel." Bro. Hay discoursed upon some of those words of love given to us by the Apostle John, and I gave an address upon the coming of the Lord. At the close of this meeting a ride of some six miles brought me to Tullynasouch, where, on the next evening, I attended what was called "a revival meeting," held in a barn well packed with people. This, however, was quite unlike the meetings at Lisburn and Antrim. It appeared something like a Presbyterian effort to cage the revival, and bring it to account for the sect, and this was more fully evident when an elder called upon them to sing "some poetry line," which however had no poetry in them, and which were sung to the praise and glory of Presbyterianism. Right heartily, though in slow measure, did they sing out the following sentiment:—

"About two hundred years ago,
From Scotland's holy land,
There came to — olden town
A Presbyterian band;
They placed upon its castle wall
Their noble flag of blue,
And worshipped God in Bible terms,
As Presbyterians do!"

Though uninvited, and as I found afterward unwelcome, I yielded to a desire to enter in a plea for the Bible. In a moment I had the ear of the people. I told them some things Jesus, David, Paul, and Peter have said of the Scripture—what they are able to do, what they have done for those who have been directed by them, what neglecting of them did for the Jews—that we know of sin, of judgment, of God, of Christ, of heaven, of hell, of the way of salvation, is in the Bible, and that we were not a line of information not contained therein. The leaders declared the things uttered by the strange gentleman most excellent, but they were quite sorry he had left them. Thus closed the week, and left me to enter upon the duties and privileges of Lord's-day, August 28. At Tullynasouch the bread and wine adorned the board, and a few minutes after the appointed time we lifted our voices in praise and prayer. Bro. Sinclair presided, and I gave an address to the brethren upon Titus 1. I must observe here that no brother or sister arrived after the service had commenced. Our prayer was not disturbed by people streaming in who might, and who ought to have been in time, and yet a number of these good brethren have to walk about six English miles to the meeting, and of course the same distance back. In the afternoon, having been conveyed to Castlewellan, I proclaimed the gospel to a good company under the shadow of a fine new church, and within hearing of the clergyman, who would not consent to our having the Market-hall, he having placed himself behind a hedge in the field at our back. In the evening Bro. Sinclair held a good meeting in a house, and I returned to Tullynasouch, intending to hold a meeting on the following evening about two miles distant. This, however, was not done, for though it was to have been held in the house of a brother, he was not permitted to use the house for that purpose. Under these circumstances we resolved to meet at Bro. Bingham's, Tullynasouch. It had been said that no one would come, that some attempt had been made a week ago and failed, &c. At eight o'clock, however, one room was packed, and I had to stand in a door-way that people in the other room might also hear. Some were present who heard us at the "Revival" (alias the Presbyterian) meeting described above—all were attentive. I addressed them from the Lord's words, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," &c. We were expected to say something about the Revival, so I took it to pieces, tested its parts by apostolic tests, and prayed that a mighty awakening might run from land to land, and that all human additions to and deviations from the Divine plan might cease. In this neighbourhood, with many, to be converted and to be stricken, not only mean much the same thing, but the former cannot take place without the latter—they pray to be stricken, and even some who have long considered themselves pardoned now express a measure of doubt, and desire to be laid prostrate, that they may have this new evidence of their election. On the other hand, some have been stricken three or four times, and are not sure of pardon yet; others have become deranged. One, near to where I write, has lost her speech, and others quite envy her.

I have been in Ireland now eight days, in county and in towns, moving much among the people, and not one oath have I heard, no drunken men have I seen, only one noisy voice has reached my ear; every where people will listen to the Word of Truth, and that folly and madness which treat with indifference eternal interests, seems greatly to have declined.

Tuesday, August 30, I returned to Castlewellan and discoursed to a full house upon the propitiation for the sins of the whole world. On the following evening, in the same place, I discoursed upon Jesus crowned. One female was affected, and as it was known I intended to leave early in the morning, she came soon after five o'clock and requested to be immersed. She had for some time objected much to the order of things observed by the brethren in Castlewellan. Having made her desire known, I immediately left for Belfast, and on the next morning, in company with Bro. Hay, arrived (through His goodness who holds the waves and the winds) in safety. Thus closed our visit to Ireland, but not without regret, as I came away convinced, that a considerable work could be accomplished. As, however, I intend to pen for another page "Notes on the Revival," I will not say more here.

Lord's-day morning, Sept. 4, found me in the commodious room recently opened by the brethren at Leigh. Three very pleasing meetings were held. In the morning we had brethren only, and I found it good to be there. In the afternoon we had a large company, and among them not less than seven preachers. All listened with great attention to the recital of the things I had seen and heard in Ireland. In the evening a still larger company attended, and I tested the Revival by facts recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Being persuaded to announce a discourse for Monday, we had another most attentive audience. The evening closed by our receiving a confession of sin and faith in Jesus from one whose streaming eyes gave evidence of her sincerity. On Tuesday I returned to Manchester, in order to attend two Revival Meetings in the Free Trade Hall. In the evening some four thousand people were present. The considerable cost of this meeting was paid by Mr. Montgomery, of Portadown, Ireland, who gave information concerning the movement, as did also a rev. gentleman who had been over. Prayer was the main feature—prayers which told the Lord that the gospel is powerless and useless, unless the Spirit is poured out to make it quick and powerful—that the one thing requisite to the conversion of sinners is the outpouring of the Holy Spirit—that if He would open the windows of heaven and pour down His Spirit, Manchester would be converted: also other assertions equally untrue, together with many excellent and no doubt heart-felt petitions. As we entered the hall the following notice, of the printing of which I had not been informed, was placed in our hands.

“REVIVALS VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF SCRIPTURE.—Mr. D. King, of Birmingham, having recently visited and held meetings in some of the Revival Districts in the North of Ireland, will preach in Grosvenor Rooms, Grosvenor-street, Oxford-st., on Wednesday evening, September 7, at 8 o'clock.”

On the Wednesday evening we had a crowded and attentive congregation. On the next evening I found myself before a large company in the commodious meeting-house recently erected by brethren in Wigan; extra seats had to be brought, and we were informed that it was the largest meeting yet held in that house. The subject advertised was, “The Revival in Ireland.” It was an interesting and solemn meeting. Brethren Coop and McDougall were present, having returned from Ireland, and it was announced that the last-named brother would give interesting facts next Lord’s day.

On Lord’s day, Sept. 11, I addressed the Manchester brethren in the morning, and a crowded meeting in the same place in the evening, after which a female who had attended for some time announced her determination to live to the Lord, and asked baptism. On the next evening I proclaimed the gospel in the same place, after which a young man made a similar announcement and demand. On the two evenings next following I addressed meetings of from 700 to 900 each, in Hope Hall, Liverpool; and the next evening, having requested the Manchester brethren to meet for the purpose, I reminded them, as can best be done when brethren only are present, of some of those things which we all know, but are prone to let slip. The following day we arrived safely in Birmingham—met with the brethren in the evening, gave them particulars of the tour, and found that good meetings had been held, good discourses delivered, and three persons immersed during our absence. On Lord’s-day, Sept. 18, in the room, Cherry-street, I gave two discourses on the Revival and Pentecost, and on Tuesday evening I am expected to describe more fully, and trace to their causes, the physical phenomena.

D. KING.

DUNDEE.

Our esteemed Brother Milner commenced his labors in this locality on the 28th of August, and since that period he has delivered many effective proclamations of the ancient gospel to large audiences on Lord’s days, and twice during the week addresses were delivered by him to enquirers, at which conversation is allowed at the close, and some have taken advantage of it: another meeting is devoted to young enquirers connected with the brethren. We are glad that his labors are appreciated; indeed, his powerful arguments and stirring appeals cannot fail to arouse public attention to the great concerns of the future. This was evidenced last Lord’s day by four persons making the good confession; they were immersed into Christ in presence of many witnesses in the church. May they continue steadfast in the truth, and go on their way rejoicing.—We highly appreciate the visit of Bro. M.; his labors are calculated to do much good—he is a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, and is in every way competent to do the work of an evangelist.

Bro. M. has commenced a series of Letters to the People, published in the Dundee Journal and other papers, which we trust may be the means of arousing the thinking portion of the community to the all-important truths of the gospel. They will be continued weekly for a year at least. (No. I. appears in our present issue.)

J. G. ALEXIE.

P S.—Bro. Robt. Anderson, from Russia, is here at present, and has been resident in this quarter for some weeks past. He has come to this country on business, to arrange for taking out machinery for a large factory to be erected near Moscow. He was sometime an elder in the churches at Perth and Edinburgh. In Russia he can only meet in his own house on Lord's day, there being so few of his own countrymen in that sterile land, and he dare not attempt to proselyte, for he would be sent to Siberia. Such are the tyrannical laws of the Czar. He was seven years under the late Emperor, at the imperial works at Alexandrofsky, but is now resident at Romanoff, within 200 miles of Moscow, on the banks of the Volga. He may be here all the Winter.

GLASGOW.

As the brethren generally will be pleased to receive intelligence respecting my progress to and in Scotland, I pen the following particulars.

Leaving Newtown on the 27th ult. I spent from that time till Monday, Sept. 5th, in Manchester, thus including two Lord's days. My visit to Manchester was an exceedingly gratifying one. The general steadfastness of those who first constituted the church in Manchester—the large increase of brethren thus far—the great promise given by quite a band of young men as to future usefulness—the zeal and love of the community as a whole cheered me, the more that I had spent but one Lord's day in Manchester before since terminating my labors in that city at the end of 1855.

Purposing to pass to Dundee by way of Glasgow, I rejoiced to find that a few brethren in Ayrshire were desirous of help just at the juncture, in consequence of the Revival influences at work in their neighborhood. So calling at Stevenston for four days, I reached Glasgow in time to spend with the brethren in that city Lord's day the 11th instant and following days. Returning to Stevenston, six days more were spent in that village, and I am happy to add, I was privileged to immerse seven individuals, who will form an encouraging addition to the few worthy brethren who remain in that locality. In the contiguous towns of Saltcoats and Ardrossan, "the Revival" has been at work, and cases of persons being "stricken" are reported. But in Stevenston, so far as I am aware, nothing of the kind has taken place. There has been simply an unusual disposition to hear the Gospel. Of this feature you may judge from the simple fact, that in ten days it was my privilege to deliver eleven discourses and take part in nine conversational meetings. There is reason to hope that more persons in that neighborhood will soon obey the Saviour. It would be well if further effort could be put forth there. "The Revival" is taking considerable hold on Glasgow, and by announcing two addresses on "Revivals" we were able to gather two fine week-evening meetings. Respecting Dundee, having arrived there to-day only, all I can report is, that Bro. Milner feels encouraged by four recent immersions, and by the interest of a few enquirers.

Dundee, Sept. 22, 1859. J. B. R.

Bro. JOHN BROWN also writes from Glasgow, under date of Sept. 13th, to the effect that since his last communication, six young persons had been added to the church through confession and immersion.

LEIGH

David says, "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, for praise is comely for the upright in heart." If there is one thing more than another which calls for praise, it is when the gospel is proclaimed and sinners yield to its mighty power, and become obedient to the faith. Sept. 4th, Bro. King paid us a visit on his return from Ireland, and having witnessed some extraordinary things in connection with the revival there, he gave us some account of it, and the novelty of the thing brought together the largest company we have had for a long time. In the morning he addressed the church, and in the afternoon and evening we had the revivals reviewed, and a large attentive company we had. On Monday evening Bro. K. spoke again, and at the close a young female was very deeply affected, expressing her desire to lead a new life, and confessing her faith in Christ, and desiring baptism. On Lord's, Sept. 18th, another young female who has been connected with the Methodists, but lately has attended our meetings, having made the good confession before many witnesses, they were both immersed by Bro. Coop at Wigan, on the 18th inst. We have commenced a week-night meeting, and we have spent some delightful evenings. May the Lord bless us.

SWANSEA.

With pleasure I inform you, that on the 11th, a young man and woman made confession of their allegiance to King Messiah, and were immersed by Bro. E. Evans in the presence of many witnesses. May they continue faithful to the end. This is the first-fruits of Bro. Evans' labors.

D. HOPKINS.

WIGAN.

In one of our cottage meetings on the evening of Lord's day, Sept. 11, Brother McDougall was interrupted while preaching from Isaiah liii. 5, "He was wounded for our transgressions," by a man rising and most earnestly confessing his faith in the Messiah of whom he was hearing, and there being every reason to believe in his sincerity, he was baptized into Christ the following evening. We have also been gladdened by the restoration of two brethren who had wandered from the Lord.

On Thursday, Sept. 8, we had the pleasure of a visit from Bro. King, who has recently returned from Ireland; he delivered a most interesting and powerful address on the Revivals which are now taking place there. He spoke in terms of general approbation of the movement, which he said was marked by three characteristics.—1, The population through a large extent of the North of Ireland, were deeply impressed with the importance of religion, and were laboring under conviction of sin.—2, A considerable number everywhere believed and cordially embraced the gospel.—3, The movement was attended in many cases with some serious physical effects, which were esteemed by many as evidences of conversion, but which, in many cases were clearly the result of bodily weakness, and were rather to be avoided than encouraged. The address throughout was of a very instructive character, and was listened to with great attention by a large audience.

Bro. McDougall having in company with Bro. T. Coop spent nine days in the North of Ireland, was requested to narrate the leading incidents witnessed by them on Lord's day evening, Sept. 11, on which occasion the meeting-house was crowded to excess, numbers being unable to gain admission. Facts indicative of the extent of the movement were noticed, such as the Daily Union Meetings in the Music Hall, the Saturday Meetings in the Victoria Hall, the Meeting of the Factory Girls at their dinner hour, and the Ship Carpenters' meeting at the same hour, all in Belfast. Some few cases of individual conversion, remarkable for the apparent suddenness and depth of the conviction of sin and the physical phenomena attending them, were presented; but as one half of the interesting incidents which our brother had committed to manuscript were not given owing to the want of time, the audience requested a continuation of the narrative on the ensuing Lord's day evening, Sept. 11, when the meeting-house, notwithstanding the wetness of the evening, was again filled. Bro. W. McD. introduced his narrative by calling attention to the character of the movement as viewed in the light of the New Testament, pointing out several instances in which the doings of the ministers, and their directions to the awakened, were not in harmony with, but in opposition to the Word of God. He then noticed several deeply-interesting instances of undoubted change of heart and life; and for two hours and a half the audience listened attentively to the facts presented, and apparently with the deepest interest.

Last Lord's day several of the brethren from Wigan and Leigh visited the church at St. Helen's, on the occasion of opening their meeting-house, which has been purchased by one of the brethren for their use. It was formerly occupied by the Wesleyan Reformers, and is a very neat and comfortable building, capable of holding 200 persons. As the opening had not been publicly announced, there were not many strangers present. J. S. WALKER.

HINDMARSH (SOUTH AUSTRALIA.)

During last week two, husband and wife, entered the kingdom by immersion into Christ, and are going on their way rejoicing. We are glad to hear that the good cause is progressing in the manufacturing districts of Old England. The masses with you are far wide of the mark of God's high calling, and it is so here. Very few even among professors of Christianity seem to think, that the God of all goodness has any plan whereby to save the guilty; and if by any means of excitement, however unscriptural, they can obtain any idea of religion, they are introduced into the society with all their ignorance.—We have here still those who have the hardihood to sprinkle babies in broad day-light, blind guides leading the blind. H. WARREN.

July 18, 1859.

OBITUARIES.

We have to record the departure of three members of the church in Nottingham.

MYRA MEEKLEY,

one of the sisters, died in the faith and hope of the gospel, on the 9th of August last, aged 58 years. For a long period she was in union with the Primitive Methodists, but having heard the gospel more fully stated on June 19, 1853, she confessed her faith in Jesus, as the Son of God, and was baptized agreeably to the Divine command.

SARAH HANNAH HOWITT, fell asleep in Jesus on the 19th of August last, aged 19 years, after six days acute suffering. This sister was added to the church in February, 1858, and those who were present at her departure, give assurance that she died triumphant in Christ.

EDWARD CROFT.

This brother, from the baptized Second Adventists, joined the church April 2, 1848, and died on the 5th September 1859, aged 71 years. His faith and piety toward God were as apparent as his honesty and uprightness amongst men. He died in the faith and hope of the gospel. He had been deprived of his sight for several years.

NOVEMBER, 1859.

BIBLE REVISION : ITS IMPERATIVE NECESSITY.*

PRESENTED IN A SERIES OF DIFFERENT PAPERS, IN WHICH THE DISCREPANCIES AND ERRORS OF THE AUTHORIZED VERSION ARE POINTED OUT.

XIII.—PROFANE EXPRESSIONS IN THE COMMON VERSION.

WHEN the Common Version was made, the usages of the Church of Rome were still so familiar as largely to affect the habits of religious people, in the freedom with which they used the name of Jehovah in conversation and in writing. As a consequence, the word God was frequently introduced into the translation, when there is no corresponding term in the inspired original. Examples are to be found in such expressions as these :—

"GOD FORBID." This expression occurs twenty-three times in our version. In no case is the name of God in the original. Generally, the meaning is, By no means, or May it not be.

"GOD SPEED," is a similar example of the use of the name of God without authority from inspiration. It occurs several times. The proper meaning of the original, is prosperity, or to rejoice.

"WOULD TO GOD," is equally objectionable, and equally unauthorized.

"WOULD GOD," is another form of the same imprecation. These two phrases are found twelve times in our version. In each instance the original only expresses a wish without any mention of God.

"GOD SAVE THE KING," is of the same character. More particular reference to this addition to the language of Scripture has been made on former occasions.

No person can be fully aware of the injurious effects produced by the frequent repetition of such expressions. They so closely resemble the profane swearing of worldly people, that few can discern the exact difference between them. When the minister of the Gospel interpolates his public discourses and social conversation with such phrases as "God forbid," "God speed," &c. he and all who hear him become familiar with the use of the name of Jehovah, which the Holy Scriptures never authorized. If he can freely say "God forbid," how can he properly reprove a worldly man from saying "God condemn?" or for using a still more profane expression, common to vulgar lips, for the same idea? It is a striking fact, that such phrases are most frequently employed when the speaker is labouring under violent excitement, and when, if ever, he would be most tempted to use profane language.

Why should the name of the Lord be thus taken in vain, in the book which we circulate as the Word of God?

The influence of the language of the Bible upon the ordinary speech of those who use it, and through them upon the society in which they mingle, is much greater than is generally supposed. The writers of the different books of the sacred volume, were restrained from the use of phraseology which, if correctly rendered, would prevent this influence to evil. When they would express their strongest disapprobation of a sentiment, they were not allowed to use stronger terms than GENOITO, May it not be, By no means. This should be our example. Let our speech be simple: Yea, yea, and Nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these, cometh of evil. Let us imitate Christ and His apostles, who never uttered such an expression as GOD FORBID.

XIV. — EXPRESSIONS OFFENSIVE TO MODESTY IN THE COMMON VERSION.

At the period when the Common

* Continued.

Version was made, the English people were not characterized by delicacy and modesty of expression. As a consequence of the prevailing habits of the day, the translation is, in many places, disfigured by expressions utterly repugnant to the good taste and refined sentiment which now generally prevail. This renders it disagreeable, and sometimes highly improper to read certain portions of the version before our families or in public assemblies. It is a pleasant consideration, that all the most objectionable passages can be properly translated, so as to convey the real meaning of the inspired text, by idiomatic words and phrases in our language, which are in no way offensive to good taste or pure feeling.

No one who duly values the Word of God would desire to see such a principle carried so far, as, for the purpose of gratifying a sickly sentimentality, to conceal or obscure any part of the truth of revelation. But where the true idea of the original can be conveyed in pure and intelligible English, unobjectionable to a justly refined taste, the obligations of the people of God to their own families, and to society in general, require that this should be done. No forms of expression, not required by faithfulness to the original, should be retained, which we do not wish to make familiar to the ears and minds of those for whom the version was designed. Purity and delicacy of language have much influence in cherishing purity and delicacy of feeling; and those who have most to do with the education of the youthful mind, most sensibly feel the necessity of the suggested improvement in the English Bible. The phraseology of the Book of books ought to be such in every respect, as to command the respect of all who hear it read, and to afford the best models in purity and delicacy of speech to the youth of both sexes.

We have heard that the school authorities of a town in New England, have substituted Webster's Bible for that of King James', on account of the indelicate forms of expression in the latter. It is certain, that these expressions have afforded much ammunition for Infidels and Sceptics, in the sneers and ridicule with which they have attacked the Bible. Robert Dale Owen, in his controversy with Batchelor, revels in objections of this character.

A minister of the Gospel is said to have so shocked the sensibilities of his people by reading the Bible through in course, from the pulpit, not omitting the passages offensive to modesty, that they dismissed him. Can any good reason be given why these things should so remain? Shall we prevent the Book of God from being read in our schools, our families, and our churches, because of blemishes, which can be removed, not only without injury, but with great advantage to the full and truthful translation of the meaning of inspiration into our own vernacular tongue?

XV. — MISSIONARIES NEED A REVISED ENGLISH BIBLE.

The English Bible must ever be THE BIBLE FOR THE WORLD. It is already used by far more than half of all who really study the Sacred Scriptures. In other countries, the daily readers of the Bible are counted by hundreds and by thousands, but in Britain and America, they are numbered by millions. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of preparing a pure version for such multitudes of people.

Whatever is done in the English Scriptures, is done for all new translations. The great body of missionaries and Scripture translators use the English tongue. For their knowledge of the Holy Oracles, they are more dependent upon the English version than upon all others together. Distinguished, though some of them are, for scholarship, they have neither the time nor the facilities, to make the thorough investigations into the meaning of the original, required of the Bible Union's Board of Final Revisers. They have not the life-long training in biblical criticism—the varied authorities in hand for consultation—the constant intercourse with learned men of the same profession. The chief business of a translator of Scripture into a Heathen dialect, is to render himself familiar with the idioms and peculiarities of that dialect; and as he is usually a pioneer in the work, it requires the devotion of his life to make even tolerable proficiency. It is not, then, a matter of wonder, that he finds little time, even if he had the facilities, to go far behind the English version, and to make new and thorough investigations, which, to be suitably conducted, would require all his attention. The errors of the English version are, in consequence, frequently transferred to the versions for the Heathen. The correction, then, of this version, is the most direct and effectual aid which we can render to missionaries and translators, in all parts of the world; and the notes by which the Bible Union accompanies its revisions, are to them an invaluable repository of those very facilities for comparing biblical authorities on each passage, of which they feel the greatest need. Missionaries of different denominations testify most strongly to these facts.

Another view of this subject is worthy of attention. There are hundreds of languages and dialects into which the Bible must yet be translated, and in every Heathen tongue into which it has already been rendered, it will need revision and correction. Nearly all the time, which would otherwise be spent by the numerous missionaries engaged in such work, in an imperfect and unsatisfactory examination and comparison of the original Scriptures, will be saved to the benevolence of this and succeeding ages, by a thorough and faithful English version, accompanied, as it must be for such purposes, with full philological notes and authorities.

But not only versions for the Heathen are largely influenced by the English. Every European version, made since the common English version was issued, has been greatly influenced by it, and the thorough correction of the one, will render inevitable the correction of the others.

XVI. — CORRECT VERSIONS FOR THE HEATHEN, DO NOT AGREE WITH THE ENGLISH VERSION.

Dr. Judson's version of the New Testament into the Burmese language, has been compared by one of his colleagues with the common English version, and in many passages is found to agree with the original Greek, and not with the English. These passages have been collected for the use of revisers employed by the Bible Union.

Dr. Yates testified to the same fact regarding the Bengali, and other versions made into the languages of India, and proposed to have the passages in which they differed from the English, collected into a book to aid the correction of the English version.

Rev. John H. Chandler, missionary at Bangkok, Siam, stated in an address, delivered before the Bible Union in 1852, that the present King of Siam, having compared the Siamese version made by that eminent scholar, Dr. Jones, with the English version, declared "that he thought Dr. Jones did not fully understand the Siamese; for he had mistranslated in some places, supposing of course the English to be correct. It would, I doubt not, have been less painful to the feelings of Dr. Jones, to have ascertained that his translation was incorrect, than to have felt obliged to say, that the English was wrong and the Siamese right. I gave away several copies of the Bible to the Siamese, to aid them in the study of English, and, as might be expected, they will take our translations, read and compare them, in order to understand it. The English language has become very popular since the accession of the present king, and many are studying it. You can see from this, some of the reasons why I wish a revision of our English Bible."

What a humiliating confession for a missionary to have to make to his converts and others in heathen lands, that the Bible used by the pious of his own country, contains known and acknowledged errors, which his countrymen do not correct, although they have the means! In what light does this present Christianity to the Heathen?

The instances in which the English version differs from the original Hebrew and Greek, are now numbered by thousands. Hence it is inevitable that the translator must make a version for the Heathen different from the English, or he must be unfaithful to the words of inspiration. This creates a palpable and positive difference between that which the missionary and his family use in their own language, and that which he gives to his converts. The results of such a difference are, as yet, only partially felt. As intelligence progresses, and idolatry loses its hold upon the Heathen mind, the greatest danger to be apprehended, and that which is already partially experienced in India, is the proneness of the human mind to scepticism; and nothing is more adapted to cherish scepticism in an intelligent Heathen, than the knowledge of the fact, that the Bible, which he is required to believe, is not the same in his language as in that of England and America, and that Christians in these lands tolerate what they know to be errors in what they call the Word of God.

XVII.—SECTARIANISM OF THE COMMON VERSION.

The revision of the English Bible, known as the Common Version, was suggested at the conference of divines, held at Hampton Court, shortly after the accession of James I. "I wish,"

said the king, "some special pains were taken for a uniform translation, which should be done by the best learned in both universities, then reviewed by the bishops, presented to the privy counsel, and lastly, ratified by royal authority, to be read in the whole church, and no other."

King James was one of the most bigoted churchmen that ever sat on the throne of England, and he is distinguished for persecuting to the death those who differed from him in doctrine or practice. For the work which he contemplated, he selected fifty-four men, all connected with the church of England, except one. When it was completed, it was dedicated to the Sovereign, as the Head of the Church, in a preface in which the translators thus speak of their work:

"And now at last, by the mercy of God, and the continuance of our labors, it being brought unto such a conclusion, as that we have great hope that THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND shall reap good fruit thereby, we hold it our duty to offer it to your Majesty, not only as to our King and Sovereign, but as to the principal Mover and Author of the work."

This object, so ingenuously acknowledged, was kept in view, whenever the circumstances of the case would permit.

The translators use the word BISHOP in the translation of EPISCOPOS, except in such cases as Acts xx. 28, where such a translation would militate against prelacy, as showing that all the elders of churches were bishops, and here they translate the word OVERSEER. The latter undoubtedly conveys the proper meaning of the word in all cases.

They publish, as part of inspired truth, that which is acknowledged by scholars to be destitute of such authority, that Timothy was "ORDAINED THE FIRST BISHOP OF THE CHURCH OF THE EPHESIANS." They also publish as the Word of God, that Titus was

THE FIRST BISHOP OF THE CHURCH OF THE CRETIAN.

These human appendages to the Holy Oracles are not found in Tyndale's or Coverdale's version, nor even in the Latin Vulgate.

EASTER.—This word, for which there is no authority whatever in the original Scriptures, they put in the place of pass-over, the proper translation of PASCHA, in Acts xii. 4. The Episcopalians, in common with the Romanists, observe a day which they call Easter (from the name of a Saxon goddess) and to furnish divine authority for the observance, the name is introduced as a part of Sacred Scripture.

CHURCHES.—In Acts xix. 37, they call robbers of temples "ROBBERS OF CHURCHES," to sustain the Episcopal and Romish idea that edifices of wood and stone, consecrated to divine worship, are churches.

They translate the word BAPTIZO, and its cognates, in some cases, and transfer them in others. Had it been transferred where it is translated, or translated where it is transferred, the real meaning of the original would not have been so effectually concealed, and the absurdity of the translation which they have given would have been exposed.

SAINT.—They canonize the writers of the Testament by prefixing Saint to their names.

The command of the king prohibited the translators, if they had been disposed, from changing "the old ecclesiastical words." He particularly specified "the word 'church' not to be translated 'congregation.'"

1. The author of the work was a bigoted Episcopalian.

2. The translators or revisers were Episcopalian.

3. The rules under which they worked were designed to favour Episcopacy.

4. The Bishops' Bible, the work of other dignitaries of the Episcopal Church (the Church of England), was by royal command, made the basis of the revision.

5. Everything was done that could possibly be done, to make it favour Episcopalianism.

6. The work, when completed, was acknowledged by those who did it, to have this as its object, the benefit of the Church of England, and they hoped that the object was attained.

XVIII.—THE BIBLE UNION NOT SECTARIAN.

The American Bible Union originated from a single MOTIVE, the love of the pure Word of God. The CALL, by which it was summoned into existence, invited and welcomed "all persons to coöperate, who embrace the principle" of faithful versions, "without regard to their denominational positions."

The PRINCIPLE is stated in the constitution, as the sole object of the organization, viz. :

To procure and circulate the most faithful versions of the Sacred Scriptures in all languages throughout the world.

The sole BASIS of constituency is the payment of money for the object; thirty dollars for Life Membership; and one hundred dollars for Life Directorship; and ten for annual representation. Persons of any denomination, or of no denomination, may become Life Members, or Directors, or Representatives.

The OFFICERS and MANAGERS are chosen by a majority of the Life Members and Life Directors, and no other qualification is required but this choice. Persons of different denominations are chosen according to the will of the majority.

AGENTS are appointed without respect to their denominational connections, but solely with reference to their qualifications, to advocate the claims and advance the interests of the Union. They are connected with different denominations.

The PRELIMINARY REVISERS were selected as the very best scholars that could be procured, from nine different denominations.

The FINAL COMMITTEE is chosen without any reference to denominations. It was necessary that they should all be the best scholars that could possibly be found, even if all had been Presbyterians, or all Episcopalians, or all Baptists. Among the four already chosen, three denominations happen to be represented; but this fact had nothing to do with the principle of the choice.

The RULES and INSTRUCTIONS to Revisers, have no reference whatever to anything sectarian or denominational. They simply require the exact meaning of the inspired originals of Sacred Scripture, in the languages in which it is translated.

There is nothing, then, in the principles or proceedings of the American Bible Union that partakes of sectarianism. It appeals to all who love the pure Word of God to coöperate with heart and hand.

Some persons have proposed that certain words of Sacred Scripture should be excepted from the General Rules and Instructions. This the Bible Union has uniformly refused. It has insisted that such a course would be sectarian; that the Bible is not sectarian, but pure, unadulterated truth, and that the faithful and accurate translation of the Bible into any language, cannot be sectarian. To apply the same rule to every word and phrase, seeking only to transfer the exact meaning of the Sacred Scriptures into each language, having no regard to denominational preferences, but giving the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is, in the judgment of the Bible Union, the only course which will please God, satisfy an enlightened conscience, and benefit mankind.

XIX.—EXPENSES OF REVISION.

In calculating the expenses of the revision of the English Scriptures, it must be borne in mind that this is very far from being the only business of the American Bible Union. It has procured and issued, at considerable expense, a revision of the Italian Testament, which has already accomplished great good. In New York City alone, in a single year, twenty-three Italians were led, by reading it, to embrace the truth as it is in Jesus. Many thousand copies have been printed and circulated in Italy. We have expended a large amount of money in the preparation of a thorough and faithful revision of the Spanish New Testament, and the result is a book, which the best Spanish scholars acknowledge to be faithful, accurate, and idiomatic. The Union has been largely engaged in circulating it.

The revision of the German, and also of the French, has been prosecuted to some extent.

In various languages, especially in the German, and among the Heathen, large numbers of Bibles and Testaments have been circulated by the Union. In one of the Annual Reports, the number of copies circulated, or provided for by the Bible Union, was computed at that time at more than a quarter of a million, and every year adds to the number.

A very large amount of other publications has also been issued by the Union, all showing the necessity of revision, and the value of the pure Word of God.

The moneys expended for these various objects, ought not to be regarded as expenses of the revision of the English Scriptures. As a general Bible Society, the American Bible Union, in addition to this special object, has accomplished an incalculable amount of good, which may justly rejoice the hearts of God's people throughout the world.

The revision of the English Scriptures is expensive. This was anticipated by its earliest friends. If done at all, it must be well done. Books cost money; and books needed for revisers, are often rare and valuable.

Who would advise to spare the money needed for any one book, if thereby the work of revision should be impeded, or the merit of the results diminished?

Revisers must be employed and paid. They are chosen for their qualifications, and they must be supported while engaged in the work. Who would be willing to forego the services of any eminent scholar, if needed for the completion of the revision in the best possible manner?

The principles which have guided the Union from the beginning, in the expenditure of money, are these:—

1. Never to spend any sum which is not believed at the time to be essentially necessary to the prosperity and success of the enterprise.

2. Never to withhold any sum, if it can be procured, and if its use appears to be requisite to make the revision what the friends of the Bible Union wish it to be—a complete and faithful transcript in the English language, of the meaning of the inspired original. Every possible safeguard is thrown around the expenditure of money, to prevent the unnecessary use of a single fraction.

XX.—TIME SPENT IN REVISION.

A member of the Final Committee thus expresses his views of the time occupied in revision:—

"I am much interested in the frequent and earnest expressions of impatience for the work to be sent forth. This is right. I should be sorry to see indifference. But there must be the exemplification of a wise impatience. Let the work be hastened, but not hurried. All necessary, all reasonable time ought to be granted and taken. I have made but one answer as to the question of time; it is always: 'Just as soon as it can be satisfactorily done.' That is time enough."

Time, and care, and skill are required, to secure each shining particle of truth, and, also, to distinguish and remove the ross, which has hitherto passed with the people for fine gold. In some instances, the laborers are rewarded by discovering large masses of the precious metal, which had not been brought to light by those who preceded them.

The result will repay a thousandfold all expenditure of means and labour. Every particle of divine truth is a precious gift from God to man. It is of greater value than all the gems and gold of earth. Brought into direct contact with the mind of man, it is made, by the power of the Holy Spirit, the means of his conversion and sanctification. Error is never employed for this purpose. If received into the human mind for truth, it always produces moral disease, tending to spiritual death. If, then, any particle of error is disseminated in a version labelled as the Word of God, it is the poison of death, administered to the soul as the medicine of life. The ages of eternity only can reveal the amount of evil that may have been caused, or the amount of good prevented, by the errors and obscurities of our common English version. It is this view that reconciles the friends of revision to the length of time unavoidably consumed in the work. The longing of the people to see it more rapidly advance, is a cheering indication; but any measures to accelerate it, which may justly expose the final revision to the charges of haste and imperfection, would be wrong. Time, as it is diligently employed by the revisers, is merit and value transfused into the revision. The work is for the world, and every enlarged conception of its importance, imperatively demands that it shall not be hastened.

It is worthy of consideration that those enterprises among men, are least subject to change or injury from time, which have occupied most time in their accomplishment.

It would be unwise to regard the period thus spent, as confined to the preparation of a future publication. So great an object in prospect, ought not to draw off attention from the large amount of good constantly accomplished by the Bible Union. It is extensively engaged in the business of circulating the Sacred Scriptures in different languages, and, in various ways, it has already performed an amount of useful labor, in the home and foreign field, which would have been both surprising and gratifying in an organization of so few years, and so limited means, even if it had not so far advanced the revision of the English Scriptures.

One thing is certain. The completion of the work will not be delayed one day beyond what is indispensable to its highest merit. The Board are as anxious as possible to press it forward. No pains or necessary expense will be spared to accomplish it at the earliest practicable period. To urge it forward faster than it can well be done, would not be wisdom.

XXI.—PRELIMINARY REVISIONS OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE UNION.

The original plan of the Bible Union for the revision of the English Scriptures, provided for a twofold system of proceeding. The first part was preliminary. The second contemplated the formation of a Final Committee of Revision. The preliminary part embraced the employment of a considerable number of scholars, among whom the New Testament was divided. As their work was expected to be preparatory to something more finished, a greater latitude was allowed in making engagements. A larger number could thus be employed, and a better opportunity afforded to ascertain their varied qualifications. The revisions would not commit the institution, or render it responsible for any of their faults or defects.

The preliminary revisers are ecclesiastically connected with nine different denominations. They worked under the same rules, in some instances being associated in their labors. No pains or expense were spared in procuring for them any books which they requested, or any other conveniences or accommodations which they required. When any portion was published, it was sent to numerous scholars besides the revisers; and the criticisms and suggestions which it drew forth were submitted to the party who had prepared it for the press, and he had opportunity to reconsider and improve the work.

This part of the plan has furnished the board with nearly sixty manuscript revisions, each of some whole book of the New Testament, embodying an immense amount of research on almost every important question connected with the translation, which cannot fail to be of very great value in maturing the work.

It has already drawn out much useful criticism, and will call forth much more, as the preliminary revisions continue to be published.

It has enabled the Union to secure a most valuable library, which, with the additions that the Board hopes still to make, will afford all the advantages required to complete the ultimate revision.

It has brought the Union into friendly communication with many eminent scholars, in addition to those who have actually taken part in the work, and secured their coöperation, in a greater or lesser degree, in its future prosecution and improvement.

It has afforded time and opportunity for maturing the ultimate part of the plan, before engagements were undertaken which would more fully commit the Union.

It has furnished invaluable experience in the conduct of so important an enterprise, which was indispensable before the final arrangements.

It has given confidence to the public and especially to scholars, in the permanence and continued support of the institution, and its ability, with the divine blessing, to accomplish its purposes. This enables the Board to secure upon the Final Committee the men best qualified to discharge its duties.

In the meanwhile, the preliminary publications have brought a revenue of credit to the Union, which has raised up for it a host of sterling friends. They have awakened an interest in revision throughout the religious world. They have attracted the attention of philologists in all civilized countries. They have placed the American Bible Union in an elevated position, which it could never have attained, had it started the ultimate work without such preparation. Had such a course been adopted, so far as human foresight could discern, a failure would have been inevitable, and its effects fatal.

At first, it was contemplated to make the contracts for specific sums ; but, in almost every instance, the labor enlarged as the reviser proceeded, and eventually the Board was obliged to employ very many of the revisers upon salaries. This, undoubtedly, has greatly increased the amount of expenditure ; but, in an undertaking of this kind, it will never answer the object to diminish the value of the ultimate work by sparing needful expenses. A rigid economy has been maintained in all departments, and no money has been spent which did not at the time appear necessary and useful.

XXII.—THE FINAL COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE UNION.

From the origin of the Bible Union, it was the settled purpose of the Board to select for the Final Committee none but scholars of acknowledged qualifications. The highest order of talent, a life devoted to philological pursuits, thorough acquaintance with biblical literature, habits of close application and research, a discriminating judgment and good taste, with a distinguished reputation for thoroughness, accuracy, and integrity, and also for success as authors, were ranked among these qualifications. No regard to denominational connection was allowed to intervene. The best qualified men alone were sought. After years of correspondence and enquiry, four men were found who are believed to possess the required qualifications. The names of the following persons, since their appointment on the Final Committee, have become familiar to the world, in connection with the sacred trust confided to them : REV. T. CONANT, D.D., late Professor in Rochester Theological Seminary, N. Y. ; REV. H. B. HACKETT, D.D., Professor in Newtown Theological Seminary, Mass. ; PROF. DR. E. RÖDIGER, Professor in the Royal University in Halle, Germany. And the fourth is equally eminent. His superior qualifications as a Christian scholar, have laid him under great obligations to the world, and in the regard of these kindred duties, it has been impossible for him to assume all the responsibilities of the committee, though he consents to aid them as a scholar, in any way which they or the Board may wish, and is so employed in contributing the results of his learning, to the perfection of the work of the Final Committee.

These four men are familiar with the inspired originals of the Sacred Scriptures, and with every modern language which is requisite to aid their investigation. Three of them are distinguished for the Saxon simplicity and beauty of their style. The reputation of all is equally high in Europe and in America, and their personal estimation in the republic of letters is such as will enable them to obtain the aid of any scholars whose services in criticism or investigation they may require.

It is regarded as a striking evidence of the confidence placed in the Bible Union that Dr. Conant has been willing to relinquish the advantages of his honorable position in the University of Rochester, and to devote all his time and energies to this enterprise. The moral influence of such a step is decidedly beneficial. It strengthens our position with all who know his character and standing. As the step is taken with full knowledge of the history and condition of the Bible Union, it gives assurance to all, that the institution is regarded, not only as safe and permanent, but as prosecuting an object to which a scholar of the highest reputation may feel it an honor to devote his life.

A similar impression is produced by Dr. Hackett's relinquishment of his professorship for a whole year, to devote his time exclusively to the business of the Final Committee. The alliance of such men as Drs. Rödiger, Conant, and Hackett, in any scholarly enterprise, would give to a discerning public, so far as human instrumentalities are concerned, the most ample assurance of its high respectability and certainty of success. But the Bible Union has still a higher assurance, in the approbation and blessing of the God of the Bible.

XXIII.—EFFECTS OF REVISION UPON SCEPTICISM.

Scepticism and infidelity derive their chief aliment from perversions of the word of God. Unfortunately, the common English version affords them numerous opportunities, of which they gladly avail themselves, to misrepresent revelation. They seize upon an erroneous translation, and from it deduce arguments against the Bible, showing that either this is not the Word of God, or that the God of the Bible is not a proper object of religious worship. Nine-tenths of the arguments by which they lead astray unwary youth, are founded upon mistranslations of passages, which, properly translated, would not lead into error. A few of these will serve as examples.

Exodus iii. 22—"BORROW."—The Common Version represents God as directing the Hebrew women to BORROW from the Egyptians what they never designed to pay. The same deception is inculcated in respect to the men in Exodus xi. 2. The original means to demand. They demanded part of the pay for their unrequited labour.

2 Samuel xii. 31—1 Chron. xx. 3.—David, a man after God's own heart, is represented as sawing up the Ammonites, hacking them with axes, and burning them in brick-kilns; thus inhumanly destroying a whole nation related to the Israelites, because their king had offended him. A correct translation would show that he put them to saws, and axes, and brick-kilns, &c.; that is, taught them mechanical and agricultural arts, and made them a peaceful and useful people.

Jeremiah xx. 7.—Jeremiah is made to say, "O! LORD, THOU HAST DECEIVED ME AND I WAS DECEIVED," instead of, as the original declares, "Thou hast persuaded me and I was persuaded."

Isaiah iii. 23.—"GLASSES" are spoken of at an age in which it is asserted that glass did not exist. The Hebrew word translated "GLASSES" signifies mirrors, which were made of polished metal.

One of the objections brought by Infidels against the Bible, is, that Moses declares of himself, Numbers xii. 3, "NOW THE MAN MOSES WAS VERY MEER ABOVE ALL THE MEN WHICH WERE UPON THE FACE OF THE EARTH."

Dr. Horne, the celebrated author of the Introduction to the Critical Study of the Bible, vindicates the inspired penman from the egotism charged upon him, by proving that this passage is "mistranslated" "in our own English version," and that it ought to be, "Now the man Moses was depressed or afflicted more than any man of that land." This affliction was caused by "the great burthen he had to sustain in the care and government of the Israelites, and also on account of their ingratitude and rebellion, both against God and himself."

If the reader wishes to examine other cases of a similar character, we refer him to Horne's Introduction, a work which all biblical scholars admit to be one of the highest merit.

These are only a few of the numerous cases in which erroneous translations furnish to Infidels and sceptics their strongest weapons for attacking Christianity.

Will it do harm to the truth to point these out and correct them; or to leave them in the version, and profess that they are a part of the Word of God?

XXIV.—THE MODERN GREEK.

One of the great advantages which the Final Committee of the American Bible Union enjoy over the revisers of the English Bible under King James, is derived from the study of the Modern Greek. This dialect does not essentially differ from the ancient Greek, the language in which the New Testament was written. The members of the Final Committee have availed themselves of whatever facilities can be obtained in this country, to render themselves familiar with its usages, by personal converse with learned Greeks and returned missionaries. And one of their number, Prof. H. B. Hackett, D.D. was authorized by the Bible Union to visit Greece, for the exclusive purpose of more thoroughly familiarizing himself with its idioms and actual usages. He had formerly visited Greece, and had made personal observation of such advantages for revising the English Scriptures. His views were approved by eminent Greek scholars, whose testimonies upon the essential identity of the Ancient and Modern Greek tongues, will prove the wisdom of this proceeding:—

Professor SOPHOCLES, teacher of Ancient Greek in Harvard University, himself a native of Greece, and author of a Modern Greek Grammar, remarks: "The modern dialect is so intimately connected with the ancient, that a critical knowledge of the former, without a corresponding knowledge of the latter, is wholly out of the question. In fact, a Greek's mastery of his native tongue, is just in proportion to his acquaintance with Ancient Greek."

NEGRIS, a Modern Greek by birth

and education, well versed in the ancient language, says that the Modern Greek "contains valuable remains of the ancient idiom, which will throw light upon the sense of authors that often appears obscure, on account of the incorrect interpretation of words, the true significance of which is still retained in the modern language."

Rev. B. F. BUEL, a learned missionary, who spent several years in Greece, says: "Dr. Hackett's visit to Greece is, in every respect, a wise and timely measure. The Modern, so far as it goes, has, with few exceptions, the same vocabulary as the Ancient."

The mission of Dr. Hackett to Greece for this object, called forth some criticisms from the editor of the Journal of Commerce, but he was answered by M. Canale, a native Greek, and subsequently the venerable and learned correspondent of the Journal, Robert Walsh, Esq., triumphantly concluded the controversy thus:—

"In my youth I was proficient in Ancient Greek. So long ago as the year 1808, I attended, in Paris, reading and lessons in the Modern, by an accomplished native of the Morea. A young friend of mine, passenger in the North Star, takes charge for you of my copy of the Parallel of the Ancient and Modern Greek Languages, by M. J. David, son of the celebrated French painter of that name, and long French Consul-General at Athens.

"As you advocate, generally, free judgment, you will pardon me if I incline to the side of M. Canale. I have been tempted to submit the following questions to M. Hase, the renowned Professor of Modern Greek at the School of Oriental Languages, Conservator of the Greek and Latin Manuscripts in the Imperial Library, Member of the Institute and of most of the Academies in Europe. You have his answer to each question:—

"1. Does the Modern Greek differ essentially from the Ancient? 'No.'

"2. Are they substantially the same language? 'Yes. The difference or discrepancy being only in the analytical forms instead of the ancient synthetical, and in various foreign words, forcibly or necessarily introduced.'

"3. Can the Modern Greek be called a living language? 'Yes, with the aforesaid restriction.'

"4. Would proficiency in the Modern Greek be useful to a translator of the New Testament? 'Yes, but that knowledge is indispensable. The New Testament is the most ancient written book in Modern Greek, the new Greek forms having been introduced into it.'

"5. Do the Modern Greeks understand the Ancient tongue without a special study? 'Yes—at least in general, if not minutely.'"

THE PROMISES OF GOD.

NO. IV.

"They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever" (Ps. cxxv. 1.)

THE Christian's faith is called upwards to the Invisible, the Eternal, the Almighty, as the only one in whom he can safely place full, implicit confidence. Confidence is a sweet, happy-making something. God conferred upon us no mean gift, when he gave us the power of confiding in another. But like all other blessings, it turns to a curse, when abused or perverted. Let all beware in what and whom they trust. Untold anguish will be the result of mistake here. "They build too low, who build beneath the skies." God alone is worthy of confidence full and unlimited. Disappointment lurks everywhere besides.

Our fellow-beings—our brethren in the Lord—are proper subjects of love, sympathy and forbearance; and in the faith and work of the gospel, they are fellow-helpers with ourselves; but so soon as we centre our all of happiness in any man, or in any class of men, we have prepared an instrument for our own wounding. Nothing that pertains to the old creation or the new, is worthy of unlimited confidence. God alone claims this. We are led to these remarks in considering the imbecile and vacillating course of some Christians. When we inquire the cause of their fluctuating life, which ebbs and flows as the ocean tide, we are constrained to believe that they are actuated in their feelings by the changing scenes around them, rather than by the immutability which is above them. They lack that unwavering faith in the promises, which alone imparts stability and true courage. It may be asked, do they not believe in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour? Do they not heartily believe in obeying the gospel precepts, that they may enjoy the promises? This may be true: at least, they adopt no contrary view. Yet, by some means, and imperceptibly to themselves, their confidence, to an undue extent, is often placed elsewhere. It may be in the church: they may centre their all, their happiness in the church. If the church is prosperous, they are courageous and happy; but if it so happens that evils and dissensions arise in the congregation, and distract its members, they sink into a state of hopeless depression: and from which there is no relief, till they cast the anchor of their trust and hope within the veil, where is One so true that he cannot lie; so pure that he never sins: One who in no particular will ever disappoint; whose character will bear the test of scrutiny for ever, and eternally present new reasons for trusting and loving.

When the confidence of the Christian is based upon the word of his promise, though he may be grieved and wounded, he cannot be discouraged. If deprived of union and communion on earth, he will look upward, to Him whose hand lacks no supplies, and he shall not be disappointed. "They that trust in the Lord shall not be moved." It is the tendency of weak humanity to be attracted and moved upon by objects of sight and sense, rather than by those things which are solely objects of faith. "All faith is one;" still faith may be weak, or strong: "Your faith groweth exceedingly," said Paul to the Colossians. Faith is weak, indeed, when it finds its principal enjoyments and rejoicings in the affairs around it. No privilege should be more highly esteemed, than that of conversing and communing with God. Nothing should afford greater joy than the silent whispers of his love. Faith can spread "charms over heaven, earth, and sea"—it can make palaces of prisons—it can find ten thousand reasons to rejoice, with no human voice to mingle with its own—it extracts sweets from the natural scenery around; and finds itself surrounded with myriads of pure intelligences, and in companionship with God and his Son, with no human heart to cheer, and no human love to bless. Perfect faith is superior to earth, and can live and exult independent of the transactions around it. Nor will such faith slight the benefits derived from church relations. It better enables one to appreciate and love the brethren. Its possessor is able to strengthen the brethren, and the better to enjoy their society. It accepts all the aids and means which kind heaven offers; but if one after another be taken away, it raises a tearful eye to Him who has said, "A mother may forget her child, but I cannot forget thee:" and can say with Paul, "I am not alone, for the Lord is with me."

Christian, banish your gloom! Look up to the heavens! There are promises, smiles, and blessings emanating from the eternal throne, sufficient to envelope a universe in perfect bliss. Nothing shuts it from your heart, but the earth—chained tendency of our nature. Enlarge the mind in contemplation of the glorious attributes; open the heart by the "full assurance of faith" and humble obedience, and from sighing. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul! why art thou disquieted with me?"—you may sing with David, "I will praise the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth."

NO. V.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58.)

Busy, active, thinking man! How much does he toil to no profit! How often does he "spend money for that which is not bread, and his labour for that which satisfieth not!" How are days, months, and years devoted to that which yields no revenue of good! The earth is poor. Gold and silver and jewels are poor. Poverty and emptiness are written all over the world's possessions. Solomon's wisdom was never more wise, than when, after he had taken an inventory of the best things which earth could afford, and all the labour that human hand could do to appropriate them to human happiness, he says, "Behold all is vanity and vexation of the spirit, and there is no profit under the Sun;" and afterward concludes with these words: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole good of man."

Here is the power of promise. It turns the mind from the world and from self, and magnifies the work which the Lord has appointed. Here, we are informed, no vain or profitless labour is done. However much time has been devoted to no profit—what anxieties—what toilsome days and sleepless nights—we are assured that "labour in the Lord," and for the Lord, is not in vain. However small may be the act—however feeble may be the service, the Christian's God is not unmindful of them, and they will be rewarded. A small, and almost unseen act of Christian kindness, a tear shed with the weeper, a word of comfort to the heart-stricken—anything done by the authority of King Jesus, calls for a blessing upon the head of the doer. Yea, says Jesus, "If one of you do but give a cup of cold water to a disciple in my name, he shall receive a reward." How blasphemous, then, the thought that our God has appointed non-essentials! That the supremely good and all-wise Being, who loves us with the love of infinity, has given us a vain, profitless work to perform! Everything that God appoints is great. Little things enjoined by him are great things by virtue of the majesty and greatness of him who appoints them. "Holiness to the Lord" is engraven upon all his precepts. The pathway to glory is "the way of holiness." We walk upon holy ground when we walk in the gospel precepts; and every step we take is fraught with consequences which we shall never compute this side of the Jordan.

How careful should we then be, not to substitute our own work, or the work of our fellows, for that of the Lord. Our own work has no promise: the work which man appoints is all vain work. All things, either in precept or promise, that pertain to life and godliness, were given to our race long centuries ago. It is ours to work that work, and no more; it is ours to rely upon the associated promises, and none others. From the days of the Nicene Council down to the present, men have but exhibited their want of faith, their weakness and their rebellion, when they have attempted to impose upon their fellows aught which God had not appointed. The schisms, the strife, the desolations which have followed in the train, are but the indications of heaven's frowns and curses upon a vagrant, rebellious people. Joyful and blessed alone is he who is content with the work which the Lord appoints! Here is the way of pleasantness, the way of peace, the way of promise. Promise and obedience are so indissolubly connected together, that they cannot be separated. They have been married together by God himself, and there is no death to separate them. Woe to him that sues for a divorce! Obedience insures the thing promised; and reliance upon the promise prompts to the obedience which secures it. Would that we had just conceptions of the holiness and the magnitude of the work which God has furnished us! Then, instead of shrinking from duty, we should "run with joy the shining way." Then we should esteem it a blessed privilege, because it is a great honour to do the Lord's work. We should render a willing, cheerful, continuous service—run without becoming weary—walk without becoming faint. There is nothing for man, in this universe, worth possessing, that is not found here. There is no honour, no riches, no life, no dignity, no happiness—the desired of all men—outside of God's work. The smiles and the bliss of heaven permeate the mind and the heart of that man who gives his life and labour to God. Reader, for whom are you working? Remember, God will ask you some day, for whom have you wrought? At the final consecration of wicked men and righteous men, judgment will be rendered according to every man's works. A. C.—N.

From the Christian Evangelist.

He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.—JOHN.

As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.—No. I.*

THE resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ is justly regarded as the very corner-stone of the Christian institution—the point upon which it turns—and the prime article of the Christian faith. Take that away, and the whole superstructure falls, the death of Jesus is in vain, man stands unsaved and unredeemed, and “death is an eternal sleep.” If Jesus “was put to death for our offences,” he was “raised again for our justification,” or release from sin. If Christ never rose from the dead, not only has the Christian no assurance of his own resurrection, but it will become impossible; such is the connection of it with that of Christ, and the relation between the two. They stand connected and related as do cause and effect; and both stand or fall together.

Considered abstractly, or apart from this connection—merely as the return of one of the human family from the grave, after having suffered death—the resurrection of Christ would be considered only as an extraordinary phenomenon, such an one as had never before occurred in the history of the world, and as a vindication of the character of Jesus as the Son of God and the promised Messiah of the Jewish nation; but as nothing more. But when we connect with it the resurrection of the whole human family, from Adam down to the end of time, as depending upon it, and as certain to result from it, it becomes ineffably important, and has attached to it a consequence of the most tremendous character. And here we find a connection between the resurrection of Christ and that of all mankind, similar to that between Adam and all his posterity. “As in (by) Adam all die, even so in (by) Christ shall all be made alive.” Hence, the resurrection of all the human race will result from that of Christ, as their death hath from that of Adam. “As by the offence of one (one offence) judgment came upon all men to condemnation (to temporal death) even so by the righteousness of one (one righteousness) the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life”—release from death and the grave by the resurrection from the dead. Hence the Apostle, in treating of the resurrection, terms Christ the second Adam, in reference to this connection: “The first man was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. The first man is of the earth, earthly; the second man is the Lord from heaven.”

For nearly six thousand years death has wielded an almost universal dominion over the world. With two solitary exceptions, that of Enoch before the deluge, and Elijah after, who were translated to heaven without tasting death, all have had to go down to the grave, and pass through the portals of the tomb into Hades. Even Jesus himself had to bow before his stern mandate, but “he stooped to conquer death in turn, and to rise a victorious conqueror!” He vanquished death and brought life and immortality light through the gospel.” He descended into Hades, where the monstrous tyrant Death sat enthroned, wrested his sceptre from him, hurled him from his throne, and trampled him beneath his feet! And what a victory did he achieve! Where are all the great conquerors of the world? Where is Alexander, miscalled the Great, who was because there were no more world for him to conquer? Where is Julius Cæsar, who boasted that he had conquered a million of human beings? And what is Napoleon Bonaparte, of our times, who made all Europe tremble before him, and pulled down and set up kings at his will? Where are the and their mighty armies? Ask History, and her reply will be—dead, dead, DEAD! There was a mightier conqueror than any of them, Death, before whom they all had to bow, and obey his summons! But Jesus conquered Death! He conquered him who had conquered all of them; and his victory far transcends all their victories as eternity surpasses the brief span of time. He took the lamp of immortality, descended with it into the tomb, and irradiated it with its light! He has “converted the gates of death into the gates of immortality—made the pathway to rottenness and corruption a high road to deathless vigour and incorruptible glory—the grave the vestibule, the antechamber to “a house made with hands, eternal in the heavens.” He seized the iron bars of death, rent them asunder, and threw wide open the portals of the eternal world !

* From the Christian Review.

And O, what scenes of splendour, happiness, and glory, burst upon the enraptured vision of the Christian, as he contemplates them by the eye of faith ! The heavenly Canaan spreads out before him, beyond the river of death, arrayed in ever-living verdure, and covered with the flowers of delight !

" O the transporting, rapt'rous scene,
That rises to my sight !
Sweet fields array'd in living green,
And rivers of delight.

There gen'rous fruits that never fail,
(On trees immortal grow ;
There rocks and hills, and brooks and vales,
With milk and honey flow.

All o'er these wide, extended plains,
Shines one eternal day ;
There God, the Son, for ever reigns,
And scatters night away.

No chilling winds, nor pois'nous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore ;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and fear'd no more."

The new Jerusalem, the city of God, the capital of heaven, rises to the view, upon the mount of God, with its walls of precious stones, its gates of pearl, and its streets of gold. The throne of God appears. Before it angels bend in adoration, and tune their harps to the symphonies of heaven, and sing the song of everlasting redemption. From beneath it flows the river of life, with its nectar waters, on either side of which and in the midst of the street is the tree of life, with its perennial, ambrosial fruits, and "leaves for the healing of the nations." Such are the figurative representations of the joys and glories of heaven, to which man will be introduced by the resurrection of Christ.

But it is objected by the Infidel, that the evidence on which the resurrection of Christ rests, is ex parte in its character—that of his disciples and friends, who were interested in it, and consequently not the right kind of witnesses. To this we reply, that under all the circumstances, they were the most appropriate witnesses, as having accompanied him during his ministry on earth, and being familiar with him, they were better prepared and qualified to identify his person after the resurrection. "He showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs." "Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly ; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." As to the charge of his disciples being interested in the resurrection of Christ, nothing is further from being the truth. Had it been a secular kingdom which he came to establish, with posts of honour, profit, and emolument in it, there would have been some ground for the charge. But Jesus had nothing of this kind to offer his disciples—no rewards of an earthly character—nothing but stripes, and imprisonments, and persecutions, and a death of martyrdom. A glorious inheritance beyond the tomb, "incorruptible, and undefiled, and unfading, reserved in heaven for all those who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed at the last time"—a crown of righteousness, and rejoicing, and glory—joys unspeakable and full of glory—and an eternal life of blissful enjoyment and unalloyed happiness, free from all the ills, and evils, and misery which "flesh is heir to"—were the rewards to which they were looking, and which stimulated them to bear with cheerfulness and resignation the privations, the sufferings, and the persecutions which they had to undergo. The charge, therefore, of being interested in imposing upon the world the resurrection of Jesus, when it did not take place, is one of the most groundless and unreasonable that can be conceived !

But suppose Jesus had exhibited himself to the world after his resurrection, instead of appearing only to his disciples, it would not have changed the case any, as to their belief of it, or its reception by the Jewish priests and rulers. As the Jews believed in the existence of disembodied spirits, as we see from what the disciples of our Saviour said, when they saw him walking on the water, "It is a spirit ;" and again, after his resurrection, when he suddenly appeared in the midst of them, in a room with doors closed, "they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit," and his reply to them, "a spirit hath no flesh and bones, as ye see me have," had he shown himself "to all the people," they would have contended that it was his spirit ; or, if they had been convinced that it was really a living, physical person, they would have contended against his identity, and that it was somebody else, whom his disciples, having stolen and made away with his body, had attempted to impose upon the people as Christ himself. Such was the wickedness, deep depravity, and infidelity of the Jewish priests, who headed the people, that they were capable of all this. If they could resist the palpable and mighty evidences by which Jesus attested and confirmed his character and mission, even the raising of the dead, while on earth, and those of the tremendous and awful supernatural phenomena that attended his death and resurrection—the preternatural darkness, and the earthquake, and the rending of the rocks and the veil of the temple—and in the face of the most incontrovertible, most palpable and indisputable evidence of his resurrection, could bribe the guard of the sepulchre to say that his disciples came by night and stole his body away while they were asleep—if they could do all this, they were capable of anything, however base, wicked, depraved, and degrading, to accomplish their fiendish and hellish purposes! Hence their conduct, and the utter uselessness of the exhibition of Jesus to them, after he arose from the dead, as far as their conviction of his being the Messiah and Son of God, was concerned.

But the evidence of the resurrection of Christ was not ex parte, or a one-sided affair. It was as far from it as anything could be. There was a set of witnesses of his resurrection, perhaps not often noticed, and by those who bring the charge of ex parte testimony, probably not at all—witnesses who belonged neither to one side nor the other of the question of his resurrection, and therefore of the most impartial character. I allude to the guard of Roman soldiers placed around the sepulchre, and liable to the penalty of death if they should fall asleep while on guard, or suffer the body of Jesus to be taken away. Though quaking with terror and rendered powerless ("for fear of him they became as dead men") by their fear of the angel whom God had despatched from heaven, to roll away the stone from the entrance of the sepulchre, and let Jesus come forth out of it, they retained their consciousness and the possession of their senses as much as ever; for "some of the watch came into the city, and showed unto the chief priests all the things that were done." Here we have a whole legion of Roman soldiers as witnesses, whose evidence is of the most impartial character, as they belonged to neither side, neither the disciples nor the priests and their party, and had no interest in the event of the resurrection, nor any motive by which they might be biased—who no doubt saw Jesus emerge from the tomb, alive and moving on his feet, and depart from it. This is evident; for if they had not, they could not have told the priests what they did, and the priests would not have bribed them to say that his disciples had stolen away his body—a thing impossible while the guard retained their senses and strength, their usual state of body and mind, and before they became palsied and were rendered powerless, by the effect produced on them by the presence and influence of the angel, whose "countenance was like lightning." So this does away the charge of ex parte evidence, and renders still stronger the testimony of the disciples of Christ to his resurrection, if indeed it could be any better confirmed.

J. R. H.

NEWTON, THE PHILOSOPHER.

FLOODS of light and worlds of glory are the coronal of this mental prince. His name enchants the lovers of truth, and to him all the students of science are indebted. A short time ago we were at Grantham, where we stood for some time in the front of Newton's graceful and beautiful monument, and we felt a moral influence, combined with an admiring but hallowed veneration. The brightness of his genius was only equalled by his intense and unremitting investigation of the works of God. The first view we had was by moonlight. It was a still calm evening. On the one hand stood the statue of the illustrious dead; on the other, far up in the sky, the beautiful moon came forth from behind a dark cloud, and as its light fell upon the lifeless figure, our thoughts reverted to the time when the great philosopher educed from its revolution those important facts which have been the glory of science, and essential to our understanding the principles of the profound and elevating theme of Astronomy. The shades of night, the twinkling stars, the breathless stillness, the dark figure, the indistinct name, the useful life, the close study, the profound thinking, the elaborate calculation, the struggles, the triumphs, and then the calm and peaceful death, were all presented in full force to our mind, and we felt a moral and spiritual influence which we cannot forget. We thought of the great student of the skies, and of the wonderful volume of nature with which he was so familiar; and now the sun of his glory is undimmed, for when we associate his name with Socrates, Plato, Galileo, Kepler, and others, he rises preëminently above them all. Though humble as a child, he dares to tear the dark vail asunder which had concealed truth from the soul, and with a moral daring commensurate with his intellectual power, he demonstrated principles which are the light of philosophy, and whose glory shall continue for ever. Born with amazing endowments, and being surrounded by prosperous circumstances, the physical universe was unfolded to his view. He commenced by studying the things which are invisible, and soon became familiar with the effects of that irresistible power which causes all elements and atoms to cohere. To this studious and reflective man the falling of an apple was a momentous circumstance—a grand epoch in the history of science. It caused the philosopher to submit this question to himself, Why should the apple fall to the ground? From which he inferred the attractive power of the earth. He then extended the range of inquiry. Does not the same power extend to the moon? For, in its circle round the world, what are the influences which bind it to the earth, and yet prevent it not from marching on in its wonderful career? He then asked what should be the amount of deflection, or tendency to fall towards the earth, supposing gravitation to extend to the moon. For months, by the most elaborate calculations, he endeavored to solve the problem, but he did not succeed. The result given did not prove the fact. Like a great man, he calmly laid his papers aside: what he had hoped for, and what he believed in, was not proved. Shortly afterwards he heard that the French Government had caused to be made, at considerable expense, a more correct measurement of a degree, which gave a different, and as nearly as possible, a correct estimate of the size of the world; and as this was an essential element in the calculation, with the new data he recommenced his calculation, and after weeks of patient and excessive toil, he saw that the figures were shaping themselves aright. Such was his joy, that he called in a friend to rejoice with him in the triumphant issue. The victory was gained—the key which unlocked the universe had been found. The moon's revolution was a philosophic argument in favor of gravitation, and its constant deflection and progress were just such as the size of the earth and the law of gravitation required. From this great triumph may not the young men of the Christian Reformation learn an important lesson? The chief element to the solution of Newton's great question was the size of the earth, which at that time was not accurately known. So the great philosopher, though right in his belief and ardent in his desire, was at the first attempt unsuccessful. In the Gospel dispensation there are deep, broad foundation principles—there are essential moral and spiritual elements—which must be taken into account, for if they are omitted there must be, to some extent, confusion and estrangement. There are many teachers famed for their eloquence, who are yet puzzled to give a clear scriptural answer to the question which the awakened sinner asks, What must I do to be saved? Because the system which they have bound themselves to defend is not based upon the teachings of Christ and his Apostles, and being wrong in the beginning they continue to be splendid wanderers, attracting the gaze of thousands, and leading them astray into the paths of error and disobedience. When Newton commenced with the truth, every step was a success. The moon bowed to science, and to the purely philosophical questions which were submitted, her responses were graceful and complete. So when the simple truths of repentance and obedience are preached, when the Law and the Testimony are the rules of our life, when all the ordinances of the church, all the blessings of Christianity, all the hopes of a brighter and better world — when these are solemnly considered and faithfully proclaimed, the light of truth shines into the soul, and gives it a foretaste of the glories to come. Such a state of things commands the sympathies of the angels and the blessing of God. In reading the Scriptures you will meet with some passages which are hard to be understood, some of the difficulties of which will vanish by a careful comparison with other passages; others may be overcome when we have secured a more correct translation; others will be interpreted by the revolutions of ages; others will require a more extensive knowledge of Oriental habits: but the time will come when all the truths which are revealed shall be known and understood. Thousands of years passed away before the dimensions of the earth were known, and previous to that time, though a Newton calculated, it could not be proved that gravitation extended to the moon; but in the course of time the difficulties vanished, the fact was proved, and all succeeding discoveries demonstrate, that as far as the telescope can range, the same great law governs the distant and revolving worlds. Thus the falling of an apple was the means of causing the philosopher to throw a connecting chain around the universe of God. Be patient, yet persevering. A gentle word may arrest a careless spirit — “a soft answer turneth away wrath” — a friendly smile may light us into the right path — a faithful warning may be to us health and life. The teachings of Christ are simple and powerful. The love of God has but to touch our hearts, and it will make us love the whole family of man. Its attractive power will draw our souls towards heaven, and connect us with all the holy spirits around the throne. Newton proved that the sun was in the centre of the solar system, and that all the planets revolve around it. The Gospel shows us that Christ is the centre of the system of salvation, and every Christian delights to revolve round and to live in the light of the Sun of Righteousness. The planets shine not with their own light; we see them only by the rays which are reflected therefrom. The Apostles shone not with their own light; every ray reflected from them came from Him who is the light of the world. Extinguish the natural sun, and all the planets are shorn of their glory, and become dark and reckless wanderers in the rayless gloom of eternal night. Let but the Sun of Righteousness withhold his rays, and every hopeful and confiding spirit becomes cheerless and sad, the song of praise dies, the angel of hope departs, the harp of humanity is unstrung, and the souls of the forsaken ones sink down into the blackness and darkness for ever. But we hope and rejoice in the Captain of our salvation. He is our sun and our shield — He is our buckler and strong tower — He is the rock of our defence, and our dwelling-place in all generations. In him will we put our trust, then shall we never be afraid. It is Newton to whom we are indebted for the most important discoveries in Optics. In his hands light became a playful and obedient child. With his prism he divided the intangible and imponderable wonder, and showed the beautiful and component parts which make up a single ray. He deflected, reflected, and repacted it at his pleasure; and though the honor of discovering its velocity belongs to another, there is no name to which the science is indebted more than his own. Beautiful light! we love to think of thee. Thou art the death of darkness, and the life of all the beauties of nature; thou dost clothe the hills with thy charming vestments, and all the plains rejoice in thy presence. Thy faintest ray attunes the birds to melody, and all the works of God rejoice at thy coming. What an inexhaustible supply! Thou art a continuous and ceaseless blessing, as abundant now as ever. Beautiful symbol of the Eternal! God is light, and in Him is no darkness. But the light of nature is darkness when compared with the holy and divine light which comes from the inspired Word. Dark were the prospects of our world until the light of divine promise and truth was given to man. This is the light which comes directly from the mind of God — a light which reveals to us the moral and spiritual sympathies of our Heavenly Father — a light which chases away the dark night of sin, and ushers in the morning of thanksgiving and praise. How it shines down into all the chambers of the soul — how it searches the heart—how it reveals the wrong—how it tinges the hope and hallows all the affections—how it purifies the feelings and sanctifies the heart—how it reveals to us the love and compassion of God. It is full of benignant blessings, and shows us the highway to the heavenly city. It is pleasing to reflect that Newton, with his profound talents and extensive knowledge of natural objects, was a reverent believer in the Sacred Word. And after his mind had given birth to one of the most difficult and complicated systems to be found in the whole range of geometrical or mathematical calculation — after he had measured the sun and the planets, and had weighed their solid contents—after having detected their slightest perturbations, and proving the action and reaction of the forces, whereby a perfect compensation is secured—after traversing the skies in pursuit of, and in company with, some of the most amazing comets—after establishing truths which are now the broad foundation stones upon which the splendid structure of science is being reared—after all this, hear it, young men, and rejoice in the fact, that the great philosopher turned his mind to a close and practical attention to the Word of God. For him the works of nature were not sufficient, and it is profoundly interesting for us to know, that the man who had written his name in imperishable glory upon the heaven, was anxious that his spirit should bathe in a purer light, by being blessed and illumed with the holy truths of that word which liveth and abideth for ever. Here is a mind of the highest scientific acquirements, humbly bowing at the shrine of inspired truth. Here is the greatest mathematical genius this world ever saw, reverently pondering the Sacred Oracles. The music of the spheres was not so consonant to his spirit as the utterances and songs of the Prophets; and the order, harmony, and preciseness of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, were not so fascinating to his mind as the loving expression of our Heavenly Father. He had been a hard but delighted student of the great and magnificent works of nature; he had entered into the holy places of philosophy; he had studied the most delicate combinations in the material world; he had communed with the invisible but all-powerful influences; he had measured the velocity of the wind; he had shown a reason for the ebbing and flowing of the tide; he had been enlightened by every star, and in the quiet evening hours how steadily did he gaze upon the beautiful moon. Creation to him was a gorgeous and splendid temple, where he first learned and then taught great truths. But he was only graduating for a higher and better state, in order that he might become an inhabitant of the house made without hands, which is eternal in the heavens. For him the light of nature was not sufficient; the soul of the great man needed and sought for something beyond. He believed that confusion and destruction might one day reign in the physical world, but he also felt and believed that the truth can never die; and thus he derived hope and consolation from studying the truth of revelation. It is beautiful to contemplate him gazing upon the heavens, but it was a sublime sight to behold him pondering the truth which belongs to eternal peace. It is delightful to listen to the philosophic truths he uttered, but it is far more delightful to listen to the humble and solemn prayer which from his reverent mind ascended to God. The Bible tells of better things than philosophy. The revolutions of ages are but graphic interpretations of its truths. Astronomy sheds its light upon the revealed truth—Geology hastens to confirm its verities; and Science, with all her multifarious appliances, becomes a graceful handmaid to pure and undefiled religion. As successive ages roll away, the Bible shines with a greater lustre, nations rise and fall to confirm its truthfulness, and the signs on earth and the signs in heaven alike proclaim it to be the Word of God. Its truths compass the whole character of man, and the future, so pregnant with solemn realities, shall clearly attest the divinity of its origin. Christ has died, but He will come again in great power and glory; every eye shall see him, and they also who pierced him. There is no important truth in relation to time or eternity, which the Bible does not reveal. All natural objects to Newton were perfectly incomprehensible. The dominion of mystery is infinite. A grain of sand, a drop of dew, and a ray of light, were infinitely beyond the knowledge he possessed. Of the nature of the elements of which they were composed, he was as ignorant as a child. All he could do was to notice the effect of the laws by which they were governed; but of the nature of the laws he knew nothing, and nothing is known now. What a relief it must have been for him to listen to the Word, to ponder the simple but all important sayings of the Great Teacher. The Bible was in every sense adapted to his moral and intellectual nature. Its prophecies opened up to his mind higher and deeper wonders than had been unfolded by the earth or the heavens. The truths and promises of the Gospel are commensurate with the largest wishes and noblest hopes of the human soul. From the study and triumphs of this great man we may learn important lessons. He did not make science his God. He loved it, and proclaimed its truths, and until the final day his influence in the realms of thought must be felt for good. But he loved the precious Word. He knew it was brighter and fairer than the moon, and far more brilliant than the mid-day sun. It was the light of his feet and the lamp of his path. Philosophy, apart from religion, is cold and cheerless, and all the acquired knowledge must terminate at death. But to know Him whom to know is life eternal, is the glory and joy of the Christian. The truths of the Gospel beautify everything they touch. Where the Bible is loved, and its truths are lived, that peace which passeth all understanding is felt and enjoyed. Philosophy is knowledge at hard work; Religion is wisdom, and its labor is sweet. Philosophy speaks to me of the distance and size of the sun; Religion tells me of the Sun of Righteousness. Philosophy, after years of labor, tells me of the distance of the nearest fixed star; Religion speaks to me of the Bright and Morning Star. Philosophy tells me of the old earth; Religion promises a new earth. Philosophy speaks to me of the river Jordan; Religion tells me of another Jordan, through which the soul must pass before it can enjoy the haven of its rest. Philosophy is adapted to contribute to my happiness in time, while Religion gives me not only the promise of the life that now is, but of that which is to come. Philosophy cannot cure the soul of the malady of sin; Religion can wash and purify the spirit, make it wise unto salvation, and prepare it to be paroled in those robes which have been made white in the blood of the Lamb.

London.

J. I.

THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM—WHAT IS IT?

It is a plan which God has devised and arranged to ameliorate the condition of man. It is a system of love, of pardon, and of peace. It proposes to reinstate man in the favor of God. It submits certain conditions, in order to his happiness both here and hereafter, and gives certain pledges of joy eternal and of life unending; and positively declares that whoever complies with the conditions, and continues steadfast unto the end, the same shall be saved.

The burden of this theme is, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; for God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved (John iii. 16-17.)"

It proposes to make every man a new creature in Christ Jesus.

It changes his state, translating him out of the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son (Col. i. 13.)

It changes his mind, controls his passions, and brings him into subjection to principles which are divine, and to influences which are mighty in the pulling down and subduing of every base passion.

It changes his relationship: it makes him a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven; it unfolds new ties, new bonds, and fresh companionship; it more closely relates man to man and men to God.

It is a grand theme—a sublime system! It has in it heights and depths, lengths and breadths immeasurable, past human comprehension. Who can fully explain the principle of love, especially divine love? It is a volume in one word, an ocean in one drop, the whole universe in one planet—it is God, for God is love.

The Christian system embraces facts, commands, and promises. These three, in parts, comprise the whole. Like every other system it has its parts; each part, as such, is perfect in itself; but in order to completeness, the parts must be united, none of which can be dispensed with, or the harmony would be incomplete. We necessarily infer the essential nature of each, and argue thus: as facts are to commands, so are both to promises, or the three to the completeness of the Christian system.

A fact is something said or done; it is not an opinion. An opinion may arise out of a fact, but a fact is complete in itself. The facts of the Christian system are:—1, God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son.—2, Jesus lived in Judea, taught the people, and wrought miracles in confirmation of his pretensions to being the Son of God.—3, He suffered, bled, and died on Calvary's cross.—4, He was buried in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea.—5, He arose again from the dead the third day.—6, He ascended into heaven, there to reign until all his enemies be made his footstool.

I.—In proof of the first fact, we quote a few testimonies recorded in the New Testament. The Apostle John remarks, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John xv. 13.) It is the head of man's sympathy, the summit of man's love, to lay down his own life for another, and that person to be his nearest and dearest friend; but Paul the Apostle contrasts with it God's love. He observes, "Scarcely for a righteous man will one die, yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die; but God commended his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." So that, in point of comparison, God's love is above that of man's as high as the heavens are above the earth.

II.—Jesus lived in Judea, taught, worked miracles, and claimed to be the Son of God. That Jesus lived in Judea, very few will attempt to deny, there being such abundant testimony both on the part of both friends and foes, that it places the subject beyond the pale of honest doubt. That he taught the people true morality, and pure love to God and man, the New Testament amply proves, for it abounds with instructions which were embraced by numerous followers, and reduced to practice by himself. There is no contemporary history in existence which attempts to disprove the facts of his life and death, or the morality of his doctrines. His miraculous power, which was put forth in the presence of friend and foe, and exercised amidst the bitterest opposition, in clear day-light, was of a nature such as none could doubt: opening the eyes of the blind, unstopping the ears of the deaf, giving feet to the lame, cleansing the leper, stilling the raging of the sea, and raising the dead to life. He afterwards conferred the like power on his Apostles, in order that their word might be believed concerning the love of God in the gift of his Son.

III.—Jesus suffered, bled, and died on Calvary's cross. The historians Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John all record the fact; as does Peter also, who denied him; and Judas, who betrayed and sold him for thirty pieces of silver, admitted that he had betrayed innocent blood, and signed and sealed the evidence with his own death. Besides these we have an historian, a bitter enemy to the religion of Jesus, who admits fact No. 3 to the very letter. Tacitus wrote about the year 96, and in that part of his Roman history where Nero is suspected of having set fire to the city, he observes:—"But neither these exertions, nor his largesses to the people, nor his offerings to the gods, did away the infamous imputations under which Nero lay, of having ordered the city to be set on fire. To put an end therefore to this report, he laid the guilt, and inflicted the most cruel punishment, upon a set of people who were holden in abhorrence for their crimes, and called by the vulgar, Christians; the founder of that name was Christ, who suffered death in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, under the procurator, Pontius Pilate. This pernicious superstition, thus checked for awhile, broke out again, and spread not only over Judea, where the evil originated, but through Rome also, whither everything bad upon the earth finds its way and is practiced."* Thus we gather a valuable piece of testimony from Tacitus, in confirmation of the fact, that Jesus lived and died at the time, and among the people recorded in the New Testament.

* Paley's Evidences of Christianity.

IV.—He was buried in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. Matthew, in his history, records that Joseph took the body of Jesus, and wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, laying it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock; and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre and departed (Mat. xxvii. 59-60.) This was a fulfilment of prophecy uttered about seven hundred years before the event took place. Isaiah records it in liii. 9, "And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death."

V.—He arose again from the dead the third day. The Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, (xv. 3, and following verses) says, "He was seen of Peter, after his resurrection; then of the twelve Apostles; after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; after that he was seen of James; then of all the Apostles; and last of all he was seen of me also." The whole system hinges on this fact—the resurrection of Jesus. It was what the Apostle preached, and converts believed. Paul adds, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain, and ye are yet in your sins. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." This was the faith of the first Christians, and sooner than renounce it they suffered, bled, and died. Pliny the Younger confirms this fact. About the year 106 he wrote from Bithynia to Trajan, the Emperor, stating that many of all ages and of every rank and sex, had embraced the Christian religion, and that many of them would endure any kind of punishment, rather than give up their religion.*

VI.—He ascended into heaven. In the Acts of Apostles, i. 10-11, we read, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven; this same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven." Peter says, "He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts iii. 20.) Paul, addressing the Hebrews, says, "Seeing then that we have a great high priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession" (iv. 14.)

* Paley's Evidences.

The hope of the Christian is the return of his Lord, for our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body (Phil. iii. 20-21.) John the Apostle says, "Then shall we be like him, and see him as he is."

We shall next consider the commands of the Christian system. We select three: faith, repentance, baptism.

We are commanded to believe, because God has declared that Jesus is his son, and calls upon us to hear him. The Apostle John says, (ch. iii. 33) "He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true." The same apostle adds, "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John xx. 31.) Jesus said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now they have both seen and hated both me and my Father" (John xv. 22-24.) The Saviour, addressing the Jews, said, "For if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John viii. 24.) In the commission of Jesus to his disciples, He said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark xvi. 16.) Thus we find the essential nature of faith, and without it, it is impossible to please God. Faith arises out of facts, and feeling out of faith; hence, where there is no fact recorded, there can be no faith; and where there is no faith, there can be no Christian feeling. Faith, which is the belief of testimony, comes by hearing, brings conviction, and calls up feeling, as expressed by the Apostle John (1 Epistle iv. 10-11.) "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." There are many erroneous opinions entertained respecting faith and feeling; as, for instance, supposing that some abstract spirit is at work producing them. Such opinions we believe to be without foundation. God has given man the facts recorded in his word, and the capacity to believe them; and whenever they are embraced, as God's truth, gratitude, love, and feeling arise as a consequence, and by no other means.

The subject of repentance occupies a prominent place in the Christian system. It implies a turning, a change, a reformation. The Prophet Ezekiel says, "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" (xxxiii. 11.) John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 2.) Jesus, following John, said, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark i. 14-15.) In Luke's Gospel, (xiii. 2) Jesus said, "Suppose ye that these Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you nay, but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." In the commission, as given by Luke, Jesus said to his disciples, "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (xxiv. 46-47.) On the day of Pentecost, and in Jerusalem, Peter, an apostle of Jesus, stood up and preached that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God; his hearers believed it, were pricked in their hearts, a conscious feeling of sin arose, and they said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, "Men and brethren what shall we do?" Then Peter said unto them, "Repent and be baptized every one you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts ii. 37-38.) The Apostle Paul, at Athens, when reasoning about the worship of the true God and the resurrection from the dead, said, "The times of this ignorance God winked at (overlooked); but now commanded all men everywhere to repent" (Acts xvii. 30.) We have so far shown the essential nature of repentance, and we add, that faith follows facts, feeling follows faith, and repentance follows feeling; each and every part is essential to salvation. What we mean by essential, is, that it cannot be dispensed with.

Baptism is an ordinance appointed by God; an institution applicable to the Christian system. What we mean by baptism, is, immersion into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.* It is a condition of sonship to God, and of discipleship to Jesus. It is a term of salvation—it is one part of the new birth—it is a medium of forgiveness of sins—it is the entrance into the kingdom of God. We must not be understood as meaning that immersion is of any importance alone; in itself, we consider it a mere rite; but connected with sincere faith and true repentance, we are warranted in saying, that it is a saving ordinance, and we do not know of any promise of salvation without it, since the day of Pentecost. The Saviour said to his disciples, "He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me" (Luke x. 16.) We ought certainly to pay attention to what the apostles say, after this solemn declaration. Let us turn to Acts ii. 38. The Apostle Peter, possessed of the keys of the kingdom of heaven, being asked the all important question, "Men and brethren what shall we do?" answered, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." The next case on record is found in Acts viii., where Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto them, and the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus. Both men and women believed and were baptized. On another occasion, Philip opened his mouth and preached Jesus unto the Eunuch, and the Eunuch said, "See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? And he commanded the chariot to stand still, and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he immersed him" (Acts viii. 38.) In the 9th chapter of Acts, a very important question is put to Jesus by Saul of Tarsus, as he was going to Damascus. He said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He was directed to Ananias, who would teach him. For this information let us turn to Acts xxii. 12-16. Ananias, addressing Saul, said, "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." After his conversion Paul is found preaching at Philippi, where he was apprehended, put in prison, and at midnight sang praises to God; the earth quaked, the prison doors flew open, the gaoler, filled with fear, called for a light, sprang in, came to Paul and Silas and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? The Apostle Paul replied, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house; and he (the gaoler) took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes, and was baptized, he and all his, straightway" (Acts xvi. 30-33.) The Saviour, after his resurrection, sent his apostles into all the world, who preached the gospel to every creature, with this declaration, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; he that believeth not, shall be condemned" (Mark xvi. 16.)

* Rom. vi. 4, Gal. iii. 27, Heb. x. 22, Eph. v. 26, Titus iii. 5, Matt. xxviii. 19.

After such positive statements from the Son of God and his Apostles, can any one doubt the essential nature of baptism, connected with faith and repentance? I think not. It is referred to in the Epistles as a burial, a washing, a regeneration, and salvation; and woe be to the man who not only despises, but deems it a non-essential ordinance, and teaches others to do the same. Such a person may be accounted popular with men, but surely he is not regarded with favor by God. It will be readily understood, from what has been advanced, that we do not entertain or advocate infant baptism, or infant or adult sprinkling or pouring; we altogether denounce such ceremonies as doctrines and commandments of men, and we are fully satisfied that they are not taught in God's holy word, and that, consequently they may justly be treated with contempt.

The promises of the Christian system are principally three; remission of sins, the indwelling of God's Holy Spirit, and eternal life. Remission of sins follows baptism, and in no case precedes it, so far as we are able to judge from the Scriptures, (except it may have been in the case of Cornelius and his friends) since the kingdom of Jesus has been established upon earth. There are thousands who say their sins are pardoned, and that they know the day and the hour when they were forgiven; but they cannot point to the Scriptures as a pledge or surety; they live in frequent doubt, and say,

"Oft it causes anxious thought, Am I his, or am I not?"

There would be no need for the expression of this sentiment, if the believer had embraced God's pledge, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

The Holy Spirit is promised to the baptized believer, and to none else, as a spirit of joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, and faith or fidelity. This spirit is in the word. Jesus said, "The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit, they are life" (John vi. 63.)

It must be obvious to all, that great errors are entertained respecting the work of the Holy Spirit; therefore we ought the more earnestly to inquire into it, and attentively read the New Testament, in order to be set right on a subject of so great importance. Suppose we were to inquire the state of mind of twelve conflicting professors, each would contradict the other in some particulars, at the same time that all were professing to be led by the Holy Spirit. It is evident, there is error somewhere; it is not, cannot be in God, or in his word; it must, then, be in creeds, systems, and men.

The Apostle John records, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life" (iii. 14-15.) In the Saviour's prayer he stated, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent" (John xvii. 3.) In the 1st Epistle of John, ii. 25, we read, "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life."

Paul, in his letter to the Hebrews, v. 8-9, writes, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

Eternal salvation, or eternal life, is promised to every person who believes the facts of the New Testament, whose faith produces feeling towards God, and which leads unto sincere repentance, manifesting itself in willing subjection to every ordinance of Jesus, and submitting body, soul, and spirit, to the ordinance of immersion. Such an individual accepts the forgiveness of sins proffered by Jesus, the indwelling of God's Holy Spirit, and eternal life.

R. MUMBY.

FATHER, SON, AND SPIRIT.

[Having received numerous communications in which inquiries are made regarding the meanings of the respective terms, Father, Son, and Spirit, and the relationship in which each stands to the others, as well as to the church, we reprint the following observations on this deeply-interesting subject, which are, we scarcely need add, worthy of the profound thought of all who have not previously read them. Every sentence of this luminous and able essay, is in perfect harmony with our own views. It would seem that the remarks, in the first instance, were made in the course of social intercourse, and subsequently elaborated into an essay, at the solicitation of those who had been present at the conversation.]—J. W.

You will recollect that when I was interrogated on that subject, I gave sundry reasons why I felt reluctant to speculate on the incomprehensible Jehovah. It was also stated that there was no topic in common estimation so awfully sacred as that of the doctrine of "the Trinity," and if a man did not speak in a very fixed and set phrase on this subject, he endangered his whole Christian reputation and his own usefulness. At the same time I remarked that I was very far from being afraid either to think upon this subject or to express my thoughts, although it was deemed so unpardonable to depart even in one monosyllable from the orthodox views. I moreover stated that I disliked anything like speculation upon this topic in particular, because, if I differed in the least from the orthodox, I introduced something like a new theory, or something that would be treated as such, and either approved or rejected on theoretic grounds. If, however, you will neither make a new theory out of my expositions, nor contend for any speculations on the subject, nor carry the views farther than where I leave off, I will gratify you and other friends with my views of the first sentence in John's Preface to his Testimony—"In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God."

1. In the first place I object to the Calvinistic doctrine of the Trinity for the same reasons they object to the Arians and Socinians. They object to these, because their views derogate in their judgment from the eternal glory of the Founder of the Christian religion. They will not allow the Saviour to have been a creature, however exalted, because they conceive this character is unbecoming of him, and contrary to the scriptural statements concerning him. They wish to give him more glory than they think the Arians are willing to do. Now I object to their making him and calling him an "Eternal Son," because I think that if he were only the Son of God from all eternity, he is entitled to very little, if any more glory, than what the Arians give him. I wish to give him more glory than the Calvinists give him. They are as far below his real glory, in my judgment, as the Arians are in their judgment.

2. But in the second place, I have an insuperable objection to the Arian and Calvinistic phraseology—On the doctrine of the first relation existing between the Father and the Saviour of Men, because it confounds things human and divine, and gives new ideas to Bible terms unthought of by the inspired writers. The names Jesus, Christ, or Messiah, Only Begotten Son, Son of God, belong to the Founder of the Christian religion, and to none else. They express not a relation existing before the Christian era, but relations which commenced at that time. To understand the relation betwixt the Saviour and his Father, which existed before time, and that relation which began in time, is impossible on either of these theories. There was no Jesus, no Messiah, no Christ, no Son of God, no Only Begotten, before the reign of Augustus Cæsar. The relation that was before the Christian era, was not that of a son and a father, terms which always imply disparity; but it was that expressed by John in the sentence under consideration. The relation was that of God, and the "Word of God." This phraseology unfolds a relation quite different from that of a father and a son—a relation perfectly intimate, equal, and glorious. This naturally leads me to the first sentence of John. And here I must state a few postulata.

1. No relation amongst human beings can perfectly exhibit the relation which the Saviour held to the God and Father of All anterior to his birth. The reason is, that relation is not homogenous, or of the same kind with relations originating from creation. All relations we know anything of are created, such as that of father and son. Now I object as much to a created relation as I do to a creature, in reference to the original relation of God and the Word of God. This relation is an uncreated and unoriginated relation.

2. When in the fulness of time it became necessary in the wisdom of God to exhibit a Saviour, it became expedient to give some view of the original and eternal dignity of this wonderful visitant of the human race. And as this view must be given in human language, inadequate as it was, the whole vocabulary of human speech must be examined for suitable terms.

3. Of these terms expressive of relations, the most suitable must be, and most unquestionably was, selected. And as the relation was spiritual and not carnal, such terms only were eligible which had respect to mental or spiritual relations. Of this sort there is but one in all the archives of human knowledge, and that is the one selected.

4. The Holy Spirit selected the name Word, and therefore we may safely assert that this is the best, if not the only term, in the whole vocabulary of human speech, at all adapted to express that relation which existed "in the beginning," or before time, between our Saviour and his God.

These postulata being stated, I proceed to inquire what sort of a relation does this term represent? And here everything is plain and easy of comprehension. I shall state numerically a few things universally admitted by the reflecting part of mankind:—

1st. A word is a sign or representative of a thought or an idea, and is the idea in an audible or visible form. It is the exact image of that invisible thought which is a perfect secret to all the world until it is expressed.

2nd. All men think or form ideas by means of words or images; so that no man can think without words or symbols of some sort.

3rd. Hence it follows that the word and the idea which it represents, are coetaneous, or of the same age and antiquity. It is true the word may not be uttered or born for years or ages after the idea exists, but still the word is just as old as the idea.

4th. The idea and the word are nevertheless distinct from each other, though the relation between them is the nearest known on earth. An idea cannot exist without a word, nor a word without an idea.

5th. He that is acquainted with the word, is acquainted with the idea, for the idea is wholly in the word.

Now let it be most attentively observed and remembered, that these remarks are solely intended to exhibit the relation which exists between a word and an idea, and that this relation is of a mental nature, and more akin to the spiritual system than any relation created, of which we know anything. It is a relation of the most sublime order; and no doubt the reason why the name word is adopted by the apostle in this sentence, was because of its superior ability to represent to us the divine relation existing between God and the Saviour prior to his becoming the Son of God. By putting together the above remarks on the term word, we have a full view of what John intended to communicate. As a word is an exact image of an idea, so is "The Word" an exact image of the invisible God. As a word cannot exist without an idea, nor an idea without a word, so God never was without "The Word," nor "The Word" without God; or, as a word is of equal age, or coetaneous with its idea, so "The Word" and God are coeternal. And as an idea does not create its word, nor a word its idea; so God did not create "The Word," nor the "Word" God.

Such a view does the language used by John suggest. And to this do all the Scriptures agree. For "The Word" was made flesh, and in consequence of becoming incarnate, he is styled the Son of God, the only Begotten of the Father. As from eternity God was manifest in and by "The Word," so now God is manifest in the flesh. As God was always with "The Word," so when "The Word" becomes flesh, he is Immanuel, God with us. As God was never manifest but by "The Word," so the heavens and the earth, and all things were created by "The Word." And as "The Word" ever was the effulgence or representation of the invisible God, so he will ever be known and adored as "The Word of God." So much for the divine and eternal relation between the Saviour and God. You will easily perceive that I carry these views no farther than to explain the nature of that relation uncreated and unoriginated which the inspired language inculcates.

These views place us on a lofty eminence whence we look down upon the Calvinistic ideas of "eternal filiation," "eternal generation," "eternal Son," as midway betwixt us and Arianism. From this sublime and lofty eminence we see the Socinian moving upon a hillock; the Arian upon a hill; and the Calvinist, upon a mountain; all of which lose their disproportion to each other because of the immense height above them to which this view elevates us. The first sentence of John I paraphrase thus:

From eternity was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was, I say, from eternity with God. By him all things were made, and he became flesh and dwelt among us. He became a child born, and a son of man. As such he is called Immanuel, Jesus, Messiah, Son of God, Only Begotten of the Father.

I can give the above views upon no other authority than my own reasonings. I learned them from nobody—I found them in no book. It is true, indeed, I have held the idea for sixteen years that Jesus is called the Son of God, not because of an "eternal generation," (which I conceive to be nonsense) but because he was born as the angel described to Mary. This is now pretty generally received by a great many Christians. Nor would I dispute or contend for this view as a theory or speculation with anybody. I could, indeed, amplify considerably, and perhaps obviate some difficulties by following up farther the hints submitted; but such are my views of the import of the beginning of John's testimony. You will remember that I make no systems, and although there are some abstract reasonings upon terms (as indeed much of our reasonings about language are) in the preceding, it is only for the purpose of getting into the sacred import of a style from which we have been proscribed by a speculating philosophy. I have acceded to your request with more ease than I could have done, had it not been for a few prating bodies who are always striving to undo my influence by the cry of Unitarianism, or Socinianism, or some other obnoxious ism. From all isms may the Lord save us!

A. C.

SYNOPTICAL EXPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE—No. IV.

Romans ii. 3-20.

THERE seems to be an inherent proneness in fallen humanity to trust in the mere forms and ceremonies of religion. Man is a religious being: he must, and he will worship something. In his primeval state he was naturally inclined to worship Jehovah in spirit and in truth. But sin soon perverted all his powers of both head and heart. The unregenerate had no longer a desire to retain God in their knowledge; nor to hold any communion or fellowship with him. They can endure neither the infinite justice nor the holiness of his character. And hence they have ever shown a disposition to substitute the symbol for the reality—the mere sign for the thing signified.

The combined operation of these two causes, the good and the evil, the natural and the preter-natural, has given rise to all the systems of formalism that were ever known to Pagans, Jews, or Christians. But in all these, there are numerous and various modifying circumstances. The Jews, for example, knew that all the rites and ceremonies of the law were given, authorized, and established by God himself. They could never forget the associations of the Passover—the separation of the waters of the Red Sea—the lightnings and the thunders of Sinai—and the visible manifestations of God's glory that filled the tabernacle, when that mere shadow of the Christian religion was first consecrated by Moses and Aaron. And hence, when their hearts became estranged from God, they still adhered with a peculiar tenacity to the mere types and symbols of spiritual realities; and especially did they glory in circumcision as a badge of their nation, and as the sign of that covenant which God made with Abraham, and with his seed after him (Genesis xvii. 9-14.)

Now Paul was perfectly acquainted with all the types and shades of formalism among the Jews. He perfectly understood all their national and sectional partialities, and the grounds on which they expected to be justified before God. He knew that when driven from the scale of even justice, they would at once take refuge in the covenant of circumcision. And hence he so framed his argument as to answer this tacit objection, just as if it had been formally stated by a Jew in person. "Circumcision," says he, "is indeed profitable to you as a Jew, if you keep the law." But as it possesses no inherent virtue in itself, it is of value only so far as it corresponds with the real circumcision of the heart (Deut. x. 16.) Men may boast of their national and ecclesiastical relations and privileges—they may, like the proud Pharisee, glory in the thought that they are not as other men; but nevertheless, the judgment of God will ever be according to the "truth"—according to the real state and condition of the heart. "For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew who is one inwardly: and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter."

In the first section of the third chapter, Paul states and very briefly refutes some popular objections. He knew very well that just at this point of his argument, the Jew would be prompted to ask "What advantage then hath the Jew? Or what profit is there in circumcision?" Does not the Old Testament everywhere represent Jews as a people peculiarly favoured? And was not circumcision given to distinguish them from the abandoned and idolatrous Gentiles? But on your hypothesis they all seem to be reduced to a state of perfect equality.

In reply to this, Paul has only to add that interference is illegitimate: that equality in one respect, does not imply equality in every other respect. On the contrary, he admits that in everything of practical value, the Jews had the advantage; but chiefly because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. They had more light than Gentiles. As, however, they did not walk in the light, but in darkness, these very oracles that were given for their good, became a witness against them.

A second objection that the Jews would be likely to urge against the Apostle's argument, is founded on the promise of God to Abraham. Jehovah had said unto him, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee" (Genesis xvii. 7.) Now the Jew was by nature and education prone to interpret this as an unconditional covenant made with Abraham and his natural posterity. It was with him a favourite maxim, that "All Israel hath a portion in eternal life." And hence he was just here ready to exclaim, "But what if some do not believe? Shall their infidelity make void the fidelity of God?" If some of the Jews have been unfaithful, and transgressed the covenant, must God therefore be unfaithful too? By no means, says the Apostle. This is a question which cannot be entertained for a moment. God must be regarded as true, though every man should be found a liar. And hence it follows, that if the preceding argument, sustained as it is by the testimony of inspired witnesses, is not in harmony with the doctrine of the Rabbin, the fallacy or falsehood must lie, not in the Divine administration, but in the Jewish manner of interpreting the covenant.

"But," says the Jew, "if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?" That is, if our unrighteousness serves to show forth and render more conspicuous the Divine justice, then is it not unjust in God to punish us? Is it not unrighteous in God to execute his vengeance upon us for doing that very thing which so eminently serves to illustrate and to display to the universe the infinite perfections of his own nature and character?

"By no means," is the laconic reply of the Apostle; "for then how shall God rule the world?" On the principle of the objection, there can be no judgment of either Jews or Gentiles: for the righteousness of God is just as much displayed in the conduct and treatment of the one, as it is in the conduct and treatment of the other. But the Jews concede that God will be just in the condemnation of the unrighteous Gentiles. And hence, on their own admission, the principle of this objection must be false.

Still, however, the Jew is not yet fully satisfied. He makes another draft on the stores of his metaphysical speculations, and slightly changes the ground of his last objection. Admitting, says he, that God is just in the case alleged, yet why should I be regarded as a sinner, "if the truth of God has more abounded by my lie unto his glory?"

This is so near the climax of the absurd, that the Apostle does not seem to think that a formal refutation of it is at all necessary. And he therefore simply inquires of the Jew, why he does not go a step further in the same direction: why, says he, do you not adopt the principle of your objection as a rule of action, and say, "Let us do evil that good may come."

This, every one must see, is the legitimate issue of the last two objections. But this was too much even for the Jew. He was not prepared to receive and to adopt, as an article of his religious and philosophical creed, a principle which is not only repugnant to the moral sense of mankind, as well as to the letter and spirit of the Law and the Prophets, but which had also been slanderously and opprobriously imputed to Paul and his colleagues, by the enemies of Christ and the opposers of the gospel. And he was, therefore, compelled to acquiesce with Paul in the conclusion, that the condemnation of all who act on this principle is just; or, in other words, that God is just in treating all such as *sinner*s.

Being thus completely foiled at every point of the argument, the Jew finally exclaims, "What then? Do we excel?" Have we Jews any pre-eminence over the Gentiles in reference to the ground, mode, or manner of justification?

To which the Apostle very promptly replies, "You have none whatever: for we have already made good the charge against both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under sin. As it is written, there is none righteous, not even one; there is none who understandeth; there is none who seeketh after God. All have gone out of the way: together have they become corrupt: there is none that doeth good; not even one. Their throat is an open sepulchre: with their tongues do they deceive. The poison of asps is under their lips. Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Their feet are swift to shed blood. Destruction and misery attend their steps: and the way of peace they have not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes."

"Now," continues the Apostle, "we know that whatsoever things the law saith, it saith not directly to the Gentiles, but to you Jews who are under the law; so that every mouth must be stopped, and the whole world become guilty before God. Wherefore by works of law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight."

This is enough for one lesson. Your scholars will gain more by reflecting profoundly on a few verses, than by gliding superficially over a wide surface. The Book of Revelation is like the book of nature. We can never exhaust the infinite stores that lie beneath the surface of a single page in any one chapter of these awful volumes.

Let us then pause here for the present and reflect—

1. On the great value of the living oracles. They were to the Israelites their most peculiar treasure. Paul concedes that the Jews had many advantages over the Gentiles : but the chief of all, he says, was that "to them were committed the oracles of God." These alone reflect the true light of heaven. They reveal God to man, and man to himself. They dispel the shades and darkness of the tomb ; and clearly present to the eyes of mortals the pathway to honour, and glory, and immortality.

Who, then, can estimate the obligations that rest upon us, not only to study these oracles carefully and prayerfully ourselves, and to teach them diligently to our children, but also to send them faithfully translated to every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, that is now sitting in the dark region of the shadow of death ? While it is written "Love your neighbour as yourself," and "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men," who can justify the present apathy of all Christendom, with regard to the enlightenment and conversion of the benighted heathen ? I leave this as a problem for your best mathematicians.

2. God's dealings with mankind is another subject worthy of our most serious consideration. It seems that nothing reflecting disrespectfully upon the character of God is to be entertained for a moment. "Let God be regarded as true, though it should involve every man in falsehood," is a fundamental principle of all sound theology and morality.

And yet how prone we are to disregard it, and to censure the divine administration in both the physical and moral universe. Some find fault with the sandy deserts, the noxious weeds, and the poisonous reptiles and insects that cover the earth. Others complain of what they are pleased to call untimely frosts, excessive rains, and ruinous draughts. While others again can see nothing but arbitrary injustice and cruelty in the fall of man, the destruction of the Canaanites, and a thousand other events in the dealings of God with an apostate world !

I will only suggest here for the consideration of all such vain and impious speculators, that before we attempt to weigh the universe, it would be well, at least, to re-examine our scales. Perhaps after all our boasting, we may find that our balance is false—or there may be something wrong about the fulcrum—or it may be that the beam is not of sufficient strength to bear the entire weight.

3. But I must close here with a single reflection upon the deplorable state of human nature under the guilt of sin and the penalty of a violated law. It is not of nations, but of humanity that the apostle here speaks. If any one of the race does good—if any one understands and seeks after God—if he has not become unprofitable—if his throat is not an open sepulchre, continually emitting the noisome breath of a heart filled with moral corruption—if his tongue is not full of deceit—if his feet are not swift to shed blood—and if there is any fear of God before his eyes, it is not because he has been made an exception by the power of law, but by the power of grace. The law made nothing perfect. It can neither justify nor sanctify any sinner. But, thanks be to God, we may all obtain the victory through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. This theme, however, we must reserve for our next lesson.

R. MILLIGAN.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

THERE are two prayers in the New Testament, each possessing peculiar merit, and both are called "the Lord's prayer." Wishing to offer a few thoughts touching matters connected with these prayers, we take the occasion to inquire why these are called the Lord's prayers ? But one answer can be given, viz. The Lord Jesus Christ is the author of both. Yet we have long doubted the propriety of calling the prayer, in the sermon on the Mount, viz. "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," &c. the Lord's prayer. It would evidently be much more appropriate to call it the disciple's prayer. The Saviour's purpose was to reveal the manner of prayer, particularly applicable to the disciples who were his companions, and such as believed before the day of Pentecost. True, it will always comport with the revelation to say, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name;" but if the disciples did "receive a kingdom" (Heb. xii. 28) in the days of the Apostles, whoever now prays, "Thy kingdom come," admits, in the first place, that the kingdom of heaven has not come — there is no church of Christ; and in the second place, he looks for another institution besides that of Christ. It would doubtless be appropriate to pray for the spread and increase of the kingdom till righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep. To say the least of it, the man who, in the nineteenth century, prays, "Thy kingdom come," must be too confused in his religious views to understand or practice any religious obligation in a proper manner.

The prayer uttered by the Saviour in the garden, as recorded in John xvii. is emphatically the Lord's prayer. It was offered by the Lord to the Father, and it is manifest, from the slightest examination, that there is no other being in existence capable of praying as he prayed. From the intensity of his anguish, he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood. There is a majesty in the manner of address, like no other address in the Bible. What can be more sublime than the sentence, "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, Father, the hour is come, glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee?" or, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Our chief purpose, however, in calling attention to the Lord's prayer, is to notice especially the condition of all correct faith of Christian union and the conversion of the world. The Saviour said: "Neither pray I for these"—present disciples—"alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee; that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

The reader may do well to carefully notice that our Lord prayed not for men who believe from nature—through their own intuitions, or through the creed of Rome or Protestantism, but simply through the words of the apostles. May we ask the brethren, and especially our brethren in the ministry, if we fully appreciate the magnitude of the thought of believing the inspired word? Should we not often remind each other, and urge upon the world the importance of the truth, that it is in consequence of believing, through the divine word, all are one. Religionists may differ across the whole heavens, but Christians should never differ. The Lord speaks to all his people the same words—the identical ideas are given to all, and consequently there is no ground of difference amongst the saints. But in the last place, it is by this union through the truth, the world is to be converted. If the world is to be saved by united effort, should it not be our chief labor to induce the sinner to believe the written oracles? May we ask if these are not cardinal matters in the church? Do we, brethren, fully realize their practical value? It seems to us that union on the truth is the key of the arch in "Christ's Theology," but it has no place in the precincts of party.

T. F.

"GOD OWNED HIS WORD."

THE sentence that stands at the head of this article, is of frequent occurrence, in narratives of protracted meetings among the sects, especially our Baptist brethren. When sinners are converted, God is said "to own his word." This being the case, may we not say, that when sinners are not converted, God does not own his word, or that, in this sense, if there is any sense in the phrase, he disowns it?

In what sense—if in any sense—the word "own" is used in this sentence, is a little dubious. We are said to own that which is our property; and we may own or deny our own words and actions. A denial of these, however, or a refusal, on our part, to own them, is indicative of a defective memory, or of sinister motives; acts wholly incongruous with the character and attributes of the Creator.

My impression is, that this unmeaning verbiage has resulted from erroneous conceptions of the mission and work of the Holy Spirit—the Spirit being supposed to be sometimes present with the word, and sometimes absent from it. When present, the word is efficacious in conversion; when absent, it is inefficacious—a mere dead letter. In this latter case, God does not “own” his word. This is the antiquated doctrine of “general atonement and special application”—a sort of painted or white-washed Calvinism—attempted to be sustained. When the word is to convert, the Spirit pours, or injects power into it, without which it is as wholly inefficient in the work of conversion as the darting of straws, or the puling of an infant. Against this, and all similar unscriptural and inflated puerilities, I enter my solemn protest.

Our Redeemer, “by the grace of God, tasted death for every man.” “He wills that all men should be saved.” “He is not willing that any should perish.” “The wisdom that is from above is without partiality.” Now, if the reader is disposed to advocate that against which we protest, we shall place him between the two horns of a dilemma, as follows: God wills the salvation of all, and puts irresistible power, by his Spirit, in the word preached to all, then will all be converted, which is Universalism! But if, to shun this horn, the reader shall say that God imparts, by his Spirit, this power to his word, in only a part of the instances in which it is preached to sinners, then is he partial!

The fact is, the Spirit of God is always with the Word of God. The word is always “living and powerful”—“liveth and abideth for ever.” Christ’s words are always “spirit and life”—a savor of life unto life to the obedient, and of death unto death to the disobedient.

Now, if God at any time does not own his word, are sinners, at such time, under obligations to own it?

A. R.

WORDS FROM THE WORK TABLE—No. I.

WHEN we hear that success has crowned the labors of some devoted servant in the Lord’s vineyard—when we read of the untiring diligence of those who have given themselves to the preaching of the Word—when the tidings reach us that men are turning to the Lord, and are pressing into the kingdom, convicted of sin by the proclamation of the simple Gospel, how ready we are to exclaim, “Blessed be God, His Word will have free course, His WORK will be done!” and there leave the matter, never enquiring in what that work consists—how the Lord wills that work to be accomplished, or whether we are aiding in the accomplishment.

Some will no doubt be ready to say, the Lord’s work consists in preaching the Gospel to sinners, in turning men from darkness to light, in attending God’s house, singing God’s praise, and in prayer to God. Yes, this is some of God’s work. What more have you to point out? Another will readily reply, Sunday-school teaching, tract distributing, Dorcas meetings, and visiting the poor and sick. Good, all good, very good! But is there not some closer, more every day work, which must be done for the Lord? Are there not coats to make, shoes to mend, bread to bake, wood to chop, merchandise to dispose of, houses to clean and manage, children to train, tempers to curb, bad and expensive habits to be rid of—will not each and all of these come in the category of the Lord’s work? And cannot we, one and all of us, be the Lord’s workers?

Say, I am a tailor—I have a garment to make; if it is simply for myself or Mr. So and So, I may be tempted to do it carelessly or wastefully; but if I am doing it for the Lord, how carefully will the cloth be cut—no waste allowed—no slip stitches will be in that garment. If I am a shoemaker, how carefully shall I repair the articles entrusted to me, never thinking of slighting them, the sooner to have them again. If a baker, how carefully will my loaves be weighted—how free from adulteration will be the bread that leaves my shop, if I view it as the Lord’s bakery: this may be more troublesome, and the pecuniary profit seem less; but what have

I to do with that? I am working for the Lord, and if my work be well and faithfully done as in his sight, I must leave the effect with him. Did we constantly realize the great truth, that God's children are privileged to be always working for him, and did they avail themselves of that high privilege, how much heart-burning and discontent would be saved—how many anxious hours should we be spared—how we should be raised above the world and its paltry customs and fashions; even poverty would be deprived of its severest sting, and a holy contentment would lead us to exclaim, as did an ancient Christian woman who had only a hard crust, "What all this, and Jesus Christ too!"

This realization will not only affect our mental, but our temporal condition also—our families will be more carefully trained—our homes more orderly—our tempers and habits most assiduously watched, so that on rendering up an account of our working, we may not fear the frown or reproof of our Great Employer. It is in these every day labours, that we are to show to the world the purifying power of the gospel we profess. If our dealings are not more honest, our homes cleaner, our families more orderly, our tempers more lovely, our habits more self-denying, than when we were citizens of the world, how can we extol the elevating character of the change we have made, and recommend those who are still in the kingdom of Satan, to be translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, seeing that its influence over ourselves has been too slight to attract even passing observation? Let us ever bear in mind the Apostle's exhortation, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God;" and nothing that is carelessly, wastefully, disorderly, dishonestly, ill-temperedly, or discontentedly done, can possibly be to the glory of a Being who is all-wise, all-powerful, and who is a lover of decency and order. It is in the trifles of life that the greatest opportunity of good doing is found, and every day presents innumerable little things that we can and ought to use for great results.

"There is nothing on the earth so small that it may not produce great things, And no swerving from a right line, that may not lead eternally astray."

LOUISE.

LETTERS TO THE PEOPLE.

NO. II.

Fellow Citizens,—The Bible is not a book of speculations—the religion of Jesus is not an abstract theory—the gospel is not an opinion. From first to last the Bible is a book of facts. A fact is a deed—it denotes something done, or being done, or to be done. The Bible tells of facts—past, present, and prospective—it declares the end from the beginning—it reports what was, is, and shall be done. There is as much difference between the Bible and human doctrinal systems as there is betwixt the most reliable history and the latest novel. The latter may contain truth, but the former is undeniable truth. The Bible informs us of what God has done, is doing, and shall do—it intimates what he required, and requires man to do—what he suffered, and still suffers man to do—and what he justifies and condemns, and will reward and punish man for doing. All this is matter of fact. There is no guess-work in it. He, therefore, entirely mistakes the Scriptures who supposes them to be speculative, theoretic, or problematical writings; he utterly wrongs them who regards them as akin to the non-historical, imaginative opinions either of mythologists or theologians; and he most of all forgets and injures himself, who, failing to discern the matter of fact character of the Bible, treats it as mere opinion, or allows himself to be led by the opinionative or doctrinal writings of either professedly Christian or avowedly non-Christian authors. As with the Bible in general, so with the gospel in particular. The gospel is no cunningly devised fable—it is no abstruse, bewildering theory—but it is a simple, honest, ungarnished announcement of most abundantly authenticated historical verities. It is summed up in the three facts of the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth. His crucifixion was one of the most public executions that ever took place—his entombment and grave were ensured and guarded by seal and soldiers against the possibility of human rescue—and the fact of his resurrection was at once, and publicly, and on the spot, proclaimed in the hearing, and to the confusion and condemnation alike of priesthood and people. The fact proclaimed was not, could not, be denied; on the contrary, it was there and then believed and acted upon, and continued to be until its proclaimers had revolutionized the whole civilized world by their announcement. And only when the actuality of the gospel was hid by the speculative doctrines of the so-called fathers and others, was its enlightening, gladdening, saving, sanctifying, emancipating, life-giving potency restricted. But, thanks to God, the gospel remains the power of God unto salvation to all the faithful. Reader, do you understand the gospel to consist in the facts that Christ died for your sins, according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures?

NO. III.

Fellow Men,—Not a few of you are staggered at the existence of so many sects of professing Christians. You are sometimes led to doubt whether that religion can be of God, which such diverse parties claim to represent. You rightly argue that all the true friends and representatives of a really divine religion ought to agree. Sometimes one of you will say—"I cannot believe that Christianity is of God, when I find so many opposing sects." Now, this is wrong, for if you look into the Apostolic writings you find three things:—First, That, in the primitive age, all Christians formed one body, and were known only as one; second, That they were solemnly enjoined to "keep the unity;" but, third, That it was predicted "some would depart from the faith." With this before you, it becomes plain that the Bible is not to blame for the divisions now existing—that it does not authorise them—that it repudiates and condemns them—that they exist not because of the faith once delivered to the saints, but by departure from it. The true argument deducible from the sectarianism of the day is to this effect:

Sects exist only by violation of the law of Christ; be it ours, therefore, to ignore them by following Jesus. It is evident, as a mathematical demonstration, that if all who call Jesus Lord, were to do only the things he has commanded them, divisions among his professed followers would cease and determine. Any other conclusion is a libel upon his legislation. To say that he has given laws which, fairly and fully examined, cannot bring his people to be "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," is to affirm his deficiency as a Legislator. And, as by his Apostle, he commands his followers to be thus perfectly united, the supposition of the impossibility of such union makes him a hard master, gathering where he has not strawn. And, as this and similar injunctions form part and parcel of those Scriptures given by inspiration of God, to deny their practicability is to give up the Bible—to implicate the Holy Spirit in requiring impossibilities, and to drive men off from the Word of God, away to mere human opinion and tradition. For you will always observe that those who argue in defence of sectarianism, do so, never by Scripture quotation, but only by an expression of opinion. They oppose Scripture by their opinionism. They say, "Let us agree to differ," knowing that the Word of God says no such thing. They call the Bible an instrument on which any tune can be played, unmindful that this is simple defamation, calculated to destroy all faith in the Scriptures. They speak of any Gospel command, which they are pleased not to obey, as a "non-essential," conveniently forgetting that the Saviour makes no such distinctions between his commands as essentials and non-essentials. Well, then, if sectarian division be a stumbling-block obstructing the way of life, and placed and retained there contrary to divine warrant, and only by man's erratic will, see that you will have nothing to do with it—abandon it—ignore it—leave it at once and for ever—for the faith once for all delivered to the saints, as written and exhibited in those sacred Scriptures, which, by it, are able to make you wise unto salvation, and perfect and thoroughly accomplish the man of God for all good work.

NO. IV.

Dear Readers,—In the perusal of books you pay regard to their character and object. You do not read a dictionary as you do a narrative. In using the Bible, then, do not violate common sense. If it be not a book of proverbs, do not tear its continuous statements into shreds and patches—do not wrest clauses from their connexion, and apply them “text” fashion to things, persons, and subjects, to which they bear no reference. If it be a revelation from God to man, written in human language with great plainness of speech, be not carried away with the tradition that it must be spiritually metaphysically, or fancifully interpreted—do not believe that it is not to be understood on the same universal principles of interpretation by which other books are to be understood. Take it to mean what it says so far as faithfully and correctly translated. Do not believe that you need either infallible, ghostly, priestly, or learned interpreter, to become wise unto salvation by the faith of Jesus Christ. Do not confound things that differ. If the Bible be a relation of facts in history and prophecy—if it be a record of divine and human action—if it exhibits thus the character and will, the requirements, threatenings, and promises of God respecting man, do not treat it as a book of fables, speculations, or opinions. If it gives the account of the establishing by God of two covenants or institutions—the one that of the law by Moses, which gave only the knowledge of sin, and formed the ministration of condemnation and death, in contrast with the second, the new and everlasting institution by Jesus Christ, through which there flow grace and love divine, and by which man obtains pardon, righteousness, life, and peace; understand it so. If it addresses Jews as Jews, Gentiles as Gentiles, Christians as Christians, apostles as apostles, note well its distinctions. As well might a clerk bungle all his accounts in his day-book, and charge A with the debt of B, and C with the credits of D, as might any one overlook the distinctions of Scripture. Since the Bible contains the gospel, and is not itself the gospel, do not conclude that you believe the gospel merely because you believe the Bible. Do not apply to the unconverted what is affirmed only of the disciples of Jesus—do not affirm of uninspired teachers what is written in respect only of the inspired. If a Chinese were to present himself at the Court of London as plenipotentiary from the Emperor of China, he would be asked for his letters of credence; if, then, you find men calling themselves apostles and ambassadors of Christ, ask for their credentials. If the Scriptures confine all the privileges and immunities of the Christian state to the disciples of Christ, inquire by what authority all the ordinances of the Christian worship and service are thrown open to the unconverted. If the Scriptures do not say that baptism has come in the place of circumcision, why should you believe it has? Is that divine service which has no divine sanction? Can you serve Christ by leaving undone what he commanded, and doing what he never enjoined? How much wages is owing for such service? If the Messiah be declared the author of eternal salvation to all those who obey him, whence the tradition that his commands are non-essential?

T. H. M.

“GOD WAS MANIFESTED IN THE FLESH.”

THE article from the pen of J. Ellis inserted on page 479, as might have been expected, has called forth appropriate observations and objections from several brethren. Of course, we cannot find room for all. The elaborate and luminous essay which appears in our present number, from the pen of Bro. A. Campbell, on the same deeply-absorbing subject, we commend to the attentive perusal of all who have not previously seen it. Bro. Ellis, at the commencement of his article, observes—“That our holy religion has the Messiahship and Divinity of Jesus as its basis, I sincerely believe.” The difficulty here lies in the sense in which the word divinity is employed by J. E. We sometimes hear the expression, “the Rev. Divine,” applied—as we think, blasphemously—to a class of sinful men amongst us : but surely it is not in such a sense that the term is applied to the Messiah, the sent of God. That Jesus the Christ was a perfect man, and the Son of God, when born of his mother, is a fact which the Scriptures clearly reveal. “He became bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh.” Yet before creation was brought into being by his fiat, he was the life-giving Word. “In the beginning was the Word, for the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (the Jews) ; and we (the Apostles) beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.” The Jews regarded Jesus as the son of Mary, and a man like themselves, addressing him as such, and our Lord often speaks to them in language which accorded with the ideas they held respecting him ; yet, in the course of his ministry, whenever the occasion demanded it, he demonstrated that “in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.” His descent into our world was to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself ; and hence he who knew no sin, was made sin for us, that we might become the justified in the sight of God. The first Adam was created in purity and innocence, and his life and happiness were maintained by faith in God ; but both were forfeited by one act of unbelief and disobedience. Death was the penalty attached to transgression. “By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin ;” and so death has passed upon all. The second Adam was also pure and spotless—a perfect man, born of a woman, under a broken law ; and yet he was the Lord from heaven—a vivifying and life-giving spirit. He was therefore not only able to make reconciliation for the people, but also to reconcile man to God, and to destroy death, with him that had the power thereof. This he accomplished, and thereby secures to all who are converted to him, and become transformed into his image, a resurrection unto eternal life. Neither the gates of hell, nor death or the grave, can ever prevail against the called, chosen, and faithful disciples of the Lord. We trust that Bro. J. E. will be able, on further reflection, to receive implicitly the declaration of Scripture, that our Divine Saviour was “God manifest in flesh.”

In further response to Bro. J. E. we give the following from Bro. G. Y. T. :—

THE DIVINE NATURE OF CHRIST.

Pending any reply W. T. Horner may see fit to make to J. Ellis's article, “Christ is not God,” perhaps it will not be thought inopportune if I submit a table of Scripture passages from “Eadie's Analytical Concordance,” to facilitate a prayerful enquiry into the teaching of the Holy Spirit on this important subject. It must, I think, strike every careful reader, that immense violence must be done to most of the following passages, before they could be made to teach any other than the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. No one could envy the state of mind required for such a work. Still men have been found to undertake it. I sincerely hope J. Ellis is not among the number. I hope that he would not endorse many of the interpretations put upon these Scriptures, to the scandal of religion and shame of our race. I hope he would pause before adopting, for instance, the Unitarian view of Thomas's confession, “My Lord, and my God”—perverting it into a mere exclamation, and not only robbing his Master of the honor tacitly acknowledged by himself to be due unto his name, but making him a party to a gross act of profanity in failing to reprove Thomas for taking God's name in vain. Many instances of such perverse modes of dealing with the Word of God could be adduced, if time permitted ; but I must leave the readers of the Harbinger to draw their own conclusions from the passages submitted. I have one other remark. J. Ellis observes, “If Christ is God, follows it not that what is said of one will also apply to the other ? Christ is called the Son of God, the sent of God, &c. ; will this language hold true if applied to the supreme Jehovah ?” This is very lame philosophy. The principle he here contends for is outrageously fallacious as an invariable rule ; indeed, it scarcely obtains anywhere. For instance, every species belongs to a certain genus or family ; but it does not follow that the whole genus belongs to a certain species. Woman may always be spoken of under the generic term man, but in no case can it said of man that he is woman. If I apply J. Ellis's reasoning on the divine unity to the human relationship, I affirm that because it cannot be said of a man that he is his own wife or his own son, his wife and son cannot therefore be classed under the term man," we simply make ourselves ridiculous.

G. Y. T.

1. NAMES OF GOD GIVEN TO HIM.—Psalm i. 1, Isaiah ix. 6, John xii. 41, Jeremiah ii. 6, Malachi iii. 1, John i. 1-2, John xx. Acts xx. 28, Romans ix. 5, 1 Tim. iii. Titus i. 3, Titus ii. 13, Hebrews i. 8, John v. 20, Rev. xix. 16.

2. HIS RELATION TO THE FATHER.—Ps. ii. Ps. lxxxix. 27, Zech. xiii. 7, Mat. i. 41, 45, Mark i. 1, Mark ix. 7, Luke i. 41, 44, John i. 14, v. 17, 21, viii. 19, 38, x. 36, xii. 44, 45, xiv. 7, 11, xv. 23, 24, x. 21, 23, Phil. ii. 6, Col. i. 15, ii. 9, i. 5, iii. 5, 6, v. 5, 8, 1 John ii. 23, i. 5, v. 5.

3. ATTRIBUTES OF GOD POSSESSED BY HIM.—Eternity, or Pre-existence.—John vi. 42, viii. 56, 58, xiii. 3, xvi. 28, xvii.

5, 24, Heb. i. 10, Rev. i. 17, 18, xxii. 13. Omnipresence.—Matt. xviii. 20, xxviii. 20, John iii. 13. Omniscience.—Matt. ix. 4, xii. 25, Mark ii. 8, Luke vi. 8, ix. 47, xx. 23, John i. 48, 50, ii. 24, 25, v. 42, vi. 64, xviii. 1, xvi. 30, xxi. 17. Unchangeableness.—Heb. i. 22, xiii. 8.

4. WORKS OF GOD ASCRIBED TO HIM.—Creation.—John i. 3, 10, Eph. iii. 9, Col. i. 16, Heb. i. 2, 10, Rev. iii. 14. Providence.—Col. ii. 17, Heb. i. 3. Resurrection.—John v. 21, 25, 28, 29, vi. 40. Judgment.—Matt. xxiv. 30, John v. 22, 27, Rom. xiv. 10.

5. DIVINE PREROGATIVES WIELDED BY HIM.—Forgiveness of sin.—Mark ii. 5, 7, Luke v. 21, vii. 47, 49, Col. iii. 13. Gift of the Holy Spirit.—Luke xxiv. 19, John xvi. 7, 14, Acts ii. 33, 35.

6. WORSHIP DUE TO GOD OFFERED TO CHRIST, AND NEVER REFUSED BY HIM.—Psalm lxxii. 15, 17, Matt. ii. 11, ix. 18, xiv. 33, xv. 25, xx. 20, 21, Luke xxiii. 42, xxiv. 52, John v. 23, xiv. 13, 14, Gal. i. 3, Phil. ii. 10, 1 Tim. i. 12, Heb. i. 6, 2 Peter iii. 18, Rev. v. 8, 13, vii. 9, 10.

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM BROTHER S. SWAN.

NO. II.

MR. JAS. WALLIS.—My dear Friend; your letter to you of the 2nd ultimo, was intended for the Harbinger; but since I have published it, and also responded, kind enough to allow the following remarks to appear in your next. They relate chiefly to your response.

I was, as you say, about the year 1832, when we became acquainted. I was then a Baptist, and in profession, at least, where you. I was rigid then, as you remain, and I am rigid now: so you see that we have not been "whirled about by every wind of doctrine." And although I am now my own, that I have learned much from the writings of Mr. A. McLean, my aim has been to "prove all things, and to hold fast that which is good." Perhaps it is very little known that Mr. Alexander Campbell esteems very highly the works of McLean, and Sandeman, and Glass. I have heard him say that the above were the ablest and best writings on Primitive Christianity that this island has produced; and so familiar was he in his youth with Sandeman's Letters on Theron and Aspasia, that when he wants to know his sentiments on any subject, he can tell to this day on which side of the leaf they will be found. Yet after all it is the Holy Scriptures which make "the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished to every good work."

You say that you "are not aware that the abstract personalities of the Deity, are presented to the disciples in the Book of God, as a ground of faith," &c. This statement, as it appears to me, is not correct. For the disciples are commanded to be baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, because they believe in the name of the Divine Three, as performing each their parts for the redemption of sinful man. The Father in the greatness of his love, has sent his Son to be the propitiation for sin. The Son took a human body and soul into personal union with his Divine nature, and humbled himself unto death; and so he put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And the Holy Spirit, through the instrumentality of the Gospel, quickens the dead in trespasses and sins, creates them anew in Christ Jesus unto good works, and as the Monitor, abides with the disciples for ever. Now this is one passage in the "Book of God," making known the distinctions of persons in the one Jehovah, and which is presented to the disciples as a "ground" of faith, when he is formally introduced into the kingdom. There are other passages bearing testimony to the same doctrine, one in particular recorded in 2 Cor. xiii. 14, wherein each of the Divine Three is separately invoked.

But the thought is ever ready to cross our minds, how can one be three, and three be one? Well, all that we can say is that the distinction of persons in the Godhead, is not such as to be inconsistent with the unity; and the unity not such as to be inconsistent with the distinction. As to the manner of the subsistence of three persons in one Godhead, we have no knowledge. This is not revealed. Indeed, who can comprehend the infinite God? Who can find out the Almighty unto perfection? But as to the fact that there are three persons in the one Godhead, we receive it on the testimony of God himself. This is the ground of our faith.

You say, "we have exhibited to our view, Father, Son, (Word) and Holy Spirit, in one personality—the man Christ Jesus." But this statement does not rest on Scripture testimony. It is most assuredly a "humanly devised abstraction," and one that refutes itself; for the terms Father and Son, cannot be applied to the same person in this manner. He cannot be Father to himself, nor Son to himself, nor can the prayer of our Lord, recorded in John, chap. 17, be understood or explained consistently with this scheme. I am indeed very sorry to find that you hold this sentiment, for it takes away the very foundation of redemption, and the ground of hope from the guilty.

With regard to the allegation in my last, that "some of you deny the personality of the Holy Spirit, and affirm that the Word alone, is all that is required to regenerate the sinner," the readers of the "Harbinger," for the last three or four years, have had sufficient evidence of the truth of it.

You seem to think it doubtful whether Alexander Campbell, should he visit Worthy, would be received by the brethren; but unless I have mistaken your meaning in the statement respecting the Godhead, Mr. Campbell could not receive you as a Christian brother; for, according to his deliberate judgment, your profession is a mere pretence, and your religion, as respects the grand affair of eternal life, is of no value (see Campbell's "Christian Baptism," &c. page 289.)

I pray that the Spirit of truth may guide us into all truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures, and remain, my dear friend, yours very sincerely, SAM'L SWAN.

RESPONSE, NO. II.

Brother Swan—Dear Sir: It appears to me that your first letter was as much intended for publication as is your second, and therefore you could not be much surprised to see it in the Harbinger. True, you did not request me to publish it, but as you did not write "private" upon it, I at once concluded to place it before the reader.

In the letter now inserted, you admit that you were a Scotch Baptist in 1832, and rigid in your opinions; and you state that I was by profession, at least, of the same persuasion. But you add that you are still rigid, and that you have not been "whirled about with every wind of doctrine." No doubt this is true, but precisely the same boast is invariably made by the Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Independent, Methodist, Friend, &c. Yet, if I am not mistaken, you have been carried away either from the Sandemanians, or the Glassites, or some other body of infant sprinklers, into your present position as a Scotch Baptist. Was this the result of man's windy doctrine? I believe not, for such doctrines never remove any one into closer proximity to God's truth. With regard to myself, I admit that from 1812 to 1832, a period of nearly 22 years, I was in fellowship with the Particular Baptists of the Andrew Fuller school, and rigidly adhered to the strict communion order. I candidly confess that I was during that time neither satisfied with myself, nor with the churches with which I was in association, whatever may have been my labors amongst them; and I have since learnt, that if my faith were not tainted with a national character, it was certainly more denominational and congregational than personal. In the spring of 1832 I withdrew from the Particular, and united with the Scotch Baptists; and, as might have been anticipated, and as all will find by experience, though I left some of the opinions and doctrines of men behind me, I took some with me, and found others in existence among my new and worthy brethren; every one of which, I now hold, as bonds of union among the disciples of Christ, would have been better buried, like the sins of the Pentecostian believers, in the bath of immersion, than periodically brought forward as sources of contention. In the days of the Apostles, every disciple of Christ who departed from the Lord's institutions, must have turned to the doctrines and commandments of men. But in coming out of the Apostacy, if governed and drawn by the truth as it is in Jesus, happy and blessed is the man who makes a movement towards the fountain of truth itself. I need not refer to what occurred between myself, Bro. W. Jones, then of London, but now asleep in Jesus, and the Scotch Baptist church of which I was then a member. It is sufficient to say, that after a protracted discussion on faith alone, baptism for the remission of sins, and the abstract influence of the Holy Spirit, a separation took place; and my resolution then was, that in future my faith should neither be national, denominational, nor congregational, but personal, concentrating in the Messiah, who is, to me, an embodiment of the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit. All the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelt in one personality, the son of Mary, of the seed of David according to the flesh, and constituted the Son of God with power, as to his spiritual nature, after his resurrection from the dead.

You say "that the Son of God took a human body and soul into personal union with his divine nature," &c. But the Apostle John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." * And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." The same Apostle says again, "There are three that bare record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; and these three are one." Some sixty years after the ascension of our Lord, the same Apostle writes, "I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon it was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns, and he had a name (the full import of) which no man knew but himself. He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the Word of God." Another Apostle says, "The Word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and purpose of the heart. And there is no creature concealed from His sight, for all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him to whom we must give account." If the Word of God here mentioned has reference only to the Scriptures, how can the hearts of all men be naked and open to it? To my faith the reference in this passage is to Him who in heaven and in Scripture is called "The Word of God."

You say further, "The idea of the Father, the Word, and the 'Holy Spirit,' being presented for our faith, in one personality, the man Christ Jesus, does not rest on Scripture testimony, but is most assuredly a humanly devised abstraction, and refutes itself." If it be so, then let it perish. But we must first hear what the Scriptures say on the subject. "No man hath seen God at any time: or can see him and live; the only begotten of the Father, (the son of Mary) he hath declared him." Hence it is written — "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace." When instructing his disciples, we learn that Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by me (or through me.) If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and we shall be satisfied. Jesus saith unto him, have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father: and how sayest thou then, show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in my Father, and the Father in me? The words I speak unto you, I speak not of myself: as to the works, it is the Father dwelling in me who doth them. Believe me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: if not on my testimony, be convinced from the works themselves." In the prayer of Jesus, we have the following assurance:—"Neither pray I for these alone, but for those also who shall believe on me through thy testimony, that they may be one: as Thou Father art in me, and I in Thee, that they may be one in us. I in them, and Thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one," &c. The same Apostle says, "He whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." Paul also says, "Now the Lord is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. And we all with open face beholding as in a mirror (the Messiah and his institution) the glory of Jehovah, are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Lord, the Spirit." Thus, then, we have ample testimony from the Scriptures, that the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit are most graciously presented to us in one personality, the Messiah. "This is the true God, and eternal life."

Your's in the truth, my dear brother,
Oct. 25, 1859. J. WALLIS.

THE REVIVAL.*

SIR,—Through the kindness of some friend in North Shields I have been favored with a copy of your interesting paper, dated Monday, September 19th, 1859.

Having a deep interest in "the Revival"

* Addressed to the Editor of the Northern Daily Express.

now progressing in the North of Ireland, and I am glad to learn in other places—having indeed but recently returned from a nine days' visit to the "sister isle," with the sole purpose of noting "facts and incidents" of the movement, as seen in Belfast, Armagh, and Lisburn, I was led—first of all—to peruse the matter collected in your sheet of the above date on this important subject.

After reading the very interesting report of Dr. Jarbo's narrative—to the substantial correctness of which, in some of the most striking facts there stated, I can bear corroborative testimony, being with him a joint witness to them—my attention was rivetted to two letters in the portion of your paper allotted to correspondence. The first bears the initials "S. B. W.;" the second the full signature, "George Simpson, junr."

The letters refer to certain criticisms which have appeared in a contemporary, in which the means used at a meeting in Brunswick Chapel to promote a revival, and the results gained, have been called in question. It appears from both letters that in the course of the adverse criticisms, a challenge has been tendered to produce anything analogous to certain "scenes" witnessed on said occasion in the gospels. The first answer to this challenge, which is by "S. B. W." is in these words: "What was the result of the preaching of the gospel on the Day of Pentecost, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles?" And the second answer, which is of a directly affirmative character, by "Geo. Simpson, junr." is in these words: "There is a very similar scene in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles." Pleasure and delight would certainly exceed the surprise I actually felt on reading these words. Could I be assured that it is indeed true, that in Brunswick Chapel, or in any other in my native town, this revival should be found to be not a mere revival of religion as already existing, a quickening into renewed life of the various and varying sects, even that I should not, do not, cast aside as worthless; but as these gentlemen would seem to intimate, a revival of Christianity, primitive and pure, as, when under the guidance of the unerring Spirit of God, it fell from the lips of the apostle, and was obediently realized in the ennobled and happy experience of the believing thousands, who, on that day "put on" the Lord Jesus Christ.

But I must confess to some misgivings that those two friends, in their zeal to defend their cause, have cast a somewhat hasty, and may be, a partial glance at the chapter cited by them. I shall be glad to be convinced otherwise. Will you, Mr. Editor, kindly permit me, through your columns, most respectfully to ask these gentlemen to look again, and say in what particulars "the scenes" criticized by the adverse journal were analogous to the scenes resultant on the preaching on the first Christian Pentecost. I ask these gentlemen to look carefully at the preaching itself; it fills the section from the 21st to the 37th verse, and is as worthy of its Divine origin, and as fully adapted to the intelligent nature of man as it is to his spiritual wants. There, the dignity of the Saviour, His redeeming work, His glory, are set before the inquiring myriads; their inquiry not avoided, but met and satisfied by an overwhelming appeal to evidence, in harmony with the nature of the claims set forth:—prophetic and miraculous evidence, which so "assured" them that that very Jesus whom they had crucified was Lord and Christ, as to extort from their pierced hearts the cry—"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Here, then, in this 37th verse of the chapter referred to we have "result" the 1st. I would ask these gentlemen, were the "cries" in Brunswick Chapel of this character, not the "result" of easy credulity, nor of wild excitement, but of intelligent and heartfelt conviction? If so, why, then, you may thank God, and never mind the critics.

But if our friends will look at verse 38, they will see that "result" 1st—the cry of those heart-pierced believers—occasioned result 2nd, viz.: the plain and full reply. Look, gentlemen, it is worth your notice: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Now, gentlemen, did the speaker or speakers that night in Brunswick Chapel follow the apostle? Nay, rather the Holy Spirit, in giving answer to this, the most momentous question that man can ask—a question which none but God Himself, and they who are well content to be his echo can answer, so as to "save themselves and them that hear" them. If they did so answer, so far you are safe in your answer to the challenge. The "Critic" may snarl, conscience acquits. Faithfulness to Christ, to the souls of men, is not to be bartered for a pleasant dash of their pen; ink fades, paper rots, critics at last must endure the criticism of Him who is "the truth," while they who "turn many to righteousness" shall be everlastingly brilliant. But I would further point these gentlemen to the 41st verse of their chapter, where they will find a third "result," viz.—"Then they that gladly received his word were baptized;"—a result this, dear friends, clearly in harmony with their deep conviction of sin and helplessness on the one hand, and the Divine authority of His Word, and the certainty of the blessings it promised, on the other hand. But were the results in Brunswick Chapel similar? That is the question. If so, why then, the "gladness" of them that "received the word," and, gentlemen, your gladness in view of theirs, I feel confident, will abundantly compensate the sourness of a host of critics.

I will, Mr. Editor, by your leave, point out to these gentlemen two other results in this chapter, which, indeed, have not yet had time allowed for them to transpire in the case of those awakened, convicted, or converted in Brunswick Chapel, but which did transpire in the case of those of the first Pentecost. Gentlemen, do you not wish for "scenes" similar to these? Look at the scene described in the 42nd verse—which, you will remember, is the fourth result of that day's preaching. From human tradition, whether of Scribe, Pharisee, Sadducee, or even of the "fathers"—from all alike, as from all other sin, the precious blood of Christ has redeemed them, and now steadfastly to the Apostle's doctrine they adhere, and therefore fellowship in every divine institution. See to it, Sirs, that Christ's redemption is not mangled in the experience of those who moved in the "scenes" alluded to.

But there is one more "result" of that preaching recorded in verses 44 to 47—a "scene" of unfeigned fervent love, of unity and joy—a result beautifully exemplifying our Redeemer's prayer, to which all revivalists would do well to take heed—John xvii 20 and 21—"I pray for all them also who shall believe on me, through their word, that they all may be one.—That the world may believe that thou hast sent me." God grant you these results in your chapel, gentlemen. Heedless may we all be of the critics, if indeed the results of revival meetings will bear comparison with the results of the first outpouring of the Holy Ghost. But will you, Sirs, favour us by saying, with the chapter to which you have referred open before you, in what particulars the "scenes" and "results" criticised are similar to those of Acts ii.—Awaiting reply from these gentlemen, I am yours respectfully,

WILLIAM McDUGALL.

King Street, Wigan, Lancashire,
Sept. 12, 1859.

VISIT TO IRELAND.

In compliance with the resolution passed at the Annual Meeting, recommending me to labor for a short time in the neighborhood of Castlewellan, I arrived in time to meet Bros. King and Hay at Belfast. I had the pleasure of meeting with the disciples assembling in Bro. Bingham's house, Tullynasough, the Lord's day previous to their arrival. As Bro. King has given an outline of his visit, I need not make any remarks on what transpired during his stay. I am of opinion that more has been said of the Revival in Ireland, and of its results, by our brethren, than it merits. As to the people being willing to hear any one who may have anything to say about "Christ and sin," that depends on what you do say, and how it is said. The method followed by the revivalists is, first to terrify the people with hell and its torments, and when they have sufficiently worked on their fears, then they exhort them to pray to Jesus to save them, or to the Holy Spirit to convince them of sin, &c. In this way the people are distracted. Those who preach salvation by Christ, as did the Apostles, will be regarded as opponents of the work of the Spirit.

For the first fortnight we had tolerably good cottage meetings. Finding the people about Tullynasough and Castlewellan had heard as much of our teaching as they wanted to have, I made up my mind, at the end of three weeks, to return home. A circumstance occurred, however, which detained me a little longer. I got introduced to a new field of labor. I met with a man who was sceptical about revivals, or rather about the physical prostrations being the work of the Spirit. After some conversation, learning my errand, he offered his house for me to speak in. I attended the same evening, and had the pleasure of addressing a house full of attentive hearers. While setting forth the claims of Jesus, three young women were stricken, who had been stricken several times before. After the meeting had closed, several questions were asked, but no objections offered to what had been taught. Again I was invited to speak in a barn about ten miles from Castlewellan; the place was filled. Several questions were asked and answers given. Coming away from this place, I was invited by another farmer to preach in his barn, and I embraced the opportunity. Here there was a larger number than at any previous meeting, and at its close we adjourned into the dwelling-house, where questions on the subject of immersion were put and answered, and as some appeared to be moved by what they had heard, I exhorted them, as they professed to be believers in Christ, to obey him. I recommended them to form a Bible Class, by carefully reading which, if sincere, they would come to a knowledge of the truth. They wished me to visit them again, but I had to return home soon as possible. My visit to the brethren was in season, but out of season to the people around.

G. SINCLAIR.

October 24, 1859.

NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CRITICISMS, &amp;c.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH AND THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

WE have been withdrawing members from the Established Church, and we are censured for so doing. Our plea is—Guilty, but not deserving of censure. It is our duty to do so. Faithfulness to the Lord demands it. The State Church of this country tramples upon the laws of Christ's kingdom and subverts its great principles. The following letters are printed, that the reader may have both sides in view:—

LETTER I.

September 30, 1859.

Sir,—I have been requested by a clerical friend to ascertain whether there is any compendious statement of the views of the religious sect to which you belong; and having enquired of —, whom you know, he has referred me to you. I beg therefore to inquire whether you know of any such statement?

I must, however, take the opportunity which this communication affords, of expressing my strong feeling of disapprobation of the course you have taken in withdrawing a young man, but very imperfectly acquainted with the grounds on which the system in which he was brought up rests, so hastily from communion with the church.

All hasty movements in matters of the greatest importance, tend to error, and consequently to disunion.

While your professed object is to promote union among Christians, the natural tendency of your conduct is to promote disunion.

I am, Sir, your's respectfully,
D. King, Esq. * *

LETTER II.

Birmingham, October 5, 1859.

Dear Sir,—“The Principles and Objects of the Religious Reformation, urged by Disciples of Jesus in England and America,” price 4d.; also, “A Tribute to the Memory of the Apostles,” same price, may be obtained by sending postage stamps to James Wallis, Peck-lane, Nottingham, or by the booksellers from Hall and Co. Paternoster-row, London.

You express “disapprobation” at my withdrawing a young man from the communion of the Church of England. Let me suppose a case. A young man of 21, without invitation, becomes an attentive hearer in the church in which you worship. After awhile he informs you that his father is a pious Roman Catholic, and his godfather a priest in that church—that he has been of late under the pastoral care of one of the most esteemed doctors of his church—that from that doctor's teaching he has come to the conclusion, that the Roman Church is in error, and the Church of England in the truth. You talk much with the young man, and find that the doctrine and polity of the Established Church are understood by him—you, I am to suppose, also hold the Roman Church to be in error. And now, Sir, what would you do? Your expressed disapprobation implies that you would say to the young man, “My dear young friend, you are only 21, and you are very imperfectly acquainted with the system in which you are brought up,” therefore, I pray you, go back to the church of Rome.” This you must do to be consistent. I do not think you would do it—you would do as I have done, in the exactly similar case of —.

On the matter of the union of Christians we are perhaps not very far apart. I do not believe that the Church of Rome, Church of England, Wesleyan Church, Baptist Church, &c. are so many Christian churches, and that Christian union is the friendly coöperation of these churches. I hold that if the Church of Rome is Christian, the Church of England, as now established, is a condemnable sect—that if the Church of England is Christian, Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, &c. are in open rebellion against God, by standing out from the communion of that church. Dissent, Sir, is a sin—nonconformity is condemned of God. I say come out from the Established Church, because it is a non-conformist church—because it dissents from the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church. Let it be shewn that it does not thus dissent, and I am bound, in humility of spirit, to seek its communion.

Your's, dear Sir, in the love of the truth,
D. KING.

LETTER III.

Dear Sir,—If a young man, brought up in the Church of Rome, came to me under the circumstances which you suppose, I should first ask him whether he had consulted the esteemed doctor under whose pastoral care he had been living, with regard to the difficulties he had met with in his own church. If he had not done so, I should tell him that was the course he was bound in duty to take before coming to me. I should likewise ask him whether he had been in the habit of corresponding with the priest his godfather. If he had not been, I should endeavor to ascertain why, and whether that non-intercourse was owing to his own neglect or that of the priest. If I found, on inquiry, that the said priest was likely to be able to give him all needful information, I should urge him to have recourse to him.

I would not take any steps towards bringing a young man of one and twenty over from the Church of Rome to that of England, until he had, as he was bound in duty to do, personally consulted those learned men of his own church whom he had an opportunity of consulting.

— may be fairly acquainted with the doctrine and polity of the Church of England; but he is most imperfectly acquainted with the grounds and reasons on which that doctrine and polity rest.

I will add to what I have said above, that I should not feel satisfied with the young man's having consulted men of learning of his own community, unless I felt satisfied that he had patiently, and in a teachable spirit, weighed the arguments presented to his mind in behalf of the system in which he had been brought up.

If he had done all this, I should advise him to weigh well the defects and faults of our own system, as well as its excellencies, before he made the exchange; and in fact not to make the exchange, if he found it possible to live holily according to the Romish system, until the arguments in favor of the Church of England became so strong as to convince any candid and unprejudiced mind.

You profess to love the truth; but do you not think I love it as much as you? I shew my love of truth by holding fast that large measure of truth with which it has pleased God to bless us in the Church of England, notwithstanding that I think there is a considerable portion of error mingled with it. I shew it likewise by candidly admitting that to be error which I conceive to be so in our own system, and by bringing before the minds of others, and especially the clergy of the church, what I conceive to be erroneous, in order either that I may be better informed myself, and so convinced that what I thought erroneous was not really so, or that what is erroneous should be generally regarded as so, and be replaced by something truthful.

I remarked in my note that hasty changes in a matter of so much importance as the leaving the religious community in which, and the religious opinions with which we were brought up, tend to error. We are taught in the Bible that humility is requisite to the attainment of truth; and it does not indicate humility to suppose we can attain in a brief period, and without the aid of those whom God has appointed as our guides and teachers, what wiser and better men have been earnestly seeking for many years.

I will not dispute what you say respecting the Church of England and Protestant Dissenters in this country; but I must have better arguments than I have met with yet, before I leave a community which, with all its faults, affords so many advantages for the promotion of piety, and exchange it for something new and comparatively untried.

I am, dear Sir, your's faithfully,
D. King, Esq. * *

LETTER IV.

October 10, 1859.

Dear Sir,—I unintentionally omitted to thank you for the information which you were kind enough to give me. Pray accept my thanks.

I have read carefully some of the books advocating the views of your community—particularly large portions, in fact the greater part, of Campbell's work on baptism, and nearly the whole of Milner's "Messiah's Ministry." I will proceed to tell you candidly in what respects I agree with you, and why I cannot accept your system as a whole. I agree with you that the ancient church departed too far from the theory and practice of the church of the apostolic age, and that the Church of England does so too. But I do not think it was the intention of the Apostles themselves, that the church should adhere strictly to the practice of the apostolic age. The Apostles themselves acted as circumstances indicated it was most fitting that they should act; and I suppose the church in after ages had the power to follow their example in this respect, so long as they adhered to the spirit of the rules laid down and acted on by them.

The fault seems to me, not that the church did not literally abide by the practice of the Apostles, but that they did not carry out the spirit of their instructions. I believe the Church of England is in sin in claiming on the one hand to be considered preëminently as the church in this country, and on the other conniving at practices so manifestly wrong, and requiring concessions of private opinion so unreasonable, that the greater number of conscientious persons cannot unite with her. Nevertheless there is so much of real excellence in the Church of England, that I have thought, in company with many others, that it is better to use what is good, (and we find great comfort in doing so, as have devout men of former ages) and use our influence to rectify what is amiss, than to join any established body of dissenters, or to endeavor, like yourselves, to raise a new and purer community.

There are two reasons—not to mention more—that meet me at the very threshold, why I could not unite with yourselves, if I were much less satisfied with the church in which I was bred than I really am. In the first place you would require me to regard my baptism received in childhood as void. Before I could do this, I should require you to show that the Apostles did not baptize little children. The fact that infant baptism was practiced in the church from the earliest ages that we have any notice on the subject in church history, and that its validity does not appear to have been questioned till the 12th century, is to my mind a strong argument that it was practiced by the Apostles. In the next place, Campbell, the chief writer on your side on the subject of baptism, misrepresents the ancient church writers on that subject, and makes them say very different to their real meaning. He ignores what Irenæus says; he misrepresents Origen and Chrysostom; he speaks of there being a continued succession of writers opposing the practice of infant baptism from early times down to the 10th or 11th century; (whereas, if you take the trouble to examine the instances which he adduces, all that it amounts to, with the exception of Tertullian—if I recollect right—is, that persons who are of sufficient age to be instructed in the Christian religion, ought to be instructed before baptism); he misrepresents Dr. Barlow—giving his opinion when a young man, but omitting what he had said when of mature age.

One is naturally disposed to doubt the truth of an opinion, independent of its real merits, which seems to require support of this kind.

Nevertheless, though I deeply regret the effect which intercourse with yourselves, and discussion of controverted questions of a religious kind, has had on the mind of —, I do not regret the appearance of a society of Christians holding your views. What I would wish to see amongst you, as well as amongst ourselves, is a more earnest, and a more humble and teachable search for truth, and a readiness to receive and act on it, however contrary to your present notions.

I am, dear Sir, your's faithfully,

D. King, Esq.      •      •

LETTER V.

October 14, 1859.

Dear Sir,—Your two unlooked for communications are to hand, the last of which introduces questions of general interest and of wide consideration. Permit me to say that the demands upon my time are such, that I cannot enter upon a written controversy, which will come only under the notice of the gentleman to whom I reply. Frequently I desire to do so, but the work before me forbids. This being the case, I have either to acknowledge your kind notes and close the correspondence, or, to notice them with a view to the publication of the several epistles. As your last favour contained good advice, and also a caution against, what you consider to be, an unfair use made by the greatly and justly esteemed President of Bethany College, of the writings of certain Fathers, I conclude to place it before some thousands of readers, who are likely to be misled by that unfair use, if such it be. At the same time, I will endeavour to state fully the ground we take, upon which we are able successfully to battle with the claims of the Established Church. I have no authority to publish your name—I shall, in inserting the correspondence in The British Millennial Harbinger and the Quo Warranto, omit the signatures, and also, the names mentioned therein. I will only add, that if you think well to forward the latter part of the last letter from the Rev. Dr. — to —; so much of it as contains the statement of the ground upon which your church rests its defence of infant baptism—I will insert it with your last communication, with or without the Dr.'s name, as you may think fit. And in conclusion, permit me to add, that space equal to that occupied by my reply, will be at your disposal in the following numbers of the periodicals named.

Your's, dear Sir, with kindest feelings and best wishes,      D. KING.

LETTER VI.

My dear Sir,—As you would act in dealing with a young member of the Papal Church, so would not I. Convinced that the Roman Church and the State Church of this country are not Christian, my duty is to say, "Come out." I have to enquire, not whether a young man has examined all the sophistries by which the advocates of an unchristian system make falsehood seem like truth, but how far he understands the revealed will of the Lord. I dare not send him to those whom I am convinced will not teach him truth, merely on the ground, that by birth his lot was cast among them.

There are, dear Sir, in your notes, two statements which when placed together I cannot reconcile. I will only name them, and leave bringing them into agreement to yourself. After claiming on behalf of the State Church that it shall be acknowledged as Christian, you accept my position thus—If the Established Church is Christian, the Wesleyan, Independent and other Nonconformist churches of this country are not, as the Lord has but one church, and separation is not only a sin, but one which places the parties outside the Church of God. The other statement is, that you "do not regret the appearance of the Society of Christians holding your [our] views."

In the next place you admit that the "ancient church" and the "Church of England" departed too far. But, my dear Sir, you do not say how far the church could have departed without getting into the too far region. Where, Sir, is your rule of faith and practice? Had you lived in the "ancient church" when its pastors and teachers were departing too far, would you have opposed your judgment to that of the clergy of the church in which you were bred? You remain in the Established Church to reform it. But permit me to ask, By what rule you construct your reform bill? How many steps do you require that church to retrace? You cannot reply, Let her take the ancient church for her model, because that church also "departed too far from the church of the apostolic age." By what authority do you say that the church has departed too far, and to what authority will you appeal for an answer to the question, how much too far? Will you accept the authority of the church which has departed? Will you declare yourself authorized to settle the important question? Will you take the Bible and with us measure all by the inspired records, and contend for the good and paths of the apostolic age?

But you could not unite with us, because we should require you to consider your baptism received in infancy void, and before doing this you would require proof that the apostles did not baptize infants. Curious demand! What may not be sustained in this way? You must consecrate and use holy water, and baptize bells, because it cannot be proved that the apostles did not do so! No, my dear Sir, the burden of proof rests with you. I serve a writ of "Quo Warranto"—you perform an act, professing to do it in the name of the king—I demand your authority, and unless it is produced you must submit to "ouster." I say not this because of inability to comply with (pardon the expression) your unreasonable demand. I could at least show—that the only commission to baptize given by the Redeemer excludes infants, and, that they are excluded by the terms of the New Covenant. I, however, think it well not to take this course. Another path has been selected by yourself and the Rev. Doctor, whose letter to ——— has been referred to. When we ask, Why you support a practice which the Bible does not sanction, the answer is, The Bible is not our only rule of faith—the apostles taught many things by word of mouth—tradition brings some of these things, and among them infant baptism, down to us—infant baptism is therefore of apostolic origin. Though we do adhere to the Bible, we can afford to step on to your platform. Your own terms shall be accepted. And now, my dear Sir, will you undertake to prove, that the apostles instituted, countenanced, or knew anything about infant baptism? Not from the Bible—we do not confine you to its pages, but from tradition. All we demand is that you pay due regard to the admitted laws of evidence. But that one fair demand deprives you of every chance of success. It will be for us to shew that your assertion, that it was not objected to till the twelfth century is incorrect, and that will be easily accomplished. It will be for you to call up witnesses to testify to facts known by themselves, and not to facts said by the people of their time to have transpired generations before they were born. If, Sir, you will do this, we shall be happy to cross-examine your witnesses, print the evidence, and thus test the alleged misrepresentation of Origen and Chrysostom.

May your concluding wish be abundantly realized.—May there be "a more humble, earnest, and teachable search for truth." But I must inform you that we are not attached to our notions. I mean this—we contend against infant baptism not because we dislike it, but because we are persuaded it is not of God. Do not say, but prove, it is from the apostles—we shall accept the proof and thank you. Why, my dear Sir, could we believe infant baptism, where we now number ten, we should number a hundred, and our power would at once become such as to shake every sect in the kingdom. We have no creed to bind us. Shew us anything from the apostles and we are at liberty to adopt it (which, of course, you cannot say in the Established Church.) I will only add, that we care not how you shew it—with the Bible or without the Bible—only let it be proved that it is from the apostles, and we will bless God for the further knowledge of His will.

Your's in Christian love,

D. KING.

"THE ITALIAN EVANGELICAL CHURCH."

"UNTIL the 27th of April last, however, its public worship (to speak paradoxically) was kept as select as possible, to avoid the persecution which attended any avowed leaning to Protestantism. Since the revolution has given us full liberty of creed, a place of worship has been opened, and is fully attended every Sunday. * * I am told that in the Romagna the new converts may be reckoned by thousands, and that the number of them is the greatest among the middle and lower classes. The absence of any organized priesthood in the new creed, forms one of its chief attractions in the eyes of a population long accustomed, alas! to couple the idea of priestly power with every species of outrage and oppression. It seems that the elders have no sort of power beyond the four walls of their church; and even within them every one of the brethren has an equal right to offer up prayer or instruct the congregation, 'if the Spirit give him utterance.' It is easy to conceive the dread and disgust with which so simple a form of religion must be regarded at Rome, for shrewd Cardinal Antonelli knows too well that such a foe, steadily and silently at work among the Papal subjects, is far more to be feared than conspiracy or insurrection, and can neither be furnished with a passport and legally bowed out, as was the Piedmontese Ambassador at Rome after his King's reception of the Romagnole delegates, nor hacked to death by Croat and Austrian, lavishly paid and smuggled into the disguise of the hideous Papal uniform."—Th. T.

METHODISM ON TRIAL—No. II.

At the opening of the court after the preliminaries were arranged, the Methodist Counsel addressed the court as follows:—My Lord, I beg to submit that the course taken by my learned friend on the other side, is both unusual and irrelevant. I submit that he has no authority to cross-examine our highly respectable witness, Dr. Adam Clark, upon anything beyond the evidence he has given to the court. Op. C.—I fear, my Lord, that my friend opposite is allowing his zeal to overrun his discretion—he knows perfectly well that his witness, Dr. Clark, has elsewhere in his commentaries, been obliged to give statements of facts in connection with Christianity and the church, which he has described as the model church, and if I can prove that those statements of facts show the practice of the model church to be antagonistic to the practice of Methodism, then I prove that when Dr. Clark comes into court and elevates Methodism as the most perfect embodiment of Christianity that has ever existed, that he is guilty of gross misrepresentation. (Sensation—the court rules that the cross-examination is perfectly relevant.) Op. C.—Now, Dr. Clark, I intimated to you on the last occasion of your being here, that I should have a few more questions to ask you upon baptism—will you oblige us with a definition or explanation of baptism? Dr. C.—Those who are dipped, or immersed in water, in the name of the Holy Trinity, I believe to be evangelically baptized; those who are washed, or sprinkled, I believe to be equally so; others have a right to believe the contrary if they see good (Com. Matt. iii. 6.) Op. C.—Very liberal, Doctor; but is it possible that a word can have such different meanings? Dr. C.—Yes, dipping or sprinkling it is certain bapto and baptizo mean both. Op. C.—Certain, is it; then give me one instance of its being translated sprinkling by an English translator of the New Testament? (The Doctor is silent.) Find one Greek scholar who would risk his reputation by translating baptizo by sprinkling? (Still silent.) Find one Lexicon in which sprinkling is given as the primary meaning of the Greek term? (No answer.) As we can get nothing out of the Doctor on the translation, we must try another course. Was baptism administered by sprinkling or immersion in the primitive church? Dr. C.—(See Com. John iii. 23.) The Jewish custom required the persons to stand in the water, and having been instructed and entered into a covenant to renounce all idolatry and take the God of Israel for their God, then plunge themselves under the water; it is probable that the rite was thus performed at Ænon—(also Acts viii. 38.) While Philip was instructing him, and he (the eunuch) professed his faith in Christ, he probably plunged himself under the water, as this was the plan which appears to be generally followed among the Jews in their baptisms. Op. C.—Oh, then immersion was the probable practice; I suppose, then, that sprinkling was the improbable practice? Dr. C.—(Matt. iii. 6.) In the Eastern countries bathings were frequent, because of the heat of the climate, it being there so necessary to cleanliness and health; but could our climate, or a more Northerly one, admit of this with safety, for at least three-fourths of the year? Op. C.—Well, Doctor, there are thousands of immersed individuals that can reply in the affirmative, between here and the North Pole, and if you disbelieve them, make enquiries at the various hydropathic establishments in England. But that is not the question—was immersion the practice in the model church? Dr. C. (Romans vi. 4.) It is probable that the Apostle here alludes to the mode of administering baptism by immersion, the whole body being put under the water, which seemed to say the man is drowned—is dead. Op. C.—How the Doctor does deal in probabilities—could you not give us your opinion, Doctor, without this everlasting probable? Dr. C.—Baptism among the Jews, as it was performed in the coldest weather, and the persons were kept under for some time; was used not only to express death, but the most cruel death (Mat. xx. 22.) Op. C.—Very good, Doctor; what a deal of trouble it takes to get the truth out of a man. The Methodist Counsel—My Lord, I must protest against my brother's treatment of our witness; his age, learning, position, and venerable appearance, entitle him to be treated otherwise than with levity and disrespect. Op. C.—I have my duty to perform, and shall not notice interruptions, interposed to bolster up a bad place. Methodist C.—But this never ending topic, baptism, surely we have had quantum suff of that. Op. C.—Why, yes, too much for you, nearly enough for us. (To the court.) I think Dr. Clark had admitted that immersion was the probable mode of baptism, a position which he cannot once claim for sprinkling: he has also admitted that it was the mode without improbability—another position which he does not claim for sprinkling. Will my learned friend assert that immersion is the probable mode of Methodistic baptism, yea, is the mode without improbability? therefore it follows from Dr. Adam Clark's evidence, that, as to the mode of baptism, Christianity and Methodism are wide as the poles asunder! I have just one other little matter connected with baptism, Dr. Clark, upon which I want a little information. What was the purport or design of this institution or ordinance in the model church? Dr. C.—In reference to the remission or removal of sins, baptism pointing out the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit; and it is in reference to that purification that it is administered, and should, in consideration, never be separated from it. Receive the baptism in reference to the removal of sins, and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost, by whose agency alone the efficacy of the blood of the covenant is applied. It is by being baptized that men took upon themselves the profession of Christianity; and it was in consequence of this that the disciples of Christ were called Christians. (Com. Acts ii. 38.) Op. C.—But do you mean to assert with all the authority of your great learning, that baptism has anything to do with salvation? Dr. C.—Yes, as Noah and his family was saved by water; i. e. it was the instrument of their being saved, through the good providence of God. So the water of baptism, typifying the regenerating influences of the Holy Spirit, is the means of salvation to all those who receive this Holy Spirit in its quickening, cleansing efficacy. (1 Peter iii. 21.) Op. C.—What does my learned friend say to this? He has placed Dr. Clark in the box, and what does he prove? Why, that the baptism of the model church was administered for the remission of sins, and that it is a means of salvation; which is perfectly correct, when administered to those who are called by, and believers in, the gospel. But if Dr. Clark means to say that Methodistic sprinkling of infants has that effect, then he is teaching baptismal regeneration, which I have heard described from a Methodist pulpit as a hellish doctrine. Either way, my learned friend, with regard to the design of baptism, is on the horns of a dilemma, and will have some difficulty in reconciling the teaching and practice of the Wesleyan church with that of the model church of Jerusalem. I have now done with Dr. Clark on baptism (the Doctor looks very pleased) and shall proceed with the other subjects already alluded to.

The court rises for refreshment.

JOAN AP GWINEDD.

CONFESSIONS OF A FOOLISH MAN.—No. VII.

"I BELIEVE it is about twelve months since your last minister left you," said Mr. Evans in an enquiring tone. This he said, because he thought it might lead to something about which he, and Mrs. J. and her daughters could talk.

The communication from Mrs. J. was short and to the point: it was, "Yes, Sir."

"Do you know, Ma'am, whether he is comfortably settled?"

"I believe he is; but there's no saying how long he may be happy there. I am told that they are rather a low, uneducated people; and he is a superior man: we all respected him here very much."

Now Mr. Evans had been informed, on good authority, that Mrs. J. was one of this very minister's tormentors. For her there was generally something wrong in his sermons: sometimes they were too plain for educated people, and sometimes too abstruse for the uneducated; too frequently or too seldom adverbs or adjectives appeared: altogether, as the cause did not prosper at Maryport, Mrs. J. thought he was not the minister for Maryport. But of course Mr. Evans knew his manners better than to whisper any doubt of Mrs. J.'s sincerity. Of course he did. And so he said, "I'm glad to know that he gained the esteem of the other ministers of the town while with you."

"Well," said Mrs. J. "perhaps he did. We thought, however, sometimes there was a coolness between him and them. Very estimable men the other ministers are, very."

"Did you hear," interposed the eldest daughter, "that Mr. Haywood, the minister of High-street chapel, is in trouble?"

"I heard something about it," replied the materfamilias. "You mean about what happened when he was at the party, I suppose."

"Yes," was the response. "People say that he certainly did enjoy himself that evening."

"Well, my dear, we are all frail. And ministers are but men, are they, Mr. Evans?"

What could our friend say in answer? He could not say they were angels. So he said, "Certainly, Ma'am."

Two minutes silence: a looking out of the window: an uneasy turn or two on the chair: then another attempt at talk. Subject now, Mr. Spurgeon.—About him and his doings most people can find something to say.

"Mr. Spurgeon," said Mr. Evans, "is making a great stir in the country now."

"Yes, indeed," replied Mrs. J. "but I confess I'm not favorable to so much excitement in religion."

"But do you not think, Ma'am, that he is doing good?"

"O, no doubt a great many are being added to the church, but that is a poor criterion of success. I think ministers and deacons ought to be very particular who they let into the church."

Here was a drag to the conversation again. If Mr. Evans had proceeded with this subject, he must have expressed a decided disagreement. At first he felt disposed to ask a few questions. Such as these:—Was ever any one converted without excitement?—What good is done by dull and drowsy preaching?—Did the ministers and deacons of the first Jerusalem church act as though they ought to be so very particular who believed and joined the church? But he knew how difficult and unpleasant it sometimes is to argue with a woman: so again he felt himself beaten, and again for a certain space was silent.

At that time there was in Maryport a preacher that Mr. Evans fancied must be just the sort to please Mrs. J.: very respectable—very orthodox—very quiet—one who never could be ungrammatical—one who was quite the ladies' favorite; he was so gentlemanly everywhere. Such was Mr. Wedmore.

"Mr. Wedmore, I am informed, has a large and intelligent congregation," said Mr. Evans.

"Large," said Mrs. J. "but whether intelligent or not I cannot tell. Mr. Wedmore is an excellent preacher, I dare say, but I have understood there very little depth in his sermons. I'm aid, too, that his wife stands in the y of his success."

"Indeed, Ma'am; how is that?"

"Well, she is scarcely qualified for circle in which Mr. Wedmore moves. is very kind, I hear, to the poor ple, and makes herself useful in vi-ing the sick. And really, perhaps ple ought to excuse her; for, poor ng, she has'nt had the advantages of ety in her early days that some of have had."

"Poor thing!" Friend Evans could nd no more. He gave it in as a thogh failure, when he saw how Mrs.
rew herself up, as she said that or thing." In downright despair ook up a book. "Manners or no pers," said he to himself, "I cannot with a woman like this."

lay not my reader judge, that when had finished his term on probation, as decided that he was NOT the for Maryport? And may not my er guess that the influential Mrs. J. dissatisfied with that evening's in-ew: that she thought him unfit to in such respectable society as was, and that the said Mrs. J. had in the conclusion of the matter, he would NOT do?

Now you, Mr. Editor, will say there's much in this No. 7 of my Confess-
a. But do you suppose that when I the parlour conversations word for ad-verbatim, the Latin is, I think—you suppose there can be much in am? Can you get more out of a man he has in him? Pray tell me—
I fancy Editors must be wondrous e—how you can get more out of a version than there is in it. Take ay all the froth, and all the scandal, all the namby-pamby from the even-g party talkings, and how much of e real and genuine, think you, would remain? If, however, friend Editor, our experience and observation do not ally with mine, I should say you must ave had a better bringing-up than I ave had—"moved in a higher circle," s the phrase is. I shall then say to yself—birds of a feather flock together; and as I am a foolish man, I must have had a great deal of companonship with foolish people.

HAVE WE THE BIBLE?

DID the Jewish Church receive as canonical, those books which Protestants exclude from the Old Testament canon, but which are to be found in the Roman Catholic Bible? If it did, where is the proof? If it did not, how can any Roman Catholic account for the fact, that a church, which Roman Catholic controversialists pronounce to have been infallible, was influenced by the Spirit of God, to reject from the canon of Scripture a portion of His inspired Word?

The Romanists consider the Jewish Church to have been infallible: see Keenan's Controversal Catechism, 2nd edition, 1849, page 71, where he says—

"Q. Was the Jewish as well as the Christian church infallible?—A. As long as it was the decree of heaven that the Jewish church should exist, she was, by the teaching of her pastors, infallible as a guide to the people," &c.

That the Jews did reject those books which Protestants reject, see for proofs —Josephus against Apion, book i. s. 8;
Liguori on Council of Trent p. 385;
Preface to 1st Book of Maccabees, R. C.
Bible; Bellarmine de Verbo Dei, Lib.
I.; Venice, 1721, vol. 1, p 11, 13-15.

If those books were inspired, how will any Roman Catholic account for the fact, that we have no record of our Saviour ever having accused the Jews of their having "taken from" the inspired Word of God?

If those books were inspired, how account for the fact, that there is no record of our Saviour or of his Apostles ever having referred to any of them?
If they were inspired, how account for the fact, that they were not received into the canon by the primitive church?

They are excluded from the list of Melito, Bishop of Sardis, which is the first catalogue of the Old Testament books that we have after the apostles' times, and which is preserved in Eusebius' Eccles. His. lib. v. c. 24. They are not to be found in the catalogues given by Origen, Hilary, Athanasius, Gregory Nazianzen, Jerome, Epipha-nius, Council of Laodicea, &c.

We ask, then, the Roman Catholic, by what authority did the Romish church, in 1546, add to the canon of Scripture those books which the Jewish church and the early Christian church rejected?

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM.

Since my communication in last Harbinger interesting circumstances have transpired, which, however, I cannot command time to write. I will therefore only add, that this month four have been immersed.

D. K.

DUNDEE.

On the 19th of September last, we gave you a few items concerning the progress of the good cause, through the labours of our much esteemed Bro. Milner, in this locality, and have now the pleasure of reporting further, that since that period 14 persons have been immersed and two restored. Bro. M. has been incessant in his labours amongst us, both on Lord's-days and during the week, and thus the good seed sown is beginning to yield fruit—may it do so yet more abundantly. His addresses have aroused the public, and put us in a more prominent position before them, by his imposing style of argumentation on the all important truths of the Gospel. Not a few of such addresses were very superior, and of which might be named "The Good Confession," "Eternal Life," and "The Work of the Holy Spirit," &c. of which we cannot now enter into further detail. Suffice it to say, they were full of scriptural arguments, and replete with instruction, well calculated to rivet the attention of any assembly.

In the beginning of last week he delivered a lecture on the "Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church," commonly designated "Irvingism," some of that body having previously desired, and had conversation with him on their doctrines; but having utterly failed to sustain their apostolic claims, a further opportunity was given for some abler men to come forward to the defence, after the delivery of the lecture. Bro. M. at the outset enumerated twenty-five charges against the system regarding their faith and practice, in which he shewed in a most able manner, that it was anything but Holy Catholic and Apostolic. In reality, just an amalgamation of Judaism, Heathenism, and Christianity, all jumbled together—part and parcel of the great apostasy foretold by an apostle—quite allied to Papal Rome in every item, and to whose bosom they were fast hastening. Such a thorough exposure of the doctrines of that community we never had the privilege of hearing before, and we trust the people have got a warning, not to be led away by the intrigues of such a wicked delusion. As the lecture will be published in the form of a tract very soon, at a small cost, it is unnecessary to enlarge at present. At the conclusion of the lecture, an opportunity was again given to question Bro. M., when one or two took advantage, but their questions were either so confused or irrelevant to the address, that they tended to no edification, but rather confusion. We were truly sorry to see individuals who had apostatised from the faith, attempting to vindicate the claims of that body, and who now desire or attempt to overthrow the faith once for all delivered to the saints, which they have advocated in the same hall not long ago. Ah, me! how fond of forbidden fruit—how tasteless the tree of life—how fond of seeming wisdom! O tempora! O mores! But there is no stability in man; at his best estate he is but vanity. Bro. Rotherham acted as chairman, and he had just enough to do to preserve order in the assembly, by the very rude and unbecoming language of one who, it was said, acted as an evangelist amongst them. His vulgarity compelled Bro. R. to close the meeting with all dispatch, after Bro. M. had replied to his impudent and confused remarks. It appeared to us that such a person required to be civilized and instructed; but if such be a sample of their teachers, what must be the standing and intelligence of the body with which they are connected!

Previous to Bro. Milner's departure, it was agreed to hold a social meeting in the hall on Thursday evening last, it being the half-yearly fast day, when all the brethren could have an opportunity of meeting early, and a good turn out might be expected. We met at 6 p.m.; many interesting addresses were delivered by Bro. Milner and others, also by Elders Mill and Easson, who meet in Lamb's hall, all of which were well calculated to edify the meeting. About 140 were present, and such a large and happy company of friends we have not had for a long period. Truly it was a feast of reason and a flow of soul. The proceedings terminated at 10-30 p.m.

On Friday evening Bro. M. visited Ferry Port on Craig, and delivered a proclamation of the ancient gospel to a good audience. A few worthy friends reside there, and we hope their best efforts will be used, that the village may be visited soon again.

On Saturday Bro. M. and his amiable partner in life took their departure at 2.30 p.m. for Kirkaldy, in order to pass over the First day with the brethren, and thence leave for home on Monday forenoon. A few brethren accompanied them to the station here, and bade them adieu for a season.

We will long reflect with delight on his visit, and the many happy interviews we had together, publicly and privately, and of his invaluable labors in the cause of truth. Such interviews with friends often remind us of that august assembly which will be associated together at the resurrection of the just,

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths never end."

October 19, 1859. J. G. AINSLIE.

LEIGH.

On Lord's day, October 2nd, 1859, Bro. McDougall paid us a visit. In the afternoon he gave us a brief account of his recent visit to Ireland, relating several interesting cases of conversion. In the evening he answered from the Word of God that important question, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" He spoke with great energy and power, and at the conclusion two females made the good confession, that Jesus is the Christ. They have since been immersed into Christ. May they be faithful unto the end. W. TURNER.

MARYPORT.

As a church of Jesus Christ we rejoice to inform you, that we have added four to our number by baptism into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, according to the commandment of our gracious Sovereign, Jesus the Christ.

October 17th, 1859. JOHN FERGUSON.

PATHHEAD.

At Pathhead, near Kirkaldy, on Lord's day, September 18, two persons confessed Jesus, were baptized, and added to the church the same day.

WIGAN.

It gives us great pleasure to be able to inform the brethren, that during the past month four persons have been united to Christ by baptism, and added to the church. Our hearts have also been gladdened by the restoration of two brethren who had wandered from the Lord. We have also received one into our fellowship that was formerly connected with a Baptist church in Wales. J. S. WALKER.

THE "PROTESTANT" CHURCH.

The Church of England professes to protest against all the errors of Popery, but she does not protest against—1st, The reigning Sovereign being its acknowledged head.—2nd, The Parliament making laws for its government.—3rd, Baptismal regeneration of infants.—4th, Coercive church-rates, and in default the seizure of the poor man's goods, or incarceration in prison.—5th, The law-made priest, whose exclusive privilege it is to administer ordinances.—6th, The committing to the grave drunkards and infidels "in sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection." W. L.

IMPENDING SECESSION FROM THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A recent number of the Morning Advertiser contains the following:—"We are enabled to make an announcement which will create a deep and general sensation in the religious world. It is that of an impending large secession of clergymen from the Church of England. Most of our readers will, however, be gratified to learn that the forthcoming secession will be of a very different kind from that which we have so often had to record during the last few years, namely, a secession from the Church of England to the Church of Rome. The direction which those clergymen will take who are about to leave the establishment will be quite different. It will be towards the formation of a new Church of England, to be called the Free Church of England. From sixty to seventy clergymen of the establishment, all of them distinguished for their evangelical views, and a number of them popular preachers, met some days ago in London from all parts of the country, for the purpose of concerting such measures as may give the greatest effect to the intended secession. They all leave the establishment on purely conscientious grounds—some of them because of their objections to the principle of a religious establishment; others because of the prevalence of Popery under the guise of Puseyism in the church, with the connivance of the bishops; and the rest because of both reasons combined. The movement is to take a practical shape by some of the promoters holding a meeting at the Manor House, Hackney, at which the Lord Mayor is to preside, with a view to the immediate erection of a Free Church of England in that district, for a young and devoted evangelical clergyman who has just quitted the establishment on conscientious grounds."

MELBOURNE.

A letter from Bro R. Service, dated Melbourne, Victoria, August 17, 1859, informs us that the church is in peace, and that two immersions took place on the 15th of July, and two on the 7th of August. It also furnishes us with some particulars connected with the wreck of the Adelaide steamer, the Admella, on her passage to Melbourne, on the 6th of August. Edwin Chambers, a member of the church at Adelaide or Hindmarsh, was lost on this occasion. Mr. James Magarey, brother of our beloved brother, Thomas Magarey, was also among the lost.

OBITUARY.

JANE WALKER.

The Holder of the keys of death and hades, the living Head of the church, has been pleased to remove our aged and esteemed sister, Jane Walker, from our fellowship on earth, to the higher enjoyment of His own immediate presence above.

Wigan, October 19. J. S. WALKER.

WISHES FOR A BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM.

TO MR. AND MRS. T.

(Read to the Breakfast Party, in the writer's absence.)

MAY pure love be thine,
And the light of truth illumethy pathway.
May the angel of hope hover o'er thee,
And may the strength of faith be thine.
This is thy wedding day!

A day long to be remembered—
A day of hope and rejoicing—
A day when friends smile, and hearts beat with emotion—

A day when hearts and souls are united.
From this day till death your destiny is one.
To-day you enter the life-boat!
May it sail on the Ocean Pacific—
May the winds and the waves assist thee:
May the sunshine and the shadows flee away!

While thou art sailing, friends watch at the helm,

Nor lose sight of the star of the morning.
Sometimes the waves may discomfort,
And unseen dangers beset thee,
And the winds in their courses be adverse;
But be of good courage, friends,
For the King of kings is your Father.
In the past of thy life God has blessed thee,
In the future He will not forsake thee.
Yes, yes! the bark sails to-day,
Amidst sunshine and tokens of gladness!
We pray for a prosperous journey.
God's fatherly eye is upon it,
And Christ will not sleep in the storm.
Benedictions of friendship will follow thee,
And for you to the ears of your Father
Will ascend the prayers of the faithful.
Make Jesus thy friend, no ill will betide thee.
When danger is near He will say "It is I."
When affliction shall come with its sorrow,
He will bless thee with hope and with comfort.

And health will return,
And peace will be your's,
And praises shall rise,
And prayers shall ascend,
And joys shall be yours,
Which are holy, and pure, and immortal.
May the light of the truth dwell in thee,
For without it the soul will be darkness.
We would have thee remain in our country,
The land of thy birth and affection.
We have spent pleasant hours in thy presence—

Are they gone? It may be for ever.
But if for other climes thou must depart,
May Heaven's best blessing rest upon thee.
May the old ocean heave gently,
And the stars shine upon thee,
And the calm zephyr whisper peace,
So that shortly the land of thy future,
May be reached in health and safety.
And there may thy home be blessed,
A home of love,
Of happiness without alloy,
Where peace and temperance can hold a jubilee,
And pure religion send up to Heaven its praise.

Frown, frown upon the drunkard's drink,
And strive to drive it from the haunts of men.
Love truth.

May no viper come near thee,
Nor thy peace be disturbed
By a foul and slanderous tongue.
When troubles come, you must bear them;
They only precede a happier state,
Which, by contrast, is made the sweeter.
May thy sympathies mingle in affection
The purest, ennobling, and holy—
Be one in heart, mind, soul, and spirit,
Nor turn from the path of duty.

Go, wedded, happy friends,
To the island famed for its beauty,
Where, in their dying gorgeousness, thou shalt see

The glorious tints autumnal.
In death they are beautiful;
And though in the spring of life,
With the angel of hope in thy presence,
It may be well for thee oft to remember,
That the fading flowers and the leaves which fall

Remind us that life is frail and uncertain.
Be of good courage, friends; God will help thee,

And yet shalt thou send to the land of thy birth,

The tidings of hope and of gladness:
When with pride the heart of the father shall swell,

And the love of the mother shall comfort and bless,

And encompass the choicest of treasures.

And when all the toils are o'er,
When declining age shall come,
When the sun of thy life shall be near the horizon,

And those who look out of the windows be darkened,

When all the sounds of music are low,
When the grinders through fewness shall cease,

When the mourners are ready to weep,
When the world is passing away—
Then may you hope in the Lord,
And the joy of salvation be your's.

Your affectionate friend,

London, Oct. 11, 1859. JAMES INWARDS.

DECEMBER, 1859.

RELIGIOUS GROWTH.

"First the blade, then the ear : after that, the full corn" (Matt. iv. 28.)

THE gospel is given to the mind as seed is given to the earth. It is planted in the inner man ; and has its period of germination, growth, and ripening into precious fruit. Christianity has a gradual development in every mind that receives it in sincerity. There is an inward history whose facts are born in the soul, far removed from all observation save the self-penetrating eye of the Infinite Spirit. There, in the depths of the heart, they struggle for a vital expression, for an adequate form in act and word. But this struggle is often tedious, being painfully protracted through unpropitious seasons of ignorance, gloom and tears.

In the mind of the young convert there are but a few simple ideas. The thought of God is but kindled in the spiritual temple. Its rays of light are scanty and feeble, yet it is a true light, and it opens up a sight of the heavens beyond the milky way, that nightly zone powdered with stars. The life of Christ gives the idea of moral perfection—an ideal of faultless glory and beauty. But the soul scarcely knows what to do with these shining gems. It loves their beauty, feels their quickening power, and aspires generously to their embrace. But when the eye turns and rests upon the thousand imperfections which mar its own internal beauty, its aspirations and courage fail, and it sings a bitter song of anguish and despair. The most fearful thing that ever a man has done, is to measure himself with the Infinite and Eternal. Before the spotless purity of Christ, how does our virtue become a soiled and decaying wreck, painful to behold ! And yet the idea of perfection, which Christianity awakes, and which ever haunts us like the snatches of some sweet melody not yet learned, forces us to make the fearful comparison, and lay down and weep. The soul would mount up to the Sapphire Throne, and robe itself with the beams of heavenly light, and sing of beauty and joy for ever. But internal guilt, pressing upon the soul, like a mountain, draws it back to the melancholy vale of sin and death. With one upward glance we obtain a vision of the temple of light, where roses bloom without thorns — where age has no power over the eye of youth — where the harp never gives out a note of sadness—and where the crystal waters flow for ever. But, just as the celestial vision begins to fill the soul, and to fill it with wild delight, conscience brings up the memory of wrongs, and in a moment, the heart bleeds amidst moral evil, and shudders among the white tombs of men ! O, who can tell the infinity of woe that gathers about the heart, when heavenly sights of glory must be exchanged for the terrible images of guilt which linger in the spirit, when it tries itself by the holiness of God ! With the young Christian this suffering is often excruciatingly intense. His mind has not grown up to that blessed insight into the plan of salvation, where the soul, notwithstanding its guilt, reposes sublimely on the tragic scene of Calvary, and sings triumphantly of the white robes and the fadeless crown of life. There is such a point of elevation—reader, it is not fictitious—where the eye of the spirit no longer dwells on human faults and errors, but joyfully rests on Christ and the pearly gates of the eternal city — and the internal ear catches the voice of harpers, harping on their harps. We have seen it illustrated in plain people, whose simple hearts knew no artifice or guile. We have seen the soul calm and joyful as it wandered over the changes of the long pilgrimage, musing a moment over the humble graves, here, and there, and yonder, of loved ones whom death had called away ; and then, looking forward to the few remaining years of life, with a deep, abiding, triumphant trust, which casts out fear, melted into rapture at the near prospect of mingling with the saints in the Father's glorious presence. We have seen it, too, in the persons of the young and tender lambs of Christ's fold, who, in the spring-time of life, were called to wade through the deep waters. There was an eternal banishing of all fear arising from the sense of personal imperfection ; and a trust in God that made the spirit calm and serene as the highest heavens where clouds and storms never gather. One sweet and gentle spirit who thus passed away, lives in our memory ; and though no tomb-stone marks the grave, it is more precious to the dear Saviour than the pyramids of Egypt.

It ought to be the sublime purpose of every Christian to rise up into this grand sphere of faith. To do this he must conquer the senses, and surrender himself entirely to the Word of God. He must pass through many internal conflicts—the spirit struggling against the flesh—and the flesh against the spirit. Many times from his heart of hearts he will utter these words of mighty suffering : "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death !" Ten thousand defeats are his, while he journeys on ; and at last the sad fact will break upon him, that it is impossible to perfect his heart or his way, so as to leave his conscience without any accusation.

The atonement is founded in the necessity of our nature. Man cannot be perfect in this vale of tears. Sin pollutes his glory, and wrings his heart with fearful anticipations. But here Christ meets the despairing, and lifts up the soul above all sin and condemnation. Through the work of Christ, God can be just, while he treats the believer as though he were faultless. This is a fact of Christianity. But faith must make this fact our own. The soul must grow up into this merciful provision ; and by a solemn trust in the person of the Son of God, realize the certainty of final salvation. The senses can do us no good here. The lesson is spiritual, and must be done by the heart, through the divine testimony.

We fear that multitudes of professors are living without this realizing sense of union and blessedness with Christ. Hence their worldliness—their formalism—their mechanical worship—their illiberality in sustaining the divine cause—their all-grasping lust after the perishing riches of the world. This will never do for those who profess to be the disciples of Christ. There is a communion with God—there is a living hope of glory in the soul, an all-satisfying trust in the Lord, which is the simple result of an earnest participation in the life-battle of Christianity, without which a man is poor, and blind, and naked. There is a sober certainty of heaven, reached through mighty conflicts, that is sweeter than the songs of lovers, and more uplifting than all the glory of earthly conquerors.

We would exhort the reader to press on to this happy state. Much self-communing and scrutiny are essential here. The working of the elements of Christianity must be watched in the soul. The great ideas of the gospel must be sincerely developed in the mind. To this end there must be a daily and systematic study of the Scriptures, and constant secret prayer. Without these aids nothing can be done. With them the growth of faith will be steady and healthy. The soul will, by faith, conquer the senses ; the heart will be in heaven, and the internal joy of the heart will be glorious. The worst sign of the times is, that Christians have ceased reading the holy Word of God. They have not time. The result is death—cold formal congregations, whose thirst for riches has destroyed their piety. Alas ! when we look abroad we see a fearful want of simple trust in Christ, and the night is at hand when no one can work. A work is now demanded by the interests of Christianity which but few teachers are prepared to do. It is not to keep up party spirit. It is not to wring changes on a few doctrinal points. But it is to carry the truth home to the heart—to mould the spirit of the church after the form of Christ's beautiful life. It is to feed the flock of God on the bread of heaven.

(To be continued.)

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.—No. II.

BEFORE we dismiss the subject, we must notice the four classes of evidences of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, which we find in the Scriptures. 1, The fulfilment of prophecy. 2, The testimony of the witnesses of the resurrection. 3, The sufferings and martyrdom of the Apostles. 4, The testimony of commemorative institutions : all presenting a ray of evidence in support of the resurrection, which makes it as impregnable to the attacks of Infidelity, as the rock of Gibraltar is impregnable to the attacks of a secular enemy. Sustained by these, Christianity has stood for ages—a grand, ever-burning beacon light to the nations of the earth, and will thus stand to the end of time and the dissolution of all things, guiding the destinies of the world, and pointing to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fades not away, reserved in heaven for the faithful unto death.

1. The evidence of prophecy. We are told, in the language of inspiration, that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy;" and indeed, when we examine the prophecies in reference to him, especially those respecting his death and resurrection, we are struck with the exactness and literal character with which they were fulfilled, frequently amounting to demonstration itself. One of the most remarkable of the predictions of his resurrection is that contained in the 16th Psalm, quoted by the Apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost : "I have set the Lord always before my face : because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth : my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, (hades) nor suffer thy Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life : in thy presence is fulness of joy ; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore." Now, as the apostle justly remarked, David had died, (hundreds of years before) been buried, and his sepulchre was there, at Jerusalem, at that very time ; but his soul was left in hades, and his flesh saw corruption. And as he further observes, in reasoning from this : "Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne ; he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, (hades) neither his flesh did see corruption." Again, in Isaiah, fifty-third chapter, connected with the predictions of the death of Christ for the sins of the world : "When thou shalt make his soul (life) an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands." "Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong ; because he hath poured out his soul unto death." Nothing can be more plainly implied here than the existence of Jesus after death, by a resurrection from the dead. But one of the most plain and pointed predictions is that in Hosea, (vi. 1-2) of his resurrection on the third day after his death. Paul says, in Corinthians, (1 Cor. xv. 4) that he "rose again the third day according to the Scriptures;" and Hosea: "Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. After two days he will receive us; and on the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight."

That these predictions were made in reference to the resurrection of Christ, is evident from the fact that they will apply to nothing else. And when it is considered that they were made at the long distance of seven hundred years and upwards antecedent to his resurrection, the conviction is forced upon the mind that these prophets were inspired by the Spirit of God, in making them; for it was impossible for men, by any power of mind or process of reasoning, by any insight into the future, or in any way whatever, to thus foretell events that should happen centuries after them; and that, too, so circumstantially and particularly, as we find to be the case. This makes the testimony of Jesus to be indeed the spirit of prophecy.

2. The testimony of the witnesses of the resurrection of Christ. During the ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ on earth, he chose certain men to be his witnesses—of his miracles, resurrection, &c.—and to establish his kingdom on earth. Hence, as we have shown, he showed himself alive after his resurrection, not to all the people, but to certain witnesses chosen by him before. And hence we hear Peter saying, on the day of Pentecost, the eleven standing up with him: "This Jesus has God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses." At the house of Cornelius, before referred to: "Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." And Paul, in 1 Cor. xv. after speaking of his resurrection from the dead on the third day, says: "And that he was seen of Cephas; then of the twelve: after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once. After that he was seen of James: then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me," &c. Here we have upwards of five hundred witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, including his apostles, who confirmed their testimony to it by miracles, which God would not have wrought by them in proof of a falsity, had Jesus never risen from the dead. And this testimony, too, was borne by men who had no earthly interest to subserve by it, and who did it frequently and whenever necessary for them to do so, at the peril of their lives. As far, then, as witnesses are concerned, the resurrection of Jesus rests upon the best of testimony, and it has come down to us through the medium of historical records as well authenticated as can be, and better than the most of secular history that has come down to our times.

3. The testimony of the sufferings and martyrdom of the Apostles. This embraces another class of the evidences of the resurrection of Christ, and one, too, of the most important character, for men would never have undergone the sufferings underwent by the Apostles, if they had not been convinced by the most indubitable and unquestionable evidence of his resurrection—that of their own senses. Paul refers to this class of evidence in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, and fifteenth chapter, when treating of the subject: "And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? (if Christ has not risen.) I protest by your rejoicing, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. If, after the manner of men, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus (suffered myself to be thrown into the amphitheatre there, and had to fight with lions, tigers, &c.)

what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" Again, in the second Epistle: "We are troubled on every side—perplexed—persecuted—cast down—always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus. We which live are alway delivered unto death—so, then, death worketh in us, but life in you." And again: "But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings—by long-suffering, by dishonour, by evil report—as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, and yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." Such were the sufferings of all the Apostles. And Paul, speaking of his own individual sufferings, says: "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." And in addition to all these sufferings, according to the best history we can get, all the apostles, with but one exception, terminated their careers, by suffering a death of martyrdom, on account of their propagation and defence of the Christian religion! That exception was the Apostle John, who was martyred figuratively, by being thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil, and coming out unhurt, his life being miraculously preserved by the Lord, for a wise purpose, perhaps that of writing the Apocalypse, or book of revelation—the last, great, final prophecy of the Christian church, detailing its fortunes from the ten Asiatic persecutions, down to the end of time. Now, no set of men would have foregone all temporal ease, prosperity, and happiness, and suffered what we see that the apostles suffered, and finally closed their lives by being martyred for their religion, if they had not been fully persuaded and convinced by the testimony of their own senses, of the resurrection of Christ; and been assured of their own future resurrection, based upon that, to eternal life and glory. Particularly was this the case with Paul, a detail of whose sufferings we have given from his own pen, who stood in every way pre-eminent among the Jews, gloried in the Mosaic religion, and profited in it "above many of his fellows;" but who forsook all, and "counted it as refuse" for the cause of Christ. The sufferings and deaths of such men furnish proof of the strongest character of the great fact of his resurrection, and the assurance from it of the resurrection of all mankind.

4. Our fourth and last class of evidences is that of commemorative institutions. This is a peculiar class of testimony, and though of a circumstantial character, is among the very strongest that can be adduced in favour of a fact or event, and the most unassailable by infidelity that can be brought forward: as such institutions point directly back to the events themselves, and are connected with them by a chain of links embracing the intervening commemorations from the event itself down to the present time. We will take the 4th day of July as an illustration, the day of the signing of the Declaration of American Independence, and go back with its observance from year to year, until we come to the very day itself, in 1776, when that instrument was signed. Thus we can point to its observance as an incontrovertible evidence of the reality of the event. Now, we have two commemorative institutions of the resurrection of Christ—baptism and the Lord's-day. Paul refers to the first, in 1 Cor. xv. in discussing the evidences of the resurrection of Christ: "Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not again?" That is, why are persons, in being baptized, buried in the water and raised up out of it again, representing the burial and resurrection of Christ, if the dead rise not, or there was no resurrection of Christ? Why is such a commemorative institution observed, if the event never took place? Thus we can take this institution, and go back from baptism to baptism, until we come to the resurrection of Christ itself, when he merged out of the tomb victorious over the grave, and gave the assurance by it of the resurrection of all the human race. Dr. Adam Clarke's note on this passage is worthy of our notice here, as it not only explains it in accordance with the true interpretation of it, but it contains an important testimony in favour of immersion as the only Christian baptism. After giving some half dozen various interpretations from different critics and commentators, he sums up all thus: "Those who expose themselves to all manner of privations, violent sufferings, and severe losses, can have no compensation in this life, if there be no resurrection of the dead. But as they receive baptism as an emblem of death, in voluntarily going under the water, so they receive it as an emblem of the resurrection unto eternal life in coming up out of the water. Thus they are baptized for the dead in perfect faith of the resurrection." Thus the great Methodist commentator bears his testimony to immersion as the only action of Christian baptism; for if baptism is commemorative of the resurrection of Christ—is intended to represent his burial and resurrection by its action—then nothing but immersion will do, because nothing but that will represent these.

The other commemorative institution of the resurrection of Christ, is the Lord's-day. This is generally very erroneously called the "Sabbath," or the "Christian Sabbath," and even so termed by many of our own brethren, who do not consider the impropriety and erroneousness of the name. It is not the Jewish Sabbath that we observe, for that was the seventh day of the week, our Saturday, and was observed as a day of rest, in commemoration of God's resting on that day from the works of creation. It is the Lord's day that we observe, the first day of the week, and not the seventh, and in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ, and not of the rest of God from the works of creation. And thus we can go back from Lord's-day to Lord's-day, until we are carried to the very day that gave origin to it, on which Jesus arose from the dead, sanctified or separated it by his resurrection, vanquished death, and brought life and incorruptibility to light by the gospel.

Here, then, we have two commemorative institutions of the resurrection of Christ, pointing back to it through the vista of time, through which the believer can look with the eye of faith, and behold Jesus arise from the dead and enter into eternal life and glory—as the American can look back at the 4th day of July, 1776, and see the signers of the Declaration of Independence affixing their names to the great instrument, the Magna Charta of American independence and freedom; or to the day on which the May Flower landed the Puritan fathers of New England upon the rock of Plymouth, in Massachusetts. We have here two of the very strongest evidences, in these two commemorative institutions, of the resurrection of Christ, that do not admit of a doubt in reference to its reality, or leave any room for infidelity to assail or overthrow it!

We have now presented four classes of the evidences of the resurrection of Christ, which prove its truth, and which combine together in support of that grand and all-important event, and like the four angles of a building, complete the firmly founded, impregnable, and ever-enduring basis upon which rests the towering superstructure of Christianity, which,

"Like some tall cliff that rears its awful form, Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling billows spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

J. R. H.

SYNOPTICAL EXPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE—No. V.

Romans iii. 21-31.

THE subject of our present lesson is one of unparalleled interest and importance. The apostle having clearly and triumphantly demonstrated the truth of his position, that no man, whether Jew or Gentile, can be justified by law, proceeds now to an exposition of the gospel method of justification. In the course of his argument, he shows—

1. That it is of Divine origin. It is, he affirms, a justification of God. And, for the truth of this, he appeals to both the law and the prophets. This is sufficient. It is sufficient not only that it is of God, but that it is, also, divinely adapted to the wants of fallen humanity. If it were a matter of human invention, it might be very deficient, or even wanting in many of its essential elements. But no higher evidence can be given in proof of the perfection of any system, than the simple fact that it has God for its author. He that formed the eye can see—he that formed the ear can hear—and he that created the spirit of man, has both the wisdom and the power that are necessary to supply its wants. No wonder, then, that Paul was not ashamed to preach the gospel even in the proud metropolis of the civilized world.

2. The apostle affirms that it is not only of God, but that it is altogether of the grace of God. "For all have sinned," says he, "and come short of the glory of God: being justified freely by his grace." Like the temple of Zerubabel, then, the Christian temple began in grace; and it will be finished with shoutings of "Grace, grace, unto it" (Zech. iv. 7.)

"Grace all the work shall crown
Through everlasting days:
It lays in heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves our praise."

3. But it is not of "grace absolute" that the apostle here speaks. Such a phrase is not known in the Divine vocabulary. The grace of the gospel, be it observed, is always dispensed according to the strictest principles of law and equity. This is evident,

First, from what God has done to procure pardon for guilty man. On the hypothesis, that God may, and that he does govern the universe on merely arbitrary principles; that there is nothing in his own nature, nor in the relations which he sustains to his creatures, that prevents his benevolence from flowing freely, fully, and unconditionally to the vilest of the vile; then, I ask, why were rebel angels ever cast out of heaven? Why was man ever driven from Paradise? What mean those bloody sacrifices, which, for the space of four thousand years, continued to smoke upon Patriarchal and Jewish altars? Why did Jesus Christ ever lay aside the glory that he had with the Father before the world was? Why did the Word become flesh and dwell among us? Why did he suffer the pains of Gethsemane? Why did he endure the agonies of Calvary? What mean such phrases as "redemption through Christ?" What does Paul mean when he says, that "God has set forth Jesus Christ as a propitiation through faith in his blood, for a demonstration of his own justice in passing by the sins which were before committed through the forbearance of God: for a demonstration also of his justice in the present time, in order that he may be just, when justifying him who is of the faith of Jesus?" Is it not as plain as language can make it, that the justice of the Divine administration in passing by the sins of humble penitent believers under both the law and gospel, is made to depend on the propitiatory sacrifice of Jesus Christ; that without this, it would not have been just in God to pass by any sin committed under the Patriarchal, the Jewish or the Christian age; and, consequently, that the grace of God to fallen and guilty man, is necessarily confined to the channel of our Saviour's blood? While the twenty-fifth and the twenty-sixth verses of the third chapter of Romans continue to be a part of the sacred canon, so long will all the combined sophistry of earth and hell be insufficient to prove either that the grace of God is absolute, or that Christ died as a mere martyr.

The same important truth is also very clearly and impressively illustrated by the terms on which the justification or grace of God is offered to sinners. It is true that salvation has been provided for all; that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth into him might not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16.) It is true that "Jesus Christ has, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man" (Heb. ii. 9); that "he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world" (1 John ii. 2.) And hence, Paul says that this justification of God, without works of law, is "for all." But he does not say that it is "upon all;" or that it is enjoyed by all. There is a limitation to this part of his proposition. It is only "upon all them that believeth" that the grace or justification of God is actually bestowed. It is through the blood of Jesus Christ that it has been procured; and it is through the faith of Jesus Christ that it is to be enjoyed.

This proposition, and particularly the second part of it, is more fully and more variously illustrated than any other proposition or oracle within the canon of Divine revelation. The first part of it chiefly concerns God himself. It is not for us to say what are the necessities of the Divine government; and what are the necessary restrictions and limitations of the Divine goodness, condescension and love. These are questions into which men and angels may well desire to look: but which no one is capable of solving but Jehovah himself. It is enough for us to know that the blood of Christ has magnified the law of God, and made it honourable—that it has removed old governmental difficulties out of the way—that the only remaining hindrances are in the sinner himself—and hence, that God has freely offered all the blessings of justification, sanctification, and redemption to the whole world on just such terms as are required by the present wants and necessities of human nature.

To know what these terms and conditions are—to receive them with the whole heart—and to comply with them in letter and in spirit during the entire period of life, is the proper and paramount duty of every man. And hence, God has most benevolently announced, explained, and illustrated these with a degree of fulness and simplicity that is altogether extraordinary. On this subject we have line upon line, and precept upon precept. Indeed, to show how this salvation may be enjoyed—on what terms and conditions fallen men may enter the kingdom of Christ on earth—may continue to enjoy its privileges till death—and be finally admitted into the everlasting kingdom, is the great theme of Revelation from the death of Christ to the final amen of the Apocalypse. Take away this one thought—let it be assumed that the grace of God procured by the blood of Christ is to be enjoyed freely, fully, and unconditionally by all men, and the commission itself becomes a blank! The address of Peter on the day of Pentecost becomes a mere array of words without meaning; and all the instructions and exhortations of the apostles to the primitive churches become a libel on the scheme of God's philanthropy! Then, indeed, it matters not whether we believe or disbelieve! Whether we live soberly, and righteously, and godly, or not! Whether giving all diligence we add to our "faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, love:" or whether we cultivate and cherish the opposite vices.

For if the grace of God is absolute—if it is to be enjoyed unconditionally—if there are no restrictions upon the exercise of God's philanthropy—then, certainly, the case of Judas is just as favorable as that of Paul; and the most abandoned sinners on earth can exclaim, with just as much propriety as the spirits of the just made perfect, "All things are ours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are ours, we are Christ's, and Christ is God's!"

It this is the scope of Divine Revelation, then, indeed, we may live as we list. But if it is not, then our proposition is still true; then the grace of God procured through the blood of Christ, for the justification of all men, is bestowed only upon those "who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality." And then, it is still true, as our Saviour said to his apostles, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

How very interesting, then, is this theme of gratuitous justification, sanctification, and redemption! How exceedingly rich in practical consequences! We see from even the partial view that we have taken of this subject:—

1. Why every Christian should be an humble man. It completely and effectually excludes all vain-boasting and self-glorification. The highest and the holiest of Adam's race, whether on earth or in heaven, can only say with Paul in the depths of his humiliation, "By the grace of God, I am what I am."

2. It is also evident that the gospel scheme of justification is in perfect harmony with the Divine law. It has no sympathy with Antinomianism in any of its forms or phrases. It detracts not one jot or one tittle from either law or justice. On the contrary, it establishes law. It gives a fuller, clearer, and more glorious insight into the majesty, purity, and stability of God's government, than was ever before seen by man or angels. Christ upon the cross, and Christ upon the throne, is the most wonderful demonstration of Divine justice that the universe has ever beheld.

3. We also see how it is that a great sinner—a thief, a robber, or a blasphemer—may be saved with an everlasting salvation; while many of a comparatively pure and holy life, who trust and glory in their own good works, will be banished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power. Without a revelation of the scheme of redemption, this would appear to us to be a very great mystery, if not, indeed, an absurdity. But, with the Oracles of God before us, nothing is more simple—nothing is more rational. If there is any truth in Paul's argument, then every man has sinned and come short of the glory of God—then by deeds of law, no flesh can be justified in his sight—then if any are saved, it must be by the grace of God through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus—then, moreover, this can be done only through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and obedience to his will; and consequently, without a hearty compliance with these conditions, the most renowned moralist in Christendom must stand condemned on the day of judgment.

But the grace of God is not limited by either the number or the magnitude of our sins. The invitation to all is, "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow: though they be red as crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isaiah i. 18.)

"Talk they of morals! 'thou bleeding Lamb; The grand morality is love of thee."

It is not works of righteousness which we have done, but faith which works by love, which purifies the heart, which overcomes the world, and which leads to a full and unreserved consecration of body, soul, and spirit to the service of our Redeemer, that secures for us an interest in that redemption that was purchased by his blood. Christ has become the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him; without respect to the morality or to the immorality of their past lives. Hence it is, that the thief who was crucified with Christ, and many others like Paul, the persecutor, and Bunyan, the blasphemer, will sit down at last with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; while many a moralist, who has trusted in the superior sanctity of his own life, will be cast into utter darkness.

Many other conclusions of equal practical importance, are deducible from our premises.

R. M.

LECTURE ON THE HOLY CATHOLIC AND APOSTOLIC CHURCH, COMMONLY CALLED "IRVINGISM,"

DELIVERED IN DUNDEE, OCTOBER, 1859,

BY T. H. MILNER.

THE members of the communion whose principles and pretensions we wish to examine, will not, we should think, complain of us for so doing. We do not suppose that we give them any cause of complaint, in subjecting their system to a scriptural examination, for they are themselves in the habit of bringing it before the attention of the public, both by paid agents and published documents. And besides this, we have the apostolic injunctions to "Try the Spirits" and to "Prove all things."

From the examination we have already given the tenets of this party, we find ourselves obliged to present a number of very serious charges against the system submitted for the acceptance of the people, under the high sounding designation of "The Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church." In making these charges, however, we trust to be enabled to avoid undue severity, and to eschew all personalities. We have to do with principles, not persons — with measures, not men; and while, therefore, we shall not fear to utter whatever the truth requires to be said respecting so pretentious a system as the one under review, we say nothing of the character of any persons connected with it. Noting this, we proceed to make and substantiate the following twenty-five charges against the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church.

I. A False Baptism.—The character of this communion, like that of others, is largely, if not altogether, determined by its initiatory rite. Its character is affected by its membership — its membership is determined by its baptism. It admits to membership by baptism. On this ordinance, therefore, it rests as a communion. Taking, then, the published liturgy or prayer book of the body, as our authority on this and the following topics, we find on the subject of "Holy Baptism," the following:—"Dearly beloved,—Ye have brought this infant into the church of God, and do seek for him deliverance from the power of the devil, the remission of sin, and the gift of the new and spiritual life by the Holy Ghost, through the sacrament of baptism, which Christ hath ordained for bestowing these benefits. These God on his part will most surely bestow, for the sake of his Son, our Lord X Jesus Christ: Wherefore, it is my duty, in the presence of God, and before the congregation, to demand of you, that (in the name of this infant, who cannot answer on his own behalf) you do make that confession of unfeigned faith out of a pure conscience, which Almighty God shall accept and answer by vouchsafing his holy baptism."

This said by the priest to the sponsors, he, after numerous questions and prayers, takes the child and says, "We receive this child (or person) into the congregation of Christ's flock, (here he should sign him with the sign of the cross) and do bless him, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And be thou blessed unto everlasting life."

Here, then, is a baptism, the very reverse of that which the Saviour commanded when he gave his commission, saying, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Faith in the gospel which the Saviour made the first requisite, is altogether omitted, and a babe, to which the required belief is impossible, is professedly baptized, and made the subject of that spiritual change, and of those spiritual blessings, which the Scriptures invariably make contingent upon faith. In Scripture there are no terms given in connection with the salvation of infants, for the best of reasons, that babes cannot obey terms. The Scriptures declare that which is not of faith to be sin—but this church represents a ceremony wholly void of faith, as the means of regeneration, forgiveness, adoption, and life eternal! With this baptism there is preached,

II. A False Gospel.—The apostolic Gospel consists in the promulgation of the facts of the gift by God of the Son of his love, and of his death as a sacrifice for the sins of men. This good news was ordained to be preached to every creature throughout the world, with the promise, that "He who believes and is baptized shall be saved." But this is not the glad tidings preached by the holy Apostolic and Catholic Church. Its so-called evangelists go forth, not to convert the people to the Messiah by the intelligent belief and obedience of his gospel, but to persuade them that they are already Christians—that they were christened, i. e. Christianized, i. e. made Christians in their infantine baptism. Preaching this false gospel, this church is involved in the maintenance of

III. A False Faith.—The apostles of Christ taught their converts that they are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, that as many as had thus sincerely been baptized had put on Christ; but this church makes its voices suppose, that by a baptism which is destitute of the faith of the Lord Jesus, is that "wherein they were made members of Christ, children of God, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven." Some of its missionaries lately stated their mission thus: "We do not tell the people to believe in Christ in order to become children of God, but we tell them to believe that they are already God's children. We tell them they were made his children in their baptism. Thus is faith made void, and the Word of God is rendered of non-effect. Oh no, reply these functionaries. Look," said this same evangelist, "that fowl shows its faith, when in allowing its drink it lifts its head to heaven! And so have infants faith." "We do not object," says Mr. Carlyle, London Barrister, who (brought up in the Church of Scotland) came to Edinburgh a few winters ago and delivered a series of lectures, entitled, "Pleadings with my Mother"—meaning thereby, the Church of Scotland—"We do not," says he, "object to the Baptists for contending for faith in order to baptism, but we complain of them for saying that babes have not faith."

Yet most manifest it is that they have not that faith which comes by hearing—that hearing which is by the Word of God. The truth, is the advocates of this holy Apostolic Catholic Church fail to perceive the difference between faith and instinct. They forget that it is physically necessary for the fowl to lift its head in drinking. They may, if they please, call the instinctiveness with which the babe clings to its mother's arms faith; but certainly it is not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, that which comes by the hearing of the Word of God. Therefore, we charge them with the propagation of a false and ruinous faith, when they tell the people not to believe, in order to become the children of God—but to believe that they were made such in infancy.

IV. False Sacraments.—A sacrament is an oath of allegiance. This ecclesiastical term was originally a military one. With the Latins it denoted the oath of allegiance which the Roman soldiery swore to their Commanders or Emperors. The Romish church adopted the term, and applied it to the ordinances of baptism and the supper, &c. Well, then, an oath can in reality be taken only by the person who swears it; it cannot in truth be taken for him: he is not bound by an oath not really his own. Yet the priest of this church demands, "in the presence of God," and "in the name of the infant who cannot answer on his own behalf," of the "sponsors," that they make confession, &c. But who believes that the babe is thereby bound? Who does not perceive that its conscience takes no cognizance of the misnamed sacrament performed upon it without its will or knowledge?

V. False Religion.—The word religion signifies re-binding. True religion is the binding anew of the wayward heart of man in fidelity to God. But we have no such thing in the system of this church. Instead, we have a ceremonial binding of babes, not to God, but to a mere human usurpation. The Word of God knows nothing of religion by proxy. The gospel admits of no such thing. It does not allow that one man can believe for another, or repent for another, or be converted for another, or obey for another, or be saved for another. It does not admit that one can be religious for another, or be baptized for another. On the contrary, it affirms that "every man shall bear his own burden." But in this "holy sacrament," this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church makes its priests address not the subject of baptism, but its sponsors !

VI. False Union. — We respect the desire for the union of God's people, wherever consistently expressed ; but we do, and must deprecate such a union as this church seeks to establish. It seeks the perpetuation of that unholy alliance of the church with the world, which has corrupted the former and deceived the latter. If the world be baptized into the church as soon as born, pray where is the distinction between the world and the church ? How can the church, in such a case, be a separate and peculiar people ? How can the apostolic injunctions be obeyed : " Come out and be separate, and touch not the unclean ? " No, so long as there is a faithful man, who fears God and trembles at his word, who laments the divisions of sectarianism, and deplores the unhallowed connection which the apostacy has established between the church and the world, he must and will protest against such a union as this holy Apostolic and Catholic Church would perpetuate.

VII. False Peace. — That wisdom which comes from above is first pure, then peaceable. But there ever have been those who say " Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Wherever this communion succeeds in producing peace of mind, it succeeds simply in establishing the sinner in carnal security. By the mere application of water to the face of the unconscious babe, it is sought to induce the notion of safety with respect to sin. If ever there was a delusion, this is one. Make the sinner imagine he was regenerated, saved, and sanctified in infancy, and he cannot suppose it needful for him to obey the command of God by the apostles of his Son, that all men everywhere repent. Satisfied with the false peace this cunningly devised fable gives him, he will never come to say, " Being justified by faith, I have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

VIII. False Fellowship. — The Apostle John wrote the disciples, saying — " Our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." " If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." But it is not possible that a church, whose membership is composed of all and sundry who have been baptized in infancy can have this divine fellowship. However pious some of the members of such a community be, the majority prove themselves anything but saints. To speak of " the blessed communion of all saints," with such a membership, is simply to falsify words.

But remarkably enough, among the " appropriate prayers" of the holy Apostolic and Catholic Church, we find in one service no fewer than six successive occurrences of the words, "Have mercy upon us, miserable sinners." Never once did the apostles of the Lord so designate " the saints and faithful brethren." Their fellowship was truly divine, that of this communion is holy only in name.

IX. A False Church. — A church according to the import of the Scripture word, is an assembly authoritatively called out or summoned. The church of the living God consists of those who have willingly surrendered themselves to the Prince Messiah, at the summons or call of his gospel. But the holy Apostolic and Catholic Church being composed of those introduced in infancy, precludes the possibility of any becoming members by that obedience to the gospel, which, in apostolic days, gave introduction to the assembly of the righteous.

X. A False Worship. — In the prayer book of this church, we find a ritual bearing a character, the slightest likeness to which there is nothing in the New Testament. The Saviour said, " God is spirit, and those who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." But according to this liturgy, he is to be worshipped by the most formal and least spiritual service imaginable. The Saviour expressly forbade among his disciples such vain repetitions as are used by the Heathen : but here repetition is the rule. Several years ago, a Missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, in Bombay, having discovered the unscriptural character of infant affusion, came home to be immersed according to the law of Christ, and talking with him, he gave us an example of the Heathenish repetitions of the natives. He said, that on the approach of cholera, the people would tramp sullenly along, repeating with little variation, the name of their God —“Ram ! Ram ! Ram !” Now will it be credited, that in the ritual of the holy Apostolic Catholic Church, we find in one service alone, between forty and fifty repetitions ! Six times in succession there are the words, “Have mercy on us, miserable sinners :” eight times, “Good Lord deliver us :” twenty-two times, “We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord :” and seven times more, “Have mercy upon us.” What is this but a defiance of the Saviour’s law of worship ?

XI. A False Invocation. — Paul enjoined the faithful to “do all things in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.” To do anything in the name of another, is to do it by the authority of him whose name is used. The phrase, “in the name of,” is a governmental one. In the name of Victoria, means by her authority as Queen of these realms ; and thus it is that all governmental acts proceed in her name. In the kingdom of God the Lord Jesus holds the sovereign name — he is Lord of all : God has highly exalted him, and given him the name which is above every name, that in his name — by his authority, every knee should bow and every tongue confess. Thus in the early church everything was done in his name. But as the apostacy advanced, his authority was discarded, and the truth concerning his royal dignity was obscured. Thus, on the administrative formula of baptism, while the Saviour said, “All authority in heaven and in earth is given to me : Go you, therefore, and disciple the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit,” the Romish church discarding the Messiah’s authority, baptized not into the name, i. e. into the relationship or fellowship of Father, Son, and Spirit, but in the name, that is, by the authority of Father, Son, and Spirit. Now, observe you, these two ideas are quite different : in the one case we have the idea of relationship, and in the other the conception of government. Now, it is the most manifest of New Testament facts, that everything in the Christian church was done by the authority—in the name—of the Lord Jesus, and therefore, that nothing was done in it by the authority—in the name of—Father, Son, and Spirit. In this latter formula, we have simply a Romish blunder ; and yet this is the formula of the holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, with its living apostles and prophets ! In all its sacraments and appointments, its priests proceed, saying, “In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,” &c. By so doing, they take the name of God in vain. Every man does so who presumes to do anything in the Divine name, for the performance of which he has not received the authority of God. And this holy Apostolic and Catholic Church has yet to find and shew, by what authority she proceeds as she does.

XII. A False Confession.—The confession required by the Lord Messiah, is the confession of himself. “He that confesses me,” says he, “him will I confess.” He further requires that his people confess their sins to God — him against whom they have sinned : “If,” says John, “we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.” The apostle also requires that the brethren confess their faults one to another. “Forbearing and forgiving one another,” says Paul, “if any have a complaint against any ; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.” Here all is plain—confession is to be made to the party sinned against. If against God, confession is to be made to him — if against a brother, to that brother. “Confess your faults one to another,” puts all on a common level : it exalts no man into the chair of the confessional — it makes no erring mortal a priestly confessor over his brethren ; but this holy Apostolic and Catholic Church enacts “the order for the solemn absolution of penitents,” and enacts that “the priest shall give such person, as soon as may be, full opportunity for making confession of his sins, and upon receiving such confession, shall either give the person proper ghostly counsel or advice, and also dismiss him with a blessing ; or (if the sins confessed be of such a nature, and the party be in that state of mind as shall render it fitting) he shall appoint a time for the solemn administration of the rite of absolution.” Did you imagine Rome was so near you ? Did you imagine the confessional had place in the holy Catholic and Apostolic Church ? What an insult to the majesty of heaven and the rights of conscience, for this church to require her members to make such confession as follows :—"I confess unto thee, O Lord God, Father of heaven and earth, and in this thy holy place, and in the presence of this thy priest and minister of the gospel, all my sins whatsoever which I have committed against thee, in thought, in word, in will, in act, or in consent !" After this the inquisition !

XIII. A False Forgiveness. — Who can forgive sins but God ? The Saviour affirmed his divinity by the forgiveness of sins. To assume this power, is to arrogate divine prerogatives. For self-assuming men to be thus arrogant, is to make their devotees the subjects of an utterly fallacious forgiveness. So acts this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church. The priest in pronouncing absolution, "extends his right hand over the head of the penitent," and proceeds with the affirmation, that "Almighty God gave unto his priests the power, that whosoever sins they should remit, should be remitted ; and whatsoever they should loose on earth should be loosed in heaven." And thus by this piece of arrogance, and the misquotation of words addressed by the Saviour to his apostles, the poor sinner is sent away under the delusion that his sins are forgiven.

XIV. A False Sanctuary. — The Apostle describes the Messiah as minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. That which Moses pitched was but a figure for the time then present, but Christ having come as High Priest, has entered into the true holy place, the presence of God, there to appear for his people. In this the only true sanctuary his people find refuge, but the holy Apostolic and Catholic Church has pitched a sanctuary of its own. And not only so, but presumes, as in other things, to associate the name of God in the un-called for business : "For," says the apostle, at the consecration, "God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost, accept, hallow, and bless this place, to the end whereunto, according to his ordinance, we have separated it, even to be a sanctuary to the Most High." But where God's ordinance, requiring such a sanctuary at their hands, is to be found, the book of prayers saith not.

XV. A False Consecration. — The anointing which the disciples of Jesus

receive is that of truth. They are sanctified not by a pompous ceremony, but by the sanctifying truth. "You have," says John, "an unction—an anointing—a chrisma—from the Holy One." "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things and is truth, and is no lie ; and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." The sanctifying power of truth is appreciable, but the consecrations of this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church are mere theatrical rehearsals, which, notwithstanding all the parade observed, such as the change of vestments, of place, and positions, the making of signs and motions, leave the consecrated thing or person precisely as before.

XVI. False Priesthood. — In the Christian institution there is one great High Priest, and by his sovereign grace all his people are constituted "kings and priests to God." No man can make a priest. "No man taketh this honour unto himself but he who is called of God, as was Aaron." Even the Messiah glorified not himself to be made a High Priest, but he who said unto him, Thou art my Son ; said also unto him, Thou art a priest for ever. Yet the arrogant functionaries of this presumptuous church dare to consecrate men to this sacred office. Its ritual requires that "the angel shall present those called to be priests, (habited in albes, with the stole over the left shoulder) and shall say, In the name of the one holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, and for the behalf of the flock, I present these brethren according to the word of the Holy Ghost which hath gone before upon them, that they may be ordained to the priesthood."

You cannot fail to see that in this there is the most arrogant assumption of divine power, and at the same time, the most unequivocal denial of the birthright of every disciple of the Son of God, who, as a body, are declared to be a holy nation, a royal priesthood.

XVII. A False Ministry. — The Christian ministry comprises the whole Christian people. A minister is a servant, and he who does not serve Christ is none of his. When the Saviour ascended, he gave gifts unto men ; and he gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. But while the Saviour said to his disciples, "One is your master, the Messiah, and all ye are brethren," this church places its people under the usurped dominion of a prelacy. It not only places the body of the people under a humanly appointed priesthood, but it subjects the whole to what it calls the "higher ministry." It talks about the perfecting of the church by the "four-fold ministry" of the fourth of Ephesians; but it is not content with four grades of caste: it has apostles, prophets, angels, priests, pastors, teachers, evangelists, and deacons, all of them ordained functionaries. And instead of permitting that liberty of ministry which existed in the primitive church, by which the brethren "addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints," they leave this, the true service, unaccomplished, and busy themselves with bodily genuflections and habiliments — as if God had pleasure in the legs of a man, or cared for upholstery and millinery! A lady, showing us through a very grand episcopal edifice in England lately, pointed out several expensive stained glass windows, expatiating the while on their respective merits and costliness, and finished by saying, "I like this one best, which do you?" "Madam," was our reply, "which does God like best?" "O," said she, "I never thought of that." So with this holy Catholic Apostolic Church. What God likes is left out of the question.

XVIII. False Apostles.—The Saviour chose and ordained his apostles, who went forth as his representatives or ambassadors, divinely accredited as such by signs and wonders which God wrought by them. Their business was to introduce the new reign — to establish the new and everlasting institution — to found the Christian church. As wise master builders they laid the foundation, and all following them have simply to build on the foundation thus laid of God. The caution is therefore given, "Let every man take heed how he builds thereupon, for other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." All, therefore, who simply follow the apostolic teaching, are built upon the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone. The apostles, though dead, yet speak, for we have their doctrine in their word. But this holy apostolic church insists on living apostles—it insists on calling those apostles who have not a vestige of evidence for their apostleship. God never bore them witness by any signs or miracles, wonders or gifts, of the Holy Spirit. Not a miracle have they wrought or can they work in attestation of their assumed apostleship. Though called upon for the evidence they can furnish not a shred. The Apostle Paul was at no loss when his ambassadorship was called in question: he did not venture to boast of what God had not wrought by him, but he could and did refer to those "mighty signs and wonders" which characterized his whole course, from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum. Let these would-be apostles give some evidence of their apostleship: till they do so, we must regard them as of those "who say they are apostles, but are not."

XIX. False Angels.—An angel is a messenger. God's angels are his messengers. The angels of the primitive churches were the brethren they sent on their business. The apostles of the Saviour corresponded through these brethren with the congregations sending and receiving them. When, then, the Lord Jesus desired John during his exile in Patmos, to inform the churches in Asia Minor of his will, he, of course, commanded him to communicate it through the angels of the churches. But with this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church the angel is a non-travelling resident functionary, possessing no scriptural characteristics whatever. There is an undeniable ignorance manifest, as to both the word angel and the office it imports. In its ritual angels are confounded with pastors. It is required that "at the direction of the apostle, the candidates shall be presented before the sanctuary by the respective angels having charge over them," when the apostle says:—"We have appointed the present time, that these approved and chosen men, who have served in the priest's office faithfully, may be set before the Lord; that if he be pleased he may intimate his gracious purpose, and may call by the word of his prophet those whom he may choose to his service as angels and bishops in his church." But the worst thing in this farce is not the ignorance it manifests as to what an angel is, but the assuming to pass off the pretence under the sanction of Divine revelation. It is daringly pretended that the candidates already "approved and chosen" are "presented before the Lord," that he may instruct, and call by the word of his prophet (?) whom he may choose as angels and bishops!

XX. False Prophets.—Peter says, that "the prophecy came not at any time by the will of man, but that holy men spoke moved by the Holy Spirit." Hence the formulas used by Isaiah, Jeremiah, &c. "Thus saith the Lord," "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying," and so forth. Now, it is manifest, that he only who prophecies is a prophet—no prophecy, no prophet. But where are the prophecies of the holy Catholic and Apostolic Church? Where are the revelations of her prophets? What new—what hitherto unrevealed truth have they delivered? We challenge them, one and all, to the production of a single new thought. Once they produce their prophecyings, we shall see how far they have affinity to the book of Mormon. So far as we have evidence before us, they consist in the unscriptural rules by which the ministry of this church is regulated, and in the spurious deliverances of their so-called prophets respecting nomination to various orders of ministry. Thus, in the consecration of an angel, the apostle has the audacity to say: "And this our brother, who hath faithfully served in the office of the priesthood, having been called by the Holy Ghost, through the ordinance of the prophet, to serve in the higher order of the ministry," &c. Here, therefore, as elsewhere, we have nothing but unsupported assumption—the mere aping of other apostate churches.

XXI. False Miracles.—It is not denied that the miraculous offices and endowments of apostle and prophet, are made manifest by miraculous operations. It is not disputed that the apostles and prophets of the first age put their claims to these offices beyond doubt, by the miracles they wrought in word and deed. It is felt, therefore, that the apostles and prophets of these days should have somewhat also offer, in support of their pretensions. But pray what is offered us? A miracle. No, verily; nothing but the old beggarly apology, that we have not faith. These wisecracks pretend not to see that our want of faith in them is the very thing that makes a miracle necessary. Did we believe their pretensions, there were no need of miracle to convince it is expressly because we do not believe that miracle is required. "Tongues for a sign, not for those who believe, but to those who believe not." Let the prophets speak in languages they never learned—let them speak to the confusion of Russian, German, Chinese, &c. Indian, and we shall dispute their claim no more. But meantime, we beg to submit that the want of faith is among themselves. When, according to the sixteenth of Matthew, complaint was made to the Saviour that his disciples could not cast out a demon, the Lord did not excuse them by the absence of faith on the part of the possessed, but the onlookers, but he upbraided the disciples for their want of faith. Now we beg to do the same—we tell the so-called evangelists of this church, that the reason why they fail to raise the sick, notwithstanding their pretensions of anointing and daring invocations, is not because of the absence of faith in the patient, but expressly because of their own shortcoming; in a word, we do not believe that they themselves have, or can have, any faith in the possession of the power to which they pretend.

XXII. False Signs.—When the apostles of the Messiah laid hands on any one, they conveyed a real bestowment, either in such gifts as that of health to the sick, or of miraculous power to the convert. But when the pseudo apostles of this church lay hands, what do they give? What effect follows? What power is communicated? Will you believe it, that the sign of the apostleship consists in the mark of the cross? "Signing the candidate in the forehead," the apostle says, "God the Holy Ghost, anoint thee with the oil of gladness, with the chrism of salvation. I seal thee with the sign of the cross in our Lord X Jesus Christ." Such are the signs and wonders of the holy Catholic and Apostolic Church!

XXIII. False Doctrine.—The doctrine of the apostles of Christ consists imply of the commandments of the Lord Jesus. They commended the brethren for remembering them in all things, and keeping the ordinances which they had delivered; for they were prepared to say, that they delivered only what they had received of the Lord. But the deliverances of the apostles of this church, to which all the orders of the ministry are bound to adhere, comprise what we have shewn, matters utterly foreign and unknown to the apostles of our Saviour. Their doctrine was simply that of Christ, but the doctrine of this church is a commixture of Heathenism, Paganism, and Christianity; the latter in name than anything else. The will of God, his Son and Apostles are then and applied to what they never mentioned.

XXIV. A False Liturgy.—The liturgy or public service of this communion consists in an order of things perfectly barbarous to the New Testament. A free, intelligent, willing spiritual people which the apostles instituted among the brethren, has not the faintest idea in the ceremonial of the dark ages which this church attempts a revival. Every speech betrays it. What a farce, to imagine the apostles of Christ ministering in "stalls," "albes," "stoles," "opes," and so concerned thereabout. The following direction indicates: "Here the minister and two angels shall, by the direction of the apostle, put the called angel's stole, so as that the head of being crossed, it shall fall on each shoulder in a straight line, and shall secure it with the girdle; and they shall invest him with a cope."

XXV. A false Calendar.—The Juda-

izing teachers having troubled the first churches with certain matters of Jewish law, Paul wrote to the congregation in Galatia thus: "Now that you know God, or rather are acknowledged of God, how turn ye back to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe times, and months, and days, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain." And reminding the brethren in Colosse that Christ had blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was contrary to us, said, "Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holiday, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath." But this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, utterly regardless of the Apostle's warnings, observes times and days beyond enumeration. It has its formulated services for times and days it calls "Easter," and "Pentecost," and "Advent," and "Christmas," and "Good Friday," and "Holy Saturday," and "All Saints," and "Ascension," and so forth; thus borrowing, as every one knows, not from the Apostles of Christ, but from the Popes of Rome.

A frequent petition we find in the ritual of this church, is in the words, "PREVENT us, O Lord, in all our doings." No better service could well be rendered than to prevent men doing such things in the Divine name as this holy Catholic and Apostolic Church assumes to perform; and, dear hearers, if you are led by what you have heard this evening, from such doings, to the reception and practice of what the Saviour taught, you will not have listened in vain.

MORAL SCIENCE.

Has human reason no place in the pursuit of moral science? She has a definite and definable place. It is her province to ascertain that there is a God, and that he is a being of infinite power, knowledge and rectitude. It is her province to ascertain that he is able to make a revelation of his will to men, and with such evidence of its reality that she can believe and know that it comes from him. It is her province to inquire and judge whether the persons who speak in his name were truly sent by him, and to become assured that what they have spoken and written is in sober verity his own word. It is her province to look at the difficulties, and weigh well all the objections, to the plenary inspiration of the sacred volume; and to be the more severe in her scrutiny because this volume claims to be the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

Nor does her province terminate here. While it belongs not to her to erect herself into a tribunal before which the truth of God must appear to be judged, it at the same time belongs to inquire and ascertain what this divinely inspired book contains. This she must do diligently, humbly, and with becoming meekness. Having ascertained that this is the book of God, she may task all her powers and all her learning, and what is more, all her fairness and candour, to ascertain the true sense and import of the sacred writers. Her views of religious truth she must draw directly from the Scriptures. She is not merely to call in the aid of the Bible in confirmation of her own opinions, but to begin her investigations with this divine source of knowledge. The evidence of the truth she receives is the divine testimony, and she has nothing to do but to ascertain and receive it. She may not interfere, nor hesitate, where the God of truth has decided. Her business is to stand a silent inquirer at the shrine of these Oracles, and there hear what God the Lord hath spoken. Her object is to get at their philosophy, and not her own. She must take leave of her lofty independence and dignity, if she would learn of Christ. Her philosophical speculations have nothing to do in ascertaining the meaning of the Scriptures. Nor can we give too great emphasis to this thought. Men are very apt, where they have fixed views of the laws which regulate mind, to look at God's truth through the medium of their own philosophy. If for example God declares that the human race are sinners from their birth, they hesitate at such a statement because, according to their received opinions, the infantile mind is not capable of sin. If God declares that the moral renovation of men is effected by His own mighty power, they call in question this decision, because, according to their philosophy, the mind is an existence which is incapable of being acted upon except by light and motives. Instead of allowing the Bible to influence their philosophy, they allow their philosophy to become the arbitrary interpreter of the Bible. Instead of submitting their judgments to the decisions of the uncreated intelligence, they require that His intelligence should be subordinate to their own. There are few Christian students that have not to some extent fallen into this error. This was eminently the error of Origen, of Cocceius, of Hutchinson, and of Swedenborg. This is the error of the Pelagians and Arminians of ancient and modern times. This is the error also to some extent of the Calvinistic and Hopkinsonian schools. Nay, this is the error of most of us, heterodox and orthodox. Strange to say, we cannot forbear interweaving the shreds of our own philosophy with the wisdom of God. We do it insensibly. But human reason was never given to man for such a purpose. When she has ascertained the true import of God's revelation, her work is done. To attempt more than this, is rebellion against God—nay, it is rebellion against herself; for reason decides, and decides intuitively, that "if we believe the testimony of man, the testimony of God is greater." It has been well remarked, that "periods in which the pride of philosophy has been most exalted, have often been distinguished for the widest departures from the simplicity of scriptural theology." Human reason is never so truly in her proper place as when she sits a learner at the feet of Christ. How can she soar on a loftier wing than when she flies so near the Sun as to veil her face and lose her vision in the brightness of his rays? It is not reason that guides the soul then, but God. It is a heavenly light—a guide from a purer and more intellectual world. It is reason, but not her own—a reason that never hesitates, never toils, and never becomes weary—a reason that is never prejudiced, partial or benighted, and that never errs.

We think it, therefore, no small commendation of the Bible, that it is the only book that has opened to the world the extended field of moral science, and so marked and limited the path of human inquiry, that if the mind wanders, it can never be said that it is for want of light. Few truths come to us with such overpowering evidence, as the truths of the Bible. The cheerless gloom which broods over the understandings of men had never been chased away, but for the beams of this supernatural revelation. Men may look with an unfriendly eye on that system of truth which reproves and condemns them, while they little know the loss the world would sustain by subverting its foundation. We have tried Paganism; we have tried Mahometanism; we have tried Deism and Philosophy; and "we cannot look upon them even with respect." The Scriptures contain the only system of truth which is left us. If we give up these, we have no other to which we can repair. We must travel back under the faint and trembling lights of reason and nature, where "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people."—We must wander amid the regions of fancy and scepticism, where there is no argument to convince, and no oracle to decide. Every thing we see, and hear, and feel, becomes more and more the source of solicitude and apprehension, and the farther we extend our views, unless guided by this heavenly light, we behold only a vaster desert—a deeper abyss of doubt, darkness, and despair. Between reflections upon ourselves, and reflections upon God—between just views of his character and our own, we see no ground for hope. We are burthened with a sense of our sin and darkness, and long in vain for some quiet resting-place—some covert from the tempest—some shadow of a great rock in this weary land—something which has "the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." We strive to break our bondage, and every struggle binds us faster to our chains, and is only the ineffectual effort of a mind separated from God, to restore by its own wisdom its lost fellowship with its Maker. We counsel you, therefore, to cleave to this unerring Word of God.

And we counsel you not to be satisfied with mere intellectual attainments. A mere intellectual acquaintance with the Bible is not godliness. They know too much religion, far too much for their future comfort, who know more than they obey. We claim for the Bible, and for the truth it inculcates, not only the submission, the admiration of your understanding, but the submission and admiration of your heart. Ah, my young friends, where else can you find a moment's repose, when you have once cast away your confidence in the instructions of God's word? Cast away this confidence, and there is a chasm before you which nothing can fill—an abyss, across which your dark, uncomfortable minds throw their anxious glance, and feel that all their light and hopes are extinguished. You would wonder why you had been created with such insatiable desires after truth, such a thirst for the knowledge of God, and yet could find nothing to gratify them. Nor would this inquietude pass away until you had returned to the Bible. The sundered bond would then be made whole—the separated chasm filled—the darkness dissipated—the agitated, despairing mind at peace.

"IN CHRIST."*

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: (creation) old things are passed away; behold all things are become new" (2 Corinthians v. 17.)

THE proof that the gospel of Jesus Christ was designed to renew, to renovate fallen humanity, is abundant in the oracles of inspiration. Man is said to be dead in trespasses and in sins. He must be resurrected to life and holiness. He is said to be a foreigner and alien to the commonwealth of Israel—a stranger to the covenant of promise. The influences of the gospel are to bring him near to God, to make him a subject of the kingdom of heaven—an heir of an eternal inheritance. These scripture representations plainly teach us that man must be changed from his old sinful state to one of holiness and righteousness, or he can never be a participant in the promises of the gospel. And it will be well remembered, while contemplating man as dead in trespasses and in sins, the sense in which he is thus said to be dead. Many, by not noticing this point, but supposing that man is dead morally in the same sense that Lazarus was, literally or physically, have greatly erred in relation to the means of man's recovery. This error is the starting-point of the theory concerning regeneration, which has so long been popular among the sects. This theory makes the gospel a "dead letter." Its great and leading idea is, that man is totally depraved—is dead in trespasses and sins; and that to renew him, there must be a direct and powerful operation of the Holy Spirit, the exercise of a power similar to that which resurrected Lazarus from the tomb. Paul said the Ephesians, before their conversion, were dead in trespasses and in sins, and the picture he has given us of their condition at this time is truly an appalling one — a condition of fearful separation from God and holiness. Nowhere in the New Testament is it said that the Jews were thus dead. As a nation they had apostatized from God at the time of the Saviour's advent, yet there was among them some knowledge of the true God, and of the worship acceptable to him. It is true, that just in proportion as the Jews had separated themselves from God on account of sin and rebellion, just in that proportion were they dead in sins, for the word "death" clearly means separation from that which supports and gives life, whether we contemplate it with reference to vegetables or animals, and the word "dead" as clearly signifies a state of separation. And as God is the life-giving system, and as the progenitors of the race were separated from Him the day they sinned, we find no difficulty in understanding the language God used in relation to Adam. "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Man, on account of sin, separated himself from God—became dead in trespasses and sins. This being the case, the error of which we have spoken above is at once obvious. And as to the influence of this error in producing apathy, a waiting for "God to work in his own good time," to make his favoured elect a willing people — to quicken them — there can be no doubt of its ruinous tendency. And especially does the Christian grieve when he contemplates the extent of this pernicious influence; the great number of persons it has kept from the obedience of the gospel, who waited from year to year through a long life, and who were still waiting when death knocked at the door of their clay tenement and summoned them to the unseen world, there to wait for the great judgment day. If death means separation from, the language, "dead in trespasses and sins," cannot imply any want of ability to hear and obey the gospel. If it does, the Book of God is not only a "dead letter," but much of it meaningless, and God in giving it to his creature man was trifling with his best interest.

* From the Gospel Advocate.

We have already seen, that before man can be a partaker in the promises of the gospel, he must be changed from his old sinful state to one of holiness. And it is important for us to ascertain the means to be used, or the power to be exerted, to produce this change. From the very nature of the case, it must be a power above or superior to anything in man, or pertaining to him. In order that we may understand full the change produced, and the power exerted to produce it, we will consider for a moment what kind of a change is contemplated. And here let it be understood that the change and means to produce it are similar. We cannot expect a physical change from the exercise of moral means, neither a moral change from the exercise of physical means. This being true—and I suppose no one will doubt—it will at once be seen, that in man's renewal there is no such exercise of power as was exerted in raising Lazarus from the dead, for the effect and cause would not be similar — moral change produced by the exercise of great physical power. It will be well for us to understand in what respect man is to be changed. In order to hasten, I will state that it is to be changed in heart, in life, and state; or it is a change of heart, a change of life, and a change of state or relation. We have seen that it must be the exercise of power above any possessed by man, that must be exerted in producing this change of heart, and the important question is, what is that power? We find an answer to this question in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. The apostle declares "the gospel to be the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth." In the first chapter of James we read, "Of his own will begat he (God) us with the word of truth." Paul to the Corinthians (1 Cor. iv. 15) says, "In Christ Jesus have begotten you through the gospel." Again, Peter says, "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God." All these passages harmonize with the teaching of Jesus Christ in the parable of the sower in which the word is likened to the seed sown by the husbandman.

These passages, with many others that might be quoted, teach that God's power to renew fallen man is his own truth. When we contemplate this change as produced by the truth of God, we see no incongruity between the effect and cause, but harmony—a moral effect from the influence of a moral cause. This single thought ought long since to have silenced those who contend for a display of power, such as resurrected Lazarus, in quickening or renewing man. The man after God's own heart could sing, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," while modern sectaries would sing, "The law of the Lord is a dead letter, having no influence on the soul." The language of the great apostle to the Gentiles is very striking. He says, Heb. iv. 12, "For the Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." If the inspired apostles understood the Word of God to be a "dead letter," is it not a little strange that any one of them should have written such language as the above? But while contending for the Word of God, I desire not to be understood as contending for it alone, only as the instrument — the means of enlightening the mind, and renewing the heart. For it is true that no man can say Jesus is the Christ, only by the Holy Spirit. The truth of God is the sword of the Spirit; and while our religion is begun, carried on, and completed by the influences of the Holy Spirit, it is only through the truth of God that these influences are exercised.

In my next I propose to show, that in order for the truth to change the heart and renew the mind, it must be believed that "the gospel is the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth it."

A. W. O.

THE NAME CHRISTIAN.

HAVING found the new name Christian, I now propose to show how it is given, or when persons can lawfully be called Christians. And that all may understand the law in the case, I will give an illustration of a marriage. Suppose that Mr. Smith wishes to be married to Miss Jones: Mr. Smith's first object is to make Miss Jones believe that he is a lover, and that he is able to save her from want, to protect and defend her during life; a proposition for a union is made: Miss Jones believes Mr. Smith's word, and accepts the offer; the day upon which the marriage is to take place is set: the parties meet, the lawful authority is present; Mr. Smith and Miss Jones are summoned before the officer, he proceeds to ask them certain questions which, when answered in the affirmative, he pronounces them husband and wife. Now the question is, when did Miss Jones lose her name and take the new name of Smith? Was it when Smith asked her to meet him in matrimony? No! Was it when she first believed his word? No! Was it when she met him on the set day? No! Was it when the officer pronounced them husband and wife? Yes! Now she begins to call upon the name Smith for protection. Now, her name was Jones, before the law authorized her name to be changed to Smith; and I remark, that had not this last act been performed, she never could have been called by the name of Smith, according to law. She might have called herself Smith, but it would be untrue and to her utter disgrace, because she had not complied with the law in the case: but so soon as she obeys the law, she then can bear the name of Smith—call her name Smith, and be so called by others; she now is entitled to protection by law under this name.

Well, now to the application. I may not follow my illustration in every particular, but to begin. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We see love first exhibited by God, and we love him because he first loved us. We are induced to love him from the fact that we know that we are sinners, and we learn that Jesus came to save sinners; for, says Paul, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." Well, to make the sinner believe that he is able to save him from his sins, he, Jesus, came into the world, went about doing good, performing miracles, wonders, and signs; such as turning water into wine; the feeding of five thousand men, besides women and children, with five loaves and two fishes; healing the sick, opening the eyes of the blind, raising the dead, &c. Now John says these things were done in order to produce faith in the sinner, or to this amount, says he, "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." The sinner believing his word, begins to make preparations for the marriage, which he does by reforming his life, and setting his affections on one personage, and the things belonging to him, in the place of having his mind set on divers persons and their concerns. This he loves to do, from hearing the word of Him to whom he is to be espoused, for the law tells him to repent, for "God commands all men everywhere to repent." He next learns that the law requires him to make a public confession of his faith in the person whose name is shortly to be given, for "with the mouth confession is made unto salvation:" this he does by saying that he believes that Jesus is the Son of God. He is now informed, that in order to his receiving the new name, he must become subject to one other act that the law requires, which is that he must, by the authority of the proposed husband, be immersed "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit;" all of which things are to be performed, on the part of the sinner, in order to the remission of sins, and before he can receive the name. Then, in obedience to the law, the sinner meets the administrator of the last act at the water: there, in the presence of a gazing multitude, they go down into the water, the immerser repeats the ceremony, and confirms it by dipping the sinner under the water. Now, the question is, when did he get the name? When God first loved him? No! When he made the confession? No! When he believed, had repented, confessed the proper confession, and was immersed by the authority of Jesus into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit? Yes! Now, as the law does not recognize Miss Jones as Mrs. Smith until she has first obeyed the law, so also does not the law of God recognize the sinner as a Christian until he obeys the law. Now as it is untrue for Miss Jones to call herself Mrs. Smith before obeying the law, so also is it for the sinner to call himself Christian before he obeys the law. I remark that the sinner, after having complied as before stated, receives the name Christian; he now can call himself a Christian, and be so called by others. He now has a right to call upon the name of Christ—to expect protection under the law of Christ so long as he wears the name of Christ. According to the Scriptures, no person was anciently called Christian who had not first believed, repented, confessed, and been immersed; neither is any person entitled to the name Christian now, who has not obeyed the gospel according to the truth. But so soon as the sinner obeys, he receives the name, and so soon as he takes any other, he brings a disgrace upon the cause of the great husband of the church. Then if I desire the name Christian, I must become a citizen of the kingdom of Christ, and to become a citizen I must have the remission of my sins; and to have the remission of sins I must believe, repent, confess, and be immersed. Observing this process makes me a Christian, and forbids my wearing any other name as a distinguished title.

Well, if it take the foregoing process to make a Christian, what must be done with those who called themselves Christians before they obeyed? Let them go and obey the law in the case! Now if I wanted to wear the name Baptist, I would join the Baptist Church; Methodist, then I would join the Methodist Church, and so on, with all other human names, ad infinitum.

Brethren, it is the high honor of heaven to have the name Christian conferred upon us, and be assured we are entitled to it if we have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us. If an apostle would not blush to wear the name, should we? Paul acknowledged the name Christian. When speaking before King Agrippa, Paul asked him if he believed the prophets? "Then Agrippa said unto Paul, almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds." And Peter says, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye." Again he says, "Let none of you suffer as a murderer," &c.; "yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on his behalf." And yet I have heard professed Christians call themselves Campbellites. Brethren, this is a shame—it is a dishonor to the cause which we plead—you glorify Campbell and not God. Then, brethren, let us call one another Christians, and thereby honor the great Head of the church. Let us be one in name, one in action, one in advancing the cause of our Redeemer, and “Let Christians all agree,

And peace among them spread;
Gentile and Jew, and bond and free,
Are one in Christ their head.”

J. K. S.

ALONE.

THE world is shut out, the social circle left, and there is none present save myself and God. How still it is! Fit time and place for serious thought and meditation. The soul has now to cast up its accounts, and to ponder over its short-comings. How it shrinks from the task, and shudders at the thought of a careful and prayerful examination. We can be honest with ourselves. A guilty conscience is a clinging curse. It is the heaviest burden with which the soul can be laden, and when alone it carries on a severe contest with all the powers and passions of the soul. The spirit of man reviews its own actions, and often feels ashamed of its own deeds. Even the sins of childhood and youth are presented, and the secret follies of which the world and the church are ignorant, are marshalled in fearful array. What hollow voices of deception are heard—what secret plans of foolishness are unfolded; and in the midst of all, what countless mercies there are to remind us of the love and compassion of Him against whom we have sinned! We love society, and we love to be alone—we love a cheerful laugh, and we love a glistening tear. There may be some gloom on the marriage day, and there may be smiles and joy at the house of mourning. The social Christian circle is the brightest glory on earth. How chaste and elevating is the conversation—what profound and happy subjects are considered—what glorious hopes animate the spirit, while the splendours of the Heavenly Canaan are by faith unfolded to the view! What pure and hallowed songs of praise flow from the spirits which have been quickened and renewed by the power of eternal truth! Are we always honest amongst our friends? Are we what we appear to be? Is our conduct there a reflex of our real feelings and sympathies? Dear readers, can we answer these questions to the satisfaction of our minds, and in the light of the Christian's hope and reward? If so, it is well with us—if not, it is ill with us. We once saw all alone a beautiful little child which has since been taken up to heaven. Its mother and friends had left it for a time, for the purpose of seeing how the dear little creature would act. It was innocent and happy, and had no apprehension of present or future danger. But the eye of the mother never left it, and had the slightest danger been near, in a moment she would have rushed to its rescue. When we are alone we cannot feel that simple confiding innocence; sometimes the present and the future make us tremble, and had we no hope in the Christ who has died, we should be of all persons the most miserable. Our knowledge and our sins make us apprehensive of danger, and through the fear of death we may be all our lifetime subject to bondage. It is sometimes very pleasant to be alone. In the cheerful and happy day-time, on the high and solitary mountain's brow, or wandering amid the brooklet and flowers, where beauty, light, and music meet—where the silence is only broken by the zephyr and the stream, or the carolling of the innocent and beautiful birds. How they sing to us! They are God's choristers, but we are far better interpreters of their songs than they can be. Their music is an efflux from themselves to us, and it becomes a medium to lead our souls to the exercise of gratitude and praise. When thus alone we can think of the providence of God, without whose knowledge a sparrow cannot fall. And in obedience to the command of the Great Teacher, we can consider the lilies of the field; and earthly glories pass away, when we think that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. And though alone, we are not alone, for God is with us. When our blessed Saviour was upon the earth he was often alone ; alone on the mountain, alone in prayer, alone in the garden of grief, alone on the cross when he exclaimed, " My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me ? " It suits the spirit of prayer to be alone ; where there are no human critics, no fastidious tastes, where prayer can dispense with the incumbrance of words, where verbal utterance may be dumb, and all the spiritual powers so alive and so eloquent that the secret prayer commands the sympathy and blessing of God. Isaac walked with God at eventide. After the heat of the day, how soothing and refreshing it is to avail ourselves of the evening shade. The sun has set, but the beautiful clouds are tinged and illumed with his glory. So it is when the Christian dies : though to us his sun has set, our memories are filled with pleasing remembrances, and his happy useful life and peaceful death still shine athwart our pathway, and by faith we follow his glorified spirit up to the realms of bliss. We have found it good in the evening time to be alone ; the time glides away so gently, the evening zephyr blows so lovingly, the birds have ceased to sing, the laborer has quitted the field, the gentle dew descends, and through the blue expanse are seen the grand old stars twinkling in all their glory, adorning the dark and solemn brow of silent and majestic night. Bright interpreters of the power which is omnipotent—precious and celestial gems which are suspended from the eternal throne, we love to gaze upon you : for your number and glory tend to deepen the veneration and heighten the admiration of our soul. Yet in beholding these we see but the outskirts of creation, and a small portion of the suburbs of the universe of God. Death does its work alone. How silent are its footsteps, and its appliances how numerous ! Conscience does its work alone. It is the faithful and private secretary of the soul, and there is no state of mental or moral degradation where its voice is not heard, where its power is not felt. How it scorns the act of keeping back part of the truth ! How, by a glance of the eye, it withers many a fair sentence, and takes knowledge of the scandal and hypocrisy which were begotten in the dark regions of the soul's pollution ; and though disguised and distorted by a degraded and perverted intellect, which dares to clothe them with the semblance of truth, conscience through all the chambers of the soul proclaims the fraud, that Satan has again appeared in the garb of an angel of light. How cold and cheerless the night is ! The clouds are heavy, and the stars are gone. What light is that ? We follow it, the door is opened, and there by a small fire sits the young widow, disconsolate and alone. Her husband has recently been borne to the house appointed for all living. She has no money, and but few friends ; she thinks of the past, of her marriage day, of her husband's affection—how she could lean upon his arm and recline upon his breast, and how he welcomed into the world the first offspring of their love. The tear startles, her heart is full, she is a mother and a widow, and she feels that she cannot be comforted. But the Bible is there, and God speaks to her ; she hears and obeys the truth. The eye of Eternal Love is upon her, and she feels the spirit presence of Him who has promised to be a Father to the fatherless, and a Friend to the widow. How quiet and silent is the church-yard ! The air is cold and clear, the moon is shining in her fulness, and no sound is heard. Here are two small graves, the entombed of which were young and tender—they were innocent babes ; and on this spot a father has stood, his heart was full, and his eyes streamed with tears. In the silence of the night he looked up to heaven and prayed that he might be forgiven. When they were alive he was wild and intemperate ; he had ill treated their poor mother, he had deprived them of common necessities, and he felt that by his neglect they had passed away. He was alone with a wounded conscience, which could only be healed by a sense of the pardoning love of Him against whom he had sinned. We now see the mother by the side of the grave where lies her darling child. How well she remembers it—how all the lines of its face are impressed upon her mind—how she feels that a portion of herself is in the grave ! Fond mother, clad in the sable garb ; it is well for thee to weep for the angel departed. But why shouldest thou not hope ? God has been kind to thee in taking thy child from the evil to come. Thou didst watch its little spirit until it entered the eternal confines ; and there if thou art faithful, thou shalt meet it again, clad in the vestments which are pure and eternal. But we must all die; the time will come, and sometimes just before death the soul commands an amazing conservative power, all the leading events of life being exposed to its dying glance. Then may our friends be with us, may our children encompass us, may our faith be strong, and our prospects bright. We are about to enter the dark shadows of the valley of death, and we must enter them alone. No friend can go with us. It must be traversed alone. And yet if we are faithful we shall not be alone, for He who is our portion for ever, will guide us through the dark valley, and be with us in the swellings of Jordan. And then we shall never be alone; our companions will be saints and angels, and we shall be for ever with the Lord—our praise will mingle in the song of Moses and the Lamb, where we shall never separate, and never be alone.

London.

J. I.

PERSONAL INDWELLING OF THE SPIRIT.

As this phrase has been lately introduced to us by certain writers, and has given occasion to misconceptions, it may not be unprofitable to bestow a little attention upon it. Its introduction has evidently been occasioned by the persistent effort on the part of some of our public men, under the influence of sensuism or rationalism, to explain away the indwelling of the Spirit, as a mere metonymy or figure of speech. Admitting the Scripture statement, that the Spirit "dwells" in the believer, they endeavour to show that this "indwelling" is not literal and real, but that it is a metonymy for the effect of "words and arguments," a mere result of "change of state," an indefinite something called "influence," a "good temper," a "holy disposition," or anything else rather than the presence of the Spirit of God. Now, as these persons understand this "indwelling" in a peculiar and qualified sense, their doctrine, when it is dragged into the light from behind its concealments, can be stated fairly and truly only by supplying before "indwelling," the word "metonymical," "figurative," "verbal" or some similar epithet expressive of their idea. It is, then, the introduction of such propositions, both virtually and in fact, as, that "the Holy Spirit dwells in men figuratively and metonymically;" or that "there has been no literal, substantive communication of the Holy Spirit to any man since the last days of the Jewish age," (as this is misapplied by those who quote it) &c.; that has given occasion for the use of such expressions as the "personal indwelling of the Spirit," "literal or real indwelling of the Spirit," &c.; these epithets being merely the per contras of those previously introduced by our sensuistic philosophers, and being designed to define the sense in which their opponents understand the Spirit to dwell in the believer as affirmed in Scripture. Before our sensuists, then, in their sudden zeal for Scriptural language, presume to correct the terminology of their opponents, it would be well for them to amend their own, and especially to abandon their anti-scriptural doctrine which has been the root and origin of the whole controversy.

As to the expression, "personal indwelling of the Spirit" then, it has been just as unnecessary as the controversy which these sensuists and semi-materialists have introduced by their attempts to show that the Holy Spirit dwells only by "ideas," or by "influences," or by "metonymy." Both have been equally unnecessary, for it ought ever to be sufficient for the Christian to receive the words of inspiration in their simple and obvious sense, without any effort to limit, qualify, or pervert them. But when such limitation and perversion are attempted, and qualifying words are employed to give this perversion currency, it is usually taken for granted by those on the opposite side, that there is then a necessity for the use of such epithets as may serve to communicate a definite and clear view of what they understand to be the actual Scripture doctrine. Thus it is, that when men, dissatisfied with the exact language of Scripture, frame for themselves a creed, this creed immediately gives rise to others.

I do not think, however, that the choice of the word "personal," in the present instance, has been a happy one. The word "literal," "real," or "substantive" would have been much better, and all these, indeed, have been used as well as "personal," and often in connection with it, thus indicating the sense in which "personal" is to be taken, viz. as opposed to ideal or unreal, and as synonymous with actual or literal. The words "person," "personal," and "personality," are all somewhat ambiguous, however, and consequently inappropriate. "Person" is used in the Common Version, in reference to the Father, and as the rendering of "hypostasis," Heb. i. 3, but it does not fairly represent this term, which is more correctly rendered "substance," chap. xi. 1. "Person" is used in Theology in a peculiar sense, and applied to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as the "three persons in the Godhead." In common use, however, it has quite a different sense, indicating the individuality of a living rational being, and it is by taking it in this sense, that certain individuals make a display of ignorance, in accusing Trinitarians of Trithism, and charging those who have spoken of the "personal indwelling of the Spirit," with teaching that the Holy Spirit is a "local material being," and that "when he dwells personally in one man, he is not in another man at all." This "carnal, low, and grovelling idea of a personal and local Spirit dwelling in men," as well as the pert and irreverent language which these men so trippingly employ in reference to the most solemn and sacred matters of revelation, serve only to reveal their own spiritual inappetency, and their imperfect knowledge of the meaning of words.

Person, from the Latin persona, did not properly and originally signify an individual, and in speaking of three persons, one would not, in conformity with its original sense, be understood as meaning three individuals or three men. It had respect, not to separate and individual existence, but to character, official or otherwise. Thus, says Dr. Wallis: "The same man may at once sustain the person of a King, and of a Father, if he be invested with regal and paternal authority." This sense is again exemplified in Shakspeare: "How different is the same man from himself, as he sustains the person of a magistrate and that of a friend." It is in the sense of character corresponding to that of its etymon, or in one closely approximating to it, that the word person is used in Theology, and also in Hebrews as the rendering of "hypostasis," which seems designed to represent that which "stands under," the substance, or that which may be the subject of attributes. Hence, when theologians speak of "three persons in one Godhead," their meaning is not that there are three different "persons," in the vulgar sense of the word adopted by those to whose religious status this particular sense is so well adapted, but that God is revealed in three different characters, relations, or manifestations, to wit, in the character of "the Father," in the character of "the Son," and in the character of "the Holy Spirit."

It must be acknowledged after all, however, that neither the Latin word persona, nor the English word person (understood in its proper sense) nor even the original word hypostasis, can convey to the mind anything more than a very faint and imperfect notion, when employed in reference to any of the Divine manifestations. But it is for this very reason that such terms, taken in their less definite sense, are most appropriate, since, from the very nature of the subject, it is impossible for man to attain to any conception more clear or definite, which would at the same time be true. It is from the disposition which men have to intrude into the mysteries of the Divine nature—to explain—to define, and bring everything within the grasp of a finite and sensus-tic understanding, that we have so many of the errors and follies of religious society. Men must learn to be content with the notion which the exact words of Scripture convey, however faint and imperfect this may be, as compared with our consciousness of the reality; because these words go as far upon the right road as it is possible for language to convey us, and give the very best notion which it is possible for us, in our present state, to entertain of the unseen things revealed. To presume to limit these words, or to go beyond them, is at once to plunge into error, to forsake light for darkness, and Divine knowledge for brutish ignorance. So we may impart to the mind of a child, a certain faint and imperfect notion of a chemical process, and thus far only his conception will be just and instructive to himself. If we attempt to go beyond the proper measure of his capacity, we produce but false impressions, confusion, and ignorance.

As it is not possible for man to comprehend fully the Divine nature, the Scriptures do not undertake to reveal it, except so far as such revelation is practicable in itself, and practical in its tendencies. Probably the most abstract idea of Deity anywhere presented, is where our Lord says: "God is spirit," but this revelation is made, not as a formal exposition of the nature of God, but as the ground of the practical injunction, "They who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." It is most important that man should ever keep in view his inability to comprehend the Infinite, and that he cannot "by searching find out God, or know the Almighty to perfection." It is for this reason that indefiniteness and incompleteness must belong to the very highest and best conceptions which the loftiest human intellect may form of Deity, in any of its manifestations, and that the utmost humility and reverence are becoming in all who approach such sacred themes.

As man can comprehend relations much better than he can comprehend natures, and as a knowledge of relations is directly connected with the performance of duty, it is an exemplification of Divine wisdom and goodness, that the Sacred Oracles occupy themselves in revealing, not what God is in himself considered, but what he is relatively to us; not what man is in himself, but what he is relatively to God, to the spiritual universe, and to himself. Hence, it is, that their teachings terminate upon DUTY—that knowledge is communicated in order to obedience—and that the faith which they inspire, is made "perfect by works." In this respect they differ wholly from creeds and systems of Theology, which are designed to impart a knowledge of doctrines, rather than of duties; and fitted to fill the mind with empty theories, rather than the life with blessed fruits. It is, then, man's truest wisdom to confine himself to the boundaries within which revelation is confined, and in no respect to presume to go beyond these in vain attempts to attain to a species of knowledge which is as far beyond his present capacities, as it is unfitted for his present state.

Such expressions, then, as "person," "personal," and "personality," as applied to the manifestations of Deity, are to be avoided for much higher and better reasons, than such as are offered by blundering critics who are so gross and sensuistic in their conceptions, as to think that the phrase "personal indwelling of the Spirit" implies a "local, material being," and that "when he is personally in one man, he is not in another man at all!" They take it for granted that by personality here, totality is meant; and that when it is said that the Spirit dwells personally in any one, it is affirmed that the Spirit dwells wholly or totally in him, whereas, no such absurdity is involved in personality as applied to the Spirit of God. Nevertheless, since with unspiritual minds such misconceptions are thus shown to be possible, this is, undoubtedly, a reason why the expression "personal," as applied to the indwelling of the Spirit, should be avoided. It should be avoided because they do not understand it, and consequently misconceive those who use it; but the qualifying terms they would employ, such as "figurative," "metonymical," &c.; as applied to the indwelling of the Spirit, are to be avoided also, and for the very opposite reason, because they do understand these, and through them, misconceive the Scriptures.

It is true, indeed, that the phrase, "personal indwelling of the Spirit," might be allowable, if the word personal were connected with the believer, instead of with the Spirit. When it is said that "the Spirit dwells personally in the believer," this may mean, either that the Spirit himself, in his own proper character, dwells in the believer, or simply that the Spirit dwells in the person of the believer. In the latter sense, the expression is allowable, being entirely consonant with such Scripture declarations as these: "Your bodies (or persons) are temples of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which you have of God;" "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." That there is a "personal indwelling" in this sense, is not to be disputed, and it may be that some have supposed the expression under consideration to have been designed merely to express this, viz : that "the Spirit dwells in the person of the believer." It is evident, however, that with those who have used it, "personal" has respect to the Spirit, and not to the believer, and is intended, as before stated, as in contravention of the epithets "figurative," "ideal," "verbal," &c. ; either expressed or necessarily understood before "indwelling," in the reasonings of our sensuistic theorists.

These things, then, being correctly understood, the expression in question, may very properly be omitted, as unnecessary and ambiguous. It is quite sufficient for Christians to know that "the Spirit of God dwells in them," "that God has given the earnest of the Spirit in their hearts ;" that they have been made "partakers of the Holy Spirit."

If any choose to explain away these truths, by trying to show that the Holy Spirit, in reference to whom the personal pronoun is so often used ; of whom it is said, "the Spirit himself beareth witness together with our spirits," and who appeared in a distinct and visible form at the baptism of Jesus, is, nevertheless, not a "person," but a mere "emanation," "influence," "idea," or "result of ideas," we may well leave them to their own vain imaginings, remembering that we have been baptized not only "into the name of the Father, and of the Son," but also into that of "the Holy Spirit," and that it is this self-same Spirit which "dwells," or, as Bro. Campbell is fond of expressing it, becomes a "guest" in the heart of every true, obedient believer, who becomes, by this indwelling Spirit, "a habitation for God." R. R.

THE SEVEN LAST PLAGUES.*

"And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues, for in them is filled up the wrath of God" (Revelation.)

To a mind spiritually enlightened, the foolish blindness of the sons of Adam is a source of endless amazement. Not only do multitudes refuse to see for themselves, but they also delight to prevent their fellows from beholding the truth ; so that most of us wear spectacles of one kind or another, and judge of all objects according to the color of our glasses.

For nearly one hundred years momentous events have been happening in Europe—events full of the most thrilling importance—and yet the great masses of mankind have refused to see the finger of God in it all—have refused to acknowledge that it has been a literal fulfilment of the predictions of Holy Writ. Men have wondered, it is true, and with every lull in the storm have cried, Lo, the Millennium ! but the Millennium comes not yet, and instead of swords being turned into ploughshares, and spears into pruning hooks, we behold the French Zouaves, with their double edged bayonets, and the Turcos, with their devilish leaps and grimaces, dealing death and devastation with a swiftness and certainty unknown to the clumsy mail-clad warriors of the middle ages.

There have been a few men, however, who have read the Bible with their spectacles off, and who have hence been enabled to see the judgments of God upon an idolatrous people, in the bloody wars and oppressions which have cursed Europe for nearly a century. Of the few wise men, Bishop Newton, who flourished before the events took place, is the most conspicuous. Speaking of the seven last plagues, he uses the following language :—"If, then, these seven last plagues synchronize with the seventh and last trumpet, they are all yet to come ; for the sixth trumpet is not yet passed, nor the woe of the Turkish or Othman empire yet ended ; and, consequently, there is no possibility of explaining them in such a manner as when the prophecies may be paralleled with histories, or evinced by ocular demonstration." He then proceeds to give his interpretation of the prophecy, and of its future fulfilment ; and if the reader give me his attention, I think I shall demonstrate to him the certainty, both of the interpretation and the fulfilment, so far as the prediction has been, as yet, fulfilled.

* From the American Harbinger.

The prophecy is to be found in the sixteenth chapter of the Revelations by St. John, commonly called the Apocalypse, (chapter xvi. 1) "And I heard a great voice out of the temple, saying to the seven angels, go your ways and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth."

Upon the first verse, Bishop Newton comments as follows: "In obedience to the Divine command, the seven angels came forth to 'pour the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth:' and as the trumpets were so many steps and degrees of the ruin of the Roman Empire, so the vials are the ruin of the Roman Church. The one in polity and government, is the image of the other; the one is compared to the system of the world, and hath her earth, and sea, and rivers, and Sun, as well as the other; and this is the reason of the similitude and resemblance of the judgments in both cases."

2. "And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisesome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image."

"Whether these sores and ulcers are natural or moral," observes Newton, "the event must show. And the event has shown that they are moral ulcers, and the prediction was fulfilled in the days of Voltaire, and his contemporary Atheists and Deists, when all Europe was full of Infidelity and every moral defilement."

3. "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man."

4. "And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of water, and they became blood."

5. "And I heard the angel of the waters say, 'Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.'"

6. "For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy."

7. "And I heard another out of the altar say, 'Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.'"

Bishop Newton has much to say upon these verses, which is not relevant, but the following is: "There is a close connection between the two vials; and the effects are similar to the first plague of Egypt, when 'the waters of Egypt, and their streams, and their rivers, and their ponds, and their pools of water, became blood. Seas and rivers of blood,' manifestly denote great slaughter and devastation." Need I interpret, for the reader, how or when this prediction was realized? Who has forgot the French revolution, with its sanguinary horrors, and the still more terrible and sanguinary wars of the First Napoleon?

8. "And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the Sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire."

9. "And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues; and they repented not to give him glory."

"Whether," observes Newton, "by the intense heat of the Sun, be meant, literally, uncommon sultry seasons, scorching and withering the fruits of the earth, and producing pestilential fever and inflammation; or figuratively, a most tyrannical and exorbitant exercise of arbitrary power by those who may be called the Sun in the firmament of the Beast, the Pope, or the Emperor; time may discover. Men shall be tormented, and complain grievously; they shall, like the rebellious Jews, (Is. viii. 21) 'fret themselves, and curse their king, and their God, and look upward; look upward, not to pray, but only to blaspheme; they shall not have the sense or courage to repent, and forsake their idolatry and wickedness.' Had Bishop Newton lived in the present year of grace, instead of nearly a century ago, he could not have stated the matter more truthfully and pointedly. In proof thereof, read the following extract of a notice, by a leading New York paper, of the late Prime Minister of Austria:—

"In point of fact, for nearly a generation after the downfall of Napoleon, the utmost efforts of the European Sovereigns were directed towards crushing out popular aspirations for liberty and political rights, and for consolidating despotic thrones on the double base of divine-right superstitions and powerful standing armies. The high-priest and champion of this system was Prince Metternich."

10. "And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness, and they gnawed their tongues for pain."

11. "And blasphemed the God of heaven, because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds."

"This," remarks our commentator, "is some great calamity which shall fall upon Rome itself, and shall darken and confound the whole anti-Christian empire. But still the consequences of this plague are much the same as those of the foregoing one; for the sufferers, instead of repenting of their deeds, are hardened like Pharaoh, and still persist in their blasphemy and idolatry, and obstinately withstand all attempts of reformation." Who has forgotten the events of 1848, and subsequent darkness which still clouds all the fair land of Italy, causing the Italians to "gnaw their tongues for pain?" And who does not know that they still remain wedded to their superstitions, despite King Bomba, and Cardinal Antonelli, and all their satraps and satellites?"

12. "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the ways of the kings of the East might be prepared."

13. "And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

14. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

15. "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

16. "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon."

"Whether, by Euphrates, he meant the river so called," says Newton, "or only a mystic Euphrates, as Rome is a mystic Babylon; and whether, by the kings of the East, he meant the Jews in particular, or any Eastern potentates in general, can be matters only of conjecture, and not of certainty and assurance, till the event shall make the determination." In the original it reads, τῶν βασιλέων τῶν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν ἡλίου : and in the Latin vulgate, regibus ab ortu solis—that is, the king from the rising of the Sun. I think the prediction may be interpreted to relate to Austria and her forces in the recent conflict, for they may be said to come, relatively, from the East. 'Tis true, the English and Americans call the empire of Francis Joseph, Austria, from Austis, the South wind, implying thereby the empire of Southern Europe; but the people and government call it "Oesterriche," the realm of the East. Besides, it is said, that they should be "gathered together into a place called, in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon," that is, the mountain of destruction. And were not the Austrians gathered together in such a mountain? If any man doubts it, let him read any truthful account of the bloody contests upon the heights of Magenta and Solferino.

So ends the sixth plague, but the seventh and last is yet to come. How soon or how late, I presume not even to conjecture, but we are commanded to watch, for, "Behold I come as a thief."

17. "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, "It is done."

18. "And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great."

19. "And the great city was divided into three parts; and the cities of the nations fell; and Great Babylon came into remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath."

20. "And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found."

21. "And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent; and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great."

Judging of the effects produced by this last vial, from the known effects of the six preceding ones, I should say, that, before a great while, the whole continent of Europe will be convulsed from the centre to the circumference, by a terrible and bloody revolution, such as the world never saw before, and the end of which will be the reconstruction of the map of the world, the overthrow of the priest-craft and the king-craft, and the dawn of that blessed end when Messiah shall be known throughout the whole world as the Christ, the Son of the Living God. For, let selfish cabinets intrigue as much as they may, let kings and rulers forge fetters for the body, and priests and cardinals rivet chains upon the mind, let Infidels scout at revolution, and cry, "Lo! Christ is here," or "Lo! Christ is there"—still nothing under the whole heavens will ever avail to prevent the fulfilment of the irrevocable fiat of Jehovah God. Amen. "And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

D. R. H.

ETERNITY.

THE flower fades, the heart withers, man grows old and dies, the world lies down in the sepulchre of ages, but time writes no wrinkles on the features of eternity.

Eternity! Stupendous thought!—the ever present now, unborn, undecaying, and undying—the endless chain, compassing the life of God—the golden thread, entwining the destinies of the universe!

Earth has its beauties, but time shrouds them for the grave—its honors, they are but the sunshine of an hour—its palaces, they are but gilded sepulchres—its possessions, they are the toys of changing fortune—its pleasures, they are but bursting bubbles. Not so in the untried bourne. In the dwelling of the Almighty can come no footsteps of decay. Its day will know no darkness—unfading splendors forbid the approach of night. Its fountains will never fail—they are fresh from the eternal throne. Its glory will never wane, for there is the ever-present God. Its harmonies will never cease—exhaustless love supplies the song. Its youth will wear no age; yesterday, to-day, and for ever the same, there shall be no Winter there, with its blasting winds and blighting airs; no scorching heat to dry the life's young blood. Spring, perpetual, is the season of eternity. Sickness will not waste the frame; it shall bloom with immortal vigor. Hope shall not pine in fear: fruition shall gladden faith. Energy shall not grow slack in service: the faculties shall not weary or decline.

Eternity! shall I reap its pleasures or its pains? Shall I bear its cross or wear its crown? Shall I dwell in its palace-home or its pit of woe? Shall I hear its soothing harmonies, or its doleful discords? O thou Father of my spirit, spare me the horrors of those unending ages, where the furrows of time come not to the heart of anguish; where memory blots out no record of the guilty past, and sin sinks the soul in depths of eternal night! Let thy life renew my being, and the present shall not be hopeless, nor the future joyless.

LETTER TO YOUNG MEN.

THE present is an age of unexampled improvement and progress. The last half century has witnessed a stirring up of the elements of intellect never exhibited in any former age. Grandeur principles have been developed for the government of nations. Commerce has stretched its white arms over the whole globe—trade has fused together widely separated nations, and discoveries in the forces of nature have been made to which history cannot present a parallel. Machines for employing the power of steam and electricity; numberless inventions for manufacturing cloths, and moulding iron, gold, and other metals, are giving to the whole world enough to feed, clothe, and adorn itself. Geology is telling us where to dig for iron, gold, and coal; and Chemistry is teaching us how to mingle the different soils so as to make the rich land richer, and the desert to bloom with fertility. The general diffusion of scientific knowledge among the great mass of the people is undoubtedly the cause of this unexampled activity and vigour of mind. The treasures of intellect are no longer confined to the courts of kings, or the cloisters of monasteries. The collected wisdom of ages has been descending lower and lower into the scale of society, until it has become the glory of modern times, that whatever of philosophy can refine the spirit, whatever of law can control passion, whatever of science can give man dominion over matter, and whatever of art can adorn and beautify, please and instruct, is rendered free to all.

The true wealth of a nation consists, not mainly of broad and fertile lands and mines of ore, but in mental and moral worth. Intellect spreads the barren soil with waving grain. The want of it would render Eden a garden of weeds. The true means of advancing our earthly prosperity, then, are coincident with the development of our intellectual and moral faculties. Reading is one of the eminent agents to be used in accomplishing such a work. I would, then, impress upon your minds the value of cultivating a taste for reading. Procure for yourselves books; they will be company and society for you on all occasions. This will be far better than to spend your money and time merely to gratify a depraved appetite, and to acquiesce in the wishes of a wild and reckless companion. Having provided suitable books, often enter your studio, meet and converse with the good and wise of all ages and lands; there the living and the dead will speak to you through their works; you will meet W. H. Prescott, of Boston, (lately deceased) talking about Ferdinand and Isabella; Washington Irving will come from New York and tell you the story of the wars of Grenada, and the adventurous voyage of Columbus, or the legend of Sleepy Hollow. George Bancroft will sit down with you and point out on a map, the colonies and settlements of America, and give you the early history of American independence. Jared Sparks, of Cambridge, will arise and read to you the letters of Washington, and make your heart glad with the heroic deeds of that noble man for the cause of the country. Should you feel poetical, you may meet the comic Saxe, or the more worthy Longfellow. If in a speculative mood, call upon Professor Hitchcock, who will talk to you of all the changes that have taken place in the soil of our country since and before the Flood, and on the telegraphic system of the universe will bear you aloft that you may behold all time and space.

Nor will your acquaintance be confined to your own country; Sir John Herschell will come and sit down and discourse eloquently upon the wonders of the vast creation—"of all the worlds that are poured upon our sight by the glory of a starry night." Alexander Von Humboldt (though recently passed into the spirit land) will speak through the Cosmos and confirm the affirmation of David—"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. No speech, no language! Their voice is not heard, but their line hath gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world."

Nor will it be from across the stormy ocean of blue waves alone that such personages will visit you, but across the darker and wider ocean of time come the wise, and good, and eloquent, and discourse to you as long as you will listen. The poet from the banks of the Avon—"the poet of the human heart"—and another from his garden-home in Westminster, called "The Poet of Paradise," will come and entertain you. If among these you tire, the old family Bible may be placed before you; through it God, the Author of all things, the great Eternal Spirit, will address you. You can never exhaust its contents—you can never fathom its infinitude—you can never cease to admire the Great Personage there presented, and the system made known, whereby man can be taken from this world, and live again in one that is more bright, and beautiful, and desirable. Its histories, and poems, and prophecies, will ever be a source of enjoyment, and peace, and happiness: even in the troubles of life and tedium of old age, they will be oil of gladness to the wounded spirit.

Young men, cultivate the intellect. Read good and useful books for this purpose, practice what you learn, and if you do not become wealthy in lands, you will have that which is far superior—a store of intellectual wealth, a treasure which the silver of Peru and the gold of Australia and California can never procure ; a treasure that will last when the eye shall have been dimmed and the ear deafened, and manhood rendered almost a blank by the hand of time — a treasure that can only be acquired by diligence and study. I trust that you will take care to improve upon any practical suggestions found in this letter, which, I hope, may not be entirely devoid of interest to you.

A.

THE MANIFESTATIONS OF GOD.—No. IV.

THE narrative of the offering up of Isaac scarcely comes within our pre-mitted limits, since though perhaps it applies, it does not express visible Divine manifestation. But it contains a confirmation of our views respecting Malak YAHVEH, which should not be overlooked. Just as Abraham was at the point of slaying his son, Malak YAHVEH called to him from the heavens, for the purpose of staying his hand. In doing this, he assumed a dignity ill-becoming a created angel. "And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him, for I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, the only (son) FROM ME!" (verse 12.) "the lad" was about to have been offered in sacrifice to Malak YAHVEH. Malak YAHVEH must have commanded a sacrifice to be offered to himself. And this is supposable only on the ground of his being Yahveh's "fellow"—a participator in the many attributes and worship of God—the Logos who subsequently became man by incarnation, and the Great Shepherd of the sheep by the blood of the everlasting covenant. Abraham virtually offered Isaac to Malak YAHVEH; then Malak YAHVEH was led, or Abraham committed idolatry! Thus we come back again to the same conclusion as on pages 385 and 503.

It will be seen from Gen. xxvi. 24-25, that at least on two occasions did YAHVEH appear to Isaac; and though these manifestations present nothing new for consideration, yet it may prove to have been well to note their occurrence.

7.—We now overtake Jacob in Bethel (chap. xxviii. 11-22.) Let us peruse the story. "And Jacob went out from Beersheba, and went toward Haran. And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set: and he took of the stones of that place, and put as his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.

And he dreamed and behold, a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to the heavens: and, behold, the angels of God ascending and descending on it. And, behold, YAHVEH stood above it, and said, I am YAHVEH, the God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest I will give to thee and thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt spread abroad to the West, and to the East, and to the North, and to the South: and in thee and in thy seed shall all families of the earth be blessed. And, behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and I will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have said to thee. And then Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and then he said, Surely YAHVEH is in this place, and I knew not. And then he feared, and then he said, How fearful (august) is this place! This is no other than the house of God, and this, the gate of the heavens!"

This divine appearing instructs in the three grand lessons taught by the entire series of God's self-manifestations to men.

The seasonableness of this vision is evident at a glance. Jacob's circumstances were peculiar. He was just leaving home for a distant land. His father's partiality, along with his own and his mother's unbelief and duplicity, had rendered it necessary for him to flee precipitately, solitarily, and on foot from his father's house. His errand to Mesopotamia was one of absorbing interest, which, if successful, would probably soon place him at the head of a family, and constitute him one of the progenitors of the Messiah. Isaac his father could no longer be his priest. Rebekah, his fond mother, could no longer watch over him with maternal solicitude. Here he was homeless, houseless, friendless. Night had come on. The traveler's couch was the green sward — his pillows the stones of the place. That then and there the God of his fathers should appear to him in midnight vision, and tender to him the most ample and consoling assurances, cannot but appear exquisitely well-timed, so much so as to remind us of the adage, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

Blended majesty and mercy form another characteristic of this manifestation. The amplitude of the promises at this time vouchsafed to Jacob is very striking. The homeless one shall possess a country. The childless one shall have a numerous progeny, "as the dust of the earth." The supplanter, now a fugitive from the face of an execrating brother, shall become a channel of blessing to all the families of the earth. The lonely one receives the ever-becoming-One, whose resources can never be exhausted, as his companion and faithful protector. Nor does the drapery of the vision belie the mercy-speaking promises. An earthly home has been left behind, but a heavenly one opens to view. An earthly father's servants are no longer in attendance, but those of the Father in heaven come and return on errands of celestial ministration. He whose only refuge is a pillar of unbuilt stones, is invited to climb the "ladder" and enter "the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Yet while mercy predominates in the word of love and scene of beauty, majesty divine imparts an awe-inspiring magnificence to the whole. It is difficult to realize the emotions of Jacob, when, having awoke, he reflected on the vision of the night. He said, "Surely YAHVEH is in this place, and I knew not." The clause, "I knew not," may mean that, during the vision, Jacob had been so wrapt in its sweetness, had attained such a familiarity with heavenly things, had caught such glimpses of YAHVEH's paternal tenderness, that he had not been concerned, alarmed, or duly solicitous in the presence of such august realities. In the mercy he had lost sight of the majesty! The latter now coming out to his wakeful contemplation, reverential dread seized his mind, and he further exclaims, "How fearful is this place! This is none other than the house of God, and this the gate of heaven." Or, this expression of ignorance may be taken to denote, that the presence of YAHVEH now abode with the speaker as he had never before known or experienced. "Surely the reality of the day answers to the appearance of the night. It is no mere vision I have witnessed. YAHVEH is, in very deed, in this place; and I am solemnized by his presence in a manner hitherto unknown." In favor of this second interpretation, may be urged (1) the emphatic particle yesh preceding YAHVEH: "YAHVEH is in this place—it is no mere dream;" (2) the tenor of the promise, "I am with thee," &c. — i. e. "with an intimacy thou hast not before realized;" and (3) Jacob's consequent vow, in the making of which he holds communion with God, so that although commencing his references to the Deity in the third person, yet he ends in direct address (verses 20-22.)

The general conclusion remains the same either way; mercy and majesty are harmoniously exhibited in this Divine appearing.

The mediatorial principle of manifestation is not less striking. Few persons perhaps are aware how exclusively it has ever remained for the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, to lead out Deity to view. Unsuspected though it may have been by many, or most readers of the Bible, it is not the less true that God's appearance to Jacob at Bethel was effected through the mediation of the Angel of the divine presence. "What!" says the reader, "when we read in so many words, that above the ladder stood JEHOVAH, or YAHVEH, who said, I am YAHVEH, the God of thy fathers, &c.?" Yes, even so. Turn, and read it for yourself, in chapter xxxi. 11, 13, where the Patriarch distinctly informs Rachael and Leah, "The ANGEL of God spake unto me in a dream, (saying) * * * I AM THE GOD OF BETHEL, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow UNTO ME: now, arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred." Here we find that the Angel of God is God; even as before we found that the Angel of YAHVEH is YAHVEH. Confusion worse confounded to all who refuse to admit divine plurality in divine unity. "Hear, O Israel: Yahveh our Elohim is one Yahveh." "And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen."

Dundee.

J. B. R.

WORDS FROM THE WORK-TABLE.—No. II.

"MARY Jones and Jane Marshall wish me to make them collars like mine. I shall have fifteen-pence for each, that will be two and sixpence extra this week, for I can make them between times, when our overlooker is out of the way. I can have them beneath the table, or under the work, as I have had before, and nobody will be any wiser." Stay, young friend—you are a member of the church—What says the Law-book? "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart: with good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men; knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free" (Eph. vi. 5-8.)

You are, then, violating the commands of Christ—you are defrauding your employer—you are bringing reproach upon the gospel you have professed. What for? Love of filthy lucre.—Ah! your heart is not filled with love to Christ and love to man—you do not trust to God as an all provident God, but you trust to yourself, and you condescend to rob your earthly master. When you were engaged, you agreed to labor so many hours a day for your employer, and you have no right during that time to be indolent, or to do your own work—your time is purchased—the eyes of worldlings are upon you—they are watching, and what will be their report? "Ah! ah! this religion is all pretence—it does not make its professors commonly honest."

Thus you are a stumbling block in the path of those who are earnestly and prayerfully laboring to turn men and women from the kingdom of the world into the kingdom of God's dear Son.

You may deem these swervings from a right line as too trivial for notice, but beware of taking the first step in a downward course.

"Despise not thou a small thing, either for evil or for good. For a look may work thy ruin, or a word create thy wealth; a mote in the gunner's eye is as bad as a spike in the gun: and the cable of a furlong is lost through an ill wrought inch. Commit thy trifles unto God, for to him is nothing trivial; and it is but the littleness of man that sees no greatness in a trifle." LOUISE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER TO A. CAMPBELL.

Honored Sir,—Though I have never had the pleasure of seeing you in the flesh, I have by moral, intellectual, and religious ties felt to be with you in the spirit, and the expression of this feeling will, I hope, be accepted by you as a sufficient reason or excuse for the step I have taken. I am sure I am right in inferring, that the truth lies near your heart, and that at all times it will afford you pleasure to hear of its progress. As a church (I am now writing of London) we do not occupy the position we ought; but our number is increasing, and we are gaining strength, and the pure and simple truths of the gospel are being better understood. We pray God that the Holy Spirit may so enlighten us, that we may be made the humble instruments of turning many from darkness to light, and from the power of sin and Satan unto God. It is very pleasing to observe, that those who are without manifest a strong desire to hear, and our meetings for the proclamation of the gospel are generally well attended. There are many members of our church who refer to your visit to England with feelings of unmingled pleasure. The truths you were permitted to utter have made a deep and lasting impression, and your beautiful unfoldings of the Sacred Word will never be forgotten. There are many who love you in the truth, and it may cheer you to know that the efforts you made have been already associated with issues which are blessed and eternal. I have had the pleasure of meeting in church fellowship with my dear brethren and sisters at the Camden-hall for more than two years; and though, dear brother, in the church it is not always sunshine, yet I am happy to say that the means of grace have, to my own soul, been very profitable. Our morning meetings are all that can be desired; the addresses of our brethren are characterised by that deep feeling of Christian sympathy which can only be acquired by frequently visiting the cross. What a mercy it is, my revered brother, that we can meet together on the Lord's day, in the all-prevailing name, to partake of the feast which is spread out for us at the foot of Calvary! What a sacred resting-place for Zion's pilgrims! What striking symbols, what solemn scenes! Here are the body and the blood, the bread of life and the wine of heaven. The facts lead us to Calvary, but our faith refers us to that time when our Saviour shall come the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation. How simple, dear brother, and yet how significant, are the memorials which relate to the body and blood! How full of spiritual life is the act which enables us by faith to drink of the pure blood of the grape! It is then when we feel more powerfully the spirit-presence of our Great Master, most clearly recognizing the wisdom of Him who said before his death, Do this in remembrance of me!

As I believe you have been the chief instrument in the hands of Providence of rescuing the churches from the trammels and bondage of useless creeds and tyrannic dogmas, I accept of the present opportunity of tendering to you my most sincere and grateful acknowledgment, and as I only know you through the medium of the press, and the warm-hearted expressions of those who love you in the truth, permit me to express myself in all freeness and brotherly affection.

Personally I feel indebted to you for the many clear and excellent works which you have written in defence of the truth, the edification of the church, and the enlightenment of the world. For while it is true that good old Martin Luther was a chief instrument in giving the Bible to the people, it is no less true that you and your co-peers have proved that it is the Bible and the Bible alone, which is the Book of the Church; and though for this great boon, dear brother, you and others have had to endure persecution, and frequently to be misrepresented, your heart must be cheered with the prospect which both the old and the new already present. The truth is mighty. In freeing the churches from all human creeds, you have been foremost in a glorious work. How the mists of error fly away before the bright beams of the sun of truth. In making the Bible, and the Bible alone, the book of authority from which there can be no appeal, the powers of darkness are opposed, and the smiles of heaven secured. The harsh notes of human discord are hushed, and the soul is soothed with the music of heaven. A triumph has been achieved which in the future shall become more glorious, and the light of eternity, the joy of the angels, and the glory of the enthroned King, shall but confirm the fact, that the Word of the Lord abideth for ever. The signs of the times, and the testimonies from the four quarters of the globe, attest the fact that the fields are white for the harvest, and the faithful and obedient churches will invoke the God of all grace to send forth more laborers, that all may return to Zion with songs and shoutings of joy.

There are many dear friends in England who would love to see you again; they welcome you with all pure and Christian love to their homes and to their hearts. To some you sustain the endeared relationship of brother and father, and as such they love you in the Lord; and were they aware that I am writing to you, they would send to you the warmest expression of Christian love. It is true that a wide sea separates, and other circumstances of a more formidable kind may tend to deprive us of the pleasure of seeing you; but we feel that we are one in faith, and one in the hope of eternal life. Perhaps our difficulties in England are greater than those with which you may have to contend. Our country is older, our aristocracy very rich and influential, and nearly the whole of them are members of the State Church or Roman Catholics. Many millions are expended to promote what is termed the national faith. Still, dear brother, we are strong in the belief that the truth will prevail. In conclusion permit me to say, that I am reminded from the statements made in the Harbinger of the necessity of venturing to give you a little advice. Please, then, dear brother, to remember that you are not so young as you were once. It will therefore be necessary for you to take great care of your health, in order that your valuable life may be spared for many years to come. Time writes truthfully on the brow of the Christian pilgrim the number of years, and the mortal body gives clear intimation of the approaching change. But the Bible, the pure and Holy Bible, bids us put our trust in Him whose years never fail, and who is the same to-day and for ever. By obedience and faith we can recognize him as our Saviour who has conquered death and the grave, and who is the resurrection and the life. Should you ask, dear brother, why I have written, my reply is, I wanted to write; and if at any time you should feel inclined to reciprocate any sentiments expressed in this epistle, you will greatly oblige your very sincere and affectionate brother,

JABEZ INWARDS.

18, Albert-street, Camden-road, London,
Nov. 5th, 1859.

LETTER TO A BAPTIST MINISTER.

My dear Sir,—I am induced to address a few lines to you, principally in consequence of some remarks you have made both in the pulpit and in private conversation. You have expressed surprise, and appear to lament, that the effects of the proclamation of the truths of Christianity are not more visible; in the last conversation I had with you, I asked, was it not possible the small number of individuals now converted, in comparison with the number in the early days of Christianity, might arise from a different mode of preaching being adopted, to that employed by the primitive Christians? You appeared to think the result arose from a different cause—those being the days of miracles, which have ceased long ago. I am ready to admit, some allowance must be made on this ground, but I cannot entertain the idea for one moment, that the arm or power of the Lord is shortened, or that his love for the human family is diminished; and when we take into consideration the number of individuals now so employed, and the comparatively small number 1800 years ago, we might be led to expect very different results: so much so, that I am as fully convinced, as of my own existence at the present moment of time, that some great errors as to either matter or manner, must prevail in the religious community, particularly as we observe such diversity of opinions and practices common among those individuals whose attention may have been called to these important matters. In the days of primitive Christianity—at least so far as we are made acquainted with their proceedings through the instrumentality of the New Testament (and I am not disposed to receive any other instruction as orthodox)—it appears invariably, wherever the gospel, or glad tidings, were preached, the same results followed—men and women believed and were baptized. But if we look around us at the present time, we shall observe that when great efforts are made on the part of the preacher or preachers, and every attention has been paid by a large assemblage of persons, the majority of whom apparently were fully impressed with the importance of the truths advanced, and many were ready to exclaim, “Men and brethren, what shall we do?”—and the preacher, in anticipation of such a question being asked by several persons present, has attempted to give a reply,—how seldom are the results the same as when Peter, Paul, Stephen, or their associates, made known the glad tidings. Indeed the rule of the present time appears quite the reverse of what it was then. What is the cause? There must be one. We are told, “The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation”—or, as I understand the sentence,—The proclamation of the gospel is the means employed by God to effect the salvation of the human family. Now, it is very evident God desires the salvation of men, or he would not have given his Son to die, in order to promote their welfare.

After the manifestation of love which was exhibited on the cross, I cannot imagine it is needful to make those urgent appeals to Jehovah we frequently hear, to induce him to do what is necessary in order to “convert the world”—or perhaps rather some particular portion of the inhabitants of it—by sending his Spirit for that object. I am much more inclined to believe he has already done the greater part, if not the whole, of the work assigned to him, and that it now rests entirely with “mankind to be reconciled to God.”

You are well aware, my dear Sir, most powerful appeals are frequently made to large congregations; the uncertainty of life, the certainty of death and of judgment, the terrors of hell and the joys of heaven, are as fully portrayed as human language is capable of conveying to the mind impressions on these awful subjects. Indeed, my own idea is, fully equal on these points to the oratory of Peter, John, or even Paul himself; but when the attention of the auditors is aroused, their minds and feelings are excited to the greatest possible degree, whoever heard the preacher repeat in an emphatic manner the Divine commission to the Apostles, “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved?”—and the declaration of Peter on the day of Pentecost, “Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins?”—or the words of Ananias to Paul, “And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord?” I much doubt whether, amongst the popular preachers of the present day, one is to be found possessed of sufficient courage to make such a declaration. They dare not trust these words with the people; or, at least, lead them to suppose that baptism has anything to do with their salvation. The ministers are afraid the people should be led to think lightly of the sacrifice of Christ on the cross—of that precious blood with which they were bought—that instead of imputing the position they might occupy in the church, or the kingdom of heaven upon earth, to their redemption by him, they might be led to impute it to the efficacy of the water, or to their own meritorious conduct in submitting to the institution of baptism; and instead of making these declarations, do not we almost invariably hear the preacher urge the individuals who may be convinced they are sinners, to pray to God for forgiveness, and the gift of the Holy Spirit to renew their minds, and effect in them a new birth, quite independent of water, although the Saviour himself declared, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man is born of water, and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God?" The Apostles do not appear to have entertained any fears lest those individuals who were convinced of their standing in the sight of God, should be led to wrong conclusions on this important point. And where, my dear Sir, in what is called the Acts, or Actions, of the Apostles, can we find one instance of individuals under conviction of sin being required or encouraged to pray to God for forgiveness previous to baptism?—or given to understand they had any reason to expect the gift of the Spirit before they had attended to that ordinance? And now, by way of conclusion to this already rather lengthy epistle, I will observe, that I am fully convinced, when the original mode of preaching is again resorted to, we shall see similar results. Men and women will obey the gospel, and go on their "way rejoicing;" and when the members of congregations of Christians, are encouraged to mutually exhort each other, and by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, such will eventually become the subjects of "eternal life."—With every wish for your temporal and eternal welfare, I am, dear Sir, yours in the hope of the gospel,

W. S. S.

P.S.—From what portion of the New Testament are we led to infer, that the soul of man, in its natural state, is immortal? We read of "the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality"—and "the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel"—and of individuals who shall "seek for glory, and honor, and immortality." I think Christians are spoken of as becoming the subjects of it, but nowhere in the Scriptures of Truth are sinners represented as being possessed of it, but rather as being the subjects of eternal death.

LETTERS FROM VICTORIA.

NO. I.

Brother Wallis, — We are all perfectly delighted with the July Harbinger. There is but one opinion with regard to the contents, both from those in the church and out of it. The biblical information, the earnest appeals, and the reports of the progress of the truth from all quarters where the restoration of primitive Christianity has been made known, and more especially "in the dear old country," where so many hearts are beating in unison with our own, in earnest and prayerful desires for the deliverance of our common humanity from the bondage of sin, were very gratifying and cheering. Some of our brethren are canvassing for new subscribers, and I think you will receive by this mail a request for a larger supply. I have been looking for a parcel from you for some time past. Hymn books, we are sadly in want of. Our Sister Dick has returned in safety to us, and has received a hearty welcome, with thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for her preservation during her late voyage to England.—The usual quarterly tea meeting of the disciples from the various churches of Melbourne and the suburban districts took place last evening, in the New Temperance Hall, St. Kilda. The Teetotal Committee kindly lent us the room gratuitously upon the occasion. A large assembly was looked for; but unfortunately the rain commenced to descend on the night previous, and it has continued coming down in a perfect flood up to the time of my writing. Notwithstanding the threatening aspect of the skies, it was gratifying to see more than one hundred brethren and friends assembled under such uninviting circumstances. Very many came from country districts, ten or twelve miles distant, in open vehicles, thereby manifesting their warm-hearted affection to the Saviour, and "one towards another." Our estimable Brother Coles presided, and earnest addresses were delivered on the occasion by Brethren Ashton, Willder, Lawson, Picton, Walker, and others; and by that good, old, and zealous servant of the cross, Brother Service.

Brother Warren was sojourning with me for two or three days last week; he gave a most instructive and eloquent address in the Prahran Church, on Lord's day morning, and proclaimed the gospel to about 250 persons in Melbourne in the evening.

I have sent by this mail two copies of the Christian Times, a paper established not twelve months upon the Union, alias Latitudinarian principles; and you will see by the contents of one number the necessary result of man's basis of union being adopted instead of our Master's, viz.: one faith, one Lord, one baptism, &c. I called upon the Rev. J. Taylor, (late of Birmingham) the editor, and left our July Harbinger with him, hoping he would make some extracts therefrom, especially from Lord J. Russell's speech, and also from the paper read by the Rev. Mr. Rees before the Congregational ministers.

There can be no mistake about the fact of all parties having a craving for real Scriptural union and communion; and we hope, ere long, to see this greatly desired consummation.—I remain, yours in the truth,

S. KIDNER.

Erin Cottage, St. Kilda, near Melbourne, Victoria, September 15, 1859.

NO. II.

Dear Brother,—Since I last wrote you, I have seen the brethren in Geelong, Melbourne, and Prahran. I have to report six additions by immersion (the last week in July) to the church meeting with us, since which, two have removed to the church in Adelaide, and two have fallen asleep. We are hopeful that the truth is making its way to many hearts in this neighbourhood, and doubt not of its success. "Truth is mighty, and must prevail."

Our dear young brother, Edwin Chambers, a very promising disciple, has been suddenly snatched from us by death. He was a passenger on board the Admella steam-ship, wrecked on our coast August 6th. His position on the wreck was hopeless, he being, along with the women, children, and weaker men, on the fore part of the vessel, which was broken off about fifty yards from the main portion of the wreck. The more robust, by means of a rope, regained the main wreck, but most of them only to prolong their sufferings, which were terminated by death from want and exposure. The boiling surf broke over the fore part of the vessel, and all had disappeared before the close of the fourth day. From the survivors, who were taken off the 8th morning after the vessel struck, I have learned how nobly the dear youth behaved; resigning himself to the care of the Lord Jesus, he was blest in the hour of his calamity, and endeavoured to comfort others with the consolations he had in Christ Jesus.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

On Monday, Sept. 12th, our dear sister, Mary Ann Warren, fell asleep in Jesus, after a most distressing affliction of nearly four years, which was endured with exemplary patience. The minds of all her friends were prepared to part from her for a little season; and they unitedly thanked our Heavenly Father for his goodness and mercy in taking her to himself. Her mind was at perfect peace, being stayed on the Lord.

James Magarey, only brother of Thomas Magarey, was also on the ill-fated Admella, and he endured until the 6th day, though suffering from cramp in the stomach: he was passing to another sufferer, when he slipped into the sea; the only rope which they had was thrown to him, but the people were too weak to raise him, and the only alternative he had was to swim for the shore, a mile off, in which attempt he perished. He was patient, benevolent, and self-sacrificing. The Captain said of him, "No one could tell how nobly he behaved; he nursed me one cold night in his arms, and saved my life; he gave to Messrs. Fisher and Rockport his great coat, and so saved their lives." Truly, the ways of the All-wise are inscrutable!—Yours in the gospel,

HENRY WARREN.

*Hindmarsh, South Australia,
Sept. 16th, 1859.*

NO. III.

Bro. R. Service, of Melbourne, writes under date of Sept. 17, 1859, that one has been recently added to the church there, and that they are in anticipation of a further increase. The church now consists of some 45 members, who are walking in peace and love. About 90 have been in fellowship, but off-shoots from the church have commenced congregations in Sandhurst, Warnamboot, Ballarat, &c. The prospects in Melbourne continued encouraging.

NO TIME TO LOSE!

No time to lose! When we are young,
On airy wings the moments fly;
To all things fancy gives a tongue,
And views them with enchanted eye.

No time to lose! Those days have sped
Like dreams of thrilling ecstasy;
Their scenes of transport long have fled,
Their songs have lost their melody.

No time to lose! The years pass by,
They come to be improved no more;
In vain we wish, in vain we sigh,
We cannot squander'd time restore.

No time to lose! The golden hours
Are seeds that fruit immortal bear;
Let others cull time's fading flowers,
And wreaths of earthly fame prepare.

No time to lose! O what is time!
A meteor's glance, an ebbing wave,
A treasure rich, a gift sublime,
And yet a passage to the grave.

No time to lose! A fearful thought!
Let toys to me no more be known:
With this let every hour be fraught—
My time belongs to God alone!

NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CRITICISMS, &amp;c.

THE REVIVAL IN THE LIGHT OF THE LATEST FACTS.—WILL THE PEOPLE HAVE THE GOSPEL?

A FEW concluding words upon the recent awakening and accompanying phenomena, is all we now intend, and, unless new and remarkable occurrences should appear, it is not intended to return to the subject. We have traced the physical effects to their causes, and, in the estimation of many, left nothing unaccounted for. Now we observe that right estimates are formed and largely accepted in every direction. The words of Dr. M'Cosh, at the Evangelical Alliance Meeting, very fairly express the rapidly-extending views of most thoughtful believers :—

"I confess that sometimes when I attended public assemblies, and heard foolish statements made in an indelicate spirit by men who seemed to have no awe or tenderness on their spirits in the midst of such awful scenes, I have been tempted to doubt of the work; but these doubts have ever been dispelled when, without seeking out the cases which the neighbourhood were wondering at, (but rather carefully avoiding such) I mingled freely with those who were cast in my way in Providence, and got into their confidence, and had their experience poured into my ears and bosom. But the physician of wide and diversified experience tells me, 'Oh! I have in my visits seen precisely similar bodily effects, and these have no connection with religion.' I freely and without reserve admit all this to the physician, and I would feel ashamed of myself if I appealed to these physiological phenomena as proofs of this being a work of revival. But let the physician look beyond the bodily affection to the spiritual experience, and he will discern in many—I do not say in all—a mental and spiritual effect which he may not have been in the habit of meeting with in his ordinary patients. He may discern a faith, a newness of life and conduct, which must have proceeded from far other sources than from nervous affection. It is to be remembered that the movement began in Connor, without much or any bodily agitation. It is also a fact that, throughout the whole movement, the number of persons struck down in public has been far fewer than those awakened in secret, and that the number of those who have had no bodily prostration whatever is vastly greater than those who have had bodily manifestations. So far as I can learn, the outward agitation has of late considerably subsided, while in many districts the spiritual work is still advancing, and the flame is rising purely and brightly above the smoke which accompanied it for a time, as the grosser matter was resisting the kindling spark from heaven. The bodily expression has prevailed largely among those who have never been in the habit of restraining their feelings. * * * The revival in Ulster, just because it has been attended in the case of some with such violent bodily excitement, exposes the parties to various temptations and trials, some of them of a very subtle and perilous character. They all have their origin in the parties being led to trust in the physical and not the spiritual work. There may be bodily agitation which does not proceed from even a conviction of sin. Suppose that in a given assembly a dozen people cry out for mercy under a sense of sin, this may lead a dozen more to cry out for mere sympathy without any sense of guilt. This introduces us to another feature of our wonderful constitution. The cry of distress moves those who are not themselves in distress. It is a provision fitted to lead us to feel for those in trouble; but like every other part of our nature, it may be abused. I once saw a boy whipped in school till he fell into convulsions, whereat several others fell into convulsions from sheer sympathy. I am sure I have been in assemblies this last summer where a number of persons being convinced of sin and crying for salvation, led others to feel for a time, though they had no conviction of sin. It is not difficult, in many cases, to discern the difference, which is commonly very marked. But some may, through this cause, have been acclaimed by themselves, their friends, their pastors, or their congregations, as converts, with whom the whole feeling has been one of sympathy. It may turn out that the greatest amount of spiritual good has not been done in those places in which the excitement has been highest. Some may be trusting in the insecure peace ; for it is of the nature of the nervous excitement to go by action and reaction. After a time of depression there is apt to come a time of exaltation ; every one knows this who, after his eyes have been long dry, has found relief in a flood of tears. 'I have got ease,' is often the declaration made in these times to inquiring Christian friends ; and when asked how they know this, the answer frequently is, 'I have found a load lifted from my heart.' But it will commonly be necessary to make a more searching inquiry, 'What load ?' lest the load be mere depression of feeling passed away the natural course of things. We have seen in these times, persons passing, not once or twice, but five, ten, or fifteen times, through these movements of spirit, and their accompanying physical manifestations. I look upon persons going through this succession of experiences as in a very critical state. They should be strongly recommended not to seek for a renewal of these bodily affections, but to strive to rise to the spiritual graces of faith, and patience, and love. (Hear, hear.) I met a young man who had been ten times sick down in the public assemblies. I counselled him for his spiritual good to avoid the scenes which called forth such affections, and I have reason to know that his advice was blessed for good. (Hear.) More injurious effects follow. Persons who have passed three, five, or even ten times through such a series of affections, have their bodily organism greatly weakened. And now persons get into an hysterical state, or may fall into a mesmeric state. I do not speak of a mother as hysterical when she is in deep distress on hearing of the death of a son ; but if she give way to moping and brooding, she may fall into hysteria. I do not describe the strong men who have been bowed down in this movement as being hysterical ; but mainly some persons have so encouraged themselves in an unhealthy feeling as to fall themselves in nervous disease. They may now get a succession of visions, which assume a sort of regular, systematic form."

On one point a little information may be given with advantage. There are thousands of persons, not much acquainted with the past, who conclude that these bodily effects are peculiar to the present awakening. A few facts will enlighten such of our readers as may be of that number. The following out of many similar cases are given from Mr. Wesley's Journal, and clearly shew that the physical manifestations were similar to those of the present moment. One difference, however, is worthy of notice. Now they are attributed to the Holy Spirit, and multitudes have prayed for them ; then Mr. Wesley attributed them to Satanic influence, his conclusion affected the general feeling, and hence it was common to pray that the Devil might be cast out.

"Saturday, April 21st, 1859. At Weaver's Hall a young man was suddenly seized with violent trembling all over, and in a few minutes, the sorrows of his heart being enlarged, sunk down to the ground. But we ceased not calling upon God till he raised him up full of 'peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.'" "Another person dropped down close to one who was a strong assertor of a contrary doctrine. While he stood astonished at the sight, a little boy near him was seized in the same manner. A young man who stood up behind, fixed his eyes on him, and sunk down himself as one dead ; but soon began to roar out, and beat himself against the ground, so that six men could scarcely hold him. Except J. H. I never saw one so torn of the Evil One. Meanwhile many others began to cry out to the 'Saviour of all,' that he would come and help them, inasmuch that all the house (and indeed all the street for some space) was in an uproar. But we continued in prayer ; and before ten, the greater part found rest to their souls. Some sunk down, and there remained no strength in them ; others exceedingly trembled and quaked : some were torn with a sort of convulsive motion in every part of their bodies, and that so violently, that often four or five persons could not hold them. I have seen many hysterical, and many epileptic fits ; but none of them were like these in many respects. * * * Soon after, I was sent for to one of those who was so strangely torn of the devil, that I almost wondered her relations did not say, 'Much religion hath made her mad.' We prayed God to bruise Satan under her feet. Immediately we had the petition we asked of him. She cried out vehemently, 'He is gone, he is gone!' and was filled with the spirit of love and of a sound mind. * * * One woman tore up the ground with her hands, filling them with dust and the hard trodden grass, on which I saw her lie with her hands clenched as one dead, when the multitude dispersed. Another roared and screamed in a more dreadful agony than ever I heard before. Some continued long, as if they were dead, but with a calm sweetness in their looks. I saw one who lay two or three hours in the open air, and being carried into the house, continued insensible another hour, as if actually dead. The first sign of life she showed was a rapture of praise, intermixed with a small joyous laughter."

But not only are these effects found in connection with preaching the Gospel, but they are known to arise from other causes. On this point Professor Hodge has long since written—

"Besides, such effects are not peculiar to what we call revivals of religion; they have prevailed in seasons of general excitement in all ages, and in all parts of the world, among Pagans, Papists, and every sect of fanatics which have ever disgraced the Christian church. We are, therefore, not called upon to regard such things with much favour, or to look upon them as probable tokens of the presence of God. That the bodily agitations attendant on revivals of religion are of the same nature, and attributable to the same cause, as the convulsions of enthusiasts, is in the highest degree probable, because they arise under the same circumstances, are propagated by the same means, and cured by the same treatment. They arise in seasons of great, and especially of general excitement; they, in a great majority of cases, affect the ignorant, rather than the enlightened, those in whom the imagination predominates over the reason, and especially those of a nervous temperament, rather than those of an opposite character. These affections all propagate themselves by a kind of infection. Physicians enumerate among the causes of epilepsy, 'seeing a person in convulsions.' This fact was so well known that the Romans made it a law, that if any one should be seized with epilepsy during the meeting of the comitia, the assembly should be immediately dissolved. This disease occurred so often in those exciting meetings, and was propagated so rapidly, that it was called the morbus comitialis. Among the enthusiasts who frequented the tomb of the Abbe Paris, in the early part of the last century, convulsions were of frequent occurrence, and never failed to prove infectious. During a religious celebration in the Church of St. Roche, at Paris, a young lady was seized with convulsions, and within half an hour between fifty and sixty were similarly affected.

"A multitude of facts of the same kind might be adduced. Sometimes such affections become epidemic, spreading over whole provinces. In the fifteenth century, a violent nervous disease, attended with convulsions, and other analogous symptoms, extended over a great part of Germany, especially affecting the inmates of convents. In the next century, something of the same kind prevailed extensively in the South of France. These affections were then regarded as the result of demoniacal possessions, and in some instances, multitudes of poor creatures were put to death as demoniacs."

It may be worthy of notice that John Wesley grew wiser as he advanced in years, and instead of affording a measure of encouragement to the "stricken ones," brought them under complete control, and sent the demons to some other region.

In full view, not only of what we have witnessed in Ireland, but of a large amount of testimony pro and con., we approve of much of the following, taken from the Daily News:—

"1. There is a revived interest in religion amongst the population, of gradual growth, and of anterior date to the hysterical developments. 2. There is also a parenthetical outward reformation of morals during the prevalence of the physical phenomena, which unhappily retrogrades as the latter becomes familiar. I fear the Chancellor of the Exchequer will not have to provide for the deficit in Excise, which one of our correspondents anticipates. 3. In most localities and families, the most hopeful symptoms of religious character—those which appear less to the casual visitor than to the settled pastor—are in the inverse ratio of the hysterical developments. 4. The physically affected are, in an overwhelming proportion, females and ignorant persons. 5. The physical 'phenomena' are numerous and acute, or limited and mild, in proportion to the nature of the instruction which the subjects receive. 6. They all admit of explanation from Archbishop Stopford's data. 7. The supposed difficulty can be explained 'why they should, almost without exception, result in that state of living which is scripturally termed newness of life,' disappears when it can be affirmed, as I have no hesitation in doing, that 'almost without exception,' they do not so result. 8. Many of the subjects of the delusion are worse than they were before; if spiritual pride and arrogance, self-righteousness and a disposition to prefer their own inspirations to the teaching of the Bible, are symptoms. 9. A diseased state of mind has in some cases been induced, which threatens to become chronic; instances of insanity are by no means rare; and homes, once happy and industrious, have presented scenes at which any Christian heart would ache."

The above remarks were written for our last number, but omitted from want of space. Additional communications have only tended to confirm them. Put, if you will, all the stricken cases among the less hopeful — grant that many of them, though changed, are not brought to humility and meekness—admit that a wide-spread awe, which bound many with the chains of fear, having subsided, they, or many of them, are just what they were — still, you have remaining thousands of hearts which have turned to Jesus, and an open field for preaching the Gospel such as never before existed in Ireland. The philosophy of this was exhibited two hundred years ago by John Howe, a famous preacher of that time.

"If any considerable number in one city should all on a sudden be struck (John Howe uses the word, doubtless, without any physical reference, but the use of it is remarkable) and a remarkable change be made upon them—if several notoriously debauched and dissolute persons should become very serious, sober, praying men—this would be very much observed and taken notice of as somewhat a strange and new thing.

"2nd. Upon such observations the minds of men will be filled with wonder. 'What a strange thing is this, that such a great number of people will not be as they have been, and do as they have done.' 'Such as could drink and swear, and rant with the rest of their dissolute neighbours, are now taken up all of a sudden and do no such thing! Men will be very apt to wonder when such a thing as this shall be.

"3rd. That wonder will beget discourse about it from person to person. It will grow, as we may easily apprehend, into matter of talk, that changes appear in such and such.

"4th. Such discourse, it is very supposable, may put many persons upon search and inquiry, first into the truth of the matter of fact, and then into the tendency of such a thing, whither it drives, what kind of change it is. Is it true, yea or no, that such things really are?

"5th. Upon such inquiry we may suppose there will ensue approbation.

"6th. That is likely to infer an apprehension of somewhat divine in it. When it shall be seen that men are strangely wrought upon, and great changes made in them; and when being discoursed with, and the things into which their spirits tend being examined and searched into, they are found to speak words of truth and soberness, and not like mad and distracted men that are beside themselves, 'sure it is of God that there is this change and turn upon the spirits of so many men.' Sure there is some divine hand in it!

"7th. Hereupon succeeds naturally a favorable inclination towards religion in those who have hitherto been strangers, at least, to the power and life of it. When they see it sparkle in the conversation of others; when it shall be said that men, whatever they were before, are awakening out of this drowsy, dead sleep, and returning from that dreadful apostacy, and a spirit of seriousness, and life, and vigour, begins to show itself, and religion and holiness (as I was saying) shall sparkle in the lives of them in whose conversation there was hardly the least glimmering of it appearing before, this will draw a favorable inclination.

"8th. Hereupon doth unavoidably ensue a general reputation to serious religion, which will signify a great deal to this. When serious religion shall by these means be brought into credit, then the work will drive on apace, and the chariot wheels move easily."

It has been suggested, that though there is a willingness to hear, yet, if the Gospel and ordinances of Jesus are presented in primitive simplicity, it will be found otherwise. That such preaching would bring upon you the opposition of sectarians, who are seeking to "cage the revival," is admitted; but our conviction, founded on facts, is, that people are ready to hear (as they have not been before) the words of Christ and his Apostles. That a man, or a church, may close the public ear by an indiscriminate assault upon the revival, by failing to distinguish between its good and its evils, is freely admitted, and that this, in some instances, has been done, cannot be denied. So willing are people to hear and obey teaching and commands not popular with their Rabbis, that in more than one instance the press has been invoked to stay the evil. Several illustrations might be given, but one must suffice. The Rev. J. Kydd, in No. 1 of a series of publications, says,

"I would not have written one word on the subject had it not been for what he and many other Christians have regarded as the intemperate zeal of our Antipædo-baptist friends. I believe much injury has been done to the souls of the young converts by the reckless assertions with which town and country have resounded during the last two weeks. 'You have never been baptized;' 'You are living in violation of one of Christ's commands;' 'Infant sprinkling is an awful lie; I have no hesitation in assigning hell as its birthplace,' are expressions that meet us at every step. The minds of the converts have been diverted from the grand theme, Christ and Him crucified; and some of them have been so frightened that they have allowed themselves to be plunged into the water."

What does this shew? That in regard to two important points—the proper subject and the action of baptism—the awakened hear and obey. "In town and country"—"at every step," according to Mr. Kydd, something on these points is met with. Not only so, but the converts allow themselves to be "plunged into the water"—so the Rev. Gentleman reverently describes an ordinance of God! True, he says, that "the minds of the converts have been diverted from the grand theme, Christ and him crucified." But the same might be said of the three thousand whom Peter directed to baptism, after having preached Christ to them, on the day of Pentecost. The true rendering of the Gentleman's words is—they have been diverted from his teaching, and are lost to his sect. But any how—and the Lord be thanked!—the people of Coleraine will listen to the truth. What is thus urged concerning the "revival districts" of Ireland, is held to apply to parts of Scotland, and to wherever the revival may have extended. The following from the Christian Advocate, will be new to most of our readers:—

"AWAKENING AT DRUMCLAIR.—The most remarkable awakening and conversion of which we have heard in connection with recent revivals, is that which has occurred at Drumclair, in the parish of Slamanan. In January of this year, 1859, a few shewed in their altered condition, that the truth was making an impression on their hearts and minds. And during the course of a few months from that time, about thirty believed and obeyed the gospel. As this gracious work went on, the interest in it deepened and widened, and the laborers also increased: and the further results have been, that on a profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, twenty-three disciples were immersed in the Blackloch, on the 13th of August, and again on the 3rd of September, twenty-four more were in the same water 'buried with Christ by baptism into death.' Other four have since been baptized in Airdrie. There were hundreds present on each of these occasions, and the impression produced in the minds and feelings of those who were privileged to witness the solemn, yet joyful scene, will not soon be forgotten or effaced. In that little place, with a population somewhat over one hundred adults, upwards of eighty men and women, in obedience to the Lord's command, and after the example of the Apostolic Church, have 'believed and been baptized.' May they stand fast in the Lord, be the prayer of all Christians in their behalf, for the little wilderness has, indeed, become a fruitful field. Instead of the works of the flesh by which these children were ruled when they were disobedient, there now abound among them the 'fruits of the Spirit: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.'"

Here we must close. Let us pray for awakenings everywhere, and be careful not to overlook the wheat because, in the same bushel, may be found the chaff also.

DAVID KING.

CHRISTIAN UNION—MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, AND PHILADELPHIA.

IN Manchester, Alderman Sir James Watts has recently laid the first stone of a chapel for the Wesleyan Reformers. The Rev. James Everett, in his address, said,—

"Many people bewailed the fragmentary state of the Christian world, broken up into different sections and parties, and wished they were blended into one. For his part, he had no such desire. He had no wish to see Dr. McKerrow become a clergyman—(laughter)—or Mr. Mursell become a Methodist preacher, and he had no wish himself to become anything but what he was—a Wesleyan Reformer. (Hear, hear.) He was strongly inclined to believe that the Divine Being never intended them all to go together, or he would have given them the same bias and tastes—given them the same order of intellect, led them in the same providential direction, and placed them in the same circumstances. And then what a monotony would have been presented to the world. They would have been dragging their dull round, like a horse in a mill. No! the Divine Being delighted in variety, and they could see it manifested in nature, providence, and grace."

What a wretched state, according to Mr. Everett, the church must have been in during the apostolic age—"what a monotony"—how the church, for want of sects, (which the Apostle puts with the works of the flesh) must have dragged its dull round, like a horse in a mill. How sad, too, it must have been that the church then had in it no James Everett, to propose the excommunication of those dreadful Apostles, who taught the disciples all to speak the same things, and to be joined together in the same judgment, and who designated divisions carnal — thus opposing what God delights in. Alas, alas! In that dark age there were no Wesleyan Reformers.

But while Mr. Everett is rejoicing in his shame, good people in Birmingham are wanting a revival, and cannot get it on account of that division in which he glories. The following appeared a few days back in the Daily Post. But how uncertain is life! The writer of it is now no more.

"Sir,—It is a joy to believe that the world is becoming wiser and better—croakers and modern prophets notwithstanding—but there is room for great improvement, and few thoughtful men will be found who will not admit that all true wisdom comes down to man in answer to prayer.

"Within the past twenty years many attempts have been made to establish daily or weekly united prayer meetings. None of these have succeeded as they ought to have done, and the best of them have survived but one Summer and Winter. Now we may ask wherefore?

"I address all serious and praying people through you in stating my views, which are the result of observation and some little experience.

"I have not an unkind word to say of the clergy and other ministers of religion, but I fear the difficulty there is in settling questions of precedence and position, have had much to do with the failure of well-meant efforts. I speak to earnest Christian men of all grades, and of all denominations—Why cannot we take a commodious room quite unconnected with any church or chapel; fix upon one or two nights in the week (mid-day as well, or alternately, if thought desirable) and let it be conducted by persons who happen to be present, whether ministers, laymen, rich, or poor? I think many clergymen could be found to meet on such neutral ground, and no doubt ministers of religion of all evangelical denominations would aid the movement, which would be popular, and probably extensively useful.

"If my fellow townsmen agree with me in thinking such a movement desirable, and will write to that effect through the medium of your paper, we could have a meeting to make arrangements for commencing at once.

"I do not urge this on my fellow townsmen because prayer meetings are becoming one of the great facts of the age, but because

'Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
His watchword at the gates of death;
He opens heaven by prayer.'

I am, Sir, yours truly,
R. F. STURGES.

Here then it seems that for twenty years, all attempts to pray together for a revival have broken down, through what Mr. E. terms a delightful variety in grace. To those who admire Mr. Sturges' letter, we suggest the plan adopted by various ministers of several denominations in Philadelphia. Their call is—

"TO CHRISTIANS OF ALL DENOMINATIONS.
PRAYER FOR THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT.

"Dear Brethren,—The thoughtful reader of our Lord's intercessory prayer must mark with deep interest the earnestness with which He prays for oneness among His disciples.

"No less than four times, in that prayer, (John xvii.) does our blessed Lord offer the request (each slightly varying in phraseology) 'that they may be one,' showing how near to His holy heart was this unity among His followers.

"The Apostle Paul, guided by the Holy Ghost, presses upon the Christians at Rome, (xii. 5) Corinth, (i. 10, xii. 12, of 1st Epis.) Galatia, (iii. 28) Ephesus, (iv. 3, 6) Philippi, (ii. 2) and Colosse, (iii. 11, 14) the same unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

"Assured that all believers in Christ heartily desire that His prayer might be answered, and the Apostle's injunctions obeyed, and that those needless divisions among Christians, which are so opposed to the divine will, and which so obstruct the progress of the pure gospel, may be done away, the undersigned respectfully suggest that one day be annually set apart for special prayer, that God would grant that his believing children 'may be made perfect in one,' and that by the operation of the Holy Ghost, all Christians may be so joined together in unity of spirit and in the bond of peace, that they may be a holy temple acceptable unto him.

"Thus humbly approaching the throne of grace, united in heart, with a request so consonant to the expressed will of God, we may believe that the Great Head of the Church, answering the prayer for increased unity of spirit, will Himself lead that church into some measures for the accomplishment of outward union as shall most redound to His glory.

"We beg leave to designate the first Monday in October as the day for such special prayer, and invite our Christian brethren generally to unite in these solemn supplications."

Now these are union-loving men. They are at fault on one important point. Why do they pray for the Spirit to lead them to some measure for the accomplishment of outward union, when the Bible is sufficient—when apostolic examples and teaching are all they need; when, in fact, to neglect the one and all-sufficient platform given in the Scriptures, is to neglect what the Spirit has given?

Several letters, consequent upon the appearance of that by Mr. Sturges, have been inserted in the Post. One of these will shew what, to our knowledge, more than a few think upon the subject.

"Sir,—Your correspondents on this subject generally assume that the way to produce a revival is to hold prayer meetings. Undoubtedly the prayers of Christian people for the conversion of men, are acceptable to God. By all means, then, let Christians meet, at morn, noon, or evening, to pray.

"But how is it that little or nothing is said about other means—about the means? I read, 'It pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe.' And again, 'The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.' Can we improve upon God's way? Why is there not a greater readiness to go into the highways, to the lanes, to the poor, even to the ragged and the shabby, to bring them to the hearing of the gospel? And if the poor are really wanted at our churches and our chapels, why not give up what is too near an approach to the system of box, 2s.; pit, 1s.; and gallery, 6d.—the system of pew rents, I mean.

"Let us see what was the Saviour's idea of the way in which the world might be induced to listen to gospel tidings, and to believe. 'Neither pray I,' he said, 'for these alone, but for them also which shall believe in me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they, also, may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' According to him, the union of his disciples is essential to the world's believing. And yet your correspondents talk of 'the members of all Christian sects.' And perhaps they suggest union in prayer without union in preaching, knowing that in preaching there could be no union, unless the preacher of each sect agreed to hold in abeyance for the time what he held to be important truth—yea, truth important enough, in his estimation, to justify his being part and parcel of a sect. Many of Paul's admonitions have now become quite obsolete; and among the many accounted impracticable things he said, is this: 'Now, I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.' No divisions! No sects! Why, our wise men now-a-days, are telling us of the advantages of divisions and sects!

"Once more; the meeting together to pray of those 'who are engaged in mercantile pursuits' will be of little use, if there be not consistency of conduct when they go back to the shop, the warehouse, or the factory. A mid-day half-hour prayer meeting will not rub off a ten hours' ungodly grasping after money; money, honestly got if it can be; dishonestly if it can't. Tradesmen will only get laughed at by those in their employ for going to the meeting, if these see that they can defraud, oppress, and over-reach in their way of trade. We want a revival, but the revival must begin at home. Let those who go to pray look to it, that they don't hinder religion a great deal more than they advance it, by their neglect of 'good works.'

"Your readers, Sir, can take this letter for what it is worth. If it be the truth, they need not revile the writer for writing it. If it be not the truth, they need not have their serenity disturbed thereby.—I am, Sir, yours very respectfully,

"A PLAIN SPEAKER."

That a daily paper, of large circulation, should almost daily contain something on this important subject, is at least deserving of thanks. The truth will out.

THE FAITH & ORDER ACCEPTED BY AN ENTIRE CHURCH.

THE church in Bond-street, Birmingham, long known as a Baptist Church, and now consisting of about two hundred members, has declared in favor of the faith and order, once for all delivered to the saints. The following has appeared in the Freeman, and also in the Birmingham Daily Post :—

BOND-STREET CHAPEL.—At special church-meetings it has been resolved to have a plurality of elders to take the oversight of the church—to administer baptism without delay to every penitent believer who requests it, on his confessing that Jesus the Christ is the Son of the living God—to afford an opportunity, at the breaking of bread every Lord's day, for mutual teaching—to cease to sanction the singing of praise on the part of unbelievers—to renounce all human creeds—to give up pew-rents and public collections for church funds—and to substitute the designation "church of Christ meeting," &c. for that of "Baptist church." In each instance the church was first asked, "Do you consider this according to the teaching of the New Testament?" and secondly, "If so, are you willing to adopt it?" Mr. Chew has requested that the members of the church and others would cease to style him "reverend."

Subsequently, the annexed resolution was unanimously passed—

That it is our duty as a Christian church to unite and co-operate with all Christian churches in every place, having as their guide and rule of faith the Word of God only; and that with a view to the furtherance of this end, a communication be sent to the Evangelist Committee at Nottingham, requesting to be recognised by all other Christian churches of the same faith and order.

This event at least makes good such of our former notices of progress in Birmingham, as have intimated, that additions to the church in Cherry-street, ought not to be taken as indicating the measure of truth's progress in this locality. In the morning the seed has been scattered, in the evening the hand has not been held back. Time must reveal the result. As we formerly said, "Cherry-street is not the measure of it"—now we say—Cherry-street and Bond-street together do not exhaust its results—the harvest is not yet.

Mr. Chew remains at Bond-street as an evangelist, and will coöperate with us to act upon neighbouring localities.

On Monday, the 22nd, a tea meeting was held in Bond-street chapel, when between 300 and 400 persons, chiefly members of the Bond-street church and of that in Cherry-street, enjoyed the repast. After tea a public meeting was addressed by S. J. Chew, D. King, Mr. Eggington, and Mr. Gilbert—deacons at Bond-street—and briefly by two brethren from Cherry-street. In the course of the evening, the following address was read by Bro. Fraser:—

TO THE CHURCH IN BOND-STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, be with you all.

Dear Brethren.—The church in Cherry-street having been informed of several important Resolutions passed by you, having reference to a return to the order of the Primitive Churches, desires to express its hearty approval of your determination, and at the same time to give thanks to Almighty God for His great goodness in granting to you those favoring circumstances which have tended to your clearer apprehension of the faith and order once for all delivered to the saints. The meetings you have held, the questions you have considered, and the conclusions you have arrived at, produce in the hearts of all enlightened Christians feelings of profound joy and gratitude.

By thus acting you honor Him whom God has exalted, to whom He has given a name above every name, and who has received all authority in heaven and on earth. You honor him! Yes. By answering only to that name, derived from him, and first called upon the disciples at Antioch. Not that by this you value baptism less—rather may it be said that only thus can you truly honor it. How received you the name of Christ? You were baptized into it, and therefore acknowledge as churches of the Lord, only congregations of baptized believers; while many who answer to the appellation Baptist, degrade the institution to a useless ceremony, by admitting to their fellowship, and acknowledging as members, those whom they declare unbaptized.

Again, you honour the Saviour by resolving to honor his laws, given by him and his apostles, and recorded in his one blessed volume. You have made the alteration, not for the sake of change—not because of expediency; but because you would be led by the Holy Spirit through the examples recorded for your imitation, and by commands handed down for your obedience. You thus practically declare, that just as the world by its wisdom could not find out God, and that the knowledge of Him depended upon His Prophets and Apostles—so the Papacy and Protestantism have by their wisdom been unable to discover a basis for Christian union, or a polity meeting the demands and requirements of the age; but themselves bearing witness, after many centuries of experiments, they have utterly failed: thus conceding that the Divine order of things, which has the sanction of Christ and His Apostles, is alone acceptable, worthy, and efficient.

While we rejoice that you have thus resolved, we confess that our joy is damped by the consideration, that the churches professing Christianity are walking generally after their own ways, thereby disobeying the Head of the Church, and failing in the great work for which the Lord desires to use them.

If you are right, they are wrong, and the thought is a sad one, that instead of looking for their co-operation in the assault upon the world, we have a mission to them: we have to call them to obedience—to teach them to substitute the BIBLE for all human creeds—FACTS for inferences—THINGS for words—UNITY OF FAITH for unity of opinion—THE POSITIVE COMMANDS OF GOD for human legislation and tradition. Sadder still the thought, not an offspring of uncharitableness, but which rests upon undeniable facts—that those who should lead to right positions, in various ways, stand in the path of progress—labor to build up sectarian interests, rather than to promote Christian union; and to sustain the cause (their own) rather than devote themselves to the restoration of the Divine order.

After thus speaking of joy and sadness, we express our confidence as to the issue of efforts made in order to a return to the old ways. We hope that the day is not distant when there will be, as there once was, but one body, one faith, and one baptism, as there is but one Lord, one Spirit, and one God. Our confidence is based upon the immutability of the counsels of God. We call to mind the heart-strivings and acknowledged helplessness of the sects, as well as upon the fact that, under the Divine blessing, nearly one hundred churches in Great Britain co-operate to this end, that in the United States upwards of 300,000 brethren long and labour for its approach—that in Australia, Sydney, and New Zealand churches of the one faith plead the one order. In Germany and Italy many churches honor the Lord and his apostles. Ethiopia stretches forth her hands; and that everywhere, throughout the world, the hand of God may be seen working out His own great purposes.

The church now addressing you will add, in conclusion, that in extending to the church in Bond-street the hand of fellowship, and in declaring not only its willingness, but its earnest desire, that the two churches should co-operate in all possible efforts, in order to the end in view, it does so not on the supposition that your church has become part of a denomination to which the Church in Cherry-street is attached—for it belongs to no denomination, but holds denominationalism and nonconformity as nothing less than treason against the Lord. In this view every congregation of baptized believers, holding the one faith, and observing (the one order, is a sister church, whom it is our duty to acknowledge, and with whom it is our privilege to co-operate.

Trusting that by the Divine blessing efficient means may be devised by which this important Midland town and the surrounding localities may be acted upon to their advantage and to the glory of God, we remain, dear brethren, on behalf and by request of the church in Cherry-street, your's in the hope of eternal life,

DAVID KING.—ED. FRASER.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

MIDDLESBORO.—We send 10s. to the Evangelist Fund. Three males have been added during the month. J. H.

At PATHHEAD, near Kirkaldy, since report last month, four persons have been added to the church, after confession of Jesus, and immersion in his name. THOS. HARROW.

SWANSEA.—Our brethren here have to contend against prejudice and opposition. The press of the town will not favor us in the least. The conductors of the Journal promised to publish Bro. Milner's Letters to the People, but owing to some cause or other, they were rejected in a very uncourteous manner. We therefore had 12,000 one-page tracts on 24 subjects, forwarded from Edinburgh, and also 300 on each of the subjects suggested at the Annual Meeting. These we distribute every Lord's day. We conduct seven meetings during the week; one of these is held in the Infirmary, where the afflicted assemble in one ward to hear the Scriptures read and expounded. We have had three additions since I came here, two by immersion, and one restored. We solicit earnestly the prayers of the brethren in our behalf. There are at least 20,000 persons in this town who do not attend a place of worship.—Our meeting-room is in the centre of the town, and is comfortably fitted up to seat about 150. If Bros. King and Milner could spend three or four weeks here in the Summer, we should witness results worth their coming. Our Welsh brethren sent me £1 to aid in paying for the tracts, for which we thank them.—The Wrexham brethren are about opening a meeting-room at Moss, near that town. Will they furnish some information respecting it in your next number?—E. EVANS.

WIGAN.—Since our last month's report, one believer has been united to Christ by baptism, and added to the church here. J. S. WALKER.

NEWTOWN, SYDNEY.—Since writing last we have received five into the church, viz.: a brother and his daughter, a sister from India, and three females by immersion. We do not make much progress, most of the people being either very much prejudiced or very apathetic. In the church we have great peace and love. Our meeting on Lord's day evenings is very well attended. One of the brethren is chairman, another notes the time, and a third opens the subject for discussion, being allowed 20 minutes, and each subsequent speaker 10 minutes. We have thus discussed many of the leading principles of Christianity. We have had a visit from Bro. E. M. Pryce, who is on his way from New Zealand to England. T. GOODIN.

OBITUARY.—We have to announce the not unexpected departure of our aged and truly venerable sister in Christ, MARGARET MERCER, relict of our deceased brother, Joseph Mercer. Our dear sister was the oldest member in the church, being in her 83rd year. She had been a member of the church for upwards of fourteen years, during which time, and until within a short period of her death, she had been a constant attendant on the means of grace, her place among the children of God being rarely vacant. She peacefully fell asleep in Jesus on Lord's-day morning, Nov. 20, 1859. J. S. WALKER.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

THE labors of another year terminate with our present number, which completes the twenty-fourth volume of a periodical originated in 1837 with the object of advocating a return to the purity and simplicity of Bible Christianity. That much good has been accomplished by it, does not admit of doubt; but a great work still remains to be accomplished. We hope, therefore, with the Divine permission, to commence another volume with the New Year, for which we bespeak the sympathy and increased support of our subscribers and the brethren at large. In this work, which we regard as auxiliary to the labors of proclaiming and teaching the truth, we shall again have the hearty support and coöperation of those gifted brethren among us, whose contributions have enriched the pages of the HARBINGER during the past year. J. W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	Page.		Page.
ADAPTATION of the Bible to the Wants of Man . . . . .	421	Bible, the . . . . .	503
Address to the Missionary Society . . . . .	9	Bishop's Office, the . . . . .	217
— on Bible Revision . . . . .	236	Bowes, Mr. on 1 Peter iii. 21 . . . . .	293
— . . . . .	595	CAMPBELL, A. Proposal for Discussion . . . . .
Annual Meeting, Report of . . . . .	460	Disposed of . . . . .	126
Antient Seat and Altar, the . . . . .	261, 313	— Dr. D. R. Letter to A. C. . . . .	126
Appendix (to Discussion) by Mr. Milner . . . . .	294	— Dr. D. R. and his Reply to A. Campbell . . . . .	397
BAPTISMAL Formula, the . . . . .	486	— A. Response to Dr. D. R. . . . .	132
— Winning of the End, the . . . . .	349	— Campbell . . . . .	284
— Bible Education . . . . .	338	— A. in Kentucky . . . . .	399
— Bible, Revision of the . . . . .	212	— President D. R. and President A. Campbell . . . . .	181
— Bible Revision: its Imperative Necessity . . . . .	469	— A. and Dr. D. R. Campbell: Correspondence between . . . . .	487
Change in the Meaning of Words in Common Version . . . . .	472	— D. R. Reply of . . . . .	490
Correct Versions for the Heathen do not Agree with the English Version . . . . .	523	— A. Response by . . . . .	387
Correspondence between the Old and New Testaments Obscured . . . . .	477	— A. Letter from the American Harbinger . . . . .	318
Division into Chapters . . . . .	475	Causes why the Word of God is not More Studied . . . . .	591
Effects of Revision upon Scepticism . . . . .	529	Christ, in . . . . .	29, 67, 105
Expenses of Revision . . . . .	526	Christ's Church Identified . . . . .	214, 280, 339, 378, 417, 494
Expressions Offensive to Modesty in the Common Version . . . . .	521	— Religion: its Basis . . . . .	371, 478
Final Committee of the Bible Union . . . . .	529	Christian Character, Formation and Maintenance of . . . . .	263
Manuscripts of the Sacred Scriptures . . . . .	469	Christian Name, the . . . . .	593
Missionaries Need a Revised Bible . . . . .	522	— Era, the . . . . .	287
Obsolete Words in Common Version . . . . .	472	— Race, the . . . . .	287
Pulpit Revisions of the Common Version . . . . .	471	— System, the, } What is it? . . . . .	540
Punctuation of the Bible . . . . .	476	— Union . . . . .	268
Preliminary Revisions of the Bible Union . . . . .	528	Church Officers . . . . .	234
Profane Expressions in the Common Version . . . . .	521	Churches, Requirements of the . . . . .	136, 173
Respect for the Common Version . . . . .	470	City, the, and Cemetery . . . . .	179
Sectarianism of the Common Version . . . . .	524	Conant, Dr. Address at the Annual Meeting of Bible Union . . . . .	34
State of Learning when the English Version was Made . . . . .	469	— Dr. on Bible Revision . . . . .	236
The Bible Union not Sectarian . . . . .	525	Concluding Remarks . . . . .	620
The Modern Greek . . . . .	530	Correspondence concerning—
Time Spent in Revision . . . . .	526	Baptist Minister, Letter to . . . . .	608
Ungrammatical Forms in the Common Version . . . . .	476	Binney Mr. on Christian Union . . . . .	91
Words Mistranslated in Common Version . . . . .	473	Campbell, A. Letter to . . . . .	607
Words Added in Common Version . . . . .	474	Church at Wortley, the . . . . .	504
Bible, Riches of the . . . . .	190	Has the Holy Spirit ceased Working? . . . . .	39
Bible Society and Bible Union, American . . . . .	389	Holy Spirit, Influence of the . . . . .	89
		— Work of the . . . . .	90
		Influence of the Spirit . . . . .	143
		Ireland, Visit to (G. Sinclair) . . . . .	561
		Messiah's Ministry, the . . . . .	141, 194, 244
		Prayer to the Holy Spirit, on . . . . .	92
		Revival, the . . . . .	559

	Page		Page
Covenants, the Two . . . . .	61, 163	Holy Spirit, the Agency of in Conver-	36
Crowe Frederick, Martyrdom of . .	37	sion and Sanctification . . . . .	36
DANIEL, Remarks on Second Chapter	436	Idolatry of India . . . . .	24
Disciples versus Baptists . . . . .	24	Innocence . . . . .	3
Disciples of Christ, or "Campbellites"	347	Introductory Remarks . . . . .	58
Disciples at Ephesus, the Twelve,		"Irvingism," Lecture on . . . . .	58 were they Re-baptized? . . . . .	402	Items of News—
Discussion on Baptism, Justification, &c.	290	Aberchirder . . . . .	4
Divine Nature of Christ, the . . . .	556	American Bible Union, the . . . .	41
EDITORIAL Notes and Remarks on—		Antrim . . . . .	51
Church in Wortley, the . . . . .	505	Bangor . . . . .	14
Influence of the Spirit . . . . .	144	Banff . . . . .	205, 41
The Father, the Word, and Holy		Birmingham 49, 101, 205, 255, 309, 34	414, 515, 53
Spirit . . . . .	558	Buckly (Flintshire) . . . . .	41
Eli and the Ark . . . . .	18	Castlewellan . . . . .	311, 51
Eternal Life . . . . .	264	Crossgates . . . . .	101, 206, 256, 311
Eternity . . . . .	81, 603	Douglas . . . . .	50, 205, 257, 518, 519
Evangelist Fund: Receipts and Ex-		Dundee . . . . .	50, 205, 257, 518, 519
penditure . . . . .	461	Dysart . . . . .	50, 101, 154, 415, 519
Evangelists, their Position and Work	76,	Glasgow . . . . .	50, 101, 154, 415, 519
110, 176, 219		Gospel in Italy, the . . . . .
"Every Bullet has its Billet" . . .	121	Grangemouth . . . . .
Evils of Sectarianism, Opening Speech		Hull . . . . .
on . . . . .	271	Jersey . . . . .
Exegesis on Luke v. 24 . . . . .	339	Leicester . . . . .
Exposition of the Epistle of James .	430	Leigh . . . . .	362, 519, 520
FAITH and Practice, Scriptural . . .	232	Lisburn . . . . .
False Hope . . . . .	82	Liverpool . . . . .
Family Circle—		London (Camden Hall) . . . . .	50, 154, 415
Beautiful and True . . . . .	104	Manchester . . . . .	51, 258, 311, 519
Beautiful Extract . . . . .	156	Maryport . . . . .
Bells . . . . .	155	Middlesborough . . . . .	416, 519
Children . . . . .	207	Newtown . . . . .	101, 154, 258, 311, 519
Five Minutes, Value of . . . . .	155	Pathhead . . . . .	571, 631
Flowers . . . . .	156	Piltown . . . . .	571
Gathered Lily, the . . . . .	363	Protestant Church, the . . . . .	571
Glass . . . . .	156	Revival Movement in Ireland . . . .	571
Hearers and Speakers . . . . .	156	Secession from the Church of Eng-	571
Home . . . . .	156	land . . . . .	571
I Never Forgive . . . . .	364	Shrewsbury . . . . .	51, 311
Jewish Colony . . . . .	156	St. Hiliers (Jersey) . . . . .	519, 631
Jews, Present Number of . . . . .	156	Swansea . . . . .	519, 631
Knowledge, Excellency of . . . .	207	Tullynasouch . . . . .	519, 631
Never Weary in Well Doing . . .	104	Wigan 51, 102, 260, 312, 519, 571, 631	519
Profanity Rebuked . . . . .	364	Wortley . . . . .	519
Railway Traffic . . . . .	207	Items, Foreign—
Teacher, the . . . . .	155	Arkansas . . . . .	159
Text for Young Men . . . . .	104	Australia . . . . .	159
Thou God Seest Me . . . . .	104	California . . . . .	159
"Thought," the Word . . . . .	207	Canada . . . . .	159
Father, Son, and Spirit . . . . .	545	Georgia . . . . .	159
Friend, Never Forsake a . . . . .	125	Hindmarsh (Australia) . . . . .	52, 155, 206, 519
GIFT, the Unspeakable . . . . .	32	Illinois . . . . .	153
God Owned His Word . . . . .	551	Iowa . . . . .	153
God was Manifested in the Flesh . .	555	Indiana . . . . .	52, 155
Gospel's Power, Fruit of the . . . .	190	Kentucky . . . . .	52, 155
Grace, Faith, Repentance, Baptism,		Melbourne (Victoria) . . . . .	51, 102, 468, 571
Regeneration . . . . .	439	Missouri . . . . .	51, 206
HEBREW Christian's Address, a . . . .	893	Newtown (Sydney, New South Wales) . . . . .	416, 468, 571
		Ohio . . . . .	206, 361
		Pennsylvania . . . . .	206
		South Brighton (Victoria) . . . .	468

	Page.		Page.
Items, Foreign—		Notes on Passing Events, Criticisms, &c.
Texas . . . . .	52, 155, 206, 363	Newly Converted, to the . . . . .	202
Virginia . . . . .	52	One Body, the . . . . .	95
Wisconsin . . . . .	155	One Man System, Another Sample of . . . . .	199
Jesus of Nazareth, Kingship or Lordship of . . . . .	437	Open Communion . . . . .	200
Journal of Sacred Literature on Con- nant's Version of Job . . . . .	400	Pews and Pulpits . . . . .	251
Judgment, the Final . . . . .	382	Plymouth Brethren, "Letter to the . . . . .	410
LETTER from a Father to his Daughter and her Reply . . . . .	875	Popery in Ely . . . . .	100
Letters from—		Popery, Pedigree of . . . . .	405
America (T. Butler, jun.) . . . . .	851, 404, 505	Preachers, Preaching, and Preaching Places . . . . .	307
Bro. S. Swan . . . . .	557	Preaching and Preachers . . . . .	249
Churches, the . . . . .	464	Reformation and Restoration . . . . .	41
Hindmarsh (H. Warren) . . . . .	451, 611	Religious Life . . . . .	48
Jerusalem (J. T. Barclay) . . . . .	296	Revivals and Lunacy . . . . .	197
Melbourne (R. Service) . . . . .	611	Revival in Ireland, the . . . . .	409
Moordialloo . . . . .	260	Revival in Ireland, its Results and Causes . . . . .	507
Prahran (S. Cole) . . . . .	260	Revival in the Light of Latest Facts . . . . .	612
South Brighton, Moorabbin . . . . .	260	Saviour, Our . . . . .	254
Victoria (J. Ingram) . . . . .	245, 451	Scriptural Christianity . . . . .	254
— (S. Kidner) . . . . .	352, 610	Selections . . . . .	203
Letters to the People . . . . .	504, 553	Something for Churches . . . . .	98
Lights and Shadows . . . . .	123	Taking Down the Shutters . . . . .	354
Lord's Prayer, the . . . . .	550	The Established Church and the Church of Christ . . . . .	562
MANIFESTATIONS of God, the . . . . .	345, 384, 501, 605	The Italian Evangelical Church . . . . .	566
Matter Inert Apart from God . . . . .	243	"Thou and Thy House" . . . . .	412
Missionary Enterprise, the . . . . .	323	Words of the Good Shepherd about Sheep . . . . .	454
Moral Science . . . . .	589	Nothing but the Truth . . . . .	498
My Own Work . . . . .	295	OBITUARIES—
NOTES on Passing Events, Criticisms, &c.		Allenby, Everitt . . . . .	102
Baptism: the Law of the Book about it . . . . .	457	Barrie, Mary . . . . .	260
Bible Revision and Dr. Cumming . . . . .	301	Brewer, Thomas . . . . .	363
Cease ye from Man . . . . .	307	Corf, Margery Wilton . . . . .	52
Church Inefficiency . . . . .	42	Croft, Edward . . . . .	520
Christian Union . . . . .	616	Davidson, Sister . . . . .	260
Communion of Saints, the . . . . .	353	Foulds, Mrs. . . . .	52
Confessions of a Foolish Man . . . . .	47, 96, 151, 253, 306, 409, 568	Gaul, Margaret . . . . .	468
Cooper, Thomas . . . . .	303	Hawkes, John . . . . .	103
"Don't"—a Caution . . . . .	145	Howitt, Sarah Hannah . . . . .	520
Dichostacy . . . . .	93	Manfull, Clementina . . . . .	103
Evil Speaking . . . . .	459	McDougall, Jane . . . . .	52
Faith & Order accepted by a Church, . . . . .	618	Meekley, Myra . . . . .	520
Forging Doctrines . . . . .	48	Mercer, Margaret . . . . .	620
Good Deeds . . . . .	48	Skene, Benjamin . . . . .	312
Have we the Bible? . . . . .	569	Walker, Jane . . . . .	572
Holy Baptism, Voice of the Church on . . . . .	247	One Hundred Years Ago . . . . .	343
How to Read the Bible . . . . .	359	Our Being . . . . .	483
Is there not a Cause? . . . . .	357	PEACE, Extract from an Address on . . . . .	332
John Howard Hinton on Preaching . . . . .	452	Penitent Sinner, the . . . . .	83
Justification by Faith . . . . .	304	Peter and the Pentecost . . . . .	277
Lord, Isaac, and the Pastorate . . . . .	45	Poetry—
Lord's Supper and Lord's Day . . . . .	43	Awake, Arise, Thy Light is Come . . . . .	208
Methodism on Trial . . . . .	455, 566	Army of the Lord, the . . . . .	240
More State Church Fruit . . . . .	199	Here and There . . . . .	300
Name of the Lord, the . . . . .	147	Marriage of the Lamb . . . . .	144
		Musings on Lord's Day Morning . . . . .	32
		No Time to Lose . . . . .	611
		Peace . . . . .	364
		Resurrection, the . . . . .	402
		Ruth . . . . .	120

	Page.		Page.
Poetry—		Selections—
Stars, the . . . . .	104	Study the Word of God . . . . .	377
Wishes for a Bride and Bridegroom . . . . .	572	Troubles and Mercies . . . . .	239
Positive and Moral Obedience . . . . .	429	Two Sorts of Peace . . . . .	83
Preaching Required . . . . .	85	Semi-converted Character of Protestants . . . . .	25
Prepare to Meet thy God . . . . .	395	Seven Last Plagues, the . . . . .	60
Promises of God, the . . . . .	166, 209, 332, 531	Shannon, President, Biographical Notice of . . . . .	299
QUEEN Victoria . . . . .	386	Signs of the Times . . . . .	241
Queries and Replies—		Sons of God, Address on . . . . .	441
Communion with other Churches . . . . .	413	Sorrow, Beauties of . . . . .	173
Contention between Michael and Satan . . . . .	87	Soul, the, Cannot be Happy without God . . . . .	10
Job and his Times . . . . .	88	Spirit, Controversy about the . . . . .	10
Miracles in the Primitive Church . . . . .	88	Spirit, Indwelling of the . . . . .	50
Prayer for the Conversion of others . . . . .	413	Spiritual Amendment a Work of Time . . . . .	11
Presenting Prayer to Jesus . . . . .	49	Spiritual Death . . . . .	11
Punishment of the Wicked . . . . .	153	Statistics of the Churches . . . . .	40
Re-baptism of John's Disciples . . . . .	413	State of Learning when the English Version was made . . . . .	40
Revelations xvi. 16 . . . . .	153	Study to be Quiet . . . . .	11
Second Adventists . . . . .	413	Synoptical Expositions of Scripture—
Soul, Immortality of the . . . . .	88	Romans i. 1-15 . . . . .	11
The Seven Spirits of God . . . . .	153	— i. 16-32 . . . . .	11
White Horse, the . . . . .	153	— ii. 1-24 . . . . .	11
Word "Pneuma" . . . . .	87	— ii. 3-20 . . . . .	11
		— iii. 21-31 . . . . .	11
REBEKAH and Jacob . . . . .	222, 336	THEY went out from us because they were not of us . . . . .	11
Religious Growth . . . . .	573	Thomas Dydimus, Infidelity of . . . . .	11
Report of General Meeting . . . . .	460	Thoughts on the Wayside . . . . .	11
Resurrection of Christ, the . . . . .	534, 575	Three Words . . . . .	11
Revision of Authorised Version, Trench on . . . . .	33	Thy Ways are Everlasting: a Discourse . . . . .	11
SABBATH Day and the Lord's Day . . . . .	445	Time, Influence, and Talents . . . . .	11
Samson . . . . .	21, 69, 115, 167	Time, the Voice of . . . . .	11
Scriptures, Obey the, or Perish . . . . .	238	Timothy and Titus, their Official Duties . . . . .	11
Scripture Difficulties: First Fruits . . . . .	157	True Happiness . . . . .	11
Second Advent, the . . . . .	449	Truth, the Spirit of . . . . .	11
Selections—		UNCLEAN Spirits, the . . . . .	11
Activity and Energy . . . . .	321	Union Meeting, a Dialogue . . . . .	11
Certainty of Things . . . . .	328
Cheerful Persons . . . . .	289	VAIL, the . . . . .	11
False Hope . . . . .	82
How to Use a Book . . . . .	321	WILLIAMS, Mary R. Biographical Notice of . . . . .	11
Knowledge and Virtue . . . . .	216	Words from the Work-Table . . . . .	552
Never Envy any Man . . . . .	377
Never Forsake a Friend . . . . .	125	YOUNG Husbands, Story for . . . . .	11
Piety Winning by its Loveliness . . . . .	328	Young Preachers, Words to . . . . .	11
Precept and Example . . . . .	216
Spiritual Death . . . . .	125

THE BRITISH MILLENNIAL HARBINGER, DEVOTED TO THE

Spread of Primitive Christianity.

---

"I saw another messenger flying through the midst of heaven, having everlasting good news to proclaim to the inhabitants of the earth, even to every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people; saying with a loud voice—Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment has come; and worship him who made heaven, and earth, and sea, and the fountains of water" (JOHN.)

---

VOLUME XIII. THIRD SERIES.

LONDON :
ARTHUR HALL AND CO. 25, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

1860.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS,

WE are again reminded, by the season of the year, that the world, and the fashion thereof, are passing away ; but that he who doeth the will of God abideth for ever. A new year already, to some extent, engages our thoughts and feelings. It should occupy us, however, only in subjection to the Divine Government. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy path."

It is not for us to foreshadow how far the ecclesiastical and political institutions of human society may be affected in the year that is now dawning upon us. That strife and division are prevalent in the one, and even predominant in the other, is too apparent to require any argument in its support. It seems as though the bodies politic and ecclesiastic, of every nation, were out of joint with the times, and about to fall into ruin at the approach of some great and important crisis, which, in the providence of God, will, we hope, issue in promoting, in a more marked degree, the spiritual and social welfare of the human family. But the end is not yet.

Amid these shifting scenes—the uncertainty and ever-varying phase of human laws and systems of polity—it is our happiness to believe—nay, to know most assuredly—that the God of heaven has set up a kingdom in our midst, with a Divine Monarch at its head ; that the laws and institutions of this kingdom are perfect, and the privileges and honors of its citizens enduring and immutable. The position and locality of the kingdom may, and doubtless will be changed, at the resurrection of the just ; but its government and immunities are for ever and irrevocably fixed. This kingdom is built upon the legislation of Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone ; and its rich and everlasting glories are secured to all faithful citizens, by oaths, and promises, and blood.

"Those characters shall fair abide,
And justify our trust ;
When gems, and monuments, and crowns,
Are mouldered down to dust."

The British Millennial Harbinger is, we trust, engaged in the humbly advocacy of those principles which are embodied in the laws of this divine kingdom. Its character in the past will best indicate the contents of the volume which we now commence. Any extension of its circulation we must leave in the hands of those brethren and friends who continue to identify themselves with the labors in which we are engaged. There is, perhaps, no religious periodical which has been more frowned upon by certain classes, or which has had a severer struggle to maintain its ground, than the Harbinger. The reasons of this opposition must be self-evident. Notwithstanding the antagonism which it meets with, the Harbinger still lives, and promises to be more healthy and vigorous during the ensuing year than it has ever been.

Primitive Christianity, as recorded in the Acts of Apostles, and more fully developed in the Epistles which these inspired servants of God wrote for the guidance and instruction of the first churches, is what we profess to observe, and seek to propagate ; and, by Divine permission, it is our intention to continue this work in the present volume, as well as in other kindred labors, to the close of life. We shall, therefore, give that prominence which they deserve, to the teaching of the Apostles, and to the practices of those churches which they were instrumental in bringing within the immediate influence of the Gospel ; for in their observances we find that all is simple, harmonious, beautiful, and perfect.

In every age the saints have had a divine creed on which to base their faith—not, indeed, the opinions of fallible men, but the promises of the immutable Jehovah. The devout Patriarchs, and the believing and obedient among the children of Israel, ever listened with becoming reverence to the voice of God. They gladly recognized the glorious truth, that “ the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul ; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple ; the statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart ; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes ; the fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever ; the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold ; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward.” Who, among the sons of men, in our days, recognize and receive these important truths in their full import ? None but the true-hearted servants of God.

We have the testimony of Scripture, that the first converts to Jesus continued steadfast in the Apostles' doctrine, in the fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayer. Let us hold fast to their example in observing the appointments of Jesus. The Apostles taught the disciples whatsoever things the Saviour had commanded to be observed by his followers to the end of time. Thus the doctrine which they proclaimed is handed down to us with the impress and authority of the Heavenly Father, and stamped with the seal of Infinite Love. “ For God is love, and in this was manifested the love of God, that He sent His only begotten Son into the world, to be the propitiation for our sins ; and not for ours (Apostles and Jews) only, but for the sins of the whole world. He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification.” By the first Adam all were made sinners, and therefore became subject to sin and death. But the second Adam, who is the Lord from heaven, “ bore all our sins away ;” and by his death, burial, and resurrection, purchased a full release from all the consequences of guilt for those who believe and obey him. Free forgiveness—the remission of all sins, and the consequences thereof — are presented in the glad-tidings of great joy which are given for all nations, without money and without price. These glad-tidings, it is our anxious desire to make known to all members of the human family.—Yours truly,

J. WALLIS.

JANUARY, 1860.

THE British Millennial Harbinger.

THE TRUE FOUNDATION OF THE TRUE CHRISTIAN'S FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE; OR, THE TRUE AND REAL GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

THE breaches in the walls of our modern Zions are not to be repaired by daubing them with untempered mortar. "Other foundation" for church union, communion, and co-operation, "can no man lay, than that which is already laid" by Divine authority. It was firmly and most perspicuously laid by the most skilful evangelical and divinely-sanctioned Architect in Christian history. Of course we allude to the great Apostle to the Gentiles. It is brief, sententious, and all comprehensive. It is frequently alluded to in the Christian Scriptures, and fully expressed in the following words:—"Other foundation can no man lay than that which is already" (and divinely) "laid"—which is, JESUS THE CHRIST—or "Jesus is the Christ"—the only begotten Son of God. The Lord Jesus the Christ said to Simon Stone—when he made a confession of his faith in Jesus of Nazareth—"On this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hades (the grave) shall not prevail against it."

This immortal church has, then, the ROCK OF AGES for its sub-basis. It is exegetically developed in the evangelical exposition of the predicate of Jesus—a Saviour, plenipotentiary. Jesus is the subject of the grand predicate Christ —or the Christ—which is most simply and sublimely equivalent to affirming that he is the divinely-constituted Prophet, High Priest, and King of Zion—or of the city—the church of the living God—the monumental pillar and the support, or basis, of the truth.

Not one of the ostensible sects or parties in our Greek, Roman, English, Scotch, Irish, or American sections of the globe, is founded on this basis. It may, in a few instances, be found associated with some of their dogmata as a proof-text; but as the basis—the true and veritable basis of any sect or denominationalism, in Greek, Roman, English, or American ecclesiastic confederations—it is not.

There are church associations in Christendom based on five points, and some others on various dogmatisms up or down to the thirty-nine articles of Royal English or Scotch orthodoxy. But orthodoxy is not faith. Thinking right, believing right, and doing right, are not synonyms. They are as distinct and as distinguishable from one another as any two of the five senses are distinguishable from the other three.

Until our contemporaries have learned that faith is not opinion, nor opinion faith, they must continue merely speculative sectaries. There may be as much orthodoxy in hell as in heaven. Satan and Gabriel, for aught that mortals ken, may be equally orthodox. Indeed, the word orthodoxy is not found in the Christian, nor in the Jewish Scriptures.* In all its latitude and longitude it is merely thinking right.

Facts, oracles, precepts, promises, and threatenings, are the materials of Sacred History. They are, therefore, the materials of Christian faith, obedience, hope, fear, and love.

Nor is it faith in testimony, but in that which is testified, that operates upon the understanding, the conscience, the affections, or the life of man. In one sentence, it is not believing, but the fact or the event, the precept or the promise believed, that gives either pleasure or pain, joy or sorrow, hope or despair.

Facts and events, duly attested and fully believed, are, to us, the sources of pleasure or of pain, of joy or of sorrow. When not duly stated and fully accredited, or satisfactorily certified to us, they are just as though they had no existence. We may, indeed, be excited in hearing of them; but until certified, and made credible to us, they are as though they were not, or never had been.

That Jesus is the Christ, in its full and proper conception, is the most potent and prolific oracle that ever fell upon human ear. We find the word Jesus over 700 times in the Christian Scriptures, and the word Christ some 560 times, both applied to the same person. He is, in truth, Emanuel, "God in us," or "God with us," so called only twice, and that by the Evangelic Prophet Isaiah.

* To some of our contemporaries it may be expedient to define this word orthodoxy. The etymology of a word, we admit, is not always equivalent to its current value or significance. Doxa, in Greek, is opinion in English; and orthos, in Greek, is right; twice found in the Greek New Testament, represented in the Common Version by up-right and straight. It is never found in Holy Writ as indicative of right believing.

The Christ, or the anointed ambassador of Jehovah, is the highest official title in the universe. Indeed, all persons, natures, and things in the universe "were created by him and for him." He is Head over all things, and will make all things ours in himself. Hence the inventory of the Christian's vast estate is made out, and summarily reported by Paul to the nations of the earth. It runs in these words:—"All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death; or things present, or things to come; all are yours: and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's." In the name of eternal reason who, believing and realizing all this, would not be a devoted and consecrated Christian?

O, Lord! open our eyes, that we may see and appreciate the ineffable, the inconceivable riches, of the glorious inheritance of the sainted family of God—constituted joint-heirs with Thyself of all the revenues accruing from every realm, and every tenant from every realm, in the entire area of Thy incalculable, unmeasurable, unimaginable universe, which Thou hast prepared, and secured, and guaranteed, and inviolably warranted to each and every child whose name is registered in Thine own book of everlasting life!

Is this a dream? Be it so! It is richer far than all the realities of earth and time. Were it a "cunningly devised fable," it is more soul-elevating, more soul-subduing, more soul-reviving, more soul-exhilarating, more soul-enrapturing, than all the discoveries of all the sages of all the ages inscribed upon the chart of time. Where stand the Homeric Iliads aggrandizing the physical strength and stature of their heroic men? Where stand the Odysseys emblazoning the subtlety and policy of the Grecian mind? On what attitude do these hero men stand in the presence of Him who rose from a manger to the autocracy of the entire universe—celestial, terrestrial, and infernal!

What is the so-called "Christian world" about? What do they for themselves, for their neighbours, for posterity, for the God that made them, for the Lord who redeemed them? Are not the labors of the pulpit and of the press, more directed and devoted to the building up, the propping up, and the keeping up, of their respective little Zions of special orthodoxies and opinionisms, than to converting the world or edifying the church in the most holy faith, the faith formerly delivered to the saints?

The glorious persons of the Godhead—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit—co-operate in the soul-redeeming drama of redemption. "My Father works," said the Great Architect, and "I work," in his building of grace—this kingdom of grace and of glory. It is, therefore, a glorious development of Jehovah Elohim, the Lord our God, in all his moral character and government. It is presented to us in and by all the personalities of the Godhead, not in the forms of philosophy or of theology, but in the attributes, the sayings, and the doings of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Hence, appreciable facts—sayings, doings, precepts, promises, threatenings, are the materials of the Christian's faith, hope, and love, and fear, so far as the gospel is concerned. The last of these is not the fear engendered by a broken law; but a pious and devout fear—"lest a promise being left us, of entering into Christ's rest"—we should, at any time, seem to fall short of it.

But the significant facts of the life, and especially of the death, the sacrifice, the burial, the resurrection, the ascension, the coronation of the Lord Jesus, constitute the gospel of man's salvation. Its soul-reconciling, reviving, justifying, sanctifying, and glorifying efficacy and power are developed in the person, the office, the life, the death, the burial, the resurrection, and the exaltation of the Lord Jesus to the absolute government of the whole universe.

These contain in them the life-giving, the life-transforming, the life-beatifying, the life-glorifying efficacy and power of the true and real gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Arianisms, Athanasianisms, Arminianisms, Calvinisms, Trinitarianisms, Unitarianisms, Sabellianisms are mere philosophies, and whether true or false, at their respective meridians, never saved man, woman, or child from the guilt of sin, from the pollution of sin, from the power of sin, from the shame of sin, of any one sin ever committed by fallen man. They are the skeletons, the lifeless bones and muscles of effete and powerless speculations.

Salvation is a work—a divine and potent work of God. God created the universe by a speech in the imperative mood. He commanded and life began in every form of it—vegetable, animal, and spiritual. "The word that was in the beginning with God, and that was God" created all things. They were "created by him and for him." He is the cause, the means, and the end of every existing form of being. Hence, he inherits the universe. Our Lord, our kinsman Redeemer, is, therefore, the heir of all things, and graciously promises to all his brethren joint-heirship with himself.

The Christian is born to an immense estate. All things in the universe, worth possessing, worth enjoying, are his—the thrones not of earth but of heaven are his. Things present and things future are his, because he is a joint-heir with God's only begotten Son.

The facts of Christianity, properly so called, are pregnant facts—pregnant with riches, large as the universe, and with a glory, honour, and immortality commensurate with every aspiration and capacity of his nature.

What a jejune barren thing is a mere speculation, an inoperative opinion, without one clearly ascertained fact or document to sustain it ! And such are not a few of the so-called orthodoxies of the present living world.

The dogmata or opinions of men, or their inferences and deductions from the Holy Oracles, being the results of their own logical ratiocination, never can, with any grammatical or logical propriety, be called faith. And, strange to say, they are frequently so represented and denominated by the Doctors and Rabbis of the living world. No man living can, in strict propriety, believe any theory. He cannot believe that all the angles of any triangle are together, but equal to two right angles. He may, indeed, believe the mathematician, when he asserts it ; but to understand and realize it by faith he cannot, any more than he could prove the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ by all the mathematics and philosophies of an Euclid or a Newton.

There is not, in modern Christendom, one word in the English language more abused than the word faith. Yet, all are constrained to admit, at least, all that can or do understand the words, testimony and faith—that testimony and faith are correlate terms, at least, so far as faith is evangelically contemplated. Hence, we unhesitatingly affirm, with Paul, that "faith comes by hearing," and that evangelical faith is the "belief of the testimony" which God the Father has, by his Holy Spirit, given to Jesus of Nazareth.

Hearing and believing, as looking and seeing, are inseparable, when the testimony and the light are fully presented to the sound ear and to the sound eye. We may have perfect and imperfect light, and we may have perfect and imperfect testimony. In such cases, our seeing and believing must be imperfect. For, "according to the testimony presented and understood, so must our faith be," is, we may say, almost, if not altogether, an axiomatic truth. Hence, Jesus said, at least, on one occasion, "According to your faith so be it to you."

Faith, then, is, as it were, one of the hands of the spirit of man. By it he takes hold of all well documented testimony and appropriates its value. By his five senses—the five fingers of the other hand of his spirit, he takes cognizance of the material world around him, and avails himself of all its contributions to his animal, intellectual, moral, and religious comforts.

Faith, however, in its legitimate area, is the superlative power of ransomed humanity. It comprehends the whole area of human experience. It cannot only command the whole reported revenues of earth and time, from the first fiat of the Omnipotent to the last act of the drama of humanity upon the stage of time, but borne on unerring testimony, it reaches beyond the last man, the last act of the last judgment of the last day !

It opens the twelve pearly gates of the eternal city, the holy Jerusalem, and describes the names of the twelve tribes of the sons of Israel inscribed upon them. The order and display of grandeur in this scene, wholly eclipse all earth-born imageries of riches, beauty, and glory. Over its twelve gates were inscribed the names of the twelve tribes of the sons of Israel, standing in bold relief ; and under them, upon its twelve foundations, stand in golden capitals, the twelve Apostles of the Lamb. There gleamed and shone and flashed the jasper, the sapphire, the chalcedony, the emerald, the sardonyx, the sardius, the chrysolite, the beryl, the topaz, the chrysoprasus, the amethyst. And in good keeping therewith, the street of the city was pure gold like transparent glass. And for a temple there stood the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb. The glory of the Lord enlighteneth it, and the Lamb is the light of it.

And the nations of the saved shall walk in its light, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and their honour into it. No closed gates are there—no night is there. There eternally flows a river of water of life everlasting, issuing out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. There grows the tree of life producing its fruit of twelve kinds, one for every month in the year—watered, too, by the river of life, issuing from the throne of God and the Lamb. There stand the throne of God and of the Lamb. There his saints worship and glorify him, bearing his name inscribed upon their foreheads. No need of lamp nor sunshine there. The Lord God shall enlighten them, and they shall not only live but reign with him for ever and ever. Who would not, then, rather be a citizen of Christ's kingdom, than to be as rich as Noah when he landed on Mount Ararat, in Armenia, the centre of the present earth, as lord of all its tenancies?

A. C.

SYNOPTICAL EXPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE.—No. VI.

Romans iv.

I HOPE that your more advanced pupils are making rapid progress in the study of Paul's Epistle to the Romans. Be assured that I am not only ready, but anxious to assist them in any way that I can, publicly or privately, in this most important part of their academical course. To understand this one letter well, will be to them of more real service, than to be able to demonstrate with facility all the Principia of Newton, or to read with the utmost fluency all the multiplied folios of Grecian and Roman literature. It is indeed within itself a perfect body of divinity and humanity; and hence, every one who properly understands it, cannot fail to become wise even unto salvation, through the faith of Christ Jesus.

But my object is not to pronounce an eulogium upon the Epistle. I wish rather by a few logical and practical hints to induce all persons, if possible, and especially the students of the ——— Academy, to begin the study of it for themselves. It is one thing to talk and to write about the Bible, and it is quite a different thing to drink copiously of the pure milk of the word, that we may grow thereby. Waiving then for the present, all farther preliminaries, let us come at once to the pure fountain of eternal truth.

Our present lesson is the fourth chapter of this most profound but much neglected letter. In it Paul examines and discusses the case of Abraham. After stating and refuting sundry Jewish objections in the second and third chapters, he proceeded in the close of the latter to develop and to illustrate the gospel plan of justification. He showed that "God hath set forth Jesus Christ as a propitiation through faith in his blood, for a demonstration of his own justice in passing by the sins which were before committed through the forbearance of God: for a demonstration also of his justice in the present time, in order that he may be just, when justifying him who is of the faith of Jesus." And hence he concluded, that gratuitous justification by faith is the only possible way by and through which any man, whether Jew or Gentile, ever was saved, or ever can be saved.

This argument is perfectly conclusive. But Paul knew very well that it did not appear so to all his opponents. He knew that the Jew, alias the formalist, would bring up as a means of its refutation the case of Abraham. And, therefore, he here introduces it himself, both for the purpose of exposing the Jewish sophistry in reference to it, and also in order that he might still farther illustrate, by the life and example of the father of the faithful, the beauty, consistency, and universality of the gospel method of justification.

His whole argument in reference to this important case, may be summed up under the six following heads or topics :—

1. He shows, contrary to the supposition of the carnally-minded Jew, that even Abraham was justified by grace through faith.—Verses 1-3.

2. That the two methods of justification by grace and by works, were not and could not be united in the case of Abraham, or in any other case : and, moreover, that gratuitous justification had always been God's method of pardon, under the Jewish as well as under the Christian economy.—Verses 4-8.

3. That circumcision was not even a condition of Abraham's justification.—Verses 9-12.

4. That the promise of God to Abraham, by which he and his seed were made and constituted the heirs of the world, was inconsistent with the plan of legal justification.—Verses 13-17.

5. His fifth topic is an illustration of the object, strength, and ground of Abraham's faith.—Verses 18-22.

6. And finally, he draws from the case of Abraham, a lesson of encouragement for the benefit of all true believers.—Verses 23-25.

Such, then, is a bare statement of the topics discussed in this very interesting chapter. Your seniors will perhaps regard this as sufficient. They know that a few general suggestions on the subject of a Greek or Roman classic, are really of more value for all the purposes of education, than would be a literal translation of the whole volume. But for the sake of those who are not so much accustomed to logical analysis, I will add farther, a very brief synopsis of the Apostle's argument.

He begins by asking the question which he knew would, just at this point of the controversy, be uppermost in the mind of the carnal Jew. What shall we say, then, in reference to the case of Abraham? If the argument in the third chapter is conclusive, what did even Abraham our father, obtain according to the flesh : using the word flesh in its most comprehensive Hebrew sense, for all that pertains to the flesh?

The implied answer of Paul to this question is, Nothing :—Abraham gained nothing, with respect to his justification, either from the flesh itself or from the works of the flesh. For, says he, if Abraham were justified by works, then, indeed, he would have much reason to boast of his merit. But this would be contrary to the conclusion stated in the twenty-seventh verse of the third chapter ; from which it appears that all boasting is excluded, and that the whole world is guilty before God.

A second reason for this implied answer of the Apostle is drawn from Gen. xv. 6, where it is written, "Abraham believed the Lord, and he counted it to him for forgiveness."

It is evident, therefore, that Abraham was justified by faith. On this point the two arguments adduced are perfectly conclusive. But there has always been a proneness in human nature to seek to merit something by works of righteousness. This is an error into which the believer is liable to fall. Much more, then, would the carnal Jew be likely to claim for Abraham a justification by works of law, as well as by the obedience of faith. And hence Paul anticipates this objection by showing that the two methods are utterly inconsistent with each other. "To the laborer," he says, "wages are reckoned, not as a favour, but wholly as a debt. But to him who does not work, but who believes on him who justifies the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." There could therefore be no compromise or commingling of the two schemes in the justification of Abraham. It was all of grace. "Just as David also describes the blessedness of the man to whom God counts righteousness without works, saying: Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not count sin."

To all this there could of course be no valid objection. The authority of Moses and of David could not be gainsayed. But still the Jew might raise the question, whether circumcision was not at least the occasion of Abraham's being justified by faith: just as the believer's baptism is now made the occasion of his pardon and justification through the blood of Christ. But Paul shows that even this last plea of the Jew is without any foundation in fact—that Abraham was really justified several years before he was circumcised—and that "he received the sign of circumcision as a seal of the righteousness of faith, which he had, yet being uncircumcised—that he might be the father of all them that believe," whether of the circumcision or of the uncircumcision.

This, then, is an end of the controversy so far as it respects the case of Abraham. The Jew can proceed no farther. He is dumb, having no other objection to offer. But the Apostle is not yet done with the case. Having silenced his opponent, he next proceeds to strengthen his main position by an argument drawn from the covenant that God made with Abraham as the father of all the faithful.

This covenant is first found partially stated in the 12th chapter of Genesis, and it is afterwards repeated with some new developments, in the thirteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, and twenty-second chapters of the same book. For a long time, however, its very rich provisions were very much obscured by the typical covering with which it then seemed to be almost identified. But distant objects seem to separate as we approach them, or as they approach us. It was so with the covenants of promise. The typical and the antitypical, the shadow and the substance, became more and more distinct, with the lapse of centuries. But it was reserved for Paul to remove the covering of the ark, and to show that the covenant of God with Abraham and his seed, contained within itself a world of blessings for all the faithful.

It is true that Isaiah had prophesied of the "new heaven and of the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (Isa. lrv. 17-25); that Daniel had said, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. vii. 27); and that our blessed Saviour had proclaimed, in the hearing of the multitude, "The meek shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v. 5.) But it is with the help of Paul's logic that we are enabled to comprehend most clearly our covenanted birthrights; and to see how it is, that "if we be Christ's, then also we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. iii. 29.)

This covenant then, says Paul, so rich in present and future blessings, was not made with Abraham and his seed through law, but through a righteousness of faith. "For," he continues, "if they who are of the law be the heirs of the world, their faith is made void, and the promise or covenant is made of none effect. For the law works wrath." It did so to the twelve tribes. It led them into bondage and captivity. And, in like manner, it will deprive of the eternal inheritance, all who rely upon it as a means of justification. For this reason, then, the promise of God to Abraham was based on a scheme of justification by faith, that it might be through grace; to the end that the blessings of the covenant might be made sure to all the seed: not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham in every age, and in every nation.

From the consideration of the covenant to that of the faith of Abraham, the transition is both easy and natural. If Abraham is our father, it is but right and just that we, as his children, should know something about that faith which is the bond of our relationship. And hence Paul very properly illustrates this in the five following verses. He clearly shows that Abraham was neither a Naturalist, nor a Rationalist, nor a Pietist. Had he possessed no more faith than a Kant, a Semler, an Eichhorn, a Baner, a Gabler, or a Schelling, he would never have been honored as "the father of many nations." But his faith reached much farther and higher, and deeper than his philosophy. Against hope he believes in hope — being fully persuaded that what God had promised, he was also able to perform. And therefore, his faith was counted to him for righteousness.

In like manner, concludes this great commentator, will our faith be reckoned to us for righteousness, "if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."

With this very brief analysis of Paul's reasoning upon the case of Abraham, I must leave to you and to your scholars, the farther practical consideration of this most interesting chapter. You will at once perceive that God's method of justification has always been by grace through the obedience of faith. From the beginning, the grace of God has been the moving or primary cause of man's salvation — the blood of Christ has been the procuring cause — the agency of the Holy Spirit has been the efficient cause — and the Word of God has been the instrumental cause ; while faith in the Divine testimony has ever led the humble, praying, penitent believer, into the enjoyment of all the known blessings of the covenant, through the obedience of whatever God has commanded.

If, then, we would be the seed of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise, we must do the works of Abraham. If, for example, we are required to be baptized for the remission of our sins, that we may enjoy the gift of the Holy Spirit, we must not hesitate. We must not stop to trace and to examine in the light of reason, all the separate links in this chain of causation. This would not be to imitate the faith of our father, who, "when he was tried, offered up Isaac : and he that had received the promises, offered up his only begotten son ; of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called ; accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead : from whence also he received him in a figure" (Heb. xi. 17-19.) "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works ? and by works was faith made perfect" (Jas. ii. 22.)

Hoping that both you and your pupils may enjoy all the present blessings of "the Covenant concerning Christ," and that you may at last enter into the full possession of the eternal inheritance.

R. M.

RELIGIOUS GROWTH.—No. II.

"First the blade, then the ear : after that, the full corn in the ear" (Mark iv. 28.)

THE Christian life is slowly and gradually developed out of the word of truth, which is planted in the mind. The Word of God is the all-nourishing, life-containing seed from which all moral goodness and spiritual beauty unfold. In the truth are hid all the graces and virtues which can be attained by man, under the present conditions of his being. The loftiest reach of the human intelligence, the divinest form of moral loveliness, which can ever adorn the persons of the good, have their roots and their life in the word of the living and true God. The Holy Scriptures are the light of the spirit that is in us : the all-working, all potent instrument of our illumination, growth, elevation above sin and ignorance into the salvation of Christ, and the living joys of fellowship and communion with the great and everlasting Father. But our minds do not make a sudden and complete transition into all this light and life.

The truth is unfolded in us most gradually. The mind is always in a transition state—passing from one point of truth to another—journeying on from “glory to glory.” We are ascending the lofty mount of God—and though great may be the distance already gained, there are vast heights above us to be reached. And though now and then a gleam from the temple of light, on the distant summit, may have fallen on a few eyes, no one has yet gazed upon its unspeakable beauties; but every step of the ascent brings us nearer to the temple: the gleams from its shining glory multiply to the eye, and we journey on amid an increasing halo, and catch the strains of music from the singers who rejoice within the pearly gates.

In thus speaking, we suppose that the Christian had formed the habit, and perseveres in it, of reading and studying the Holy Scriptures. Any one who is indifferent to the constant study of the Bible is making no progress. His religious development is arrested—and he fades like those late flowers which bloom after the last gleaming of the vintage, and gathering of the harvest.

If the young convert or the disciple, at any stage of his career, cease to meditate on the Divine word, that moment his spiritual life dwindles into sickness and death. Christians are in a state of pupillage during their earthly life. Their minds must be constantly renewed—their capacity and demand for divine wisdom increasingly stimulated and supplied.

In our transition state errors of conception, and errors in conclusion are inevitable. Nor can these errors be corrected until we reach a larger share of truth. And then, even, when a golden stream of light enables the eye to see new objects in the heavens, another, and another transition must be made, in making which there will be upon us again the dark wreaths of mist. But if we make the manly struggle, the disinterested effort, coupled with prayer to the source of all wisdom and knowledge, these wreaths of mist will pass away, and another pathway of light will lead us on.

The fact ought to teach us humility, and charitable forbearance with the opinions of our Christian brethren. For ages the church has made opinions matters of guilt and ecclesiastical censure. This is wrong, at least, in a general point of view. To suppress error of opinion, is to suppress the progress of the mind in the truth. The mind must grapple with error, and in a greater or lesser degree must be temporarily led astray by it, if it would possess the crown of truth. And the mind cannot be violently forced to the perception of truth. Another person may aid and help it, but each one of us must work our way into the light. During the temporary failure of the mind to see truth, the church is too often employed as an instrument to crush the unfortunate child of error. Such was not the conduct of the Saviour. His patience, condescension, and forbearance with the disciples, whose ignorance often defied immediate instruction, are one of the most beautiful features of his life. He knew the human mind—and never fretted its slowness to discern—never despaired of its triumph over the obstacles which for a time put an end to its progress. He trusted much to time and reflection—and more to the few simple ideas of truth already shining in the heart. Why cannot we follow so beautiful an example of a life, that is a more powerful means of illuminating the benighted minds of men, than church censures, and eloquent invective?

It is an animating reflection, that if we are true to our Christian profession, we are ever passing to higher and more glorious spheres of truth. The immortal soul is ever enlarging itself—ever conquering its enemies, ever rising above the clouds and muddy waters of ignorance, and bathing in the clear transparent atmosphere of eternal truth. The true follower of Christ desires the whole infinitude of wisdom and knowledge. Through the process of his earthly pupillage, he is preparing to enter beyond the veil, and to see the Great Teacher face to face. There, his soul shall drink of the fountain of truth, and live for ever upon the healing water.

J. W. Cox.

Surely they do not truly love Christ who love anything more than Christ.

True friends do not require continual petting to keep them in a good humor.

CONVERSATION BETWEEN TWO BAPTISTS, THOUGHTFUL AND CAUTIOUS.

THOUGHTFUL.—Good evening, Bro. Cautious : I am happy to see you. I have been thinking about a great many things this evening—the prosperity of Zion—the success of the Baptist cause in general, but in Kentucky in particular. Have you read Bro. D. R. Campbell's last reply to the Bishop of Bethany ?

CAUTIOUS.—I have read the Doctor's reply with great interest and profit.

T.—The Doctor managed the thing very nicely. At the beginning I did not see how he was to get through ; but, thank God, he is out at last—he is out. I think, Bro. Cautious, that the Doctor made as few blunders as any other man under the circumstances would have made. His criticism—well, let it go—he gave it a nice turn ; if he was caught in a tight place, he has convinced thousands of Baptists—at least, so I think—that Alexander Campbell is not the first scholar of the age.

C.—The Doctor's insisting on a written discussion was fine ; but the long string of questions designed, you know, to lead Mr. Campbell off, and divert his readers from an oral discussion, was the best turn Bro. D. R. C. made from the beginning to the close of the correspondence. I told some of our watchmen on the walls of Zion to say to the Doctor, be cautious ; make the best of it : but for God's sake keep out of either an oral or a written discussion.

T.—Dr. Campbell, Brethren Ford, Graves, Crowell, and Sands, should be supported by the Baptists ; and there is Bro. Fisher, too ; they are all efficient men, and constitute an able corps of leaders. I thought at one time that Brethren Graves and Ford would go by the board, but the brethren are standing by them now. I do not see how we can get along without these brethren ; they get down to the work — a work important to be done just at this time, which some of our more benevolent and tender-hearted brethren are unwilling to perform.

C.—Brother J. Graves is not quite cautious enough ; he speaks at random sometimes, but he is doing the Baptist cause, the cause of truth, good service. Bro. Ford will, I think, hereafter be more cautious. Bro. D. R. Campbell was not sufficiently guarded in some statements which he made in reference to A. Campbell, as one of the revisers employed by the Bible Union. Bro. Thoughtful, what was the impression which was made upon your mind, on reading the Doctor's letter to Mr. Campbell, published in the Millennial Harbinger ?

T.—To be candid, Bro. Cautious, from the drift of the Doctor's letters, I was led to believe that Mr. Campbell's work, as one of the primary revisers, had passed into the hands of the Final Committee, and had formally been rejected. I was forced to the conclusion from the following statements of the Doctor :—“In view of your charlatanry, your empiricism, I no longer wonder at the humiliating ordeal you have been made to pass within the last few years. Your vain assumptions and pretensions to scholarship which you were found not to possess, occasioned the mortification. That was a sad day for your pride, when your work came into comparison with that of true scholars, in the hands of competent judges ! From that moment the long worn mask was removed, the long kept-up delusion was dispelled. The stern stuff of true critical knowledge, of articulate scholarship, was discovered not to be there ! It was found that whatever Alexander Campbell claimed or pretended to be, he is not a scholar ! He has had to learn that, beyond the pale of his own communion, the days of fustianism in scholarship are gone. He has been weighed in the balances and found wanting.” “It might be in place, indeed, for him to improve his own sad experience, and exhort his brethren, who may have imbibed too much of his own spirit, to addict themselves to the patient study of the elementary principles of true learning, if they would enjoy the permanent honor of being ranked among true Christian scholars.”

C.—That was the impression which was made upon my mind at the time I read the letter referred to. I soon found that the impression was general. The Baptists were exultant, you know—the Pædos were jubilant ; and I thought that the Campbellites looked a little down in the mouth.

I am sorry, very sorry, Bro. Thoughtful, that we did not understand the Doctor. I said to some of the brethren, last Spring, be cautious, brethren ; this news, I am afraid, is too good to be true.

T.—Bro. Cautious, some of our own brethren have talked and written too much. There was Bro. Wykoff ; he had to write a letter to Professor Pendleton. I was astonished when I read his letter in the Harbinger. The matter had been fixed before his letter appeared.

C.—Just so. I have not mentioned the matter to a living soul since his letter appeared. I have been as silent as the grave. Have you said anything about the matter since, Bro. Thoughtful ?

T.—Never opened my lips on the subject since Bro. Wykoff's letter appeared. Don't expect—

C.—But you know, Bro. Thoughtful, the Doctor says in his last letter to Mr. Campbell, that he did not refer, in his previous reply, to the fate of Mr. Campbell's work, as a reviser, but to his (A. Campbell's) own fate. I am sorry that the Doctor was not more cautious in the use of words to express his meaning.

T.—O, yes ; the Doctor does say in his last letter that he did not refer to the labours of A. Campbell as a translator, but to his own fate ; that is, Mr. Campbell is not on the Final Committee ; therefore he is not a scholar. How do you like his syllogism, Bro. Cautious ?

C.—The Doctor's syllogism ?

T.—Yes ! The Doctor proves by a syllogism that A. Campbell is no scholar.

C.—Ah ! indeed !

T.—Certainly. Here it is ! None but scholars are on the Final Committee ; A. Campbell was one of the primary revisers ; but he is not on the Final Committee : therefore, A. Campbell is no scholar. Bro. Conant was one of the primary revisers, and he is on the Final Committee : therefore he is a scholar.

C.—Good ! very good ! But—see here, Bro. Thoughtful, it is not known whether Bro. D. R. C. was one of the primary revisers ; but it is well known (among Baptists, at least) he is not on the Final Committee : therefore—well —I was going to say that the Doctor's syllogism proves that every word that Mr. Campbell has said about Bro. D.

R. C. is true, viz. : that the Doctor is a poor scholar at best. Let us be cautious, very cautious, Bro. Thoughtful.

T.—O, no ! I have no idea of thrusting the Doctor's syllogism into the teeth of the Campbellites ; by no means. I just thought I would mention it to you ; but we must hold up the Doctor's hands. Bro. Cautious, I think he is sound in the faith now. His letters to Mr. Campbell have convinced me that he has the right spirit ; he is a good Baptist.

C.—Sound in the faith ! What do you mean ? Has not Bro. D. R. C. always been a sound Baptist ?

T.—Well—yes—I reckon so ; but when the Doctor was soliciting for our college at Georgetown, I thought that he was a little too familiar with Campbellites ; it was a stretch of policy, I guess, in the Doctor ; for you know that it was by the hardest rubbing and scrubbing, and by the aid of others, that he succeeded in obtaining the necessary funds ; but, thank God, we have a pretty fair endowment now ; and the Doctor has fully atoned for his conduct. I regard him as orthodox.

C.—I told some brethren, when the Doctor was soliciting, that our President ought to be cautious. Some complained : others said it was a matter of policy. Have you heard, Bro. Thoughtful, that the Kentucky University, the Campbellite institution, located at Harrodsburg, is in full blast, with an endowment of two hundred thousand dollars ? Bowman—I believe that is his name—is still in the field soliciting for the college. When and where the man will stop, the Lord only knows. Some think he will quit at three hundred thousand ; but it will not surprise me (rising to his feet) if he get five hundred thousand ! I can't for the life of me understand these Campbellites. They have seventy-five or a hundred thousand members in Kentucky ! In Scott county three or four hundred have joined them within the last few months. I thought that Bro. Graves, then Bro. Ford, and then Dr. Campbell, had done for Campbellism in Kentucky.

T.—Come, Bro. Cautious, you are excited ; more excited than I remember ever to have seen you before. Be calm.

C.—Well, well ! perhaps I am. I will call to-morrow evening, if the Lord will. (In a whisper.) Let us be careful, Bro. Thoughtful ; there may be something yet behind the scene in regard to Mr. Campbell and the Final Committee.

T.—Come to-morrow evening, and bring Bro. Zealous. We can then talk these matters over at greater length. Good evening.

SECOND EVENING.

T.—Walk in, Bro. Cautious. You have arrived in good time. I trust you have many good things with which to entertain us this evening. But where is our beloved Bro. Zealous ?

C.—I saw Bro. Zealous to-day ; told him of our interview last evening, and the contemplated meeting to-night. He promised to come. I had but little conversation with him.

T.—I have just finished reading Dr. Campbell's reply to Bro. Otis, editor of the Western Recorder. I think the Doctor's feelings are a little ruffled. Have you read the editor's remarks, and Bro. D. R. C.'s reply ?

C.—If you refer to Bro. Otis's remarks about Dr. Campbell's communing with Pædo-baptists, in Spurgeon's church, London, I have read the editor's remarks, and the Doctor's answer.

T.—That is what I refer to, Bro. Cautious ; do you justify Bro. D. R. C.'s course on that occasion ? It does seem to me that the Doctor's theory and practice do not harmonize. It is true, he persists in saying he is a close communionist ; but in practice is he not an open communionist ? Actions speak more loudly than words. Mr. Spurgeon, he tells us, is a good, sound Baptist : his practicing open communion "is a practical error." The Doctor communed with unimmersed persons ; is he not equally guilty with Mr. Spurgeon of practical error ?

C.—Well, yes. Be cautious, Bro. Thoughtful ; the Campbellites are already making capital of it. One said to me but a few days since, "Do you think Alexander Campbell a close communionist ?" I understood him, and was cautious enough to turn away in silence ; but I heard him say as I walked off, "I wonder what he thinks of Dr. Campbell ?"

T.—I can tell you what he thought : if Alexander Campbell, as our beloved President says, has wheeled into the ranks of the close communionists, Bro.

D. R. C. has wheeled into the open communion ranks.

C.—My doctrine is, never to talk with Campbellites on religion — never to hear them preach ; to keep away from their meetings ; to let them be unto the Baptists as heathens and publicans : for when a Baptist gets into an argument with a Reformer, it is rung into his ears, "Can't believe without evidence ; if there is an influence distinct from, and above the truth, differing from moral suasion, give me a 'thus saith the Lord.'" They are as impertinent as Satan himself.

T.—I think the Baptists are beginning to understand [their duty. Our preachers have had a hard time to make our people know that they are not to go to the meetings of the Reformers, since our mass meeting last year ; and that meeting was a glorious triumph for the Baptist cause in Kentucky. Our members are a little shy about attending the meetings of the Campbellites.

C.—Yes, my dear brother ; our mass meeting was a glorious meeting ! It does seem to me now, after all that has been done, if a Baptist goes to a Campbellite meeting, he ought to be admonished ; severely reprimanded. I believe, Bro. Thoughtful, that every Baptist church ought to have a standing committee, whose duty it should be to see to this matter ; also, that the said committee be allowed by the preacher to occasionally hear Campbellites preach, that the Baptist preacher in charge may be thoroughly posted in all things pertaining to the welfare of Zion ; and thus enable him to expose Campbellism before his own flock.

T.—Do embody all you have just said, Bro. Cautious, in a resolution, and present it to our next mass meeting. It is true, a majority of our churches are practically carrying out the great truths you have just uttered ; but let it be officially announced that every Baptist church in Kentucky must have a standing committee, whose duties you have so impressively described, and my word for it, Bro. Cautious, Campbellism in Kentucky is dead !

ZEALOUS.—Good evening, brethren. I have good news : Bro. D. R. Campbell has replied to the Bishop of Bethany at last ; and I must express myself on the merits of his answer before either of you utter a word. I think, for hard arguments, and soft words, his reply is the finest specimen in the English language. The Doctor is one of the most logical, argumentative, eloquent, and literary writers of the age. He has literally demolished Alexander Campbell. His language is copious and chaste—his comparisons are classic, so very classic. Pat, the Irishman, in the clutches of the Scotch policeman; the snubbing school boy is the great Bishop of Bethany; and the little fellow who made the big boy snub, is the Doctor; the big boy who had whipped all the great ones in another school, was the Doctor, just as Mr. Campbell whipped Walker, McCalla, Owen, Bishop Purcell, and N. L. Rice. I do believe in my heart, brethren, that Dr. Campbell is the greatest man living or dead. I don't care if he did commune with Pædobaptists, in the great Mr. Spurgeon's church, in the city of London.

C.—Your fine eulogy, Bro. Zealous, on Dr. Campbell, will do here. Be cautious how you praise the Doctor before everybody.

T.—Yea, Bro. Zealous, be wise as a serpent, but harmless—that is, in the presence of Reformers, think before you speak.

Z.—I intend that everybody shall know that Bro. D. R. Campbell is the smartest man in the world; that he is the most finished scholar; the most polished and refined gentleman; in a word, he is the most eloquent, elegant, and chaste writer of this or any other age. Furthermore, I expect to let the Reformers know that Alexander Campbell is no scholar.

C.—Bro. Zealous, you are young and inexperienced; it will not be prudent for you to tell everybody that Mr. Campbell is no scholar.

Z.—Does not Dr. Campbell say that he is no scholar? The Doctor's word is enough for me. When I urged that the Doctor should meet Mr. Campbell in debate, I was gravely told by some old and experienced brethren, it will not do, Bro. Zealous, for Bro. D. R. C. to meet Mr. Campbell in an oral debate (they intimated that the Doctor had expressed himself to that effect); but I am not afraid nor ashamed to tell the Campbellites that our President is Mr. Campbell's superior in every respect. When Lard, of Missouri, was in Kentucky, he preached a week in Georgetown; old and experienced brethren counselled as usual. What did they do? Nothing. A man of the world had the impudence to say to me, Lard, of Missouri, has been preaching in Georgetown. I am told he made the Baptist preachers around about there "squat," to use his own stupid language; and, said he, I have not heard a word from one of your preachers, except a little squib in the Western Recorder, and that was without form or comeliness, deficient both in manner and matter. But, (he continued) I reckon we shall hear from them after Lard is gone; as much as to say, our preachers (including our much beloved President) will keep quiet while Lard is about. I expressed myself freely, when Lard was in Kentucky, to a group of old brethren, and they said we had better let Lard alone; we don't believe in debates nohow; but we will have your Mr. Lard duly attended to after he is gone, at the school houses and country churches.

T.—(Rising up.) Brethren, it is nine o'clock. Let us adjourn.

Z.—Good evening, brethren.

C.—Bro. Zealous, be cautious; for heaven's sake be on your guard?

Z.—Well, brethren, all I have to say is, Bro. D. R. Campbell is the smartest man now on the face of the earth, if he did commune with the Pædobaptists in the great Mr. Spurgeon's church.

T.—Bro. Zealous is full of godly zeal.

C.—I am afraid his zeal may lead him too far; we must watch him; he is such an admirer of the Doctor. Bro. D. R. C. is the man to quiet him; he will lecture him the first time he gets a chance. The Doctor is a good manager.

T.—Bro. Cautious, don't let this be our last interview: we have been a little interrupted by Bro. Zealous this evening; but come again.

C.—Thank you. Good bye.

T.—Farewell, Bro. Cautious.

J. W. H.

The more the soul is conformed to Christ, the greater will be its interest in him.

The desire of the conversion of souls is nothing else but spiritualized humanity.

THE BIBLE INTRODUCES US TO GOD.

Nor the Pagan's polluted tancy, nor the philosopher's anima mundi, but the one eternal, supreme, infinite Intelligence, who burns with consuming fire against the evil, and glows with eternal joys for the just—whose hand guides every star and opens every bud—whose breath is alike in the roar of the mountain storm and the sigh of the quiet sea—who follows the wandering prodigal and watches the infant's pillow, while he marshals the ranks of angels and orders the worlds on high—who hath revealed himself in Jesus and made an atonement for sin; thus bridging the gulf between himself and man. Here is the most glorious of all truths, the comprehension of all; a truth in which the mind may range for ever, and still see before it fields of undiscovered glory; a truth sufficient to engage and energize a universe of minds for ever. This truth is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; but every revolving moment, every new object, presents it in some new aspect and unfolds its burning glory. Every new struggle of a redeemed militant soul, and every flutter of the pinions of the saved, triumphant, and ascending spirit in heaven's eternal sunlight, makes this great truth a more deep, more glorious, and more interesting mystery. Is there not power in it to raise the mind to the loftiest regions of thought, and hold it spell-bound there; to swell the heart into grand proportions, move it with supernatural might, and fit it either for the intensest sufferings, or highest achievements of humanity? Answer, ye Luthers in bondage—ye martyrs in fire!

This great thought not only girds up the soul, but suggests the true path to science; indeed, it gives to science a centre, and binds all its departments together by indissoluble bonds.

Men knew but little of natural science where the Bible was not known, though they had the same faculties and senses as we. No wonder; they had gods many, and lords many. Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto divided the realms of nature among themselves; in the supernal courts there were plots and politicians: and who could say what a day would bring forth in heaven, earth, or hell? Moreover, each realm had its subdivision, and each subdivision its local deity. The operations of nature were mysterious; none would venture to investigate them with daring and hope, for he might be intruding into the chambers of a jealous goddess; or if he found her secrets, he might derive no further advantage from them after he had crossed a stream or ascended a mountain. How different the feelings of the Christian philosopher who looks through nature to the one living and true God: Nature, he cries, is one, for her God is one; there must be harmony and simplicity in her laws. There sits Newton in his garden, the apple falls before him, and his mind is led to think of the power which brought it down. He thinks not of some wood-nymph, called into existence with the tree's opening blossoms to take charge of its leaves and fruit, but of some law which the Maker of all things has ordained; he observes that gravity does not sensibly diminish at the tops of the highest trees, nor the roofs of the loftiest buildings, nor the summits of the highest mountains; why not, then, extend to the moon? If so, does it not hold her in her orbit? May it not hold other planets in their spheres? May it not be the solution of the great problem of the universe? What gave Newton the boldness to bound upward from the tree to the mountain top, from the mountain-top to the moon, from the moon to the farthest planet in space? What but the faith that he was travelling through the dominions of one monarch, over which one law was outstretched?

Again: the Christian says, "God is wise;" hence, even where all appears to be confusion, he can study for order, as the young statuary hovers over the Apollo for beauty, sure that it is there.

The Pagan had no assurance of the stability of science; for his gods were fickle, and subject to change. The Christian, amid all changes, sees the same Intelligence presiding and carrying forward his purposes by invariable laws. Whether the earth stands in the water, whether the heavens shine tranquilly or pass away with a great noise, the Christian expects, his possessions of truth, moral or natural, to be like God, eternal.

PRESIDENT THOMPSON.

APOSTOLIC EXHORTATION AND TEACHING.

TO THE BRETHREN AT PHILIPPI.

ONLY live worthy of the Glad-tidings of Christ, that whether I come and see you, or be absent, I may hear concerning you, that you stand firmly in one spirit, contending together with one mind for the faith of the Glad-tidings, and nowise terrified by its enemies; for their enmity is to them an evidence of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that from God. For to you it has been given, on behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake; having the same conflict which once you saw in me, and which now you hear that I endure.

If, then, you can be entreated in Christ, if you can be persuaded by love, if you have any fellowship in the Spirit, if you have any tenderness or compassion, I pray you make my joy full; be of one accord, filled with the same love, of one soul, of one mind. Do nothing in a spirit of intrigue or vanity, but in lowliness of mind let each account others above himself. Seek not your private ends alone, but let every man seek likewise his neighbour's good.

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery* to be equal with God, but stripped Himself (of His glory) and took upon Him the form of a slave, being changed into the likeness of man. And having appeared in the guise of men, He abased Himself and shewed obedience, even unto death, yea, death upon the cross. Wherefore God also exalted him above measure, and gave Him the name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus "every knee should bow," of all who dwell in heaven, in earth, or under the earth, and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Wherefore, my beloved, as you have always obeyed me, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who works in you both will and deed. Do all things for the sake of goodwill, without murmurings and disputings, that you may be blameless and guileless, the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of "a crooked and perverse generation," among whom ye shine like stars in the world; holding fast the Word of Life, that you may give me ground of boasting, even to the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain.

But though my blood be poured forth upon the ministration of the sacrifice of your faith, I rejoice for myself, and rejoice with you all; and do ye likewise rejoice, both for yourselves and with me. But I hope in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus to you shortly, that I also may be cheered by learning your state; for I have no other like-minded

* Οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἠγήσατο. This very difficult expression admits of the translation adopted in the Authorised Version, from which therefore we have not thought it right to deviate. The majority of modern interpreters, however, take ἀρπαγμὸν ἠγείσθαι as equivalent to ἀρπαγμα ἠγείσθαι, a phrase which was used by some Greek writers, (referred to by Wetstein) with the meaning to reckon a thing as a booty, to look on a thing as a robber would look on spoil. It is a considerable (though not a fatal) objection to this view, that it makes ἀρπαγμός, (properly, the act of seizing) identical with ἀρπαγμα (the thing seized): see Meyer, in loco. The Authorised Version is free from this objection, but it is liable to the charge of rendering the connection with the following verse less natural than the other interpretation. If the latter be correct, the translation would be, I.e. thought not equality with God: a thing to be seized upon: i.e. though essentially, even while on earth, He was in the form of God, yet He did not think fit to claim equality with God until He had accomplished His mission.

with me, who would care in earnest for your concerns ; for all seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ. But you know the trials which have proved his worth, and that, as a son with a father, he has shared my servitude to proclaim the Glad-tidings. Him, then, I hope to send without delay, as soon as I see how it will go with me ; but I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.

Conybeare's "Life and Epistles of St. Paul."

DETAILS OF CHRIST'S CHARACTER.*

1. Christ lived to please, and not to be pleased (Rom. xiv.) Blessed is he that expecteth little of others, and lives rather to please them than to be pleased by them. The love of being gratified in all things is a vicious element of character, and belongs not to a divine life. It is low and sordid to be soured by being disappointed. It indicates an utter absence of the spirit of moral progress. The law of nature would have us please ourselves, but the law of society would have us please others, and thus have joy in ourselves.

2. He lived to minister to others, not to be ministered to. If any inquire what I mean by "progress in the divine life," I answer thus : it consists in the government of our blind emotional nature, and a progressive imitation of Christ in the details and particulars of his character. It may be the law of our nature to desire to be waited on and ministered to, but the law of society is to wait on and to minister to others ; and this law of the social state was most scrupulously observed by Christ, as he said, "The Son of Man came not to be ministered to, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. xx. 28.) Some folks have no more character than the ox in the meadow ; they have no conscious self-excellence.

3. Though rich, for our sakes he became poor. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air places of shelter, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head" (Matt. ix.) Covetousness has always been a popular sin in the world. Some sins even the world denounces as abominable, but riches wear a garb of witchery, so that, "If thou dost well to thyself," says the Psalmist, "the world will praise thee" (Ps. xlix.) But if to enrich ourselves be the law of nature, the law of religion and society, Christ has showed us, is rather to enrich others ; yea, and if necessary, to die for the brethren. Whether we have "rejoicing" in another or not, we shall at least have rejoicing in ourselves—conscious rectitude.

4. He lived to honor God, not to be honored of men (John v.) "I seek not honor of men," said Christ. This is an element of character nearly allied to perfection ; for men commonly "seek honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh of God alone" (John v.) Honor from men is human, honor from God divine. The first may be the law of society, the last is the law of religion. The love of excelling may be the law of isolated nature ; but of social life—of our organic relations—the love of the excellent, justice, mercy, and the love of God, is the law. He surrendered his reputation with men for our sake.

5. He lived to labor, not to rest (John vi.) Christ was no idler. He was a laborer, not a loiterer. "He went about," says Peter, "constantly doing good." "My father worketh hitherto," he said, "and I work." Are not many of his professed laborers mere loiterers—book-worms—who make the pulpit a stepping-stone to literary indolence, and cannot transfer a sentence of all they read into the soft, downy common-place which they call their Sunday sermon? Industry is the law of the church, idleness their law; but the man who labors, is like the ant which lays up for the winter. A great man in the ancient world was "homo magna diligentia—magna labore." He has "rejoicing in himself" (Paul.)

* This article appears in the American Christian Review, as an extract from Bro. Scott's "Messiahship," a copy of which, we believe, is not to be obtained on this side the Atlantic.

6. He came to save, not to destroy men's lives (John iii.) This is a lesson for rulers, governments, and nations. Corporations, it is said, have no consciences. Rulers hope to shirk responsibility by incorporation, and therefore, set their citizens to slay others by desperate days and hard fought fields, as the farmer sets his servants to reap the golden harvest. Though they do this collectively, they must answer to God for it individually, and their "framing iniquity into a law" (Ps. xvi.) will ultimately recoil upon themselves. With them responsibility is a theory, but with God it is a fact. In society, salus populi suprema lex.

7. He vindicated God but did not condemn man. Nothing is more sordid than a low censorious spirit, nor anything more noble than to defend the innocent and the absent, especially the divine character. It was the end of the great Milton's poems to "justify the ways of God to man;" but while Christ lived, labored, and died to "justify the divine nature," he did not, he affirms, come "to condemn the world, but to save the world." To vindicate ourselves is natural, but to defend our neighbour is the law of society and of heaven. Christ did not defend himself against the injurious, but died like a lamb led to the slaughter—died in conscious innocence, and, of course, in conscious rectitude.

8. He came to suffer, not to reign. Men deprecate suffering, and desire to reign. This is their weakness. The whole universe suffers and groans until the present hour: Adam by Satan, we by Adam, Christ by us, and God by all. Our sensibilities shrink from the law, but adversity has a grand moral. It chastens our ambitions, tranquillizes our emotional nature, sanctifies our experience, and inspires us with the joys of conscious virtue and innocence. As he came to bear the cross, not to wear the crown, "if, therefore, we suffer with him, we shall reign with him; if we die for him, we shall live with him." Self-sacrifice is the law, both of religion and society, and gives birth to self-approval.

9. He lived for his countrymen. "I was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Where, then, is the propriety of saying there is no patriotism in our religion? If this virtue consists in self-sacrifice for our country, then Christ's life was patriotic in the highest degree. How could he have died conscientiously innocent, as we see he did, if he had not lived for his countrymen?

10. He died for the world. Although he respected character, he did not respect persons; and therefore, if he was patriotic, he was also philanthropic; and as he lived for the Jews, so he died for the world. He felt for his own nation, but his love expanded over all nations; "and he consequently gave himself for our sins according to the will of God our Father" (Gal. i.) Thus Christ, first, for our sake, became poor; second, surrendered his reputation; third, his life; and consciously innocent, died, crying out to God, "Why hast thou forsaken me!"

11. He was condescending. He was of the royal family of Israel, yet he never mentioned this—he was the Son of God, but his Father announced it—he was the king, priest, prophet, mediator, and judge of all; yet no one could have discovered so lofty a destiny in anything he said. He was full of sweetness and condescension, and in all antiquity, perhaps, there is not to be found words so mild and gracious as the following: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest ; take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls ; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light" (Matt. xiii.) He even washed his disciples' feet.

12. His vigilance. When they asked him whether it was lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar, he answered, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." His disciples would have had him bring down fire out of heaven to consume the Samaritans : but he told them "they knew not what spirit they were of." "When reviled, he reviled not again, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" (Pet.) When they would have made him a judge, he refused ; when a king, he escaped out of their hands. Self-vigilance is a master virtue in the formation of character.

"For what avails e'en heaven's all-seeing eye,

Self-vigilance asleep—the eye and sacred Warden of the soul? whose office 'tis, In her mysterious sphere, to hold high vigil, And by a meditation guard the estate of thought.

Frail man! when most secure, how insecure!

How slow to learn life's lesson, 'watch and pray.'"

13. He founded his kingdom in his own blood. Most heroes found their kingdoms in the blood of other men—not so in Christ. Here there is another lesson to conquerors. The great Napoleon, after seeing and realizing the fleeting nature of the empire which he had carved out for himself by the sword, passed a great encomium, as we have seen, on the character and permanency of Christ's kingdom, so different in all respects from his own. To rise at the hazard of our own life is glorious—at the hazard of the life of others, a shame.

14. He was divinity in humanity. In him we see the infinite in the finite, the eternal in the temporal, the divine in the human ; God manifest in the flesh—the will of God carried out in real life. It controlled his feelings, governed his speech, directed his actions. He gave up all to please his Father. He loved his friends, bore with his enemies, taught them, prayed for them, and in conformity with the divine councils, sought perfection as a man through sufferings—the terrific sufferings of the cross. He is the second genus homo, the second Adam, the leader of the important part of the species, the axle on which the saints of the ascending hemisphere will be carried to heaven, where they will behold, not God on the cross, but man on the throne. To him be glory and honor, and might and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

As a son, he was subject to his parents—as a subject, obedient to his rulers—as a friend, a patriot, a philanthropist, a saint, he was, while on earth, perfect, and worthy to be set forth in Scripture as the model character. In Abraham we have veneration, in Moses meekness, in Isaiah fire, in Jeremiah patriotic sympathy, in Ezekiel firmness, in David devotion, and in Solomon wisdom ; but in Christ "the joint force and full restraint of all." Christ never confessed either to God or man any defectiveness of character. On the contrary, he affirmed that he did those things that pleased God. He asked on one occasion, "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" and at last said to God, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do ; it is finished."

No wonder the Apostles urged the disciples to study diligently the Scriptures, for they are able thoroughly to furnish the man of God unto every good word and work.

Do not commit the folly of feeling revengeful towards any frail being, for whom, if you are a true child of God, your soul is yet to yearn in agonizing pity.

HEAVEN.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED AT FIMLICO.

"There shall be no might there" (Rev. xxi. 25.)

NATURE and revelation are both from God, and in the character of their unfoldings there is a striking similarity. Nature seems always to avoid a sudden manifestation. When the light of the morning appears, we first behold in the Orient sky, faint but beautiful indications of the approach of day; and before the increasing splendour the darkness hideth itself, and we behold the beauties of Nature clothed in light, and redolent with praise. Yes, the darkness like a frowning fugitive has passed away. The Sun warms and vivifies the earth, and by the intensity of its heat we know that the Summer has come. How the sand burns and reflects its dazzling but oppressive rays. The wind is still, the air sultry, the leaves move not, the cattle bathe in the running stream, or shelter themselves beneath the wide spreading foliage; no zephyr blows, the heat increases, the earth is parched, and nothing can slake its thirst but a copious and abundant shower. Let us survey the blue expanse; it is a hot, cloudless sky. We look again, and behold a little dark cloud, no larger than a man's hand, appears. Though so small, it is the centre of wonderful influences, and high up in the sky there will congregate around it all the elements which are necessary for the tempest and the storm. To the casual observer it gives no warning, but to the student of Nature it portends a sublime, if not an appalling conflict. How quickly it increases, for now more than half of the heavens are covered, and it shrouds the face of the burning Sun. The shepherd flies for shelter, the ploughman escapes to his house, and the traveller prepares for the impending storm. The affrighted child clings to its mother, and the strong man listens for the voice of God. At length the zigzag lightning flies athwart the cloud, and the voice of the thunder is heard; judgment and terror appear to have established their throne in the heavens, for the elements war against the serenity and comfort of man. The fire of God falls from heaven in his pathway, and by it he may be utterly consumed. But the windows of heaven are now open, the rain descends in torrents, and we hear the loud voice of the tempest and the storm. In almost every instance when Nature puts on her terrible habiliment she kindly lifts up her warning voice, and invokes the sons of men to prepare. And so it is in this Blessed Book: the full light of glory does not suddenly appear. There are gentle and merciful rays indicative of the love and compassion of God which illumine these sacred pages, and which give us an earnest and a promise of the glory which is to come. In the opening of this book we have but faint rays in reference to heaven. The good old patriarchs and prophets do not unfold to us in all its completeness the truths of immortality and of salvation by the blood of the Lamb. Many rites and ceremonies were imposed upon them before the time of reformation. But time passes on. The prophets are more distinct, the vision is more clear. Striking changes tell us of an approaching crisis. The Spirit speaks more distinctly of a coming Saviour. Job, David, and Jeremiah had glimpses of the future glory. And the aspirations of the almost seraphic Isaiah clearly prove that he felt the near approach of Him who was touched with our infirmities, and by whose stripes alone we are healed. In the fulness of time the Sun of Righteousness appears, and in him we see a perfect embodiment of the Father of light. He was the sent of God to convince the world of sin, and to teach us the way to heaven. From his sacred lips we hear the gracious message of truth, and he tells us of the mansions in our heavenly home. He died the death of the cross, and was buried; the first day of the week witnessed his resurrection, and after he had given the necessary instructions to his apostles, he ascended to his glorious high throne in heaven. Then the Spirit's power was felt on the day of Pentecost, sinners were pricked to the heart, they repented, were baptized, and the first church was formed. And the men of praise and prayer, armed with power and authority from the Great Head of the church, went forth preaching the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation. And as we read the life of Christ, and study the epistles of those who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, our hearts are warmed with holy love, our spirits are animated with holy and heavenly desires; and while we listen to the glowing and eloquent descriptions of Peter and Paul, we almost wish that the heavens would pass away, and that the time had come when the mortal should put on immortality, and death be swallowed up in victory. But we turn to the last book for the most gorgeous description of the New Jerusalem, and just before the Word of the Lord closes we are told of the glory of the city of God. The light is more celestial, the glory increases, heaven is brought nearer. We hear the music around the throne—we see the saints panoplied in white and wearing the imperishable crown—we behold them walking the golden streets, waving their victorious palms, and from their pure and sacred lips is pealed the holy anthem of glory, salvation, and honour unto Him who sits upon the throne. This is the beautiful climax of the Christian faith, the holy and the heavenly goal to which the faithful and hopeful pilgrims are wandering; and as with their staffs they are travelling the sandy deserts of this fallen world, the Spirit of the Lord assures them that this is not their rest, that here they have no continuing city, but that for them there is a glorious habitation—a city whose builder and maker is God—a holy mansion, which a loving Saviour has prepared, where no trouble shall come, no sigh ascend, no pain be felt—where death has no power, and spirits no foes—where the light of the Sun will not be required, for the glory of God shall lighten it—where the gates shall never be closed, for there shall be no night there. Night, in this state of existence, is a necessity. While the world revolves, and the Sun shines, there must be night. We know from experience, and from the testimony of the Word, that light is a pleasant thing to the eye, and that those who prefer darkness to light, do so because their deeds are evil. Here we cannot live without the Sun. If the fires of that luminary were to be quenched, our earth would become frozen, and death and darkness would reign. Glorious Sun! we wonder not that the unconstructed heathen should worship thee. Here thy light is the joy of the world. From the wing of the insect it is reflected. To thee the flowers owe their beauty, the birds their plumage, the clouds their adornings, and all creation its charms. Wert thou to be taken from us, the deep groan of universal death would ascend, and the world would be encompassed with eternal gloom. But though we cannot dispense with the Sun here, there is a state where it will not be required, for we shall not be of the earth, earthy; we shall be spiritual, sinless, God-like, holy and happy. The presence, the love, and the glory of God will encompass us, and the light of God will permeate and illumine our divine nature; we shall feel his presence, and know the blessing of his love. We will now endeavour, dear friends, to make a few remarks in reference to some of the characteristics of night, and to show, by way of contrast, what a glorious place heaven must be, and how those glories, when properly contemplated, will act as incentives to wean us from the world, in order that with humble spirits and loving souls, we may place our affections upon those things which belong to our eternal peace.

I. Night is the time of rest.—This is a care-worn world; labour and toil are the lot of man. Anxious thoughts press upon the spirits, and sometimes the father of a family trembles when he looks at the future. Christ was fond of the poor, and we must not forget that amongst them are our brethren. How hard many of them work, and how few are the comforts they enjoy. As soon, and often before the Sun is up, the poor man may be seen leaving his home; all day he labors in the field: the work is hard, the Sun is hot, or the cold Winter winds may blow upon him. His fare is simple, and for many years has he toiled. The strength of his youth and the prime of his manhood are fled. Advancing years have written their mark upon his brow. His once erect body is now bent by the hand of time, but he must still earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Another day has passed, and the honest laborer wends his way towards home. To him it is the most loved spot on earth. The Sun has set, and the shades of night are gathering around him, but the light from the cottage which shines in the distance quickens his footsteps, and he hopes for the evening's rest. He enters, the fire is cheertul, the wife smiles, the house is clean. There, on the little shelf, are the hymn book and the Bible ; he partakes of the humble meal with a grateful heart, and before he closes his eyes in sleep, he thanks his Heavenly Father for the mercies of the day, and invokes the presence of a guardian angel through the silent watches of the night. That bending form tells me of sin—that faltering footstep reminds me of the fall—those marks of age, which are the sure antecedents of death, speak to me of the wages of sin. The agility and strength of youth are fled, and I see in the weakness of the flesh the might and the power of transgression. The poor wearied frame must have rest; without it he could not live. But the Bible and the prayer assure me that this poor laborer has a good hope through grace, and that he belongs to those who through Christ are patiently waiting for the heavenly inheritance. How delightful it is to feel that there is a world where we shall never be weary—where we shall experience no sorrow—where we shall never grow old—where, instead of the marks of age, we shall possess the immortality of youth, and rejoice as the children of light—where, instead of wearing the garment of poverty, we shall be clothed in the spotless robes of the saints—where the love of Christ shall fill our hearts, and the crown of righteousness adorn our brow—where no Sun shall set, nor shades fall, nor labour weary, nor sleep be required, for there shall be no night there. Here, while the laborer wipes the sweat from his wrinkled brow, and thinks of the humbleness of his state, he is cheered with the delightful prospect of the heavenly country towards which, like a faithful pilgrim, he is wending his way. Be of good cheer, ye sons of toil—the days of your labor will soon be ended. And should it be your lot to fill a pauper's grave, it may be your glory to wear the conqueror's crown. Have you heard the sweet voice of the Son of Man, saying, "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest?" If you have not yet learned of him whose yoke is easy and whose burden is light, listen to his words, for they are spirit and they are life ; they will comfort you in trouble, guide you in darkness, and unfold to you the glories of the heavenly kingdom. Jesus is the poor man's friend, and he has tasted death for every man. You wend your way to the house of your earthly rest with a faltering step, an anxious spirit, and a dying frame : but death shall come to you as a kind deliverer, and your happy spirit shall be borne to the heavenly mansion upon the wings of the angels of God—not in the weakness of the flesh, but in the strength and power of the spirit. There labor will be dead, sorrow will have passed away, and those troubled but hopeful spirits which have passed through this world, will have shed their last tears, and they shall now for ever swell the triumphs of redeeming love.

II. Night is the time of danger.—Fear is a child of sin. It is true, in the day we are surrounded by danger, but we are more fully armed against them. They that stumble, stumble in the night. Darkness conceals the dangerous precipice ; we must step cautiously, unseen foes may encompass us. The minds of men are under the influence of fear. When the shutters are closed they speak of danger. How still the town is ! There are no sounds heard save one, and that is the steady tread of the policeman. He is there to guard us, and to keep a watchful eye upon our dwellings. The sound of his footsteps, when spiritually interpreted, refers me to the fall of man, and reminds me of his lost and sinful condition. When you carefully turn your locks and push the bolts, to render your habitations more secure, those simple actions confirm the fact that man is a fallen being, for they tell of fear within and danger without. Be careful not to travel much in the night. Work and walk while it is day. At night the foul robber may be lurking in thy pathway, and no friendly star may aid thee to escape. At night it is easy to lose thy way, to wander from thy home, and be lost in the thick darkness—or, if thou art a mariner, thy vessel may be dashed to pieces upon the unseen rock, and in a moment the father and the husband may sink into the cold embrace of a watery grave. Accidents come suddenly. Here there is no certainty. The Sun which shines upon us may smite us with death, and the Moon's light with madness. The cold chilling wind may creep into our bosoms, and scatter from its wings the seeds of consumption and death; and the once healthful cheek shall become pale—the light eye shall lose its lustre, the strong frame shall become weak and helpless, and the once promising and hopeful youth shall be borne to the deep cold grave. The heat of the Summer may become oppressive even unto death, or the keen blast of Winter may smite us that we die; and some of the things we most love may press us to the tomb. But in the blessed country which is the eternal home of the faithful, there will be no danger—its glorified inhabitants know no fear. No robber can traverse its golden streets—no burning Sun can smite us by day, and no pestilence can come near to our dwelling; no extremes of heat and cold can affect us there; no chains, nor bolts, nor locks will be required; no armed police will preambulate the streets of this New Jerusalem. There will be no concealment, nothing gloomy, nothing sad. No cloud to lower, no storm to rage, no fearful wrecks, for there shall be no more sea. No fear will cling to the spirit, no sorrow shall sit upon the brow, no wave of trouble shall beat against the breast, no horrid forebodings shall paralyze the soul. In the mountain of the Lord nothing shall hurt nor destroy. There danger shall be unknown. The light of the Sun and of the Moon will not be required, for God and the Lamb are the light thereof, and there shall be no night there. Oh! what a glorious relief it will be, when our souls are free from fear; when that accompaniment shall be shaken off with this mortal coil; when in holy confidence we shall live in the light and love of God; when no arrow charged with poison can be directed towards us, no misrepresentation misguide us, and no slander annoy. Brethren, let us buckle on our armour—let us ever be watching, for the time of our deliverance draweth nigh; and if we are faithful unto death, we shall love His appearing. Our conflict will be over, and we shall see Him as he is.

III. Night is the time of crime.—We are not unmindful of the fact, that crime hath assumed such an unblushing effrontery as to show itself in mid-day. But in the darkness of night the cowardly fiend loves to revel and to hide itself. Then it is that the thief repairs to the sheep-fold, and the foul incendiary destroys the bread of his neighbours and jeopardizes their lives. Then it is that the burglar secretly and noiselessly steals into your dwelling-place, and takes away that for which you have toiled. Then it is that the terrible assassin plots his foul crime, and carries it into deadly execution. Then it is that the strange woman flattereth with words, and by her fair speeches the foolish do err. How valuable are the teachings of the wise man, who says, "Hearken unto me, therefore, O ye children of men, and attend to the words of my mouth. Let not thine heart decline to her ways; go not astray in her path, for she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death." Then it is that the drunkard eagerly quaffs the poisonous contents of the maddening bowl, and returns like a savage to his home to curse and ill-treat his starving and disconsolate wife; whilst to the affrighted children the name of father is the synonyme of fiend. Oh, night! what a dark picture thou dost present! If all the crime committed in one night could be presented to our view, the soul would shrink back with horror. If we could, who would dare to draw back the curtain? And who would have nerve enough to look upon the scene? What wrecks of character—what weeping children—what horrid faces—what foul exploits—what maniac gestures—what obscene demeanour—what revelling and blasphemy—what prowling thieves—what reckless murderers—what ghastly scenes of horror—what foul and rash streams of pollution—what rebellious children—what desperate rage—what wild delirium—what dark designs—what fierce looks—what desperate struggles—what fiendish smiles—what dying groans! Anarchy, madness, and death, have met in this one night of darkness, and the effects are as though all the furious fiends from the lowest to the hottest hell had been let loose to blast the happiness of man. And if the appalling crimes of but one night could so affect us, what would be the effect if the dark pall could be removed from the nights of ages? Our spirits tremble while we contemplate. Under the dark wings of night what crimes have not been committed? The fair Moon hath seen enough to make her blush, and the holy stars have been witnesses to crimes which the tongue dare not utter nor the pen record. Our beautiful valleys and innocent groves have been polluted by the actions of men. The thoughts of the crimes of one night burden the soul, and the spirit becomes pensive in the midst of the desolation and the dead. The piercing eye of the Lord passes over this mighty Babylon every night, and it searches out all the abodes of wretchedness and crime. He sees every sinner, and records every iniquity in the book of remembrance. Of the transgressions of the earth, heaven receives a full and faithful report. Not a whisper of vice, but it is heard in heaven above; not a sinful impulse is there which does not move the mind of God. Who can doubt his mercy and long-suffering, in sparing the guilty cities of the world? Men have armed themselves with rebellion against his glorious majesty, and wilfully departed from the ways of the Lord: yet even now, through the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ, we are permitted to pray that our Heavenly Father may still be merciful, and that for the sake of the innocent, the hand of avenging justice may be stayed. When we contemplate the moral darkness of only one night, what a mercy it is to feel that we are travelling towards that holy place where no dark shades shall fall, and where night hath no power—where no crimes can be concocted nor executed—where no ill-feelings can be engendered, and where all will be light—where we shall see each other face to face, and live for ever in the midst of spirits which are pure and happy, holy and good. The day of the sinner is night. The ungodly are always encompassed with the clouds of darkness, and those who will not obey the Saviour, who will not come unto Him that they might have life, have nothing before them but a darkness which may be felt, and a fearful looking for of judgment, and the terrors of the world to come. In the midst of the darkest night, while I hear the songs of distress, see the tears fall, and hear the sighs which come from troubled souls—while I see the grave open, and death and destruction at work—I am enabled, by the blissful promise of the gospel, to look up to heaven whence cometh my help, and I can hear the Spirit of God say, "The city of habitation is beautiful, and there shall be no night there." This gracious promise is balm to my mind: it gives sight to the eye, strength to the hands, marrow to the bones, swiftness to the feet, joy to the heart, and hope to the soul.

IV. Night is the time of unconsciousness. How quietly sleep steals over us, and what a dark and mysterious state it is. How it captivates, and subdues all the powers of the body! How it closes the eye, and renders the ear impervious to sound! How the nerves have lost their sensibility! The muscles are powerless—the world is shut out—music, philosophy, and poetry are forgotten, and the mind is at rest. The beggar and the king are equal, and all worldly distinctions have passed away. There is something in sleep which tends to make me solemn. We are but imperfectly acquainted with its phenomena. How quick and sensitive we are in our waking state! What can escape our observation? We remember the past, we think of the future, and we are familiar with each other. We can sing and pray, and think of death and the judgment. The eye quickly observes, and the ear is sensitive to the softest sound; but in the course of a very short time the whole, or nearly the whole, of this large congregation, will be infolded in the arms of sleep. Every night we enter into that state of helplessness and unconsciousness. The burglar may be in our house, and we know it not—the murderer may stand by our bedside, and we know not of our perilous position. All our strength has fled: we cannot move a finger, we know not our danger, and possess no means of defence nor power of escape. Scenes of the most thrilling interest may be transpiring, but we recognize them not. With the exception of the throbbing heart and heaving lungs, our state resembles death. No ray of light falls upon the eye, no sound of gladness penetrates the ear, no useful implement can command the hand, no practical advice can escape the lips, no beauties can excite the soul. The body is prostrate, and the mind shrouded in darkness. What a solemn state it is to enter—what a deep profound! It is like the vestibule of death. It is the world of silence—the haven of rest. It is all darkness without one ray of light. No human eye can survey the dark domain. It must remain, to a considerable extent, an unexplored and unknown region, where no spirit can rejoice, nor the sounds of the Gospel be heard. Ought we not, dear friends, to be the subjects of serious self-examination, before we enter into the mysterious state of sleep? Is it not a surrendering of all our powers? Do we not enter into a state of perfect forgetfulness? Ought we not to ask ourselves how matters stand betwixt ourselves and God? Should death come while we are asleep, and put its cold hand upon our hearts, are we prepared to die? Should these eyes which are about to close never open again, have we a good hope through grace, that when absent from the body, we shall be present with the Lord? Here the mortal is made weary through the effects of sin, and sleep is required to restore its energies; and though we can fully endorse the beautiful language of Young, who says, it is our province now to view it in connection with sin and transgression, and we are led to infer, that had there been no sin, there would have been no state of helpless unconsciousness. In heaven it will not be so. There we shall know even as we are known. There will be no sleep in that blessed land—no weary limbs will tremble there: our minds will be ever active, and radiant with the light of holiness and love. Our knowledge of God and of His glorious works, both in the creation of matter and of mind, will continue to increase, and we shall be in the full enjoyment of spiritual and enduring blessings; and instead of the mind being compelled so frequently, by the imperious command of an unseen power, to descend into such dark and gloomy spheres, it will rise higher into the life, the brightness, and the glory of God. There its consciousness will be greatly intensified, and its knowledge shall for ever increase. There it shall listen to the sweetest and holiest sounds, and the eye shall feast upon the seraphim and all the happy spirits around the throne. No dull senseless sleep shall subdue or paralyse its power — no cloud of darkness will overshadow it. There the sun of God’s glory will never set, for the promise is, “There shall be no night there, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.” There will be no interrogative, full of holy rebuke, “What! could ye not watch with me one hour?” For we shall ever be with the Lord. Oh! what sacred delights—what holy companions—what songs of joy — what ravishing prospects — what transcendent themes—what exalted spirits—what celestial sympathies — what gorgeous habiliments—and what heavenly scenes will encompass us! What are a few earthly troubles! They will soon pass away. What of a few light afflictions! They last but for a moment, and if sanctified, they will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. The night of time will soon pass away; even now its dark shadows begin to disappear, and by the exercise of that faith which is the gift of God, we can catch a glimpse of the holy light which comes from the upper world, where the throne of the God of glory is set, and Christ shall reign for ever and ever.

“Kind Nature’s sweet restorer, balmy sleep,”

(To be continued.)

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

THE scythe of Time is mowing
Another swath of Life:
And the seed that we’ve been sowing—
Grain of Peace or tares of Strife—
Has been gather’d safe and fast
In the garner of the past,

To lie for ever!

Have we done the best we could
With the ways and means we hold?
Have we wrought the things we should
With our judgment or our gold?
Have we play’d our mortal part—
By our hand, or brain, or heart,
With fair endeavor?

Come, let us ask our bosoms
If we earnestly have sought
To nurture all the blossoms
In our pathway as we ought?
Let us ask if we are giving
As much love to all the living
As we can?

’Tis a fitting hour to reckon
Not only yellow store:
For passing old years beckon
Where no wealth can win the shore.
’Tis a day for Age and Youth
To sum up their debts of Truth
To God and Man!

R. COOK.

OPEN COUNCIL.

LETTER FROM A BAPTIST MINISTER.*

DEAR SIR,—I thank you for the few lines you have sent me, and hasten to make a reply.

In analyzing your note I find the principal burden to be, "The success or non-success of preaching the gospel:"—and there is one thing in which we perfectly agree, which is, that we mutually desire to witness success as the result of Christian effort. To elucidate our subject, suppose we begin by defining exactly what our object is. For want of this preliminary of discussion, many inquiries result in nothing useful or decisive. Success, then, in this case, must mean that the ends which Christianity proposes, are realized in the individual who professes it. The Apostle Paul tells us, his commission was to open men's eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. When men are converted by preaching, these results must be attained, or, as yet, there is no success. There must be enlightened views of truth, of the soul, and of God—a loathing of sin—sincere penitence, and the fruits which are consistent therewith. If we agree in this definition, then it obviously follows that no outward form, rite, or ceremony, can be substituted for acts which are purely mental and spiritual.

The place which baptism occupies in the Christian scheme is, therefore, secondary, and that is precisely where our Lord has placed it in the commission—"He that believeth (1) and is baptized (2) shall be saved." With this subordination of baptism to the principal object of the gospel, the Acts of the Apostles uniformly agree. Hear what Paul saith to the Corinthians, "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel." Baptism is everywhere made to depend on faith, or repentance. "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest;" such faith not being a mere assent, or a negation, but such as only the regenerate are capable of exercising. Everything is promised to faith, but nothing to mere water baptism.

That success does not necessarily involve baptism, may be satisfactorily decided on the testimony of three substantial witnesses: reason, scripture, and history.

1. Reason repudiates the notion of sacramental efficacy as absurd. Water is used for the purpose of cleansing anything to which it may be applied; but that it can (per se) effect anything on the mind, such as the remission of sins, is most unreasonable.

2. In the New Testament the ordinance of baptism demands the element of water, because of its symbolical character, otherwise we should have been left to choose our own material, and employ oil with the Catholics, or any other fluid we pleased. But nothing so well suits the idea of washing, cleansing, &c. as the use of water. Inspiration has, therefore, adopted and commanded its use. When our Lord said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven;" to which of these agents do you attach the regenerating power? If of the Spirit, then not of the water; the latter being simply a figure of speech to denote the cleansing power of the Spirit of God on the defiled soul of man. That the term is thus employed, will appear if you take another figure which John the Baptist used in the same connection, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." If water is in itself efficacious—so is fire—and we find that some Christians of the second and third centuries believed in something of the sort, for they called martyrdom—blood-baptism. The New Testament most effectually repudiates the notion of baptismal regeneration, and is always consistent with itself in inculcating spiritual religion.

But we will now call upon our third witness—history. What saith the history of preaching? Confining ourselves to the New Testament, Jesus Christ is the first exemplar of it. Certainly we do sometimes wonder that his success was no greater! He "who spake as never man spake," however, was often obliged to succumb to the rigid obstinacy and pertinacious unbelief of the people, and one of his last acts was to weep over those whom he could not save. But we are told, nevertheless, that sometimes many believed on him. Were these saved without baptism, seeing that ordinance had not, as yet, been instituted? You state your positive belief, that if the preaching of the present day were of the same kind as that which prevailed in apostolic times, success would always follow. But what saith the history of apostolic preaching? Peter's is the first instance given—and certainly the success of his first sermon was most extensive and decided; but then, Sir, there never could be but one such congregation of hearers, in the history of the world! And in this memorable sermon, was there one word about baptism? The awakening power was in the truth attended with the demonstration of the Spirit, and it was not until the work of regeneration had been wrought in them, that they were directed to baptism. Stephen's preaching was so far from being successful, that his first sermon resulted in his martyrdom—and Stephen never opened his mouth on the subject of baptism. Paul's labors were more abundant, and so was his success—but he complains bitterly often that he was so little successful, and so far from baptism being made a prominent part of his instructions or exhortations, he thanks God that he had not baptized many—stating that "Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach the gospel."

* Written in reply to a letter addressed to him, which appears on page 608 of last volume.

To come to more modern times:—To the times of Geo. Whitfield and Jno. Wesley. We are quite sure that neither of them would preach either your views or mine on the subject of baptism—and yet what preaching of the gospel was ever more successful? This ought to convince you as a proved matter of fact, that the salvation of souls does not depend upon baptism—and if not, what becomes of your theory? Lastly, allow me to ask you how it is that the adherents of A. Campbell, of Bethany, United States, have hitherto remained so inconsiderable a body? Last year I saw a table of the religious statistics of the United States—Campbellites were down at the very bottom of the list—with a very insignificant amount of numbers. Now, if the whole truth of the gospel was preached alone by them—your statements require that they should have taken the lead of the other denominations. As such is not the case, I cannot accept your views as to what constitutes the true grounds of success. As a large portion of the world are being saved without baptism, and as baptism never yet saved any one individual—I am strengthened in my view of the place which baptism occupies in the Christian economy.

1. Repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Obedience to all known duty, including baptism, and involving a holy life.

As to man's immortality—that which "dies not"—"is not quenched"—"goes into everlasting punishment"—must be immortal!—With kind regards, I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

THOS. COOMBS.

LETTER TO A BAPTIST MINISTER.

NO. II.

Dear Sir, — Absence from home, and other circumstances combined, have prevented me from replying to your letter before this time. With the remarks you make in the first part of your communication I fully agree. With regard to the institution of baptism being secondary, it certainly is named second in the commission, inasmuch as re-generation must precede a re-, or second birth; but in the conversation of the Saviour with Nicodemus, water, which there certainly represents baptism, stands before Spirit to my mind, in both cases occupying precisely its proper position. I am aware, on the day of Pentecost, Peter was silent on the subject of baptism, until the individuals were regenerated, or begotten by "the word of truth" (see James i. 18, 1 Peter i. 23, 1 Cor. iv. 15); but in order to carry out the commission of his Master, and show to them and others who should read this portion of Divine History, that regeneration and a new birth were two distinct operations, he commanded them, as well as those in the house of Cornelius, "to be baptized in the name of the Lord;" and certainly in the former case, and I doubt not in the latter also, as in the case of Paul, "for the remission," or in order to "wash away thy sins." After the individuals were thus regenerated by "the word of truth," or "begotten through the gospel," and "buried with him in baptism," they were then "born of water and of the Spirit;" consequently being "in Christ," occupied the position of "a new creature, old things are passed away" (2 Cor. v. 17.)

You say, "Reason repudiates the notion of sacramental efficacy as absurd; water is used for the purpose of cleansing anything to which it may be applied, but that it can (per se) effect anything on the mind, such as the remission of sins, is most unreasonable." I am not aware that baptism is ever spoken of in the New Testament as a sacrament. I would ask, was not the sin of the first parents, as represented in the 3rd chapter of Genesis, which introduced death and all its attendant consequences into the world, an offence—an act of disobedience committed by the body? Therefore, why should it be contrary to reason, that an act of obedience in submitting to an institution divinely appointed for a specific purpose, (when connected or accompanied with faith) should do away with the effect of the transgression, or place the individual in a position to "work out his own salvation;" or, in other words, to escape that eternal death which must be the portion of every one who comes within the sound of the gospel who believe not, and "obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

With respect to the preaching of Peter and Paul, I think if you will again look at the 6th chapter of the Acts, you will see reason to doubt whether the address which resulted in the death of Stephen was his first sermon. As regards Paul, it appears to me very evident, as it must do to every one who reads the passage attentively, that the reason why he rejoiced in having baptized so few individuals at Corinth was, "Lest any should say I had baptized in my own name." The body of professing Christians in that city, as amongst us at the present day, was divided; therefore, Paul censures them severely, and calls them carнал. No man can read the writings of the apostles with a mind free from preconceived ideas, and say they make baptism a nonessential; they place it just where the Head of the Church did, connected with belief. What he "hath joined together," let none of us presume to "put asunder." In my last, it was intimated, the only evidence I could receive must come from the Scriptures of Truth; consequently, with "more modern times," to which you refer, I leave all such individuals in the hands of a righteous Judge, who cannot err, feeling assured that by the words of Jesus I and all others will eventually be judged. With regard to that you consider the small number of persons in the United States, whom you own adherents of A. Campbell, and observe according to my views, they ought to take the lead of all other denominations in that country, I will only observe, I believe the number of individuals who have embraced the simple truth of the gospel amounts to 80,000; and when it is taken into consideration, that the first man who was instrumental in calling the attention of the people in that part of the world to the leading truths of the Reformation is still alive, and a zealous proclaimer of the gospel, I think it is a far greater wonder they are so numerous, than that they should not exceed a number that of all the denominations who have been proclaiming their views ever since the landing of the original "Puritans."

As to that which "dies not," and is "not quenched," I think you will find it is the "worm" that "dieth not," the "fire" that "is not quenched," and not the soul of man (Mark ix. 48.)—I am, dear Sir, yours respectfully, W. S. S.

LECTURES ON BAPTISM.

THE city of Lafayette has been favored with a course of lectures by Mr. T. L. Breckenridge, pastor of the Baptist church of that place. This gentleman is one who, though fully committed to the denomination with which he stands connected, has enough independence to strike out beyond the regular precincts into the clearer light of Gospel principles. Whether this clearer light will be appreciated, and applied in such a way as to lead him into the liberty of the Gospel, is a matter involved in some doubt. But the declaration and demonstration of the principles which he announced as introductory to and guiding him in his investigation, most unquestionably tend in that direction. Coming from such a source, and savoring so much of what is contemptuously and slanderously denominated "Campbellism," they are extremely interesting to Disciples. Let us hear him.

1. Mr. Breckenridge began by laying down and proving the following proposition (borrowed, he said, from the Westminster confession of faith): "The Bible is the only infallible rule of faith and practice." Acts xx. 27: "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." And he also quoted Rev. xxii. 18, 19, which was delightfully enforced. The application of this latter passage, was to show how God had guarded his word, as being perfect, bearing neither increase nor diminution. If we believe and teach or practice any thing not taught in the Bible, we "are guilty of adding to" the word of God. If we wilfully neglect any thing taught us in the Bible we "take from" it. Other passages were quoted, which are not now remembered, as it did not occur to me to take notes until he announced the second proposition. One point enforced was peculiarly striking, coming as it did from a "regular" Baptist preacher. He knew nothing of non essentials, he said, in the Bible. Every point of doctrine, every command, and every promise was essential. "How can a man love God," the speaker continued, "and say that any thing God has said or done is non-essential? It is irreverent to do so." Now this is all any Disciple ever claimed for the commandments of God. I have heard similar declarations sometimes from sectarians, who, when closely pressed upon the consequences of the position, explained it all away by some subterfuge. For fear of such a course I submit the following question: Can a man be saved who does not love God, is irreverent, and who is living in wilful disobedience to an essential commandment? Surely not.

2. His second proposition was, "There is no indefiniteness or ambiguity in the commands of God." Upon this point he argued that if there be ambiguity in God's commands he has failed in his purpose, for he designed to make every thing plain. He quoted Gen. vi. 14-16 and Ex. xxv. 1-22, to show how very explicit they were.

3. "The design of God in the organization of the Christian (didn't he organize the Baptist?) congregation is unity." Now said he, "if there be ambiguity in the commandments, Jesus prayed for unity when he knew that the instrumentalities he employed would promote a different end.

For instance, if baptizo means immerse, sprinkle, pour, wet, moisten, saturate with wine, &c. we cannot possibly understand the command to be baptized. We cannot agree upon any thing as baptism. This view of the meaning of the word has been in the church since the third century, and the history of the church in that time has been one of contention upon the question, What is baptism? One party sprinkles and another immerses. Individuals of the same party differ as to what constitutes baptism. If there is indefiniteness in the word Jesus used, then he is to blame for the misunderstanding and contention, at the same time that he prays for union. There is no necessity for using an indefinite word, he continued to say, for if he meant sprinkle, there is the word rantizoo, which is definitely "to sprinkle;" if he meant pour, there is cheoo, or cheuoo, definitely "to pour;" if the idea was wash, there is louoo, definitely "to wash;" &c. This might have gone further. For example, louoo is said of the body, niptoo of the hands, and pluuoo of the clothes. The Greek language is very definite, using a specific turn for every application of water. But we will follow him. Baptism, he said, is the door, (? John x. 9) the initiatory ordinance into the Christian church. We all agree to this, but stand at the door and quarrel about what it is. All this, too, in the face of Eph. iv. 5—"there is one baptism." This whole connection, he went on to say, showing the unity of the faith, and designed to lead to it, is opposed to sectarianism. Now, the phraseology of some portions of his argument indicates that he has been over to Ashdod, but the argument itself is as familiar as household words to every Disciple in this land. In the conclusion of the argument upon this proposition, he affirmed that the difficulty is not in the word Jesus used. He admitted that baptoo sometimes is used to saturate, to dye, &c. But Jesus and the apostles uniformly used baptizoo when referring to the ordinance of baptism. And there is not a lexicon of sufficient note to be used in any college in Europe or America, having baptizoo in it, but what defines it as primarily signifying "to dip," "to plunge," "to immerse." It may sometimes have a figurative use, as "to overwhelm," but where has God ever commanded anything in figurative language? The English word dip, is, itself, used figuratively. "A cold, shuddering dew dips me all over," said a poet, but will anybody conclude from this that dip means sprinkle in its literal use? There is, then, nothing in the indefiniteness of this word to serve as an excuse for the division in the religious world. God was very specific in the command to be baptized, in order that there might be no contention upon the subject.

4. "To secure this unity the words of the commands must be simple and unambiguous—they must convey the meaning of the spirit." To this proposition, also, he did ample justice; showing that ambiguity in words will lead to strife, and strife to division; also, that "all the words of the law" were, indeed, "written very plainly."

Before proceeding with the notice of his second lecture, I wish to look at what is involved in these propositions, and propound some questions to those occupying the position of Mr. B. J. FRANKLIN.

Lafayette, Ind. Nov. 5, 1859.

REASONS FOR LEAVING THE BAPTISTS.

PERMIT me to offer a few reasons for leaving the Baptist church. First, I was immersed into the Baptist church, August 14, 1853; and was immersed into Christ's church, "for the answer of a good conscience," August 14, 1859.

My first teaching led me to the Baptist church, as the church of Christ. My recent investigations show me the imposition; for I cannot identify any one branch of the Baptists with John's teaching, or John's teaching fully with that of the Apostles. John taught baptism for the remission of sins, and all the Baptist Zion deny this. John was the greatest of prophets, and none of his successors claim this distinction in the same sense. John preached a prophetic Jesus, and the Apostles a Jesus in fact—one already come.

Paul baptized some who had been baptized into John's baptism, (John xix.) and if John's baptism had been Christian, Paul would not have baptized them. And our quondam friends declare all immersions, not performed by a regular immersed administrator, null and void. John never was immersed. The Gospel or law of the Lord was to go forth from Jerusalem (Mich. iv, Isa. ii.) John was never at Jerusalem, as known to me.

The Apostle exhorts—"Whatsoever you do in word or deed, do ALL in the NAME of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God by him." This is what no religious party does. The phrases—Baptist Associations, Baptist church—baptized into the faith or fellowship of our church, &c. are unknown in the nomenclature of heaven.

But the name Christian is our New Testament patronymic. John died ere the Gospel church was organized, and therefore, never entered into it. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church" (Matt. xvi.) Not yet built, and John is dead! The great Carson, the brightest star that ever gleamed in the Baptist heavens, endorsed my views on this subject.

See the learned discourse of Bro. Buck-bee on union, delivered in the church where Dr. Armitage holds forth. He says, "Sectarianism is the blight of Christianity," and that parties, Baptists and all, must come back to the Bible.

But if the Baptists are right, what party should be crowned? 1st, The Particular Baptists of England and Wales. 2nd, The General Baptists of England and Wales. 3rd, The Menonites of Holland. 4th, The Scotch, or Weekly Communion Baptists. 5, The Associated or Calvinistic Baptists of the United States? 6, The Seventh-day Baptists. 7, The Six-principle Baptists. 8, The Tunker Baptists. 9, The Free-Will Baptists. 10, The Emancipators. 11, The Free Communion Baptists. And 12, The Baptistees, or Immersers, or those who do the immersing. To this last class some of us belong philologically.

If John's disciples did not lack anything to bring them up to the full standard, where was the ground for Aquilla and Priscilla to expound unto Apollos the way of God more perfectly? He knew only John's baptism. Call Luke into court, and interrogate him as to the existence of such a church as the Baptist, in his Acts of Apostles, and he will answer, None whatever.

What does the great immersionist, Elder Thompson, say? "The name Christian shall be the glorious badge of all the followers of Christ."

Baptist brethren, these are revolutionary times, and we must settle the great issues ere the war is hushed. There has too much light gone forth within the last forty years, to keep men in darkness. And the longest and sharpest swords are drawn against sectarianism by those who have lived longest under its baleful influence.

By your kindness I will show, in a few short essays, why John's baptism is not Christian, and let this suffice as my reasons why I exchanged twilight for the risen sun. 1, I will sketch the character of John the Baptist; 2, His mission; 3, The character of his baptism; 4, Demonstrate that it is not Christian baptism; 5, Show that there is not a Baptist church in the world, the Bible being judge. All affectionately submitted.

L. N. TOWNSEND.

LETTER FROM DR. R. RICHARDSON.

Dear Bro. Wallis,—I have, for some years, been receiving regularly the British Millennial Harbinger, and I owe an apology to you for my apparent neglect to ascertain and forward the amount of my indebtedness to you for it. Until recently, I was under the impression that you had regular accounts with the Harbinger office at Bethany, and that James A. Campbell (Bro. A. Campbell's confidential and efficient clerk) had regularly settled for me the annual subscriptions, and charged it to my account. As I had requested Bro. James A. Campbell, who first procured the Harbinger for me, to settle for it, and as you were so kind as to continue to send it, I remained ignorant of his having omitted to settle for it, until I perceived, a short time since, upon settling my account at Bethany, that it was not charged to me. I do not, at this moment, remember how long I have been receiving it, and I got some of the back volumes—four of them, I think. Please pardon my neglect, and let me know how much I am indebted to you, that I may remit it to you.

I have been much pleased with the British Harbinger. Great tact and sound judgment have been constantly displayed in conducting it, and I have been much gratified at the care which has been taken to avoid extremes upon disputed points, and to adhere steadfastly to the Scriptures. It has, indeed, occasionally contained articles which did not, in my judgment, accord with Scripture, and I am sure not even with your own sentiment; but you very properly disavow any responsibility for the views of contributors, and I know well what liberty of discussion our position invites, and what the liberty of the press requires.

The churches in this country are advancing favourably. There are constant additions to them, and they are improving, I think, in many respects. There is, however, still room for improvement, though some, from their unwillingness to learn, seem to imagine that perfect knowledge of the Divine will has been attained upon their part. I am sorry to say that either this notion, or a decline in zeal and devotion, has led to a very marked declension in the study of the Scriptures on the part of many. These are by no means so diligently read and studied as they were at the commencement of this religious movement. But I hope that a favorable change is now taking place in this respect also, and that the good effects will soon be generally apparent in a better comprehension of the Divine teachings. Already I observe that the more intelligent and pious of our brethren are rapidly attaining to clearer views, and a fuller realization of the great promise of the gospel—the gift of the Holy Spirit. I have been much pleased with several able articles on this topic in your Harbinger. I have, for many years, felt a deep interest in this theme, believing that a correct understanding of the Scripture teaching in regard to it, to be highly conducive, if not essential, to true Christian enjoyment and perfection. There are still, alas! many who neither know nor believe, and what is still worse, do not seem to wish to believe what the Scriptures teach in regard to it. And there are many others who are uninformed, from not having paid sufficient attention to the subject. I was conversing a few days since with some disciples (and two of them preachers) who insisted strongly that the Written Word involved and communicated everything which it is possible to receive—that there is no Spirit but what is in the Word—that the Spirit always accompanies the Word—that the love, and peace, and joy of the believer arise wholly from the ideas presented in the Word, &c.; a sort of rationalistic philosophy that has been inculcated in this country to an unhappy extent—a fact, for the admission of which, I have been much abused and slandered by certain editors here, who have, in this, shown a greater zeal for their own reputation than for the correction of existing errors.

But why should any one presume to foist in his ignorant philosophy in this way, and to determine thus dogmatically how, and how far, man can be influenced, and what is and must be the nature and modus of spiritual operations? Why not believe cordially just what the good Book says, without seeking to explain it away? These same persons talk against mysticism. But I would like to know what greater mysticism there is than is contained in their own unscriptural assertions that "the Spirit is in the Word"—that "the Spirit accompanies the Word"—&c. They cannot explain what they mean. They cannot define clearly in their own minds, nor explain to others, how spirit can be in word, or how the Holy Spirit accompanies the Word, or what He does when thus accompanying it. They deny, in fact, that the Spirit does anything at all, and their whole system, if it deserve the name, while it involves the most incomprehensible and bald mysticism, seems to be rather an effort to cover up a shallow and superficial theory under an appearance of reason, and to grant seemingly, or even assert in terms, an agency of the Spirit which is denied in fact. I have no toleration for such false teaching as this, and perhaps not as much patience as I ought to have with those who thus teach. But as such views involve an actual disbelief of the great promise of the Gospel to believers, and as such philosophy is clearly inconsistent with the principles we set out with, I have felt it my duty to expose it openly, and to oppose it boldly. How contrary to our own express teachings, to assert that the Spirit is in the Word, and is received in the Word! Then, since the Word is received before faith, the Spirit is before faith, in spite of all our controversies with the sects; and an absolute contradiction is offered to our Saviour's teaching, when he says, that the world cannot receive the Comforter, since we know that the world can receive the Word—that the Word is adapted to the world, and is commanded to be preached to every creature. It seems strange to me, that these men have not the honesty and candor to confess what must be perfectly plain to every discerning mind, viz. that they do not believe in the reception, either by believer or unbeliever, of any Holy Spirit at all—certainly not in the reception of the Spirit as spoken of in Scripture—the promise which is to "all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." I am happy to admit that these philosophizing and disbelieving disciples are well meaning, and often excellent men, and that they hold and teach an excellent morality, always insisting that the body is not to be devoted to sensual indulgences, but that it is, as Paul says, "for the Lord"—to be employed in his service. But their faith and their theology unfortunately stop just there, and fail to embrace the whole of Paul's teaching, who, when he says, "the body is for the Lord," takes care to add, "and the Lord for the body." They cannot understand this, nor how the Christian can be "a temple for the Holy Spirit." They have no use in their theology for such passages, nor for the ideas they convey, any more than the sects have for those that teach the remission of sins in baptism.

You will have no doubt noticed that, in exposing the rationalistic and sensualistic philosophy of man's nature and capacities which underlies the teachings and religious ideas of these men, I brought upon myself the enmity of two or three of the more prominent among them; and that in the true spirit of sectarianism, they sought in their communications to the public, to injure me in every possible way by detraction, misrepresentations, and false assertions. One of the bitterest, (Mr. Fanning) making short, garbled and artfully changed extracts from my writings, and associating them with more liberal quotations from the blasphemous Theodore Parker, and certain transcendentalists and speculators, as Ferguson, or sought to make the false impression on the public mind that I was an Infidel, a dangerous innovator, &c. Others, of similar feelings, were trying to excite the suspicions of the brethren against me, as one favoring the speculations of Russell, Melish, and Co. because, in some points touching the Holy Spirit, these agreed with me, as they did with almost the entire Protestant world. These men succeeded, no doubt, with their partisans, but I rejoice to know that even those who were duped by them are beginning to realize the falsity of the representations made to them, and that the intelligent brethren see I have never changed my ground in any respect whatever, but have been constantly advocating the same blessed truths, and opposing all sorts of speculation on religious subjects. I mention these matters to you, because I know you must have felt somewhat at a loss to account for the course pursued by the editors of some papers which you receive.

I am much pleased with Bro. King's article on the "revivals" in Ireland. It is an able article, and he takes the true view of the matter. Alas! how sad a hindrance to truth is this popular notion of the outpouring of the Spirit, to change the heart and effect conversion! Men will choose any form of physical disorder, any contrivance of human fancy, rather than the plain and simple Gospel method. I had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with your amiable daughter, Mrs. Macrum, and her husband, at Bethpage. I have now removed to this place, where I saw Bro. Macrum since my arrival. He has been preaching for the church at Danville, eight miles from here, but is now gone to visit his family at Pittsburg. Yours, with Christian regards,

R. RICHARDSON.

Harrodsburg, Ky. Oct. 24, 1859.

LETTERS FROM AMERICA.—No. IV.

THE term Campbellism is a universal designation for the system which the fraternity of professing Christians, identical with us everywhere, feel themselves highly favored and honored to be included in the category of its members and supporters, who are heirs of the promised inheritance, and possess well-documented titles to its privileges—its present and future felicity. In accordance with the grammatical deconstruction of the term, in the various forms of which its application is susceptible — those who compose a scriptural association with the promulgators of this New Testament system—ergo, Campbellism—are called Campbellites. Our British brethren manifest a feeling of high propriety when they repel the imputation of any such misnomer; and it is gratifying to remark, that our American brethren do not, in any degree, give countenance to its currency. In America you might ask twenty persons if they are acquainted with the Disciples, and eighteen out of the twenty will not perhaps understand you; but if you term them Campbellites, instead of Disciples, those persons who do not comprehend you must indeed be solitary—and it would be a far greater work than most imagine, to meet with one person who did not know something about A. Campbell and the Campbellites. From the tenor of my experience I am led to predict, that even in traversing the whole extent of the Confederate States, very few instances of the contrary would be realized; whilst in Pittsburg, or Allegheny city, I found many persons entirely unconnected with the church and the general cause, who were well posted in the history and labors of our distinguished brother; and whether you travel by land or by water, through the interior of America, you will not fail to form the acquaintance of persons who are intelligent in the matter most interesting to us. At Pittsburg or Allegheny city, which are contiguous by means of the bridges which span the Allegheny river, the giant and meandering Ohio river is formed by a confluence of the Monongehela and the Allegheny rivers, and from this junction its picturesque windings derive their origin. Eighty-one miles along this river we reach the first town in the state of Virginia, Wellsburg. The traveler may arrive at this point by two means of accommodation—either by the railroad cars, which run along the embankment of the river on the Ohio side, or by the steamboats, which traverse the river daily. If pressed by time, he will embrace the advantage of the railroad cars' superior speed; but if desirous of a delectable journey through some of the finest scenery in the world, he will invariably become a passenger on one of our magnificent packets. The grandeur which these present exhibits a marked contrast with the inconvenient and unhandsome steamers of Old England. Truly, as he watches them glide through the water with the felicitous dignity peculiar to them, and peering high into the air like fairy mansions and floating palaces, with three or four stories of cabins, surrounded with balconies, and every other facility for his convenience, the comparatively rude water conveyances of England slumber in the shade of distance. Along the Ohio river he will not fail to meet with objects of the first interest. There is no monotony or lack of diversity in the life-scenes, but an incessant variety of enchanting prospects. He need not be entertained whilst gazing upon some cheerless and inanimate portions of water and country, for by turning to the pleasant houses, the long winding river before and behind him, and the countless representations of vigorous health and beauty which encompass his course, he will experience a delight which none can obtain save those who observe with interest, and are susceptible of appreciating the works of Nature and the instrumentalities of God. The population of Wellsburg is nearly 4000, and like most of the small towns of the United States, it does not appear to have suffered from many attempts at ornamentation. It has two streets of moderate length, which run parallel to its extremities, while all other portions of the town are disintegrated and somewhat solitary. The town is bounded on one side by concatenated hills, which rise up without regard to system or symmetry, yet affording an excellent position for viewing the town, the river which environs it on the other side, and the vast extent of country which lies far outspread beyond. Our brethren here have a very commodious and handsome building to meet in. The number of members is 250, who generally attend regularly. There are four elders, four deacons, and four deaconesses. Being only seven miles from Bethany, this church often receives assistance from our brethren there. When we hear of there being 250 members in a population of 4000, we may presume that some strong voice has spoken to the hearts of the people, and that we are approaching great human instrumentality, subservient to the pleasure of the Spirit of the true God.

T. BUTLER.

WORDS FROM THE WORK TABLE.—No. III.

"A HAPPY New Year!" The light-hearted tones of our young friends carol the wish, and call forth a hearty response; but in the midst of the joy there is need of serious reflection. "A Happy New Year" whispers that all things are "passing away"—time, friends, youth, strength and opportunity. "A Happy New Year" reminds us that one year more has gone for ever—leads us back to the commencement of others, when loved voices breathed the wish in affection's fondest tones, that we now listen for in vain. They are hushed in death! We look on the dear ones spared, and see stamped on their forms "passing away." Dark locks are changed by Time's silvering touch—the steps that were wont to spring with elasticity are more slow and measured: even the voices, in their deeper-toned fondness, impress us with the solemnizing truth—all, all are "passing away." Knowing, then, that which, when once lost, can never be recalled, let the oft-repeated "Happy New Year" lead to a retrospective view of the old. Have we been active, earnest workers? Can we say we have done what we could?—or have we been cumberers of the earth? Have we been purifying ourselves, by close converse with God's Word, by availing ourselves of the privileges pertaining to God's house—have we been lessening evil by laboring in any high and noble enterprise for the good of humanity? Has our light so shone that lookers-on know from whence we derive that light?—Have we been preparing ourselves for the enjoyment of heaven, as well as talking of its blessings?

"Man's heritage is time,"

"We speak of the realms of the blest;
Of that country so bright and so fair;
And oft are its glories confest—

"We speak of its pathway of gold;
Of its walls deck'd with jewels so rare;
Of its wonders and pleasures untold—

"We speak of its freedom from sin,
From sorrow, temptation, and care,
From trials without and within—

"We speak of its service of love,
Of the robes which the glorified wear;
Of the church of the first-born above,
And what it must be to be there."

But are we so striving as to secure an entrance? Speaking will not be enough. Christ says, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee, &c. And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Doing is here set forth in strong terms. Inherit the kingdom—for ye did good unto those who are my brethren. Let us not then weary in well-doing, but press forward, earnestly and ardently, in what should be our life's great work—making the world better than we found it. The days in which we may do good on earth are numbered:

"Then let our souls their slumbers break,
Arouse their senses and awake,

To see how soon
Life with its glories glides away,
And the stern footsteps of decay
Come stealing on.

"Our lives—like hasting streams they be,
That into one engulfing sea

Press on to fall;
The sea of death, whose waves roll on O'er king and kingdom, crown and throne,
And swallow all."

Should the cheering greeting, "A Happy New Year," fall no more upon our ears, may we sleep in the sure and certain hope of a bright and everlasting future! Let us

"Do noble things, not dream them all day long:
And so make life, death, and that vast for ever,
One grand sweet song." LOUISS.

REVIEWS, NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CORRESPONDENCE, &amp;c.

THE GOSPEL GUIDE; or the Truth as it is in Jesus, exhibited with the design of removing the numerous obstacles, difficulties, and objections which enter the mind, and prevent the obtaining peace with God. By THOMAS H. MILNER. London: Houlston and Wright. 2nd edition, enlarged.

The title of this most useful book fully exhibits its design. Nearly 240 pages are occupied with about seventy chapters, each devoted to some one of the many excuses and errors which keep sinners from Christ. The following are of the number:—What better are Christians than others?—I am not so bad—If I am only sincere—Man is not responsible for his faith—Waiting for effectual calling—Trying to feel right—Trying to repent—The decrees of God—If I am one of the elect I shall be saved—The potter and the clay—The hardening of the heart—Cannot I be saved without?—Can man believe of himself?—Is the Gospel true to me?—No one can be sure—Looking for evidences—The Lord's hidden ones.

According to our views of truth, there are but few books which contain so many good things, and so few objectionable conclusions. Two or three statements, rather incidental than leading, are all we feel disposed to challenge, and were the author by our side, very likely he would shew, that we object rather to his terms than to his meaning. Under the circumstances only one instance shall be quoted. On page 158 he says—"But further, you must NOT PRAY to be saved. We do not know whether you have ever prayed to God hitherto or not. And we know not whether your prayers—if you have prayed—have been mere words of form, or anxious breathings. Be that as it may, you are not to pray to be saved. And, moreover, you must NOT SORROW to be saved." A little further on the reader will find an explanation. "Our meaning is, that you must be saved before you pray, and that you cannot pray effectually till you are saved. We do not say that when you are saved you are not to pray; for whenever you are saved you will not, cannot avoid praying." Here are two very strong and positive statements—"You must NOT PRAY to be saved"—you "must be saved before you pray." Now, while we are prepared to advance what is not generally admitted in regard to prayer, we cannot say to a salvation seeking soul, "You must not pray to be saved"—"you must be saved before you pray." Freely would we have it said—that, before the sinner is saved, he should not be encouraged, by word or deed, to unite with the church in worship—that no well-instructed preacher of the Gospel could call upon an enquiring sinner to pray to be saved—that as God wills that he should believe, repent, and be baptized, and thus receive salvation, his waiting in prayer is not part of the divine plan. But when we behold a sin-sick soul bewildered by the false teaching of men he has been taught to revere as God's ministers—believing and repenting, and yet not knowing that he believes and repents, because faith and repentance, with his teachers, differ from everything intended by the Apostles in their use of the words—when such men are looking for a mysterious intimation of salvation, instead of understanding that they are called upon to arise, and be baptized, and wash away their sins, calling upon the name of the Lord—we cannot say, "You must be saved before you pray." When Saul was in the street "called Strait," he prayed and was heard. These men are in a strait, not of God's making, but an awful one, the result of man's perversion. They remind us somewhat of Cornelius before Peter entered his house. From the Apostle he was to hear words by which he should be saved—he was not then saved; yet his prayers went up for a memorial before God. Certain it is, that souls touched by the love of God, yet, as a result of false teaching, unable at present to see the way of salvation—will pray—cannot avoid praying. As well might you tell the sun not to shine, as to require them not to call upon God to lead them into the way of life. And may there be thousands of such praying ones 'ere long! To them we dare not say, "You must be saved before you pray," and our opinion is, that the author of The Gospel Guide would not thus address them. We shall, then, (fearing that some of his readers will not do so) understand him to mean, that before conversion sinners must not claim to be enrolled with the worshippers of God—that while out of Christ, and unsaved, there is no command to them to pray—no occasion for them to seek by prayer to render God more willing or ready to save them, and none for seeking by that means to make themselves fit to be saved.

Could a large part of this excellent book be reproduced here, the reader would be advantaged—but, as only one chapter can be given, as a sample of the author's concise and easy method of dealing with large matters, it is hoped that many who see this notice will order the book. And if they are not, by a careful reading, enabled with increased ease to remove difficulties often presented by enquirers, our surprise will not be small.

The chapter selected begins on page 136, and is entitled

"IF I AM ONE OF THE ELECT I SHALL BE SAVED."

"While this proposition is correct so far as it is itself concerned, yet the idea it is employed to express is dangerously inaccurate. It is true that the elect are saved persons; but this is not the idea which the words, 'If I am one of the elect I shall be saved,' are employed to express. The phrase assumes that salvation hinges upon election; and that an individual may be one of the elect without any knowledge of it, and consequently may be quite safe, although altogether uncertain and unconcerned regarding salvation. We shall endeavour to prove that any such notion as this is by no means the Bible doctrine of election.

"Then let it be observed, first, that to elect is to choose, to pick out, to separate—that election is the act or process of choosing, picking out, or separating—that an elect person or thing, is one chosen, picked out, or separated. Let it be observed, second, that in the Bible there are various sorts of election spoken of, (1) That of the Messiah to the mediatorship: Isaiah xlii 1, 'Behold mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth'; (2) That of the families of Israel, as the custodiers of the laws of God, and the progenitors of the Messiah concerning the flesh: Rom. ix. 11, 'The children being not yet born, neither having done good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth'; (3) Regal election: Deut. xvii. 15, 'Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose.' (4) Apostolic: Luke vi. 13, 'Jesus called his disciples, and of them he chose twelve, whom he also named apostles'; and John xv. 16, and said, 'Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain.' But passing other sorts, as civil, municipal, and ecclesiastical, we come to observe particularly gospel election—that choice which God makes of men in regard to salvation. It is this we have to do with; and we simply allude to the other descriptions of election as illustrative of that of the gospel, and to show that all the passages in the Bible that speak of election, do not refer to the election connected with the salvation of the soul. In regard, then, to this, we solicit attention to the following scriptural particulars:—

"1st, It is eternal in this respect, that from the beginning believers were chosen in Christ—Ephes. i. 3-4, 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world.' Now, be it observed, the faithful are said to be chosen in Christ, not out of him, and therefore the question here arises—what is meant by one party being chosen in another? Take an example—God chose the Jews in choosing Abraham—they were chosen in Abraham. But how? Simply because God, in choosing Abraham to be the head of that family, chose all who, in course of time, became connected with him, in terms of the purpose of that election. So is it with the believer; he is chosen in Christ—God chose him in choosing the Messiah; because in choosing Jesus as the head of the Christian family, he chose all who, in process of time, become connected with him, in terms of the purpose of this election. Inquirers, by overlooking the little, though important words, 'in him,' of Ephes. i. 4, get into a labyrinth of perplexity and error. We beg you then, dear reader, to observe, that the passage would not express the mind of the Spirit without these words. No man is elect out of Christ. It is in Jesus that election, and all the treasures of salvation, are hid; and no man not 'in Christ' is the possessor of one of them. Just as the man who is not in Christ is unsaved and unjustified, so is he non-elect; and just as the man who is in Jesus is justified and saved, so is he elect, or chosen of God.

"Now, it cannot be, that a man can be at once chosen of God and yet condemned; and if justification be by faith, so must election be through faith. Thus the doctrine that the elect were only in Christ, is not only perplexing, but contrary to the great doctrine of justification by faith; besides being opposed to the dictates of reason and revelation on the subject, since man had no being in eternity, and then there was no mass or body from which to choose or separate the elect. A moment's reflection proves this. But the apostle settles the question when he speaks, in Romans xvi. 7, of those who were in Christ before himself, which could not be if the elect were always in Christ. In no other sense, therefore, can it be true that men were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, than in the choice then made of Jesus as the chief of the elect.

"2nd, Gospel election is therefore a matter of time, in this respect, that the union of the Saviour and the sinner is effected in time. How otherwise are the statements of 1 Peter i. 2, and 2 Thessa. ii. 13-14, correct? Observe them. 'Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ.'

'Because God hath, from the beginning, chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, whereunto he called you by our gospel.' Here election is said to be 'according to the divine foreknowledge,' showing that if God foreknew it—as he did all the events of time—it must be an event of time. Again, it is said to be effected through, or by means of the sanctification of the Spirit—that sanctification which is, or leads unto, the obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ—that sanctification which is conjoined with the belief of the truth—that truth unto which God calls men by the gospel.

"Now, it is self-evident, that if men are chosen through sanctification of the Spirit and the belief of the truth, they are not personally chosen till they believe the truth, and have the sanctification of the Spirit.

"Here then, reader, you have the Scripture doctrine on this sublime subject, and we trust you see its consistency with the teaching of Scripture in general, and the facts, offers, and requirements of the gospel in particular. We beg of you not to perplex yourself with the fearful idea that God may have passed you by in the counsels of a past eternity; nor to imagine that he may then have chosen you in yourself, out of Christ, as you still are, and consequently, that you may remain indifferent to the gospel of his grace. We beseech you to observe, that in the gospel you find God calling you into the family of the elect. By the gospel he is seeking to bring you to the belief of the truth—to experience the sprinkling of that blood upon your conscience, which was freely shed for you, and which speaks peace to your guilty soul—to bring you down in obedience to it—and to obtain the sanctification of the Spirit—by all which you become one of the elect of God. See this, we pray you; and by faith and obedience become one of the chosen, separated, adopted children of Jehovah."

May another edition soon be wanted, and may it contain an additional chapter. So numerous are the objections and difficulties, owing to false teaching, in regard to the place given by the Lord to baptism, that at least as much might be said with advantage, as would fill a chapter equal in length to the others.

ALMOST.

WHEN the ordinances of the Lord's house have been forsaken and men return to them, put away human substitutes, and earnestly seek the former ways, we may surely say, there is a revival. Ever and anon we hear of persons who are active in such revivals. Mr. M'Vicker, of Ballymena, is one of that number. He says—

LETTER I.

My dear brother,—Having seen recently an announcement of a change in the constitution and arrangements of the church over which you have been pastor, I have taken the liberty of writing you on that subject. It pleased the Lord not long since, in a rather unmistakable way, to bring me to the knowledge of His Son Christ Jesus. I was then pastor in a very strict sect of Presbyterians over a congregation of some 350 communicants. At once on my conversion I was stripped of all reverence for the confessions of faith, catechisms, testimonies, covenants, &c. with which the communion in which I had been brought up was fenced round, and the Word of God alone remained my standard of faith and practice. As a natural consequence, infant baptism and Presbyterian government soon appeared before me what they really are, human inventions; and when they were so seen they were at once cast off. Of course the consequence was, I was cut off from my former connections. I have commenced preaching here within a few miles of my former residence, and for so far God has smiled on our effort. A church has begun to be formed. We have for name, "Disciples of Christ," for standard God's Word, and for terms of communion faith in Jesus Christ, witnessed by a credible profession and exemplified in a holy life. We have no officers as yet. But nothing is plainer than that the "one minister" system was unknown to the early disciples of Jesus. My greatest puzzle is to know how elders are to be chosen. I know of no example for our proceeding in that matter from God's Word.

We are not "strict communion;" we have some among us not yet baptized.—
Yours in the Lord Jesus,

JOHN G. M'VICKER.

Later in November, the following letter appeared in the Ballymena Observer :—

LETTER II.

Sir,—I thank you for the kind reference to my position which you made in your last number, in reply to the insinuations of your anonymous correspondent; but, as your explanation may somewhat mislead your readers, will you allow me to say a few words for myself?

Your correspondent seems to deplore the divisions of the Christian church, and to wish their abatement. Many others share in that feeling. How do they show it? What evidence of their sincerity do they give? They find a number of sectarian organizations, called churches, in existence. In one or other of them they happened to be born and brought up. While these continue as they are, Christian union cannot possibly be realized, and these devoted friends of Christian union show their ardour in its cause by remaining just where their birth and education placed them, and lamenting the conduct of those who act differently. Will the schisms of Christ's church ever be thus healed? and is the world not sick and weary of them?

Let every real disciple of the Lord Jesus consider whether the following is not a more rational mode of acting. Some months since I began to look around me with an intense scrutiny on the various religious communions, the one in which I acted as a minister especially. I compared them with the scriptural idea of the church of God. It was impossible for me not to notice the diversities between them and the plan of the church in God's Word. In regard to my own communion, for example, I asked—Where is infant sprinkling found in God's Word? There is not the slightest shadow of support for it. Where are all these church courts, presbyteries, synods, assemblies? They appear nowhere in Scripture. The officers of the primitive churches are never recorded to have attended these courts, are never required to submit to them, seem to have had no knowledge of them. Where are half-yearly communions, fast-days, days of preparation and thanksgiving? They are of human, not of divine origin. If what I found in the sect I belonged to was really countenanced in Scripture, I had every reason to wish to find it out. If proof were in God's Word, I had everything to lose by overlooking it. I could not find it. After a deliberate, prayerful examination, I was forced to see that it was not there. And what was I to do? Prove traitor to my convictions, to God's Word, to the Great Master, by continuing to teach and practice what I knew to be unscriptural? I dared not do it. At every sacrifice I must follow God.

To the child of God the idea of the Christian church is one of the simplest possible. It is "a congregation of faithful men." A number of persons in any neighbourhood become real disciples of Christ by believing on him for eternal life. The way in which their discipleship was confessed in primitive times, was by being immersed in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and where a believer sees this to have been the case, he will adopt the same heaven-commanded mode of evidencing his faith. These disciples meet every first day of the week, in their Master's name, to break bread. When they are met, those among them who have gifts use them for the edification of their brethren. This is such a Christian church as Paul was acquainted with, as he describes in his letters, and as meets in this town weekly in the "granary" in Broughshane-street.

Sir, our reformers were great men, and did great things in their day. How did they accomplish them? By looking back from the evils amid which they lived to the days of pure apostolic Christianity. They fell short of their model in most cases—but they did wonders. In the present day their descendants honour their memory by not imitating their conduct. Their fathers looked at the apostolic churches—they look at their fathers. Degenerate children. Let them be, like their fathers, reformers. Why go on year after year, in public meetings and evangelical alliances, pulling about Christian union, while they refuse to take a single step to realize it? While they still hold by their human systems, and their human creeds, on which they know the church of Christ will never unite, and keep from the ground on which alone she will ever be one?

Let each man who fears God in the various sects of the day, inquire what is God's idea of the church, and at once adopt it—not waiting till his neighbours agree with him, but as he is to be judged for himself, acting for himself. Let him ask what was Paul's denomination? What was Paul's creed? What were Paul's terms of communion? He will see that the one name of Christians should be Disciples of Christ—the one creed the Bible—the one term of communion faith in the Divine Redeemer, confessed with the mouth and evidenced by Christian obedience. This is the position which I now occupy. Let the true followers of Jesus, let the real friends of Christian union, say whether it is not as scriptural as it is unsectarian.

J. G. M'VICKER.

LETTER III.

My dear Sir and Brother,—I have now before me the Ballymena Observer, containing your letter of Nov. 16, 1859. I am thankful to find that your mind has been enlightened and your heart warmed by the truth of God, so that you enter into the spirit of the Redeemer's prayer for the oneness of all believers, and turn to the Apostles for the only sufficient and perfect foundation. The relinquishment of sectarian names, creeds, politics, by a complete return to the faith and order once for all given to the saints, is both indispensable and sufficient. Believing this I can say with you, "Let each man who fears God, in the various sects of the day, inquire what is God's idea of a church, and at once adopt it."

I have, I may almost say, great pleasure in learning that your own enquiry concerning the divine idea of a church, has resulted in a very near approach to the primitive model. That you do not wholly conform I much regret. I hope and pray that the Lord may lead you, in every particular, to learn and do His will.

You say that "the one term of communion was faith in the divine Redeemer, confessed with the mouth, and evidenced by Christian obedience." You know that that obedience had a defined beginning. It was not to commence at the Lord's table—not with ministering the Word—not just how and where the believer might feel or please, but it was to begin with baptism. When you look at "God's idea of a church" embodied in apostolic models, you see baptized believers only at the table of the Lord—the baptized only recognized as members of the church. You ask, "Where is infant sprinkling found in God's Word?" and answer, "There is not the slightest shadow of support for it." You then hold that those who can only refer to that sprinkling as their baptism are unbaptized, and you knowingly receive such into the church and to the Lord's table. By thus doing, you stop short of the Lord's idea of a church, and also of the only divine platform for union—in a word, whilst you exclaim against sects, you construct another, which, by reason of its near approach to the divine model, may be superior to every other human institution—but is, after all, your product and not God's, though people of God are found therein. Again you say "The way in which discipleship was conferred in primitive times, was by being immersed in water, in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." Now on this point I beg you carefully to reconsider. "In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," is Papal, not Christian—a formula of Rome, but not a command or formula given by Him, to whom all authority in heaven and in earth has been committed. Turn, my dear Sir, to the Greek of Mat. xxviii. and you will find the Apostles commanded to baptize, not in the name of Father, Son, and Spirit, but into (eis) that indescribably blessed name. Not one instance will the New Testament supply of baptism "in the name;"* and surely, after your urgent appeal in favor of entire submission to "God's idea," you will never sanction departure in this particular. If at the first moment you should be led to ask, "What can it matter whether I read in or into?" I answer, "In the name" denotes the authority by which you act—"Into the name" expresses change of relation. The bride marries not in the name of the bridegroom, but into his name, and thereby receives it, and by receiving it enters into a new relation to him. The ceremony which confers the name does not change her heart, but it changes her state. Baptism into the name is a baptism which places the subject of it in a new relation to the name into which he is baptized, and consequently to the bearers of that name. This baptism commanded by the Saviour you could not administer to those believers whom you acknowledge as members of the church, though unbaptized, because the relationship into which it baptizes them, in your view, they already stand in—while on the other hand, if you admit that baptism is into the name, and into Christ, you cannot allow that unbaptized believers stand in that very relation into which baptism introduces believers.

* As a substitute for into.

If I visit Ballymena, which I may do 'ere long, I shall crave for fellowship with you, and yet shall have to decline it, because I dare no more act in opposition to the Lord's idea of a church in this item, than do you in regard to Presbyterian practices which you have relinquished.

I may send a copy of this to the Observer, or otherwise print it with your letter of the 16th. I shall be glad to hear from you in reply, and trust that what we know not now, the Lord in his goodness may teach us. Yours, dear brother, in the one hope,
D. KING.

To Mr. J. G. M'Vicker.

This was followed by the annexed letter and the rejoinder of Mr. M'Vicker.

LETTER IV.

My dear Sir,—I do not learn from your letter the views which you entertain in relation to baptism. The tone of your remarks, however, lead me to infer, that you agree with those who regard it as essential to salvation, as really uniting us to Christ, as our regeneration, as conferring remission of sins, &c. If this is the case, it is not wonderful that it should occupy a different place in your mind in relation to the church of Christ to what it does in mine. To me "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "The righteousness of God is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "They which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." Repeatedly the words of Habakkuk are quoted in the New Testament, "The just shall live by faith." "We are saved by grace through faith, and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God." "The promise by faith of Jesus Christ is given to ALL them that believe." "A man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ. Even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ."

I might fill page after page with Scriptures to the same effect. Paul, in his first five chapters to the Romans, lays down the foundation truths connected with a sinner's salvation. Read over his argument. He proves the sinner guilty, lying under wrath; he shows the way of deliverance at large; he leaves him justified and saved. How? Simply by faith in the Lord Jesus. Not a word of baptism all the time. God sent Paul not to baptize, but to preach the gospel; and this was the gospel which he did preach.

Where, then, does baptism come in? Precisely in the place of any other act of obedience to the authority of Christ, which one who is already saved yields to his Lord. A faith which does not lead to obedience, is no faith. The believer's union to the Lord Jesus is vital and lasting. He is a branch growing out of the true vine. From the vine sap continually flows out to the branch. It is the Spirit of God that forms this union, and faith is the act in which it is realized in the soul. Faith is of the operation of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead. By faith, then, I receive all the strength and grace needful for all obedience to the Lord. "He worketh in me to will and to do of His good pleasure." Baptism is a part of my obedience to Christ—not a condition of salvation—not an essential of salvation; but a result of salvation. I know many dear children of God who have not been baptized: not that they are wilfully disobedient to Christ, but that they have been led astray as to the will of Christ. They are born again, not of the will of man, but of God. I cannot but feel that they are my brethren in the Lord, by a better bond than that of immersion. They are baptized by one Spirit into one body.

You will see then, my dear Sir, why I cannot reject from the Lord's table those whom God has received, because they cannot see with me the Lord's teaching about immersion. To find out the meaning of the term baptize, under the heaps of rubbish gathered over it by clerical industry, to see that the Abrahamic covenant does not justify infant baptism, though easy to us, is yet what many believers in Jesus, seemingly anxious to know and follow the Lord's will, cannot attain to. Am I to regard them as walking disorderly?—as unregenerate? Receive ye one another, as God hath received you. Who art thou, to judge another man's servant?

In conclusion I must say, that I know of few more deadly errors, than that which makes baptism essential to salvation and to regeneration. It is another gospel. It removes the soul from the one foundation, the Lord Jesus Christ, embraced in all His fulness by faith, and builds another foundation. With persons who hold such views I have nothing in common. I love them as men, and desire their salvation; but they pervert the gospel of the Lord Jesus, and I cannot wish them God speed. Their nearer approach in name and outward form to pure apostolic Christianity, only renders them, like the Anabaptists of Germany, the more dangerous to the truth.

Very sincerely yours, for the truth's sake,
JOHN G. M'VICKER.

P.S. Your translation of eis in the "commission" is of course correct, and is that which I use in baptizing: though my object, in quoting, not being to correct it, I took it as it stands in the Authorized Version. You should observe, however, that en is also employed with βαπτίζω (Acts x. 48); en in Acts ii. 38.

In reply to the above the following is offered. Our next number will be open for Mr. M'Vicker's reply.

LETTER V.

Dear Brother, — Yours of the 1st keeps at considerable distance the one position of my former communication. You do not learn my views in relation to baptism. You state your dissent from them, if they are such as you intimate, and you mainly fill your pages by quoting Paul on justification by faith. With Paul I entirely agree — with a few of your inferences I am at war. I regret that you have pursued this course, because my views in relation to baptism, further than set forth, have nothing to do with the point in hand. I could change very considerably, and still hold that you are forming a church not in accordance with "God's idea of a church." Is baptism essential to salvation? How does it stand in relation to regeneration and remission of sins? — are questions I shall be glad to answer when the enquiry now before us is disposed of, or further advanced.

On your third page you near the question at issue by saying, "Where, then, does baptism come in? Precisely in the place of any other act of obedience to the authority of Christ, which one who is already saved yields." I answer — Baptism has its own peculiar use and place, and he who puts any other act in lieu of it, quits apostolic ground. "Do this," said the Lord, when he blessed the bread; but did he say, Do this into (eis) my name, or into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit? Do the Scriptures of Truth ever speak of breaking bread into Christ, or into his name? Do they ever set forth any one of the duties which a baptized believer is called upon to perform as being into Christ, or into his name? If not, why does this peculiar intimation (denoting change of relation) find no place in your system, though it meets you at every turn in that of the Apostles? You add — "Eis, in the commission, is of course correct, and is that which I use in baptizing." But how with any regard to consistency, can you do this? You baptize only those whom you believe are already in Christ, and being so have his name. How then can you profess to baptize them into that name? Your sprinkling in infancy introduced you into the Presbyterian church, and no subsequent act or suffering of yours could stand in the same relation — your prayers, your preaching, were all in that church. The marriage ceremony introduces the woman into the name of the bridegroom — which being once done, and the name her's, no subsequent act of her life can repeat. On the other hand, if the ceremony imparts the name, no previous change of heart can have given it, as to speak of again receiving a name already possessed would be absurd.

You tell me to "observe that en is also employed with βαπτίζω (Acts x. 48.) True, but eis to ονομα and en to ονοματι are never used in sacred or classic literature as synonyms. The authority by which an act is performed, is never confounded with the intention or meaning of it. Every person baptized according to the Lord's will, is immersed both in the name of the Lord, and into the name, as that baptism which is into the name is by his authority. It is also upon (en) the name, denoting that those whom the Lord authorises to be immersed into his name, can only do so when trusting to, relying upon, that one and only saving name. Not that some may be baptized in, others into, and some upon the name, but that each must be baptized believing upon the name, into the name, and by the authority of the Lord whose name is then named upon the subject.

But you know many who love Christ, and are not knowingly disobedient, though unbaptized. So do I. But what neither you nor I know is, that the Apostles of Jesus ever received authority to enrol such persons as members of the church. You add, "They are baptized by one Spirit into one body." By one Spirit — that is through the teaching of the one Spirit, believers are immersed into one body. If the persons referred to have not been immersed, they have not been baptized, and as you admit that the baptism referred to is into the one body, they are not in that body. Depend upon it, my dear Sir, Paul was right when he said one faith, one Lord, one baptism, and that you are wrong when you admit two or more baptisms.

To one who knows not your exact position, how powerful are your words when calling upon the friends of Christian union to abandon human systems, creeds, and names, and to accept God's idea of a church as exhibited in the Scriptures of Truth. But how sad it is to know, that your old Presbyterian allies can turn your words upon yourself, and, by shewing that, on one point at least, they conform to the divine model, while you do not, effectively say, "Physician, heal thyself." The Presbyterian confession of faith makes "baptism a sacrament of the New Testament ordained by Jesus Christ, for the solemn admission of the party baptized into the visible church," and the Lord's Supper an ordinance "in the church" (chap. 28-9.) You lose yourself in your own inferences, instead of attending to the Spirit-recorded examples, and then, strange to say, rate your old friends for following their fathers rather than the Apostles, while in this particular, the Apostles are with them, and, by every example, against you.

And now a plain question is before you. You have commenced well—proclaimed a divine principle—there is a breaker ahead in the form of your own loving feeling toward those who "don't see baptism." Will you follow the Apostles, or will you not? If you will not, then you must stand with other sect-makers—if you will, then you must receive only the baptized, or shew that they received others.

In conclusion, permit me to say that you cannot escape the force of this demand by attributing it to some supposed extreme view held by me concerning the design of baptism. Our question is one of fact. Did the Apostles receive unbaptized persons? If they did not and you do, then your church is not one with their's. Let it be remembered, that I claim not only every fact recorded in the New Testament, but the entire voice of antiquity, together with modern leaders and creeds, leaving only on your side Plymouth Brethren and a few inconsistent Baptists. Take as samples:

Justin Martyr, who wrote about A.D. 150, only fifty years after the Apostle John, says:—"This food is called by us the Eucharist, of which it is not lawful for any one to partake, but such as believe the things that are taught by us to be true, and have been baptized."

Jerome, A.D. 400, says:—"Catechumens cannot communicate at the Lord's Table, being unbaptized."

Bede, A.D. 700, says:—"Three young men, princes of the Eastern Saxons, seeing a Bishop administer the Sacred Supper, desired to partake of it as their royal father had done. To whom the Bishop replied: If you will be baptized in the salutary fountain as your father was, you may also partake of the Lord's Supper as he did; but if you despise the former, you cannot in any wise receive the latter."

Theophylact, A.D. 1100, says:—"No unbaptized person partakes of the Lord's Supper."

F. Spanheim, A.D. 1300, writes:—"None but baptized persons are admitted to the Lord's Table."

Lord Chancellor King, (Episcopalian) A.D. 1700, says:—"Baptism was always the precedent to the Lord's Supper, and none were admitted to receive the Eucharist till they were baptized. This is so obvious to every man that it needs no proof."

Dr. Wall, (Episcopalian) A.D. 1705:—"No church ever gave the Communion to any one before they were baptized. Among all the absurdities that ever were held, none ever maintained that any persons should partake of the Communion before they were baptized."

Dr. Doddridge, (Congregationalist) says:—"It is also certain that, so far as our knowledge of primitive antiquity extends, no unbaptized person received the Lord's Supper."

Dr. Dwigth, (Congregationalist) says:—"It is an indispensable qualification of this ordinance, that the candidate for Communion be a member of the visible church of Christ, in full standing. By this, I intend that he should be a person of piety—that he should have made a public profession of religion—and that he should have been baptized."

Dr. Griffin, President of Williams College, (Presbyterian) remarks:—"I agree with the advocates of close communion on two points. 1. That baptism is the initiating ordinance which introduces us into the visible church; of course, where there is no baptism there are no visible churches. 2. That we ought not to commune with those who are not baptized, and, of course, are not church members, if we regard them as Christians. There is such a relationship established between the two ordinances that I have no right to separate them."

Rev. Richard Watson, (Methodist) says:—"It is obligatory on all who are convinced of the truth of Christianity to be baptized; and upon all thus baptized, frequently to partake of the Lord's Supper."

May the Lord lead us in all truth, and may we do His will on earth as it is done in heaven. Yours in Christian love,
D. KING.

PLYMOUTH-BRETHRENISM.

NO. I.

In a letter to Plymouth Brethren, in the British Millennial Harbinger for August, 1859, I charged believers of that sect with will-worship and dichostacy, rebutted their doctrine of the ruin of the dispensation, and called upon them to come out from confusion and return to the good old way. Two papers are to hand, one bearing upon these points, and the other directly in reply. These papers shall shortly appear, with remarks deemed requisite. Plymouth-brethrenism has served its generation—it has put forth, in word and practice, several neglected truths. It is nevertheless sectarian, narrow, bigotted, doomed to destruction, and crumbling to pieces. Its contentions and divisions, arising out of its principles, make it, in the eyes of the world, contemptible. The tyranny and narrow-mindedness of this sect has, last month, been lovingly rebuked, in a letter, by John Hamilton, late Editor of the Aylesbury News, and now of one of the London daily papers. His concluding words shew that he is not an angry scribe, but one who writes in love. He says—

"And if my prayers can be of any avail, they are offered up that you may enjoy peace and unity as a society of believers, and that every one of you may triumphantly overcome evil in this world, and at last enter upon full possession of that eternal life which is reserved for the faithful. And to Him to whom we are indebted for such a hope, let us unite in attributing all the praise. Amen.

My beloved spouse at home salutes you, and we shall both always rejoice when you visit us."

In this sect the congregation decides not the question, Who speaks to edification? And as they ordain not elders, but men put themselves where they think God would have them, self-esteem is often ruler, good men are silenced, and driven out to "gather" in other places. On this point John Hamilton says—

"Had there existed among us that order and rule which the apostles were inspired to establish in the early churches, I should have made an appeal to the united body, and have become obedient to its decision; but as this is not the case, and as each is expected to act upon his own responsibility, it only remains that I should retire, for it is not advisable to hold Christian alliance with a community where some, acting on their individual authority, can restrain a brother from exercising his gift, and can thereby decide for the whole body what may, or what may not be in accordance with the mind of the SPIRIT."

The dividing element in this sect is kindly but clearly set forth in the following—

"Also, there is a position which an assembly of believers should hold towards all other believers, however varied their differences may be. It is that its meetings should be established upon such a basis that, were the place only large enough, they could comprehend the millions that are to worship round the throne as easily as the handfuls who may be our personal acquaintances. Believe me, my brethren, we are too narrow—far, far too narrow. They who are the most zealous in repudiating sectarianism may themselves be the most sectarian of all. By limiting the range of sacred truth—by setting up our own peculiarities as a standard—even by the use of a language which is meaningless and worn, or a tone of voice which is whimpering and unnatural—by such mistakes and improprieties, we may render it impossible but for a very few to walk with us on the road to that everlasting kingdom which is to be peopled by innumerable multitudes. For the kingdom of heaven is like to a rich man who should invite crowds to go to his capacious mansions to live; and when we repair thither, behold his gardens stocked with all the varieties of plant and flower which Nature yields, and his tables covered with food and fruit of every description, so that all tastes may be satisfied, and every eye refreshed. This provider is the LORD of GLORY, and the provision is the Holy Book. And while we make our own selection from that Book of what pleases our eye or satisfies our soul, we must not take this selection and say to all others, 'Have these truths alone.' Sometimes I have been led to think, from the experience of our little meetings, that our Bible might all be torn away save a few verses here and there, and that the little that was left would be all that we desired either for mankind or ourselves.

The two things which are ever brought before the notice of the believers at our meetings are, first, the doctrine that the Divine Spirit is alone the teacher of the church; and secondly, that the Divine Redeemer is once more to make his personal appearance in this world. These doctrines, brethren, are true, and therefore demand studious and careful consideration; but if the mind rests upon these, or any other doctrines, to the exclusion of the great code of truth, the punishment which heaven specially inflicts for such negligence is weakness of mind; next, monomania; thirdly, fanaticism; and lastly, even insanity itself.

With respect to the second approach, Scripture clearly reveals that it is to be personal and visible, penal and rewarding, and we are required to await and expect this day of power, and to break bread and drink wine until it shall have arrived. Such is my own belief, and beyond what I here express I have no knowledge, though always willing to attend to those passages of the Sacred Oracles which are supposed to contain additional instruction on this sublime topic. At the same time we should be anxious not to embrace the errors of those who take upon themselves, in the vanity of their imaginations, to decide upon the details of unfulfilled prophecy, or the errors of another class, whose zeal for the regeneration of the world is quenched by the belief that human exertions are of no avail, for MESSIAS is again coming to earth to put all things right. The practical question, however, seems to be to make ourselves so acquainted with the character of him who is to come, as seen in his first mission, that we may be able to recognize him were he suddenly to re-appear, for, like the Jews, we may not be able to do so. This, I must repeat, is the practical point; and it is upon this practical point that I have not heard a single exhortation.

With respect to the necessity of abiding solely and entirely by the teaching of the

DIVINE SPIRIT—here I can speak with greater decision, and could write page upon page. Although you may not even have heard me name the subject in meetings where it is so often named, yet no doctrine of the Scriptures has so much, and for so long a period, occupied my attention as this. I may say that I have less or more, studiously considered it for the last fifteen years. I know not a sect, however wrong, or a church, however mistaken, that has not believed its errors to have been inspired by the HOLY SPIRIT; and as the DIVINE SPIRIT cannot teach diversity, but only uniform truth, I have discovered the necessity of attributing inspiration only to the Scriptures, in no case regarding the impulses of the heart as his teaching of truth. We all know how much the doctrine of the SPIRIT's teaching has been perverted, and I will mention the two great mistakes that have to be avoided. The first is, that extravagant notion of being absorbed into the Divine nature by which we are made to become mechanical or passive agents, even to the disappearance of the works of righteousness, and the loss of our own individuality; and the second mistake is, such an apprehension of Divine truth being found within ourselves that we believe our own opinions to be inspired, and therefore cannot endure the opinions of others. The first error is that of the heathen religions of India, which make the soul vanish and become part of the Divine Being; the second is the error of the Church of Rome, upon which is founded all its claim to infallibility. It may be also worthy of remark that the Infidel, or what is called the rationalistic religions of the Continent, appear to have taken up both errors, for while they say that humanity and Deity are one and the same, they also consider that the voice within our own souls is the voice of infallible and irresistible truth. Now, in opposition to all this perversity of opinion, the Christian system inculcates a personal activity, and requires a self-acting faith, and even makes our ultimate salvation depend upon our own works, supplying us, however, with all the assistance needed to enable us to do what is right. And if this be so, it is wrong for us to sit still and wait for impulses before we believe, or before we teach, or before we work; and the consequences of such conduct has ever been an unintelligent faith, a disconnected teaching, and a worthless behaviour. It might, no doubt, have been different with the apostles, for they were inspired. No; it is the spirit of indolence, and not the SPIRIT of God, which tempts us to abandon the systematic study of the Scriptures, in the hope that the truth will come to us without it, or which incites us to teach without having properly divided the word, and carefully prepared ourselves for presenting its injunctions. The HOLY SPIRIT is the Spirit of order and propriety, and it urges us to the cultivation of such habits of mind as fit us for pointed, interesting, and instructive exposition of the Scriptures. Without, however, going further into this solemn and vital question of the Spirit's teaching, I may only add, that, as with the doctrine of the second approach, so with this, for it has a practical aspect which far transcends the doctrinal theory. The question, after all, is not so much the fact that the SPIRIT teaches, which is admitted: the question is, what does the SPIRIT say? When he, the SPIRIT of TRUTH was promised, it was not that he should speak of himself, but of another; and it would therefore, be most advisable that the time occupied in your meetings in repeated assertions about the Divine teaching, should be taken up in future in the endeavour to apprehend what that teaching is. It is the food when partaken of that alone can satisfy our wants, not the continuous announcement that it can be obtained; and when the truths of the SPIRIT are explained and understood, we need not to be told that they come from above. We shall be sure to discern that that is so, for the heavenly differs altogether from the earthly repeat."

Their erroneous views of the Spirit's mode of teaching render them overbearing, so much so, that if one only learns a little more than they know, or throws off some of their errors, he is at once called a child of the devil, &c. A letter from Leamington gives another illustration on this point.

"Last Lord's-day a Mr. Davies, from Easbury, visited the brethren here, and desired to have a conversation with me. He argued that faith is something that the Holy Spirit puts into a man, and in this sense is the gift of God. I argued that faith comes by hearing, or by reading, and that it was man's own act. Secondly, he argued, that as soon as a sinner believed he was pardoned—made a child of God. I maintained, that it was when the penitent believer was born of water and the Spirit. For maintaining these things he was pleased to call me a heretic, and said that the Devil was in me, that I was no more fit to meet with the brethren than an Infidel &c. Since then I have met with one of the principal brethren here, and have argued the same points with the same results. They say I deny the influence of the Holy Spirit, and also add to the finished work of the Redeemer, which I deny. The result is, that I meet no more with them.—Yours J. E."

Here I must leave these erring ones for at least another Moon. May they be led into all truth, and finally into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. D. KING.

"THE NEW SECT IN BIRMINGHAM."

THE notice relating to changes in the Bond-street church, copied from the Birmingham Post, and which appeared in our last, has found its way into the Nonconformist, not however as it was in the Birmingham Post, but with the words "A New Sect" added. Letters given under have resulted.

"To the Editor of the Nonconformist—

"Sir,—In your last number appears an extract from the Birmingham Post, stating that, 'at special church-meetings held at Bond-street Chapel, Birmingham, it has been resolved to have a plurality of elders to take the oversight of the church; to administer baptism without delay to every penitent believer, &c.; to afford an opportunity at the breaking of the bread every Lord's-day, for mutual teaching; to cease to sanction the singing of praise on the part of unbelievers; to renounce all human creeds, to give up pew-rents and collections for church funds; and to substitute the designation, church of Christ meeting, &c. for that of Baptist church.' Mr. Chew has requested that members of the church and others would cease to style him reverend."

"This being, happily, an age in which every man has a right to adopt what creed, or what form of church polity he pleases, with the new views embraced by the individuals in Bond-street, Birmingham, no one has any authority to interfere; but there was one matter not alluded to in the above quoted article, which, of course, was an omission."

"I cannot believe that individuals so extremely rigid, punctilious, and self-denying as those constituting this 'new sect' appear to be, can have done so much violence to their consciences as to retain possession of a place of worship built by the exertions, and with the money, of those who designed it expressly for a 'Baptist chapel,' in which were to be preached doctrines in accordance with the Baptist confession of faith, and of a church and congregation holding the views, and constituted according to the method, which obtains among Congregationalists; and therefore, of course, Mr. Chew and those who act with him have handed Bond-street Chapel over to its trustees, and in order to be quite apostolic in their location, have taken 'an upper room.' If, however, they still hold possession, I would put it to them, as conscientious men, whether they can continue to do so, as at present they are appropriating for one object a building erected for another. I ask them whether they feel quite sure the money contributed to the establishment of a Baptist church would have been bestowed, could it have been foreseen that Congregationalism was to be supplanted by something else. Every principle of equity I conceive calls upon them to retire.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, R. H. J."

What R. H. J. was running his head against when he wrote of "Congregationalism supplanted by something else" we cannot divine. If there be a church in the kingdom more thoroughly in keeping with the one great feature of Congregationalism than the church in Bond-street, we should like to know where to find it. In this particular its changes do not affect it in the slightest degree. The other charge is, that it has ceased to be a "Baptist church." Has it? The answer to this question depends upon the idea intended to be conveyed by the words Baptist church. It may mean a church of Baptists, and, as a Baptist is one who dips (John the Baptist for instance)—it will then stand for a church of dippers. This the church in Bond-street certainly is not. It is commonly understood to mean, a church which calls itself Baptist rather than Christian. But is this its original signification? The records of earlier churches shew that they were called, not Baptist churches, but baptized churches, and that their members were spoken of as baptized men, and not designated Baptists. The church in Bond-street is composed entirely of baptized persons, will not receive the unbaptized, and thus completely fills the original signification of the term Baptist church. True, they intend to speak of themselves as Christians, to answer to that name only, but as believers are baptized into the name of Christ, to call one a Christian, is by implication to designate him a baptized man.

The letter of R. H. J. was followed by another—

"To the Editor of the Nonconformist."

"Sir,—I was much interested in reading, in a recent number of the Nonconformist, the brief notice of what you are pleased to call 'a new sect' in Birmingham, but which reminded me much of the proceedings of a very old sect, which sprung up near 2000 years ago, and which, we are told, 'was everywhere spoken against.'

"In your last week's number I see the subject again alluded to, by your correspondent R. H. J. in what I think cannot but be characterized as a very sarcastic and unfair spirit. Into the merits of the question he has broached I do not wish to enter:—the rights of property as possessed by congregations, is an articulate subject, which has its two aspects, and these are necessarily influenced by peculiar circumstances, about which, in this case, I know nothing. But I should like to enter my protest against the sneering spirit in which your correspondent has indulged, in speaking of this movement in Bond-street chapel, Birmingham. Why should it be necessary—when Christian men follow out their convictions—to taunt them with being 'extremely rigid, punctilious, and self-denying,' and sneeringly to invite them to be 'still more Apostolic by taking an upper room?' What R. H. J. would have said of the Apostles themselves, had he lived in their day, it is not difficult to conceive. They were guilty of all that he refers to in the present case, even to the temporary appropriation of part of the Jewish Temple for their religious purposes: and that they renounced all human creeds—had a plurality of Elders for the oversight of each church—that they would have been shocked at the idea of unbelievers and irreligious men singing the praises of God—and that they were forbidden by Christ himself to be styled 'Master' or 'Reverend,' no reader of the New Testament need to be reminded.

"Of course our correspondent has a perfect right to open the question he has referred to, in a courteous and Christian way—but, to my mind, the tone of his letter is both intolerant and uncharitable, and not calculated to promote an honest truth-seeking spirit.

"We have already, in all our religious bodies, sadly too little of that true moral courage which will dare to doubt of the wisdom of stereotyped arrangements, and with all boldness, as well as with prudence, to apply the knife to those customs and practices which, like the 'tradition of the Elders,' are founded solely on human wisdom, and which are everywhere opposing the growth and sapping the life of true vital Christianity; and we cannot, therefore, afford to put the slightest check upon the reviving spirit—wherever or however it may show itself—which dares to prune the branches, as well as to stimulate the roots, and which seeks to bring itself more in accordance with the Divine pattern exhibited in the days of the Apostles.

"I would like, in conclusion, to put one consideration before the Christian people who have resolved upon taking the steps we have been referring to. Have they provided the opportunity—in case the Lord should so will it—for the service of a plurality of ministers as well as Elders? This is a point on which, as it seems to me, the inspired record is very clear as regards the church of the Apostles; and I trust they will look to it, in the brave Catholic spirit they have already shown on other matters of Christian polity.

"The Christian church, in all its truly Protestant sections, is sighing for more apostolic simplicity—more truthfulness in its practices and arrangements; and they who fearlessly follow their convictions in these respects deserve, and I doubt not have, the sympathy of all who love the truth for its own sake.—With much respect, yours very truly, M. A."

Many things said here are quite to our mind. The enquiry concerning a plurality of ministers is not clear as to its import. Teaching and exhortation are open to those who can engage to edification—as it was in Corinth, so it is at Bond-street. D. K.

"Is the time never coming when Christians will be less dependent upon ministers than they now are? I feel deeply the defects of the present organization of the Christian church. Every joint of the body should work effectually for the common growth, and now a few men have a monopoly of the work."—Dr. Channing.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM.

Since my last communication of news from this town, our course has been much as before. We are, however, better known, more esteemed, and in some quarters more feared. Some are seeking opportunities to know us better, and some are busily engaged in secretly slandering us. Additions have been made by immersion, both at Bond-street and at Cherry-street. D. K.

BRECON.

It may be gratifying to you and the readers of your valuable periodical to hear that the disciples of the dear Redeemer's kingdom are increasing in Brecon. We have added twelve to our number since the last Tuesday in October, making our church twenty-nine. One of those lately immersed is the son of a Roman Catholic, another is from the Wesleys, and a third from the Calvinistic Methodists, 71 years old. I am happy to add, there are many more inquirers for the good old path. Our meeting-room has become far too small for those who seek admission to hear the word of life and salvation. We are purposing to build a room, for which object our Lord Lieutenant, Colonel L. V. Watkins, M.P. has kindly given us a piece of land. We are in earnest, and feel desirous to begin and complete it soon as possible. Any of the dear brethren that can assist us with their prayers and contributions will command our hearty thanks.

We have an interesting Sunday School of between forty and fifty each day. We commence the Lord's day at six in the morning, soon after seven go down to the river Usk, read the Scriptures, sing a hymn, and address the congregation assembled; and then go down into the river and immerse the candidates on a profession of faith. Each meeting has gone off happily. We have ten, sometimes fifteen services in the week, not omitting Saturday evenings. We have received a dear brother from the Baptists, who is very useful in our labours of love; one has also been restored, who is rejoicing in his liberty from the thralldom of sin and Satan. To the Lord be all the praise.

Berkeley Place, Dec. 12, 1859.

DUNDEE.

Since Bro. Milner left us last month his labours have been followed up by our esteemed Bro. Rotherham, and during that period he has delivered many excellent disc-courses on primitive Christianity, well calculated to edify the brethren, and unfold the truth. Besides, a Bible conference is held on Tuesday evening, when an address is delivered, which forms the theme of friendly discussion — and on Thursday evening a meeting of the brethren is held especially for mutual edification, both of which are conducted by Bro. R. He is certainly well instructed in the things concerning the kingdom of God — appears well versed in critical matters, and is every way competent to make known the truth. On Lord's-day evening last, he delivered a most important and critical address on the significant divine names "Elohim," "Adonai," and "Jehovah," or "Yahveh;" many items of thought were introduced worthy of our serious reflection, exhibiting at the same time much research from the Old Testament, on the proper interpretation of these names as they severally stand related to the Great Creator of the universe. As Bro. R. is to give another address in continuation of the same subject on Lord's day first, unfolding the relations as contained in the New Testament, we will defer making any remarks until the whole is developed. We can only say, that what we have heard has been most interesting and instructive: certainly the most critical address we ever listened to in the locality on such an all-engrossing theme.

Since our last report one young woman has been immersed, and one restored.

We were favored this week with a catalogue of the officers and students of Bethany College, by a sister who resides at Bethany, Va. in which is contained a list of the present faculty and of the graduates since the third session in 1844 to 1859; also, a full detail of what is taught by each professor, terms of admission, discipline, its literary societies, &c. with a brief account of the college, and its fine situation, as being one of the most healthy localities in the Union. A fine sketch of the new buildings is also contained in the pamphlet, which appears altogether magnificent and on a large scale. We would conclude that it is one of the most splendid in the United States. Our worthy brother, A. Campbell, is doing a great work for future generations, it having been founded by his enterprising zeal and wisdom, and carried on with so much success, and in such a flourishing condition at present, he cannot but reflect with pleasure on the benefits resulting from such a valuable institution.

Since writing the above report for November, we have the pleasure to acquaint you, that two young men have been immersed last week and added to the church.—I understand our Bro. Rotherham is to forward a condensed account of his lectures on the significant divine names Elohim, Adonai, and Jehovah or Yahveh, which I doubt not will be read with great interest by the readers of the Harbinger. Certainly they exhibited the finest specimens of Biblical criticism ever delivered in our hall, or in our locality. J. G. AINSLIE.

December 19, 1859.

GLASGOW.

We are happy to inform the brethren, that since we last wrote in September, we have had three added to our number by confession and immersion, viz. Agnes, the daughter of our Bro. Lambie; Peter, the son of our Bro. and Sister Rollo; and the wife of our Bro. F. McKay. We would also mention one feature in connection with the progress of the church here, as an incentive to the brethren in other places, that all the grown up children of both parents who belong to the church are now in fellowship with us. This we mention, not in the way of boasting, but simply because we think the household is the first and most legitimate field for conversion; and if every brother and sister in the Lord were to set their hearts to the work of sowing the good seed, by word and example, in the minds of their children, an abundant harvest would very soon be reaped, to the honor and praise of the Lord, not only from the households, but from the world, where such examples would have a blessed effect. What is more lovely than to see a whole family walking in the truth, and sending forth the sweet savor of the name of the Lord from the home circle! J. BROWN.

GRANGEMOUTH.

I am uncertain if the church can contribute to the Evangelist Fund, as a proposal is on foot that one or two evangelists may be got for Scotland, and in that case our mite would very likely go toward that object. Since I last wrote you we have had two additions to our small number in Grangemouth, two sisters having put on Jesus in baptism, one on the 27th ult. and the other on the 4th instant. May they be faithful unto death. B. WALKER.

December 13, 1859.

ST. HELENS.

I am happy to say, since November, we have been strengthened by ten members, nine of whom have confessed their faith in Christ, and been immersed in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; and one has returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of souls, who was baptized in India.—We had Bro. Tickle with us on Lord's day, the 4th of December, who gave us two excellent addresses, in the morning from Eph. iii. 13 and following verses, and in the evening from Luke vii. 17. I rejoice in witnessing the prosperity of the truth.

JAMES BEERY.

SWANSEA.

Last Lord's day we were much cheered by the presence of our esteemed brother Jabez Inwards, of London. He favored us with two able and heart-melting discourses which will be long, and perhaps eternally remembered. The only thing we have to regret is, that the notice of his coming here was so extremely short—only one day. But, however, short as it was, the hall brought a goodly number of people together, from one of whom we heard some frank observations as to our position, which have opened to our views a cheering prospect and a field of interesting labor. We hope and anticipate that the Lord will long allow us to write cheering news from Swansea. E. EVANS.

December 15, 1859.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

MELBOURNE, VICTORIA.

Since last writing you, we have had our wanderer restored, and yesterday week we had six immersions, and are likely to have more soon. We have now a baptistry in our place of meeting, the Temperance Hall, which is a great convenience.

I am sorry to have to state, that our beloved brother, Kemp, has been afflicted with paralysis for a considerable time, but still superintends his business. He has long been afflicted with severe headache and dulness of hearing, and now he is almost quite deaf. Mrs. Kemp has also been ill. Numerous friends in England are interested in this worthy brother and sister. October 19, 1859. R. SKERVINGTON.

HINDMARSH, VICTORIA.

Since I last wrote you, and during the last month, five have been added to the congregation by immersion into the fullness of Christ. Three have removed to other congregations. Our meetings continue to be well attended, and the truth is steadily making its way to the hearts and homes of the people. As I am recovering from a sudden and violent attack of cholera, I am unable to write you a long letter, as to appearance, I shall not be strong again for a few weeks.

I have sent you, through Bro. T. Harkness, jun. of Sanquhar, £15—namely, £10 for the American Bible Union, and £5 for the Evangelist Fund. This donation is from the brethren at present meeting in the house of Bro. Greenfield's, of Myponra. Any letters or communications would be more readily reach them through Brother James Craig, farmer, Morphet Vale. I am thus particular in mentioning their address, as, if the Bible Union conductors know it, they may attribute the gift to the right place, or forward any reports to their address, or to me. No doubt some communication will reach us from the Bible Union.

At present I have no other items of intelligence to apprise you of. My family, I am happy to say, are in the enjoyment of tolerably good health, and we unite in kind regards to yourself, and to all the brethren.

I remain, your's in the Gospel,

HENRY WARREN.

Hindmarsh, Victoria, October 17, 1859.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. M'LURE : JESSIE SEATH.

We have to record the death of two of our young sisters, who had not been long in fellowship with us, which has cast quite a gloom over the church. Sister Seath was called away after five days' illness, aged 21 years; and Mrs. M'Lure, the wife of one of our brothers, who had been married only about six months, was summoned to the house appointed for all living, after ten days' illness. These sudden visitations speak loudly to us all, Be ye also ready, for ye know not what may be on the morrow. When we thus see the young and the healthy cut down in the prime of life, while the frail, and infirm, and aged are left behind, we are reminded that death is no respecter of persons. The young and the strong have no certain tenure of life. Let us then "number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

J. BROWN.

Glasgow, December 12, 1859.

FAMILY CIRCLE.

A PARTING WORD.

In saying farewell to the old year, we are subjected to feelings of pleasure and of pain. We must part for ever. But the remembrance of our acquaintanceship shall never fade. Thou wilt soon be in the eternity of the past and we shall behold thee no more. Thou hast been a friend to us, and when thou art dead we shall hear the voice of thy wisdom. We shall never forget thee. Thou hast been to us a year of plenty. Beneath the smile of thy Spring glory the face of the earth was renewed, and the Summer and the Autumn hath scattered their blessings around us. The fruits of the field have dropped down in our pathway—the flowers of Spring sprang up at our feet—the valleys have been clothed with corn, and the little hills have rejoiced on either side. The clouds have dropped down their fatness, and the light of the morning, the darkness of the evening, the heat of Summer and the cold of Winter, have mutually contributed to our health, our comfort, and our peace. While we have received such a rich and abundant supply of thy blessings and treasures, we will not be unmindful of the fact, that it was our Heavenly Father who crowned thee with goodness, and from His hand all thy blessings flowed.

Thou hast been a year of domestic blessing and peace. What countless mercies there are by our fireside! How endearing are all the affections of home! How the soul of the husband is cheered in the presence of his pure, devoted, and smiling wife! And what a joy the parents feel in the midst of their children! Happy has been the family circle. There has been a lasting and affectionate blending of all the deep sympathies which loving parents and obedient children can command. Home is the place for sacred and holy thoughts, and throughout the past year we can rejoice with our friends in the pleasures and enjoyments of home. No want has come near our dwelling-place, and no affliction has overtaken us.

Thou hast been a year of conflict. The infernal powers of war have been let loose, and death and destruction have done their awful work. Thousands and tens of thousands have been slain, and thousands have been in tears. There have been internal, as well as external conflicts. The passions may have been antagonistic against the precepts of truth and righteousness, and thus an unholy war may have been carried on within. What can hush the shrill blast of war? We answer, the trumpet of the Gospel of Peace. What can bring ambitious and designing tyrants to a right sense of duty and of truth? We answer, the righteousness which is by faith. What can cure the world of its deep folly and extravagance? Again we answer, the word which bringeth salvation. The booming cannon and the dying shriek of thousands have mingled, and many who hoped for life and health at the beginning of the year, have been murdered in the rage of a deadly conflict. Our sympathies are still with the slaughtered ones, and we deeply regret that the old year should be compelled to inscribe in the annals of eternity such a humiliating and soul-shuddering fact.

Thou hast been a year of friendship. We love that word, it savors so of heaven. Yes, we have enjoyed the company of our friends. And what on earth can be compared to it, when all the utterances are true, and all the professions are sincere—when the hollow voice of hypocrisy is not heard, and when the spirit of exaggeration is dead? Many have been our moments of pleasure. We have mingled with those who love the Crucified One, and who have a good hope through his name. We have heard them speak of the Father and of the Son, and our hearts and our sympathies have been interwoven as one. Though thou, old year, art about to pass away, we hope in the life of our friends; they will not all die: pure friendship lives in the truth and loves it. One intentional and deliberate falsehood kills friendship, and desolates the fair regions of affection and love. Have we friends? Let us love them—let us be honest, sober, truthful—let us be careful not to say a word either about friend or foe, which we would not truthfully utter in their presence. And should there be any who violate this rule, it will be well to advise them, and if they will not hear, to avoid them. We have formed friendships during the past year of a moral, of a literary, of a scientific, and of a theological character, which have greatly contributed to our happiness, and which we doubt not will continue through life.

Thou hast been a year of experience. And if we have profited thereby, we shall be wiser and better. There has been something done which all rightly-constituted minds must deplore. Sins of omission and commission have been connected with our proceedings. We may have been strongly tempted by the wicked one, and that wicked one may have assumed the garb of an angel of light. Falsehoods may have fallen upon our ears, and our souls may have thrilled with horror when the simple truth has been denied. While we warmly, and perhaps indignantly, censure those who depart from the truth, we can but pity that poor and desolate condition in which the souls of such individuals are found. Let us at all times speak and love the truth, and let not the wings of the old year be burdened with an unacknowledged or unrepented wrong. Then we shall be enabled to hail in the new year with joy and gladness, with the smile of love and the song of praise. Our troubles may prove blessings. We cannot escape the moral law—God's eye is upon us. A treasured falsehood will kill the soul—a continuance in evil will harden the heart, and chain the once happy and confiding spirit down to the dust of sensualism and humiliation. The intellect may be bright, the heart may be dark—the mind may know the truth, the heart may reject it. Mere intellect, apart from moral truth, is no better than the ignis fatuus which allures the traveller into the ways of darkness and death. We are all imperfect—we have all sins to deplore, but if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Thou hast been a year of solemn warning. Many of our friends have passed away. Only a few months ago, a memorial card told us of the departure of one of our oldest friends. Those with whom we have spoken on the platform, have been numbered with the dead. Beautiful little children have been entombed. Mothers have exchanged the couch for the grave. Accidents on the land, and fearful wrecks at sea, have taken place, and thousands of our fellow-creatures have perished. Germany has lost her great philosopher—Birmingham has lost her most venerable preacher—Joseph Sturge has been called away—Brunel and Stephenson are dead. Death has come into our churches—The Harbinger has recorded some of the departed ones, and who shall be the next? Reader, who? Are we prepared? We sometimes think we can see upon the faces of our friends, the marks of approaching dissolution; but we may be sum-noned first, and down their pale cheeks a tear may fall for us.

Thou hast been a year of privilege. We have gone up to the house of the Lord, where we have met those whom we love in the truth. There we have read the Holy Oracles—the Mount and the Cross have been presented to our view—the Prophets and the Apostles have spoken to us, and the bread and the fruit of the vine have reminded us of Him who was offered up a sacrifice for sins. There we have met with Job, with David, and with Isaiah—with Daniel and John, with Moses and Paul, with the saints and the angels, and with the Father, the Spirit, and the Word. And out of the world we have received those who have repented of their sins, and been baptized into the name of Jesus the Christ. Fond old year, farewell. Thou hast borne us nearer to our heavenly home, where we hope for ever to behold Him whose years never fail, and of whose kingdom there is no end.

J. I.

FEBRUARY, 1860.

ADDRESS ON THE CHRISTIAN'S BOND OF UNION.

I ARISE to address you, at the present time, on one of the grandest themes proposed in the gospel to fallen man ; and especially so to the lovers and followers of our blessed Lord, setting forth the conditions of love and union in this life, and the glorious consummation of these in the life to come.

In order to a full development of this much desired consummation, we will commence reading from the Sacred Oracles of God, Paul's letter to the Ephesians (iv.)

"I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that you walk worthy of the vocation wherewith you are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love ; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as you are called in one hope of your calling ; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

Paul writes this letter to the church at Ephesus, which he had established by his ministry, about the year 54 or 55, (see Acts of the Apostles xviii. 19-21) while he was a prisoner at Rome in the year 60 or 61, and forwarded it to the church, by Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister (Eph. vi. 21.) He, therefore, speaks to them in the full effervescence of love. I, a prisoner for the Lord's sake, for your sake, and for the sake of the gospel, which I preached unto you, beseech you that you walk worthy of the distinguished grace, in the gospel of his Son, by which you are called. Endeavouring to keep the oneness of the Spirit, which is the bond of peace. Beloved hearers, this brings us to an examination of this glorious bond of peace, in which we expect to find a oneness of the Spirit, and a heavenly and sure foundation for the union of the body of Christ, in which his Spirit must for ever dwell.

First, then, what is meant by this word bond ? Ezekiel, the Prophet of God, applies this word to the Jewish covenant, and says to the rebellious Jews, "I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant ;" and this was in order that he might purge out the rebels, and them that transgress against God. Then that bond cut off or excluded all idolators and transgressors (Ex. xx. 37.)

This word is used in common acceptance in law, to signify an obligation, or a written instrument in which there are certain conditions, made by the obliger, which the obligee is bound to perform, in order to secure a full right to the inheritance promised ; and made sure by the obliger, provided the conditions are complied with.

Now we can see no good reason why we should not use the word in this sense ; for the connection in which it stands, and the correlatives with which it is surrounded, all go to show this to be its proper meaning, not only in this text, but also in Ezekiel. We will then proceed. It is called the bond of peace, in contradistinction to the bond of division and death. For by it, the middle wall of division that separated the Jews from all other nations, is broken down, the covenant of death is abolished, and life and immortality are brought to light, and a basis of undying union, and glorious peace, is laid for the reception of all nations, languages, and people, to form the one body of Christ ; to become the obligees to God, and to Christ the obliger.

FIRST CONDITION. — There is one body. This one body we understand to be the church of Christ. This Paul confirms, when he says, "Christ is the head of the body, the church" (Col. i. 18.) Then according to this condition there is but one church of Christ, which is his body. Now, under the figure of a body we have no branches, but members of the body; so, then, this church is not a branch church, neither has it any branches to it. But it is the one body of Christ, composed of all them that believe on him through the apostles' word, and not through the false teaching of sectaries.

SECOND CONDITION.—There is one spirit. This spirit is the life of the one body, which pervades it throughout, giving it light, energy, and action; bearing the fruits of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, and faith; whose happy recipients are the members of this one body, who have obeyed, from the heart, the form of doctrine delivered them. Then, being made free from sin, they enjoy the sweet comfort of the Holy Spirit, of love, fellowship, and union, one towards another. This, then, is not the spirit of division, strife, and misrepresentation; consequently, not of any of the isms of the present age, for their tendency is to gender strife and cause division. But this spirit is the same that breathed from the Great Head of the church, when he prayed in these words: "I pray not for these my disciples only; but for them that shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one" (John xvii. 20-23.) Then verily this was the deep-felt and anxious desire of our adorable Redeemer, and will and must be of all his redeemed children. And now, respected hearers, let me say to you, as Paul did to the brethren: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. viii.); and it is easy to know whether you have this spirit. Do you desire the fellowship and union of all God's children, and do you show the fruits of your desire in your actions and conduct, in trying to bring about the desired result?

If so, you have the spirit of Christ, and can joyfully receive these two conditions in the bond of peace. We then discard all other spirits of the present age, as the seducing spirits that the Apostle has warned us of. Indeed, we have no use for any other spirit, besides the spirit of Christ, to aid or assist us in the work of faith, patience of hope, and labour of love. For there is but one Spirit, which is the Spirit of Christ, which is the teacher and comforter of the one body, which is the church of the living God.

THIRD CONDITION.—Even as you are called, in one hope of your calling. There is one hope that animates this one body, while it continues to breathe the spirit of union, fellowship, and love. And this is the hope of receiving, by and by, a complete title, and perfect right, to an equal inheritance with Jesus Christ, the Lord of the universe. Glorious hope! Who would not give up every erroneous doctrine, every false idea received by early education, or otherwise, to be a participant in the joy of an undivided, everlasting, and imperishable inheritance in the land of undiminished joy? My dear hearers, I appeal to your good sense, to your love of happiness in this life and in the life to come, to say if you cannot joyfully accept of these three conditions or articles in the bond of peace.

FOURTH CONDITION.—There is one Lord. The term Lord signifies a monarch, a ruler, a master. We then have but one Lawgiver, Ruler, and Master, and he is able to save, and to destroy.

We have already stated that Christ is the head of the body, the church. But Paul says again, "As man is the head of the woman, so Christ is the head of the church;" or, perhaps, more properly quoted: "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church, and he is the Saviour of the body" (Eph. v. 23): then inasmuch as it would be unlawful, and even presumptuous, in the woman, to be called by the name of another man, not her husband ; even so, it is unlawful and presumptuous for a member of this one body (for the members of this one body constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife) to be called by the name of any other man than Christ the Lord.

Then the church must not acknowledge the name of any finite mortal man as its designation, nor take him as its head and leader. Hence, all human names given to the members of this body are wrong, and contrary to the implication of this condition.

My beloved auditors, if you wish to stand justified in the sight of this one Lord, when he comes with all his mighty angels, in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel, lay aside your human names speedily and acknowledge Christ the Lord as your Lord, your Head, your Lawgiver, your Prophet, your Priest, and your King. Oh, friends! when this King shall arise in his terrible majesty to judgment, he will be jealous for his great name, and for his glorious bond of peace, and he will make straight work and a true examination among the sons of men. Then your acknowledged heads and leaders from among men will sink into insignificance before him, and those false bonds of peace made by them, in the form of creeds, disciplines, and confessions of faith, will vanish from his presence like the fog before the Sun on a clear Summer day ; and he will reject you in that awful day because you rejected him, and his perfect bond of peace. You followed other leaders, and called yourselves by their names ; you acknowledged and submitted to the bonds of division made by men, the fulfilling of whose conditions will not give you a right to the heavenly inheritance.

FIFTH CONDITION.—There is one faith. Some of you are ready to say, we cannot accept this condition ; for there are some three or four denominations here present, and each has a different faith, and we believe there are Christians in all of them, and to say there is but one true faith would be to cut off one or all of us. But, if we should admit this condition to be true, who is to decide on this one faith ? Yet, my respected audience, you have to acknowledge there is one true faith, and only one, belonging to the members of this one body. Christ, the head of the church, has, by his Apostle, placed it here, and we dare not deny it, or take it out of this bond of peace. If we should take it out, the bond would be imperfect, and utter confusion would follow ; some would take the faith of Calvin, some of Luther, some of Wesley, and some of the Westminster divines, until just such a distracted state of the church as now exists would prevail universally and continually. It is for the want of a strict adherence to this condition, that has caused the ship of Zion to become wrecked, and her crew scattered in endless confusion, without chart or compass to steer their course. What a dangerous situation—what an awful certainty of sinking ! But things were not so in the days of the Apostles ; and why not ? The reason is obvious ; there were no theorizers or creed-makers then ; or if there were, the simple-hearted members of the body of Christ were not led away by them, but continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine. They believed John when he said, in the conclusion of the narrative of the life of Christ, "Many other things truly did Jesus, which are not written in this book ; but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." They believed that Christ died, that he was buried and arose again from the dead. The Trinitarian, Unitarian, Arian, and Socinian ideas, abstractly, had not entered their minds ; there were no controversies on these points. But we are informed (Acts iv. 32) that the whole multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul—(glorious union !) and I can see no reason why the same cause will not produce the same effect. When we lay aside all speculation on the Word of God, and use the language of Canaan instead of the language of Ashdod, then a heavenly union in the bond of peace will be the happy result. Now, we appeal to you that love the Lord, and desire the union of God's children, to say whether it would not be better, more honorable and God-like, to cease the long and unprofitable controversy, in which some say that Christ is the very and eternal God, and others that he is a mere man, and accept the one faith, predicated on plain Scriptural statements, such as these: "Christ is the Son of the living God;" "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus;" "Who, being in the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." I feel confident that you will say, we can accept these. Then, if you will not add to them the metaphysical abstractions of the so-called doctors of divinity; nor use those unscriptural phrases employed by them, not only in regard to this item of Christian doctrine, but all others, we can be united in the one faith, and live in the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace. But never—no, never—can this heavenly unity exist while the bonds of division, and the speculations of men, with all their dividing and blighting influences, rule predominant in your hearts. Division among God's people is, and always has been, the work of the devil; antagonistic to the spirit of Christianity; and it is in this that the enemy of souls has shown himself a mighty champion, and done more to stop the advancement of the gospel and destroy the peace of men, than in any other way. In conclusion on this topic, permit me to say, that this one faith for all the members of the one body, is predicated on the plain and simple facts of the gospel, belief in them, and obedience to them, which only can give a right to the tree of life, and an admittance into the heavenly city.

SIXTH CONDITION.—One baptism. And here we meet with controversy at the onset. Yes, friends, I see by your countenances that you feel squeamish at the bare mention of this condition, and the reason is plain—because it cuts off your darling theory of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as belonging to all Christians, or else establishes it as the only baptism belonging to them. In short, it contradicts the generally received idea of a baptism of water, a baptism of the Holy Ghost, and a baptism of fire, which make three instead of one. Again, as baptism is an action something done, it can be but one action; therefore, three actions by immersing three times, is a palpable contradiction to this condition. Permit me to say to you, my dear friends of the different denominations here present, look upon you as honest, candid lovers of God's truth; and the reason why you have taught the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire as belonging to all Christians, and at the same time practiced baptism in water, which is so contrary to this condition—one baptism—is from the lack of a careful examination of this bond of peace, and from the erroneous impressions made on your minds by false teachers, and the bonds of division strewn all over the country. Now we desire your patient attention to this frequently controverted point. Although much has been said and written on this subject, we feel like adding our little stock of knowledge, and by the help of God, to set before you the one baptism belonging to all Christians! You will therefore have to exercise patience, in order to hear us through our investigation of this subject.

We find five baptisms in the Christian Scriptures: the baptism of John, the forerunner of Christ; that of the Holy Ghost, and that of fire, being Christ's, and performed by him alone ; the gospel baptism preached and practiced by the Apostles and primitive Christians. These make four literal baptisms. Then we have one figurative of the sufferings of Christ, which makes five. Now, it is evident that after the full establishment of the Christian religion, there remains but one of these in connection with it, and to ascertain which one of the five this is, let us examine for ourselves.

1st. We are assured that it cannot be John's, from the fact that Paul had those baptized unto John's baptism again baptized ; and he shows conclusively that it was not adequate to the Christian dispensation, and the knowledge of the gospel of Christ. Read Acts ix. 1-7. We deem this sufficient to settle for ever the fact that John's baptism was not the one gospel baptism in his glorious bond of peace.

In the second place, it cannot be the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as that was a promise, and not a command. No person ever was commanded to, or ever could, baptize with the Holy Ghost ; his belonged exclusively to Christ, and was performed by him according to the promise which was first made by John, the harbinger of Christ. Matt. iii. 11 : "I indeed baptize with water unto repentance ; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear : he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Then again, in Luke xxiv. 49, the Saviour informs his disciples of this promise and says, just before his ascension : "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you ; but tarry in Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Then, too, Luke refers to the same promise in Acts i. 4-5, that we have quoted from Luke xxiv. 49, and declares the disciples had heard it. Then, inasmuch as it was spoken by John the Baptist, and no other person, until brought into notice by Christ, just before his ascension, as mentioned in these two last texts quoted, the disciples heard John utter this promise without any doubt whatever. But, to more fully confirm this statement, hear what Luke says : "And he (Christ) being assembled together with them, (the disciples) commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me." Let us hear what this promise was : "For John truly baptized with water ; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." This shows positively that the promise referred to was the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and we think none of you dare deny it : and that Christ was the administrator, no one can truthfully deny. In the next place we will notice its fulfilment. Acts ii. 32-33 : "Him hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear."

We hold it as a truth which cannot be controverted, that this was a true and literal baptism of the Holy Spirit. Christ was the administrator, and the disciples there assembled were the persons baptized ; and that this was necessary, in order to endue them with power to execute the great commission given them by the Messiah—to set up and establish his kingdom, and introduce fallen man into it. We find, then, that inasmuch as it was necessary to the first introduction of the Jews into the kingdom, it was also to the first introduction of the Gentiles into the kingdom. After Peter had been preaching the gospel to the Jews about eight years, and was instructed by a vision to go to the Gentiles, he witnessed the great and miraculous transaction of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, in the first introduction of the Gentiles into the kingdom. When he was called to give an account for going to the uncircumcised, he said, "the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning," and that then he remembered the word of the Lord (the word uttered just before his ascension, and first spoken by John the Baptist) that "John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." These are the only instances on record of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. That its design was to establish Christianity in its first introduction in the world, is so plain, that I think none can deny it.

The Christian religion having been established, first among the Jews, and then among the Gentiles, its design was accomplished; it then ceased, and there has not been a case of it since that day. It is through ignorance that honest people pray for it; they know not what it is, nor what it was designed for; it is in effect praying to God to do his work over again; that he had failed in his great design—that his miraculous display of power, in the gift of tongues and prophecy, in mighty signs and wonders, was all a failure, and that it was necessary they should be performed again. If any of you, my friends, have thus prayed, I hope you will examine your Bible before you do so again. But in conclusion on this topic, we are fully assured that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was a promise, and no man can obey a promise. A command he can obey; but a promise he can only receive. Therefore this is not the one baptism commanded in the gospel for men to obey; it is not the one baptism in the bond of peace.

In the third place, we say that this one baptism cannot be the baptism of fire. For truly a literal immersion in fire would put an end to the existence of the church of Christ here below. And we cannot, with any propriety of language, make the baptism of the Holy Spirit literal, as has already been shown, and the fire figurative, both being uttered in the same sentence, and so closely connected as what they are.

But let us examine the thesis in which it occurs, Matt. iii. 10-12. When John the Immerser made use of the phrase, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire," he was standing on the banks of the Jordan, teaching the multitudes that came to him to be baptized, among whom were the wicked Pharisees and Sadducees. He informs them that every tree that bringeth not good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire; he then informs them that there was one coming after him that was greater than himself, who was able to execute vengeance on the wicked, and to save the righteous; and that in order to a thorough renovation of the world, he would dispense the baptism of the Holy Spirit and fire; and that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was to be the winnowing process in separating the wheat from the chaff, and that the baptism of fire was to burn up the chaff. We see, then, that these are two great means by which God intends to purge the world. By means of the baptism of the Holy Spirit the Apostles were qualified and empowered to declare the gospel of the blessed God in all its fullness and perfection; to lay down laws to govern the subjects of his kingdom; thereby distinguishing between the wheat and the tares, the children of the kingdom and the children of the wicked one.

By means of fire the earth shall be purged and renovated, the wicked shall be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. In this baptism Christ himself will be the administrator, and the impenitent wicked the candidates. Awful thought! Are there any in this congregation who are rejecting the offers of mercy, and are not willing to submit to the terms of the gospel? If so, they are candidates for this awful baptism. This, then, cannot be the one baptism in the bond of peace.

Fourthly, there is a baptism we denominate the gospel baptism, from the fact that the gospel never was preached in its primitive perfection without this baptism being preached. It is the baptism that the blessed Saviour commanded his Apostles to baptize with, when he said, "Go, [teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii.) ; or, as Mark has it, "Preach the gospel to every creature ; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Then in this great and last commission that our Lord gave to his disciples, it is very clear that he commanded them to baptize all who would believe on him as the Messiah, the Son of God. We also find that when the Apostles preached the gospel, and the people believed, they commanded them to be baptized. In short, Christ commanded the Apostles to baptize, and the Apostles commanded the people to be baptized. Here, then, we have a baptism that is part of the gospel, that runs parallel with it, that is for all believers in every nation under heaven. Now, if I should ask this audience, who were the administrators of this baptism, I think the answer would be, "Men, the preachers of the gospel," with hardly a dissenting voice ; and this would be positively an acknowledgment that this baptism was not that of the Holy Ghost, or that of fire ; for men cannot be the administrators of these. Then we are driven to the conclusion that the baptism practiced by the Apostles and Evangelists, by which men and women were inducted into this one body, in the days of primitive Christianity, is, the one baptism in the bond of peace. It would be hardly necessary that we should make any remarks about the fifth baptism—of the sufferings of Christ—as I believe this is admitted by all not to be the baptism commanded in the gospel of the grace of God.

But we now desire your patience until we inquire, first, What is gospel baptism ? Secondly, Who are the subjects to which it belongs ? And in the third place, What is its design ? And we will be as brief as the nature of these inquiries will admit.

FIRST, What is this one? gospel baptism ? Does it convey to us merely the idea of an ordinance ? If so, is it the breaking the loaf, the assembling yourselves together for worship, or prayer, or what is it ? You see that if this was the only idea contained in it, we could never know what it is. It must, then, have reference to action ; and if it has reference to action, that action must be a definite action, or we shall be just as much at a loss to know what it is as ever. For, if this action is not definite, it may be kneeling down to pray, or standing up to do the same, or singing a hymn, or, perchance, something else.

And now, my beloved hearers, you see that if it is not a definite action, we never can know what it is. Now my brother Methodist says it has reference to water. But over on the other side, my brother Quaker says it has reference to the Spirit. Please tell me, my dear friend, what definite action thou didst perform, when thou wast baptized with the Holy Spirit ? Where and when did it take place ? I opine thou canst never tell. But now, brethren, you who say it has reference to water, will you please tell me what it is ? Well, says one, it is to sprinkle water on the head of a person in the name of the holy trinity. Another says, it is to pour water on the head in the name of the holy trinity ; another says, it is to immerse a person in water, in the name of the holy trinity ; and another says, it is to immerse a person three times, into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost ; and another might say, with the same propriety, it is to wash a person's hands and face in the name of the holy three ; and another, it is to strip a person, and wash him all over in water ; and another, it is to wash his feet and legs, &c.

My beloved hearers, do you not see that we are as much in the dark as ever? For there can be just as good and valid reasons shown for washing the face and hands, or the feet and legs, or the whole body, for baptism, as can be shown for pouring water on the head, or sprinkling a few drops on the head or face. You see, now, we have seven different actions. Which of these shall we call the one baptism? O, tell me, you that desire to comply with all the conditions in this glorious bond of peace, that you may have a right to the heavenly inheritance. In order, then, to be sure that we are right, let us ask an Apostle to tell us what that definite action called gospel baptism is. Will you trust to the old master-builder to tell what is done to a person when he is baptized? If you will, he will settle this matter with us for ever. He will help us out of the fog of conjecture, and the clouds of mysticism, into the clear light of the Sun of Righteousness: so that we can see eye to eye, and all understand what this one baptism is. Well, Paul, what is done to a person when he is baptized? Rom. vi. 3-4: "Know you not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death. Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

My dear friends, this man of God tells us we are buried, when we are baptized. And you say that baptism has reference to water. Then we are buried in water. But let us hear him again. Col. ii. 12: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein we are also risen with him, through the faith of the operation of God." This should settle the question for ever, in regard to the definite action of baptism; especially since it is nowhere said that any person is sprinkled or poured in baptism. But this must suffice on this topic.

SECOND. Who are the subjects of gospel baptism? We understand they must be penitent believers: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Here we find that belief, or faith, is necessary; that without it no person is prepared for baptism. And more than this, we learn they must be penitent believers. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins" (Acts ii. 38.) "What doth hinder me to be baptized? If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest" (Acts viii. 36-37.) We see, then, that the lack of faith is a lawful hindrance to baptism. Therefore, the proper subject of baptism is a person capable of hearing, understanding, believing, and repenting; and such as have so done are proper persons to be baptized, and no others have any right to it whatever. Therefore, we have no account of any infants or idiots ever being baptized in the days of the Apostles.

But we must hasten to the THIRD point. What is gospel baptism designed for? The only way to come to a correct conclusion on this subject, as well as all others, in connection with Christianity, is to ask the inspired men of God, and not the uninspired doctors of divinity.

Peter, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." I have no doubt that many persons have heartily wished that this text, with a few others, had never been planted in the Book of God, because it crosses their religious opinions, and they want to be saved according to their own ways. But, beloved friends, if ever we are saved, it will not be according to our works and human theories; but according to the Father's own mercy, and those works which he has sanctified for our deliverance from sin. And we find that gospel baptism, in connection with faith and repentance, is a means of pardon from our past sins; that it is designed for the remission of sins. Hence Ananias says to Saul: "Why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins;" and father Wesley says of this: "That baptism, administered to real penitents, is both a means and seal of pardon.—Nor did God ordinarily, in the primitive church, bestow this on any, unless through this means" (Acts xiv. 16.) Again, we hear Paul say, that "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify it; having cleansed it, by the washing of water through the word," "the ordinary channel of all blessings;" having cleansed it from the guilt and power of sin, by the washing of water in baptism,

"if with the outward and visible sign we receive the inward and spiritual grace" (Eph. v. 25).—Wesley's Translation and Notes.

Beloved friends, it seems to me unnecessary to present any more proof at present. We now have the two great apostles, Peter and Paul, and also father Wesley, "stating in plain and unmistakable language, that baptism is designed for the remission of sins. Come, let us all receive and comply with this sixth condition in the bond of peace; (for it is plain and definite in its mode, in its subject, and in its design; the one gospel baptism, which is a means by which men and women are cleansed from the guilt of all their past sins.) And let us stand united on the glorious platform laid by the Apostles for all the children of God.

SEVENTH CONDITION. — "One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." How beautiful! How perfect is the chain of connection in this bond of peace. No human council, not even the angels of God, could have made such a document as this. None other than the Holy Spirit of God was able to frame so perfect a platform for the church of the living God to stand upon. Let us now, in our weak capacity, take a short survey of this noble structure.

We have before us the idea of a body made up of many members; the General Assembly and Church of the First Born. I also having been born, born of God, by being born of his Word and Spirit, which Spirit gives life to this body, animates and inspires it with a glorious hope of immortality.

It being the Church of the First Born, makes it emphatically the Church of Christ, being born such, by the one baptism, by the one faith, by the teachings of the one Spirit, which was given by the one Lord, who was sent by the one God and Father of all.

Now, my friendly hearers, we invite you to step out of the meshes of sectarianism, and let this chain of seven links, set forth in the conditions of this bond, be your cable chain to the mansions of eternal bliss; to that inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled.

And now permit me to say, in conclusion, with all candour and honesty, that unless we all receive and comply with these conditions in this heaven-made bond of peace, I can see no assurance whatever of one of us ever having a right to the tree of life, and entering into the heavenly Canaan, and the city of our God. Oh, dreadful thought! that many through carelessness and stubbornness, will not comply with the offers of peace, and for so doing will be cut off for ever and ever! Then let all who have the love of God in their hearts, strive more earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, for the union of the children of God, and the salvation of the world.

I. G. L.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS.

BETHANY COLLEGE, JULY, 1859.

YOUNG GENTLEMEN, — To-day, according to collegiate law and custom, you are permitted to graduate, or to receive the Baccalaureate, tantamount to the rank and dignity of Bachelor of Arts—the first degree in the arts and sciences called liberal. It is, indeed, but the first degree. It is a formal honor and a license conferring on you the right, privilege, and honor of becoming self-educators—of becoming your own master and scholar, your own teacher and pupil in the departments of literature and science, of religion and morality.

Science and art, duly appreciated, constitute the whole area of human culture and development. While art is always, more or less, the child of science, nevertheless, science the parent and fountain of all the arts, useful and ornamental, which dignify, beautify, and even glorify man, is, itself, the creature of art. We may, however, in some cases, discover considerable science without much art; and again, considerable art without much science. Still, they are inseparable in human development. Neither of them can be consummated without the other, and without both no man can be eminently useful to himself or to society.

In this, my valedictory address to you, my young friends, I should not do justice to my conscience nor to my feelings, did I not, in the dissolution of our Academic relations to one another, once more press upon your attention that, not only your earthly and temporal interests, honor, and happiness ; but your spiritual and eternal interests, your true dignity, honor, and felicity, in this great and grand and awful universe, are to be in perfect keeping with the use you make of the faculties and powers, physical, intellectual, moral, and religious, which your Creator and Redeemer has vouchsafed for you. The parable of the talents propounded by the great, the divine Philanthropist, recorded by the Evangelist and Apostle Matthew, is a divinely stereotyped programme of the decision and the reasons for it, of the great, the divine, the infallible, and the impartial Arbiter of the destinies of the whole world—is the most sublimely and awfully, and gloriously grand, suggestive, intelligible and unmistakable Oracle of all the oracles pertaining to the eternal and the immutable destiny of every man that has read or heard it.

I do not say that you should all become preachers, lawyers, doctors, legislators, farmers, or professional men of any type, caste, or genealogy, in order to be useful, honorable, and happy men.

In any and every calling, pursuit, or profession essential to the social system, it is competent and practicable to every man to be useful, honorable, and happy, who cultivates and employs his own powers in harmony with the progress and advancement of that portion of humanity and society of which he is a component member and part.

Young gentlemen, there is one lesson which you have learned only in part, and a most useful lesson it is, if not the most useful in the whole curriculum of science and art. It is the science and art of usefulness—of usefulness to the Lord and to men.

The hive of humanity is the largest, and ought to be the most productive hive on the terra firma of our terraqueous globe. Think seriously—think of a thousand millions of human persons now moving upon our terra firma, each and every one of them having a body, a soul, and a spirit. Here are three sciences in the single department, properly called humanity ; and how many sciences and arts, ornamental and useful, are to be communicated and acquired in order to the full development of humanity in all its attitudes, relations, duties, privileges, and honors, in reference to two worlds—the world that now is, and the world which is yet to come ? We must, indeed, first clamber up the summits of Mount Sinai and Mount Zion before we can appreciate the area of these two worlds and their relations to our present and eternal destiny—interest, honor, and felicity in them. Two generic terms in each category are requisite, indeed essential, to their proper appreciation. These are the finite and the infinite, the temporal and the eternal, the material and the immaterial, the earthly and the heavenly. But we presume not now to analyze or develop them. We have often in some form, indeed, in various forms, dwelt upon them in the course of your studies. We have reason to hope that you will never lose sight of them.

But it is indispensable to your interest, honor, and happiness, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, that you place your feet upon the rock of ages, and through the telescope of faith, survey the regions beyond the milky way ; and then on the topmost round of Jacob's ladder, look Northward and Southward, Eastward and Westward over the new heavens and the new earth, which are pictures to your intellectual and spiritual vision on the heaven delineated map of man's future and eternal paradise, sketched by the pen of Divine inspiration. No son of earth can wisely direct his steps across the isthmus of time without the habitual, the constant use of the telescope of faith, standing, too, on the loftiest peak of Mount Zion.

Your attainments in language, science, and the arts are such as to qualify you for usefulness in the social system, and to enrich you with appropriate rewards, both temporal and everlasting. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth ;" there is, too, according to Solomon, a niggardly "withholding more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." The miser is twice cursed — starved in the world that now is, and damned in that which is to come. It is more blessed to give than to receive. It is so, not merely in goods and chattels, but also in communicating learning, science, and art to our own species.

But there is one pursuit paramount to all others in its fruits and influences, and therefore, more to be desired and sought after than any other object, indeed in its full development paramount to all other acquisitions. We shall collocate from the pen of the wisest man that ever lived, a few encomiums on this pursuit :—

“When wisdom entereth into thy heart and knowledge is pleasant to thy soul, discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee : to deliver thee from the way of the wicked ; from the men that speaketh perverse things, who leave the paths of uprightness to walk in the ways of darkness” (Prov. ii. 10-13.) “Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding ; for the merchandize of it is better than the merchandize of silver, and the increase thereof, than fine gold. It is more precious than rubies : all the things you can desire are not to be compared to it. Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness ; and all her paths are peace. It is a tree of life to those who lay hold on it, and happy is every one who retaineth it” (Prov. iii. 13-18.) “Therefore,” he adds ; “Get wisdom, get understanding, forget it not. It will preserve thee. Wisdom is the principal thing ; therefore get wisdom.”

In personifying it, he adds—“Exalt wisdom and she will promote thee ; she will bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace her : she will give to thy head a graceful garland : she shall compass thee with a crown of glory” (Proverbs iv. 5, 9.) “He that getteth wisdom, loveth his own soul” (Prov. xix. 18.) “Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it” (Prov. viii. 11.) But when all these commendations and encomiums are interpreted in their contextual bearings and relations, they seem to culminate in two words, piety and humanity. Piety and humanity are, indeed, the essential elements of wisdom, according to King Solomon, the wisest of men and the prince of princes.

An impious man is necessarily an ungrateful man. A pious man is always a grateful man. So Paul uses the term when speaking of the necessity and importance of teaching children gratitude to parents. “Let children,” says he, “learn to shew piety at home, requiting their parents.” This is filial gratitude. In the Italian and Spanish tongues, pity and piety are expressed by one and the same words.

But we seem to have forgotten that we are addressing those who have taken the first degree in the liberal arts and sciences, who are elevated to the honor of Bachelors of Arts. We congratulate you on attaining to the state of Bachelorship, as defined by Noah Webster, and take occasion therefrom to impress upon the tablet of your memory the fact—that memory, as well as iron, rusts, and that languages and sciences disintegrate and decompose, even when imprinted on the tablet of human memory. Hence the necessity and importance of not merely protecting your classics and best books from the dust and the moth, but yourselves from being moths to the community.

In our late travels in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, with our usual inquisitiveness as to the whereabouts and whatabout of our Graduates of Bethany College, we had the pleasure to learn that there was not one drone amongst them, and only one in the Epicene gender, sitting on a fence. He was, indeed, a rara avis in terris similima nigroque Cygno—(a rare bird in the land, and very like to a black swan.) We hope he has come down on the right side, and that he will never again sit down on a worm fence. (We have always had a partiality for the post and rail, and for having the post well charred.) It is the best economy in the long run, as agriculturists say. And its moral is just as true, as that “while prosperity makes friends, adversity tries them.”

But not to slide into the enigmatic style, or to speak in parables, we would say to you, that your Alma Mater has very considerable capital in you—the largest graduating class in our annals. Your influence must be felt in a large area, and for a long time, probably for generations to come. Influence for good or for evil, such influence as you must possess and wield, is not for a day or for a life time. It may extend through successive generations. It cannot be limited to one generation, or to one class of benefactions to contemporaries ; for it may extend through successive generations, and in breadth as well as in length, temporally, spiritually, and eternally be advantageous or disadvantageous to humanity. Many harvests of weal or woe may be reaped from the seed you sow. Think of a Luther, a Calvin, a Zuinglius, a Melancthon, a Knox, a Wesley. Think of a Washington, a Franklin, a William Penn. Think of a Newton, a Bacon, a Locke. I do not commend to you a political life, else I would remind you of a Webster, a Clay, a Calhoun, et id omne genus. Nor would I lay one offering on the altar of the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, or the pride of life. Nor could I commend them to you, because I cannot approve any form of pure animalism, however lauded and glorified, however worshipped and adored. These, looked at from Mount Sinai, are superlatively contemptible, when placed in antithesis or contrast with the scenes that transpired upon their glorified summits.

But we cannot all be great men in the common acceptance of this word. We have, indeed, many species of great men. Samson was a great man in physical strength. Solomon was a great man in human and divine wisdom. Newton was a great man as an astronomer and a philosopher in physical science. Paul was a great man as an Apostle of Jesus Christ. Macaulay says, in his history of the 17th century—That, although there were many clever men in that century, there were, at his angle of vision, but two great men—“these were John Milton, and John Bunyan—the tinker, and the author of Pilgrim's Progress.” These, indeed, were great men. Solomon, however, in his superlative wisdom, gives his conception of a great man in these words—“He who is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, better than he that taketh a city” (Prov. xvi. 32.)

Self-government is, therefore, the greatest victory that man can achieve. But without supernatural, that is without divine aid, no man ever did gain an absolute ascendancy over himself. Paul could do all things in this category by Christ strengthening him, and we also can do all things enjoined on us through Christ strengthening us. But without this aid neither Paul nor we could do all things essential to God's glory and to our own dignity, honor, and happiness. Therefore, “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding.”

You were born under the star of Jacob, under the bright and the morning star of a glorious day of grace. You have a splendid destiny opened to your vision. Not a political destiny only in a new world, guaranteeing to you all the temporal and material wants of man—life, liberty, and the free and unembarrassed pursuit of happiness in all its forms, material, intellectual, moral, and religious. You have, too, chartered rights in a divine institution, commensurate with the universe and lasting as the ages of the eternity. You have no mundane, no rational, moral, or religious craving in your nature, no appetite for any form of true enjoyment, for which the most liberal and the most enduring provisions have not been made. So that eye has not seen, ear has not heard, nor human heart conceived the number, the variety, the riches, the glory of the incorruptible and unfading provisions of the inheritance of the saints in light and life everlasting. To barter, to sell this rich estate for a mess of pottage, for the momentary fruition of sin in any of its forms, developments, or blandishments, would be a frenzy, a folly, the most consummate within the whole area of human aberrations. Seize, then, the palm of victory, the crown of glory, and make your calling and election sure.

A. C.

HEAVEN.—PART II.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED AT FIMLICO.

“There shall be no might there” (Rev. xxi. 25.)

V. Night is the time of indistinct vision. Things are not what they seem to be when they are viewed in the night. What strange and fanciful ideas are entertained then. How sombre and chill do the things appear, which in the light of day are imposing and beautiful. When the shades of darkness fall upon your flower-garden, the beauty has departed, and the floral gems are encompassed with the gloom of death. When we contemplate the ceremonial law, and the offerings and sacrifices which were divinely appointed — when we see the innocent victim about to be slain for a sin-offering—when the smoke of the incense rises — when the blood of bulls and goats were offered — when the solemn priest officiated, and the high-priest once a year entered into the holy of holies—we are disposed to ask, what is the meaning of all this? Is it significant? Does it stand in connection with some great truth? Are these things of human invention, or do they all express the mind and will of God? When viewed alone, they are unintelligent and mysterious: the rays which emanate therefrom are but the faint glimmerings of the light to come. The shedding of blood refers to the atoning stream, and all the sublime ritual of the old dispensation points to a coming Saviour, who was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world. Apart from the Gospel dispensation, how dark and meaningless they are. But how soon the beauty and design of these become apparent, when the rays of the Sun of Righteousness shine upon them. Then they become pregnant with spirit-life, and all of them reflect the mercy and goodness of God. In the curling flame and the ascending smoke, and in all the sacrifices and ceremonies, we can see faint but sure promises of the coming Deliverer.

I have read a description given by a gentleman who had an opportunity of viewing the first Crystal Palace by moonlight. The light of the day had fled, the stars twinkled in beauty, and the full round moon but faintly illumed the crowded and gorgeous building. The objects which by day were elegant and beautiful, had now lost all their charms; and some of the most graceful productions of art which, in the light of day, entranced and delighted the beholder, assumed in the night the most awkward and forbidding appearance. In the day some of the figures seemed almost animate with life and spirit-power. In the night they were shapeless, and dull, and dead; the exquisite colors had faded away, and the most commanding and elaborate productions appeared repulsive and formidable in the deceptive glimmerings of the night. He was in the midst of hidden wonders and beauties, and those now ill-defined forms are the expressions of the genius and taste of some of the most gifted of living men. But in the night they cannot be seen; there is something wanting. What is it? It is the light of day. Come forth, thou glorious Sun, and let the beams of thy glory reveal the beauties of this place — unclothe them from this pall of darkness, and let us see them as they are. And the light came at its appointed time. How beautiful are the figures—how graceful the forms—how harmoniously blended are the colors! What exquisite design—what mechanical skill—what wonderful embodiment of thought! They all speak of the spirit power of man, and many of them clearly portray that his conceptions pertain to heavenly things. Here we are reminded of the past. Here we see a combination of science and of art. Here we can feel the effusion of the poet's soul—here mind and matter have met together, and philosophy and religion have embraced each other. Here are voices and spirit-manifestations from all the civilized countries of the globe. Here we do not see clearly. When the light of the Sun of Righteousness shines upon the forms and ceremonies of the old dispensation, we see them pregnant with life and full of hope. We are now living in the light of the Gospel day, but we still feel that great is the mystery of godliness; and though heaven's pure light illumine the natural world, it is still full of mystery. Even now we do not see clearly. The clouds of the night of sin still encompass us. Our mortal and sinful bodies still hold us to the earth. Our eye has but a limited range. Sounds must be near to be distinctly heard. No amount of knowledge can solve some of the problems which are constantly presented. Here we only know in part, but in heaven we shall know even as we are known. Here we cannot comprehend our brother, but in heaven we shall know that all his thoughts are holy, and that nothing shall hurt or destroy in the Paradise above. No cloud shall intervene between us and God. All our impressions will be true and holy, and we shall be for ever with the Lord.

VI. Night is the time of prayer. How good it is to pray — how near the soul feels to God — how firmly is the eye fixed upon the things which are eternal. The day with all its mercies has fled, and the sombre night with its silence has encompassed us. Now through the lips of the Christian the prayer ascends—it comes up from the deepest recesses of the soul, and it is burdened with thanksgiving and holy desire. It is not directed to an earthly object: its mission and journey are heavenward. It is the soul pouring forth its desires after God. Its language is heard in heaven, for it opens the ear of the Eternal, and it commands the smile and protection of Him in whom we live, and move, and have our being. Prayer possesses a power which Omnipotence cannot resist. It seeks and secures help where help can be alone obtained. Its language speaks of human weakness and of divine power. It honors God and ennobles man. He is never more exalted than when he humbly bows before the throne. By prayer we recognize the power and wisdom of God. He feels himself a wanderer, and he prays to be guided aright. He feels his ignorance and helplessness, and prays for wisdom and power. When the spirit prays it testifies to the sinfulness and impotency of the world. He is seeking after a better country—he is holding communion with God, and in the name of the Great Messiah he pleads with the Majesty of heaven. He hopefully and trustfully remembers Calvary, and all his requests are made in the name of Him who bore our sins upon the tree. Prayer lifts the spirit up, clears the spiritual faculty, fills the soul with hope, and opens the gate of heaven. It humbles and exalts—it depresses and excites—it raises the poorest of the sons of men, and binds the Deity to the gracious fulfilment of those blessed promises which are pregnant with sovereign mercy and eternal love. The voice of prayer is the music of the soul. It is the pulse which indicates the health of the church. Night is not the only time for prayer, for we are commanded to pray without ceasing—and when we are in a state of mind in which we cannot pray, we are in a condition in which no Christian can be happy. If we love God our earnest desires will ascend to Him; and though sometimes our many short-comings and self-convicting sins may close our lips and humble us in the dust, we shall even then desire to look up to Him who is our strength for guidance and for help. The morning should be our witness to prayer. In our fields and shops, in our banks and upon the exchange, we should cultivate the spirit of prayer. Common mercies should teach us to pray—bread, water, clothing, and habitations should influence us to pray—health, life, and friends, should all conspire to develope this holy state of mind. Prayer has a sanctifying power upon the spirit, and leads the mind hopefully, yet humbly, to trust in God. What happy evenings have been spent in the company of those who have met together to pray! Then we have heard for the first time the young man pray. A few months before he was wild and intemperate, and was practically saying that he would not have God to reign over him. He was then revelling in the sensualities of earth. Now the eye of his faith is fixed upon heaven. At the foot of the cross he feels his connection with God, and his heart is touched when he thinks of a Saviour's love. The time will come when the voice of prayer shall cease. It is now the plaintive yearning language of the soul, and its influence is to bless the spirit, and to secure the favor of God. In heaven there is no prayer. Here it may be viewed as a staff, with which the hopeful and trusting pilgrim travels up to the gate of heaven. It abides with us until death—it is the last breath of earth, and expires with the dying groan. As soon as the happy spirit enters the New Jerusalem, it commences the song of praise; and being freed from the power of sin and death, it exults in the light of heaven, and glories in the presence of God. The work of prayer is finished—praise shall never end, and all the powers of the saved and sanctified spirit shall be employed in ascribing might, and majesty, and power to Him that sits upon the throne and to the Lamb for ever and ever. Men of prayer, look up and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. The hand of the Lord is leading you onward, and you shall soon be the occupants of the mansions in heaven. In that world it will be eternal day. The gates shall never be shut, and the light cannot wane. The sun, which is so beautiful and so pregnant with life, will not be required. God shall be the light thereof, and the glory will be eternal. Saints washed in the blood of the Lamb, will praise Him. The cherubim and seraphim will praise Him. The angels and the archangels will praise Him. The humble, confiding, believing, and obedient poor, shall praise Him. Heavenly music, without one discordant sound, will fall upon the ear. All the pure spirits will meet there. From the land of darkness they will come to behold the light and the glory. From the land of ignorance they shall come to behold the true Wisdom, which passeth all understanding. From the lands of deep and dark idolatry, they shall come to praise and to love the only true and living God.—From the lands of slavery they shall come to enjoy the full liberty of the sons of God. Prayer is dead—the night has passed away—the glorious Sun of Righteousness will never set, and there shall be no night there.

VII. Night is the time of separation

—How delightful it is to mingle with friends, and to fondly associate with those who constitute the family circle. The cheerful fire, and the more cheerful faces, have gladdened our hearts; spirits have mingled with spirits, tender affections have been reciprocated, and subjects of absorbing interest have affected the hearts, improved the morals, and expanded the minds. The labourer and the artisan have come from the field and the workshop, and they with the honest pride of fathers and husbands, can enjoy the blessings of home. How gladly the father's eye glances upon the child of his hope! The dear little boy is healthful and promising; he reads, writes, and sketches with taste and propriety; he shows a deep love for Nature, and reverently speaks of God, and the soul of his mother is filled with joy. And the parents can rejoice at the prospect of the future happiness and usefulness of their child. At night, how the family meets together. They love as brothers and sisters can. How fondly does that little girl knit by her mother's side. Sit still, sweet child; it would be cruel to tell thee that the time will come when thou must leave that happy spot, and when the chair to which thou art now so fondly clinging will become vacant, and the loved smile of the mother shall be seen no more. Smile on, and laugh in thy innocent merriment, and we will not cause a shade to fall upon thy brow by reminding thee of the change which may so soon come. How quickly the time passes away; we met as friends; our sympathies have expanded and intermingled; some great moral or religious truths have bound us together; we are cemented by a mental and spiritual union: but we must separate, and perhaps never to meet again. We are neither weak nor stoical, our sympathies are strong;—we love the remembrance of those happy fire side evening parties, and we think it no weakness to confess that sometimes at parting we have felt the pang of regret. How soon such moments have passed away. Many such evenings have fled. In the future we may enjoy others of a similar kind, but we know not how soon the last family or friendly meeting will come; when we shall shake the hand we may clasp no more; when we shall never return to our own fire side; when the father shall behold his family in the flesh no more. How soon the dark shadow of death may fall upon that happy family circle. That happy, loving mother is very near the grave—that beautiful daughter will exchange the fashion for a shroud—the charming, innocent, and sweet little babe may be suddenly torn from the trusting, confiding, and almost idolatrous heart of the anxious and loving mother. The angels will beckon it to the skies, and they will bear its spirit up to the realms of purity and peace. What a pleasure it is to know that when that great change shall come, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens—where there shall be no separation, where we shall be united for ever. Partings are painful—meetings give pleasure; and we love to think of that world where there are no graves, no tolling bells, no mournful processions, no afflictions, no pain nor death. Instead of cold and solemn graves, there will be glorious and delightful mansions—instead of tolling bells, there will be rapturous peals of hosannahs and hallelujahs—instead of mournful processions, there will be a great multitude invested in the white garments of heaven—instead of affliction, there will be eternal health—instead of pain, there will be unceasing pleasure, and death shall be exchanged for the life which is immortal. The basis of our union will be the eternal love of God.

The glory of our union will be the once crucified but now enthroned and glorified Saviour. We shall meet with the ransomed of the Lord, and rejoice for ever in His smile. And our spirits will mingle with all the illustrious who have been washed in the blood of the Lamb. In heaven there will be no separation : no anxious thoughts of the future—no friends to lose—no death to fear. No wayward child will leave his home—no prodigal will waste his substance—no parents will be troubled in thinking of their children. All will be happy. Sin, fears, and doubts will all be dead, and the life which cannot cease will be our eternal weight of glory. This is the sublime prospect of the Christian—this is the undying hope of the redeemed. Our pilgrimage through this world may be associated with dangers and difficulties, but our prospects are holy and heavenly. We are travelling towards home, and in our happier and better moments we can hear the music of heaven, and by the eye of faith behold the beauties and the glory of that city which is full of the mansions of the blessed. Here we are strangers and pilgrims, but we are travelling to our Father's home. A few more days and nights will pass away, and then we shall find ourselves at the gate of the New Jerusalem. Cheer up, poor downcast Christian—lift up your head and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. Here you may wear the mean garment of poverty, but there you shall be clothed with the pure white vestments of the saints. Here your brow may be wrinkled with sorrows and age, but there it shall be adorned with the imperishable crown. The joys of earth soon pass away—the joys of heaven will endure for ever. The songs of earth are uncertain and discordant—the songs of heaven are pure and perfect. We shall be there for ever. No change, nor sorrow, nor pain, nor tears, nor death ; but life eternal will be our inheritance, and there we shall be enabled, with the saints and angels, to pour forth eternal songs of thanksgiving to Him who hath loved us and washed us from our sins. The night of time will have passed away, and we shall live in the splendors of one long unceasing and eternal day.

But there is a state, dear hearers, where there is no day ; not one cheering ray of light—where it is all darkness—where it is always night. It is the deep dark world of eternal woe. Death and destruction reign. The Prince of Darkness is enthroned. The Angel of Hosea turns not a glance towards that world of horrors, but the demons of rage and despair torment without a rival, and tauntingly curse the objects of their wrath. Travellers towards the world of endless night, we invoke you to turn from your evil ways. The wages of sin is death ; God mercifully offers you life, eternal life, through his beloved Son. He loves you, and wills that all men should be saved. Heaven has exhausted its treasure of love in the plan of salvation. God and Christ can do no more. The voice of warning from the skies now speaks to you, and commands you to flee from the wrath to come—to lay hold of eternal life. The sons and daughters of disobedience are walking in the way of death. You are choosing the darkness, and refusing the light ; and by your actions you madly say, we prefer the night of eternal gloom to the light and glory of eternal day. Now the dark shades of a speedy dissolution are falling upon some of you. We implore you to escape from this prison-house of sin. There is time now to make your peace with God. " Turn ye, turn ye, why will you die ? " Do you ask which is the way to escape ? Christ answers, saying, " I am the way. " Do you ask, What can I do to be saved ? The answer comes from God. " Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. " Believe on him fully, without a question or a doubt. Never dare to ignore one of his sayings. Has he told you to repent ? — Then you must repent. Has he told you to be baptized ? — Then you must be baptized. Has he told you to break the loaf and to drink of the fruit of the vine in remembrance of his death ? — Then you must reverently and willingly do it. Obey him, love him, and serve him with all your hearts ; old things will then pass away, and all things become new. You will have new friends and new prospects, and a good hope beyond the grave. You will grow in grace, and in the knowledge of divine things. The glorious truths of the Bible will illuminate your soul, and you will be able to say with confidence, " I know that my Redeemer liveth. " Compared with the riches of redeeming love, how poor and wretched are the things of this world. They are not worthy of a thought. Come, then, every sinner, to the footstool of the cross, and Christ will have compassion upon you. He will bless you, and save you; he will translate you out of the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of Heaven, where you shall live for ever, to sing the praises of redeeming love, to walk the golden streets of the city of God; your happy spirit shall ever be encompassed with the light and glory of Jehovah, and there shall be no night there. In that state of bliss our souls shall live for ever. No cloud will darken our pathway. Our spirits will bathe in floods of celestial light, and all our powers will be devoted to the praise of Him who hath loved us and washed us from our sins. This is the prospective honor of the lover of Jesus. May we all strive to love him more, to learn of him, and at all times to obey him, that we may be bright and shining lights in this world, and then the dark passage of death will conduct us to mansions of glory.

J. L.

London.

SYNOPTICAL EXPOSITION OF SCRIPTURE.—No. VII.

Romans v. 1-11.

THE student of the Bible cannot be too careful in his efforts to ascertain the precise office and bearing of every conjunction, preposition, and relative pronoun. The parts of speech are the hinges of composition; and hence it is, that the meaning of a whole sentence or paragraph often depends upon the force of a single particle.

This is obvious, from the first words of our lesson. Your seniors in Grammar and Logic, will at once perceive that the conjunction "therefore" does not here retain its usual illative force; that is, it does not here introduce a strictly syllogistic conclusion. It is rather concessive than illative; and what follows may, therefore, with more propriety, be called a theological than a logical sequence.

Having clearly demonstrated the truth of his great proposition, that "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth it; because that in it, God's plan of justifying man by faith, has been revealed in order to faith;" the Apostle next proceeds to notice some of the most obvious and important consequences that flow from the scheme of justification, to every true believer. These are:—

1. Peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. This, of course, implies, that previous to our being justified by faith, we were all in a state of enmity with God. And this sentiment is abundantly sustained and illustrated by other parts of Scripture. (Rom viii. 7, Eph. ii. 1-3, Col. i. 20, Jas. iv. 4.) But

"woe to him that striveth with his Maker!" (Isa. xlv. 9.) "For there is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord" (Prov. xxi. 30.) And besides, a state of enmity is most unnatural. It is a state of misery and of wretchedness, in which the malevolent passions of the depraved heart continually war against the soul. And hence, it is a most blessed thing to be at peace with God, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

2. The second consequences of being justified by faith, is, that we have obtained access into a new state of favor, comprehending all the high and holy relations, honors, rights, and privileges of the church on earth. We are no longer aliens, but fellow-citizens of the kingdom of heaven (Eph. ii. 19.) God is now our Father—Christ is our eldest brother—the Holy Spirit is our guest and advocate—holy angels are our attendants—and the mercy-seat is our place of refuge. For we have not come to the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire; nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest; and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice, they that heard, entreated that it might not be spoken unto them any more. But we are come unto Mount Zion—and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem—and to an innumerable company of angels, and to the general assembly and church of the first-born who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, which speaketh better things than that of Abel (Heb. xii. 18-24.) And hence, we may all sing with joy and exultation—

“How happy is the Christian's state!”

His sins are all forgiven;
A cheering ray confirms the grace,
And lifts his hopes to heaven.”

3. The third consequence of justification by faith, is, that we are now permitted and enabled to rejoice in hope of future glory. Joyful as is the present state of favor wherein we stand, it sinks into comparative insignificance when contrasted with the glory that is about to be revealed, when this mortal shall put on immortality. For “then will be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory” (1 Cor. xv. 54.) Then will appear the great white throne in the heavens: then will we all hear the sweet words of our Redeemer, “Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (Matt. xxv. 34.) And then will we all enter into his everlasting kingdom, where is fulness of joy, and where are blessings for evermore.

4. The fourth blessed consequence of our being justified by faith, is, that we can now rejoice even in tribulations. This is one of the most remarkable of all Christian paradoxes. Nothing seems to be more absurd to the unbeliever; or to the man who has his portion in this life. To him no chastening seems to be joyous, but grievous. He estimates his happiness and prosperity by the degree of health which he enjoys—by the amount of wealth which he accumulates—and by the honor, power, and fame which he acquires.

But the Christian has a very different standard of comparison. One of the plainest axioms of the system is, that “All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose” (Rom. viii. 28.) He looks upon this life as a state of trial—a state of necessary discipline. He knows that God does not willingly grieve or afflict any man. And hence, he is fully persuaded, that if required to pass through the furnace of affliction, it is because he needs it—it is for the purpose of purifying his heart and life—it is in order that these light afflictions which are but for a moment, may become instrumental in working out for him an eternal weight of glory, great beyond expression (2 Cor. iv. 17.)

Such is the view that every true believer takes of the Divine administration, considered objectively. But he has, at the same time, within his own heart and in his own experience, the most satisfactory evidence of the truth of all that is revealed on this subject. He feels and realizes in his daily life, that tribulation produces patience—and that patience produces approbation—and that approbation produces and strengthens his hope. And hope springing up in the midst of all his trials, sufferings, and afflictions, produces within his heart a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. And hence, he can always say with David, “It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes” (Psa. cxix. 71.)

5. The characteristic strength of this hope, or rather, a firm persuasion, that if we are only faithful unto death, we will surely be made partakers of God's eternal favor, is another blessed consequence of the gospel method of justification. The ground of this confidence is threefold. In the first place, it is the legitimate effect of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given us. The believer who has thus become a habitation of God through the Spirit, has received the strongest possible evidence of God's continued fidelity. He has already in his possession an earnest of that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away (Rom. viii. 23, 2 Cor. i. 22, v. 5, Eph. i. 13-14.) And therefore, though his present tabernacle of clay may be dissolved, he can look forward with perfect confidence to the future occupation of a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (2 Cor. v. 1.)

The second ground of our confidence in reference to the future, consists in fact, that even while we are sinners, God so loved us as to give his only begotten Son for our redemption. This was, indeed, “Amazing pity, grace unknown,

And love beyond degree.”

There is nothing in human love or compassion that will compare with this. The nearest approximation to it is found in the few cases in which men of deep sympathetic feelings, have voluntarily laid down their life for the sake of a kind, merciful, and gracious benefactor. But God commends his love towards us, in that while we were his enemies, Christ died for us. Surely, then, the favour of God will never be less to the reconciled loyal subjects of his government, than it was to a world of rebels. Surely he will now withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Surely every adopted son and daughter of the Lord God Almighty, may confidently exclaim with Paul, "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. viii. 38-39.)

The third element of our confidence is found in the life of the Messiah. If his death has been so efficacious in promoting our happiness, much more will his life secure our final and eternal salvation. All authority in heaven and in earth is now committed to him on our account. The Holy Spirit has been commissioned as his principal agent, not only to convince the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment, but especially to be in the hearts of all his followers as a well of water springing up unto everlasting life (John iv. 14, vii. 38-39); while Michael and Gabriel, and myriads of other heavenly messengers, are sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation (Heb. i. 14.) There can be no doubt, therefore, with respect to our personal security and final triumph over death, hell, and the grave, provided only that we continue to fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

6. And hence, as another consequence of our being justified by faith, we may now always rejoice in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by or through whom we have received the reconciliation. This is the peculiar privilege of the Christian. No Atheist can do this. No mere Deist can do it. Nor can any other class of sceptics do it. While there is enmity against God in the heart of any man, he cannot look with complacency upon either the being or the attributes of Jehovah. It is no pleasure to him to know that God made the universe, that he sustains it, and that he governs it—that he is omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent—and that he will finally dispose of all things, both in the heavens above and in the earth beneath, according to the eternal principles of justice and equity. He would much rather believe that there is no God—no future judgment—no righteous administration of the laws and government of the universe. His prospects of happiness are all confined to the present: and to the little, narrow, contracted sphere of his own earthly possessions.

But how very different are the views, the feelings, and the prospects of the Christian. His patrimony is the universe. And he knows very well that its safety, as well as his own security, depends on the being, attributes, perfections, and government of Jehovah. And hence, he always rejoices in him as the only unwasting fountain of life, health, and happiness.

What a rich cluster, then, of celestial fruit, we have here growing, as it were, out of the gospel method of justification. What a rich banquet is here provided for the hungry soul. True, indeed, this is but the first fruits of the system. It is only a foretaste of what is to follow. But surely it is enough to allure all our senses: and to satisfy, for the present, all our desires. To feel conscious that we are at peace with God—to be allowed to approach his mercy-seat, and to address him as "our Father, who art in heaven"—to know that Christ is our brother, and that the Holy Spirit is our advocate and comforter—to be able to look forward with entire confidence to "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;" when the grave shall give up the dead which are in it, and when death and hades shall give up the dead which are in them—to be fully persuaded, that if we are only faithful unto death, we will all, at last, appear before the throne to receive the crown of life, the harp of gold, and the palm of victory—to know that the battle of life will then be over—that there will be no more sin, no more pain, and no more death—that Christ will then lead us to fountains of living waters, and that God will himself wipe away all tears from our eyes :—surely, my dear brother, this ought to be enough to captivate the soul of every rational son and daughter of fallen humanity.

“A hope so great and so divine,
May trials well endure;
And purify our souls from sin,
As Christ himself is pure.”

But the misfortune is, that many will not be persuaded to ponder and to study these things for themselves. Their minds are absorbed from the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life. They can read all that is written on the subject of wealth, power, and earthly fame, but they have no time to study the Living Oracles ; no time to sit down with Apostles and Prophets, to drink from the pure fountain of God's own inspiration. Such is their plea—and such is their practice—and such, I may add, will be their destiny.

But there is more hope in the rising generation, provided only, that their religious education be duly commenced, and properly conducted. Youth is the time to form character. And hence, my great anxiety that the students of your academy, as well as of every other school in Christendom, shall devote much of their time to the study of the “Holy Scriptures, which are able to make them wise even unto salvation, through the faith in Christ Jesus.” May God prosper you in this benevolent work, and make your institution a blessing to our age and nation.

R. M.

THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE CHURCHES.—No. III MAGNANIMITY.

LARGE-HEARTEDNESS has many phases, and in the Christian life it finds opportunity of their fullest development. The little-souled sinner, wrapt up in the almost impenetrable sheathing of his ever-grasping selfishness, is a character the very opposite of the Christian. While self-love is proper and necessary, yet in excess it becomes the sin and bane of the man himself, and the efficient cause of his non-fulfilment of the obligations he owes alike to God and man. The selfish man centres in himself all that is owing to 'Deity and humanity. His heart, destitute of all sympathy, dries up and withers into a gnarled, unfeeling knot. Only so far as he supposes his own interest or gratification may be subserved, is his ear open to the call of God or man. In such a state of hardness and impenitence of heart, does God find a sin-cursed world : for its redemption he sends his love-breathing, soul-animating gospel ; and heaven's message received, the cold, dead heart of stone gives place to a sympathetic, God-loving, man-blessing heart of flesh. The commandment comes, and is appreciatingly received, which bids that God be loved with all the mind, and soul, and heart, and strength, and one's neighbour as oneself. The enlarging sympathies of the new and heaven-born soul are called forth into active exercise by such an exhortation as says, “Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.”

The desires of a nature constantly expanding under the genial sunshine of heavenly benevolence, must, by virtue of their very being, go forth in daily search of objects of kindly interest. Not more natural is it for the flowers to put forth their leaves and buds to the warming breath of Spring, than for the “new creature in Christ Jesus” to feel and act with sympathetic regard for the well-being of others. If, as we must admit, there are in this busy demanding world of ours, innumerable hindrances to the gratification of these divinely-infused desires, yet there are on the other hand as numerous opportunities constantly presenting themselves, whereby the willing mind may prove its willingness. The most willing shall not be able to accomplish all he desires ; but for any one to say, he has no opportunity, is to adopt a vain excuse, and to give evidence of the exceeding feebleness of the divine life within him — if not, that it is extinct.

That sacrifices must be made to overtake the work which heavenly benevolence prescribes, is to be understood. Magnanimity implies sacrifice of some kind ; and when we contend for it as a Christian virtue — as a want of the churches, we have before us the distinct consideration, that in the due gratification of those philanthropic sentiments which the gospel "implants in the human breast, there must be the surrender, more or less, of that which otherwise would, or might, have gone to the upfilling of the cup of mere personal enjoyment. Now we do not know what title a man has to the name of the self-denying Jesus, if he do not exercise himself in the yielding of his own pleasure for the good of others. If he is to pursue precisely the same course after conversion as before—if he is to aggrandize his time as much for mere selfward ends—if he is to devote his means as much for personal emolument—if he is to apply his abilities as much for selfish objects—from what, and to what, we would ask, is he converted? If theologians have mystified conversion doctrinally, have not others rendered it a mere myth in practice? We cannot doubt the need-be there is, for a large increase of that seeking not one's own—that living for the good of others, to which the love of God most certainly prompts, and which, when seen by the world, will have more power in winning men over to the faith once delivered to the saints, than we can well express. The Cain-like spirit which asks, "Am I my brother's keeper?" must be excised from the church, if ever she is to be filled with the Spirit of Christ. The two cannot dwell together. As the dawn of day dispels the darkness of night, so the fuller drinking into the one spirit of the gospel would of necessity evanish that of the world. Instead of that self-seeking which occupies the thoughts and lives of most Christians, each one who has named the name of Christ—would feel prompted, not only as being the steward of God's manifold grace, but as possessing the mind of Christ, to look as he did, to the good of others. The answer to God of the sinner and the backslider could not then be, "No man careth for my soul;" for then every one so taught of God would feel and apply the exhortation given to all believers, to look diligently lest any fall from the grace of God—lest any root of bitterness spring up, producing trouble and defilement, or lest any fornicator or profane person arise. As much thus as by argument, do we expect the settlement of the question of the oversight of the heritage. What is there but the absence of true Christian magnanimity, to prevent the immediate throwing into the field of a vast amount of unemployed labor?

Like produces like. Example is contagious. One worthy trait of character worthily exhibited, leads to the development, in the actor and in his witnesses, of other and analogous virtues. A benevolent care for the well-being of others is a cardinal preventive of enviousness, illiberality, and unforgiveness of spirit. Large-heartedness and narrow-mindedness are far as the poles apart; and he who exercises himself in the active labors of Christian benevolence, will feel himself so great a debtor to grace divine, as to lead to the overwhelming, as in a sea of gratitude, all the uprising forms of hell-born envy, bigotry, and relentlessness.

That one who from the heart makes it his business to seek the good of others, should be envious of the good they have, is impossible. Such an one will not envy the possession of gift, grace, or talent, by his neighbour or his brother, in any condemnable sense. His desires will not be those of robbery; they will be no more than the fires of a lawful, honorable, and commendable ambition. His covetousness will be of the complexion recommended by the Apostle when he exhorts—"Covet earnestly the best gifts." He will desire to excel, but it will be in order to the edifying of the church. He will seek the wealth of others, not that he may be enriched and they impoverished, but that he may add to their store of heavenly treasure; for thus in making others rich, he enriches himself. Philanthropy is the death of envy. The man of large soul does not, cannot breathe its atmosphere.

Nor will Brother Greatheart lace himself up within narrower compass than truth, the girdle of his loins, renders needful. He may find it tight enough at times, as all girdles are—and truth is his. That he won't forget. His charity is neither that of falsehood nor indifference. If he be girt more tightly than his fellows, so that they call him Mr. Bigot, as sure they will, it shall not be because he loves them less, but truth the more, and the God of truth the most. Truth has its limits, and within these the most magnanimous of the faith's defenders have ever stood, having their loins well girt about them. But though truth is of all stern things the most unyielding, and though in a world of sin and error, it is its nature to isolate all whom it engirdles, still it does not withdraw their sympathies from the transgressor and the errorist. Like its author, where it cannot approve it will pity, and where it cannot pity it will blame. Faithful it must be. But its faithfulness is not a blind force, but a just, intelligent discrimination of things that differ. It does not imagine everything to be a principle, nor when it finds a principle does it ride it to death. It shuns exaggeration as much as falsehood of feebler stamp. It apprehends the difference between the lawful and the expedient, and rejoices in liberty whenever it is expedient.

The man of enlarged Christian spirit knows both how to forbear and how to forgive. Unlike the churl and the bigot, he acts in constant recognition of the truth of the proverb, that it is human to err, but divine to forgive. He feels that for himself he needs a like forbearance and forgiveness — that as he finds in others aspects of character and modes of action that do not commend themselves to his conceptions, so he, on the other hand, has his faults and failings, which, to others, are likely, if not certain, to be more or less uncongenial. He judges rightly, that since every man has his own individuality — his own habits of thought, and his own experience of life, which in every instance differ from the idiosyncracies of all other men, it is no more than the dictate of a heart ennobled by the philanthropy of heaven, to cultivate daily that spirit of forbearance and forgiveness which the blessed and gracious Saviour so constantly exemplified, and so distinctly enjoins on the recognition of all who would profit by his grace. He would as soon think of singing the devil's praise, as of "harping" on the discordant strings of a brother's failings. To be incessantly complaining, murmuring, quarrelling, snarling, barking, growling, is too bad for dogs, much less for men — forgiven and sanctified by grace. Who does not despise the snarler, who has ever some complaint against some brother or brethren not in court, but in heart dragging its slow, slimy, interminable length along, as it would seem, to the day of judgment! And who does not honor the magnanimous friend who, having cause of complaint, goes right up to the offender, withstands him to the face because he is to be blamed — there and then faithfully, yet forbearingly and forgivingly, closes the account with hearty goodwill and the right hand of fellowship!

Brethren, let us cultivate Christian magnanimity in all its grand and ennobling features. Depend upon it, we need it much — more than we have ever thought. We contend for the grandest and most magnanimous of principles — the pure and unadulterated gospel and truth of God; and if we do this in little-souled contemptibleness, how deservedly may the world laugh us to scorn! There is much in every fight, and more in fight for truth, than in other combats, and most of all in fight for religious truth, to inflame the passions; and certain is it, that if they be not worthily, they shall be unworthily incited. Let us, then, seek constantly to maintain and diffuse that healthful, cheerful, animating, cementing, attractive glow of soul-expanding love which radiates from the Sun of Righteousness.

Edinburgh.

T. H. M.

DEPARTURES FROM PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

THE Bible is avowedly the book of Protestants — the New Testament, the Christian's directory. While "all Scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," that portion of it written after the advent of our Saviour furnishes laws and regulations peculiar to the Christian dispensation. Would it not be derogatory to the authority of Christ as our Lawgiver, to indulge the thought that he has omitted anything that is necessary to the full establishing and governing of his kingdom? This being the case, we have no need to go back to former dispensations to learn our duty, for whatever is important and adapted to the new, will have been incorporated by the Great Teacher ; much less do we need to add anything to his "finished" work.

It is common to consider Christ in the threefold character of Prophet, Priest, and King. During his sojourn on earth, he acted only in the capacity of Prophet or Teacher. Not being of the order of Aaron, he could take no part in the priestly office. He must first make an offering of himself, ascend on high, and there enter the "inner sanctuary" for us, before he could act as "the High Priest of our profession." This is clearly set forth in Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, vii. viii. It is equally true that he assumed no regal honors or authority, till he had paid on Calvary the price of man's redemption, and "ascended up where he was before." According to the same Apostle, it was "when he had by himself purged our sins, he sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." Was not the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost the signal of the act of coronation? So Peter declared in his discourse on that memorable occasion (Acts ii. 29-36.) The concluding sentence of this discourse reads thus :—"Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

It was during the period that elapsed between the resurrection and the ascension of our Lord, that instructions and commandments were given to the disciples concerning his kingdom, and that they were appointed his ambassadors, with full powers to set up that kingdom, declare the terms of admission, and the laws by which its subjects should thereafter be governed. They had already received the assurance that "when he, the spirit of truth, should come, he should guide them into all truth—should bring all things to their remembrance which Christ had spoken unto them." We may rely, then, on the Apostles as the faithful, unerring exponents of his laws—the safe and only safe guides in all matters pertaining to the church or kingdom of Jesus the Christ.

Having now arrived at a definite starting point, we can easily determine what are "departures from Primitive Christianity," by reference to the teaching and practice of the Apostle. It is a matter of the first importance, that these questions, in regard to the setting up of Messiah's reign, his sole authority as Lawgiver of the Christian dispensation—with a proper distinction between the terms of admission into, and the laws to govern the subjects of, his kingdom—be definitely settled. The want of this has been a fruitful source of error. The sentiment is a very prevalent one, that the gospel only sets forth general principles, leaving a wide margin for human theories and speculations—to cut down here, draw out there, and put into almost any shape to suit the taste and convenience of different ages, classes, and conditions of men. Of its adaptation to the whole human family, no rational mind can understandingly deny ; but it would signally fail of accomplishing its object, did it not bring down the pride of the human heart, and secure unconditional and unreserved submission to Christ the Lord. To do this, its requirements must be definite, uniform, and positive. Such they are, as, on a future occasion, I shall attempt to show. In the meantime, I would ask, at least, a second reading of the thoughts here presented, as these are the premises on which our conclusions will mainly be based.

J. O. B.

THE MANIFESTATIONS OF GOD.—No. V.

8. THE manifestation of God to Jacob on his return from Padan Aram, (Gen. xxxii. 24-30) next claims our attention. Jacob had served his Uncle Laban several years—had married Leah and Rachel—became the father of eleven sons, and acquired a considerable amount of wealth in flocks and herds. Having taken a final farewell of Laban, he was now returning to the land of his fathers. Reaching the Northern boundary of the land of Gilead, lying Eastward of the Jordan, he met a host of celestial messengers. What was the mission of these "angels of God," we are not informed. Whether it was directed to Jacob, or had regard to other of the sons of men, appears not. In all probability, they at least tendered to Jacob a friendly salutation. They seem to have occasioned the patriarch no distress. The only comment on this incident left on record, is the circumstance that Jacob signalized the event by giving a memorial name to the place where God's host and his own host met, viz. Mahanahim, i. e. two hosts.

God's messengers having departed, Jacob dispatched messengers to his brother Esau, in Edom, in order to secure a friendly meeting. The messengers returned, bringing the intelligence that Esau was on the road to meet Jacob, accompanied with four hundred men. These facts looked portentous! Esau's designs were surely evil. That he should be already on the road—should have with him so large a band of men, probably armed, left to Jacob scarcely any other inference than that his brother now meditated the vengeful expression of his long-cherished ill-will! Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed. His alarm prompted him to adopt vigorous precautionary measures, for the purpose of disarming his injured brother's hostility. We need not now dwell at length on the details of Jacob's plans. Suffice it to say, they exhibit to the utmost advantage, the skill of their author's natural character. His insight, foresight, and contrivance here find legitimate scope, and betray not those features of low cunning which unhappily had answered but too well to his name Supplanter. Doubtless, too, Jacob's natural sagacity was at this time strengthened and directed by that God whose gracious presence had been with him since the event of Bethel, as he had not previously enjoyed it. Let the reader mark well the preparation made by Jacob for meeting Esau—the division of his whole substance into two bands—his importunate pleading with the God who had promised to be with him and do him good—his selecting and sending forward a magnificent present to his brother—the messages he put into the mouths of those servants to whom the present was entrusted—his careful detention of his flocks and family till the present should have had time to expend its propitiatory power on Esau's mind;—and his conclusion must be, that Jacob had done everything which sanctified wisdom could devise, to avert his brother's wrath before he had that interview with God, and put forth those further powers of conquest which have immortalized him as "wrestling Jacob."

Let us now rehearse the inimitable story. "So went the present over before him: and himself lodged that night in the company. And he rose up that night, and took his two wives, and his two women-servants, and his eleven sons, and passed over the ford Jabbok. And he took them, and sent them over the brook, and sent over what he had. And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled* a man with him until the breaking of the day. And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he smote the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint as he wrestled with him. And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me. And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob. And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob (supplanter), but Israel, (contender with God): for thou hast contended with God and with men, and hast prevailed. And then Jacob asked, and said, Declare, I pray thee, thy name. And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And then he blessed him there. And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel, (the face of God): for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."

That this was, in fact, a manifestation of Deity to Jacob, does not admit of legitimate doubt. That Jacob at first discovered whom it was he was wrestling with, need not be affirmed. The rising moon, seen through a murky atmosphere, is often at first mistaken for some common earthly fire; yet mounting higher, and putting off her veil, the veiled beauty of her face is seen worthy an orb of heaven. Thus, however Jacob might for a while be unaware of the divine dignity of his combatant, and, observing his visage, mistake him for a common mortal, it is pretty clear that it was not long before at least a suspicion of the real truth stole over him. Else, why his urgency to obtain a blessing from him whom * Lit. raised the dust. The verb is derived from a noun signifying "dust"—"because," says Gesenius, "in wrestling the dust is raised."

just before he had striven to conquer? "Except thou bless me!" Does not the perception already dawn on Jacob's mind, that a blessing from him whom he has been resisting as though a foe, will serve him good stead in the impending appearance of Esau? The edge of the patriarch's suspicion is further sharpened by the authoritative manner in which the "man" changes the name Jacob to Israel, and the significant manner in which the new name is justified—"for thou hast contended with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Was this, then, God?—who, though by smiting and dislocating Jacob's thigh, he had shown how easily he could vanquish the patriarch, in his mercy had yielded to the suppliant's invincible determination? Whether it was this that satisfied Jacob, or whether when Jacob, in turn, asked the stranger's name, and it is simply added—"he blessed him there," we should understand that the blessing was given in the manner desired, and the sought for name declared, this, at least, is certain, that Jacob did come to know the divine character of him who at first seemed to him but a "man." History was then epitomized in names. Hence, Jacob called the name of that memorable spot, near the brook Jabbok, in Gilead, by the memorial name, Peni-el—the face of God: "for," said he, "I have seen the face of Elohim, and my life is preserved."

If this did not settle the question that on this occasion it was God who manifested himself as man, every doubt would be compelled to yield before the allusion to this incident, contained in Hosea xii. 3-7. "He took his brother by the heel in the womb, and by his strength he contended with God: yea, he contended with the angel and prevailed; he wept and made supplication unto him: he found him in Bethel, and there he spake with us; even JEHOVAH, God of hosts; JEHOVAH is his memorial." This is conclusive.

The gradual manner in which Jehovah at this time manifested himself to his servant, is indeed peculiarly beautiful and noteworthy. It not only reminds us of a previous occasion when, in a way just similar, Yahveh, appearing to Abraham as a weary traveller, was afterwards recognized as "the judge of all the earth;" but it instinctively leads the mind to glance onward to the fulness of time, when "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us"—and when, in like manner, the incarnate Word by degrees, as in Peniel, unveiled his glory.

The comment of Hosea brings out another fact. The "God-man" of Genesis is the "Messenger Yahveh" of Hosea. In the former document, the appearing one is identified as both "man" and "God;" in the latter, as both "angel" and "Jehovah," as well as "God." Put these names together and we have—man, angel, God, Yahveh. He with whom Jacob wrestled was all these; viz. "man," temporarily, as to the vehicle of his appearing; "angel" or messenger, as to his office in the godhead; "God," as to the absolute dignity of his nature; and, "Yahveh," the Becoming One, through whom Deity is revealed to man, the Coming One who should one day appear as the Sovereign of the Temple, the Messenger of the Covenant, the Second Adam, the Redeeming Kinaman of our fallen race.

It remains to notice the object of this manifestation in Peniel. Obviously it was to bless Jacob, and give him confidence to go forward and present himself to his brother. But why does God manifest himself to Jacob as a "man?" And why the determined combat? To the former question, if presented by itself, it might be sufficient to reply by asking in return, whether divine manifestations have not ever been made by the assumption of the human form?—whether ordinary celestial messengers have not usually been seen in something like human visage, but swift in transit, mighty in strength, and glorious in countenance? But when we associate with the human vehicle of this manifestation, the human-like "wrestling" which followed, an answer of another kind seems more appropriate. Were not the human form and human struggle designed to counteract the common tendency to conceive of Deity as taking little concern in human affairs, and, especially, as not at all influenced by human supplications! Here we behold the adorable, illimitable Creator of heaven and earth, putting himself, so to speak, within his creature's power. He allows himself to be grasped, grappled with, detained, and overcome, physically—by the muscle and will of a frail worm of the earth, that he may body forth in tragic deed the spiritual boldness, believing energy, moral determination, and intercessory invincibleness on the part of his creatures in which he delights! Jacob, though maimed, was not vanquished; still he cried—"I will not let thee go!" His physical triumph was a stepping-stone to a moral one. He must have a blessing! He obtained one—a right royal one—a proud memorial of his daring. Thenceforth his name should proclaim him a successful contender-with-God! Rich reward for his "weeping and supplication."

Now, if God, temporarily assuming manhood, and condescending to a physical wrestling, put himself in the power of the Shepherd-chief, and was prevailed upon and prevailed over; how much more are we justified in saying that he has, since, more fully put himself within the grasp of mortals, having permanently clothed himself with our bone and our flesh, and committed himself to us by exceeding great and precious promises which had not then been given? The King eternal, immortal, invisible, loves to be interceded with. Even as far back as Isaiah's time, the lack of human intercessors was regarded as proof decisive of divine displeasure towards the people of the Old Covenant. If any of the Lord's disciples have grown half afraid of real importunate prayer, let them ponder these words—so graphically lamenting the absence of intercession of the Peniel order—"And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take fast hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us because of our iniquities" (Isaiah lxiv. 7.) That God has now given us the light of the knowledge of his glory, in the face of Jesus Christ, instead of constituting a reason why "wrestling" prayer should cease, is the very opposite. Paul, who basked in that glory, well knew this; and hence enlisted brethren whom he had never seen in this, as in a mighty co-operative work—"Now, I beseech you, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye AGONIZE TOGETHER WITH ME, in your prayers to God for me; that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea: and that my service which I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints; that I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed" (Rom. xv. 30-32.) In like manner, brethren, pray for us. The God of Peniel bless you, and be with you all. Amen.

J. B. R.

Dundee.

TO THE NEWLY CONVERTED.

TRUE conversion implies more than is now often felt, done, or experienced by many styled converts. We may be converted to a party, to a doctrine, or from one practice to another, and not be converted to God, nor have any change of heart. True conversion to God affects the entire will and heart—all the affections. Conversion to God implies that we enter his service willingly, devoting all our powers to his service—that we have become servants from choice or constrained by love. The converted person is always justified as well as purified by faith, and becomes a child of God, adopted into the household of faith, there to enjoy and exhibit the spirit of adoption and show the obedience of a son.

Peter, when addressing a large company of Jews, uttered an important oracle when he said, "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord" (Acts iii. 9.) Here conversion is made as much a means of enjoying pardon as repentance. On the genuineness of our conversion will depend our steadfastness in the faith and enjoyment of all the gospel promises. Conversion being personal and palpable in all its effects, there is no reason for doubt left as to whether we are converted or not. The dead tree can as easily produce leaves and fruit, as the unconverted can walk uprightly, show piety to God, or enjoy that hope which fills with joy, and makes one not ashamed to be reproached for Christ. Also, every one knows whether he has sought the Lord and his ways with sincerity of heart, and whether he has turned away from serving Satan and walking in the ways of ungodly men.

Conversion implies a change of state, and brings into a new service, yielding new pleasures, and new and rich rewards. Any one, then, whose faith, working by love, has resulted in his conversion, has a new heart, has put on "the new man," has a new name, a new hope, a new life, and new and heavenly desires.

Do we, then, address one who is a new convert to God through faith in Christ? Remember, the race begun is not the crown won. Arm yourself with the whole armour of God, to stand fast in the faith. The warfare against sin is but begun. The battle must be fought, not with fleshly weapons, but with the weapons found in the word of the Lord. You must fight "the fight of faith" under the Captain of salvation, and a victory and glory will be gained. The race set before you must be run with humble diligence. Unbelief, "the sin which doth so easily beset us," and every other encumbering sin, must be forsaken and guarded against; and then, looking to Jesus for an example, the race may be run with success, all obstacles overcome, and that crown gained which is greater than all treasures below, and equal to all that is great above. Do not think the race too long; for life will soon come to a close. Do not think the way too narrow; for the Lord himself prepared it, and fitted it to be the path to life and glory. Nor view the country through which you travel as bearing no good fruit; for faith and hope produce many pleasant, nay, heavenly fruits, to gladden the pilgrim even while below.

You now have new duties to perform, and new pleasures to enjoy. The Lord has prepared a weekly feast for you, and a company of friends to meet with, on his own day. Your aim should be, then, to be in your place in the assembly to hear the word of the Lord, sing his praise, and join to supplicate his favour and pardon. And with a glad and grateful heart, to celebrate that crowning act of his love, the shedding of his precious blood to purge you from sin. Let his love control your heart, and call forth that love and gratitude due to him from every sinner redeemed by him from destruction which could never end. And ever think of that crown which the Saviour will set on the heads of all his faithful followers, which will sparkle and shine with glory to all eternity, while you may traverse the pathless celestial fields, and ever learn to adore and praise the Lamb, who redeemed you, and gave himself for you on Calvary.

J. B.

INTRODUCTORY QUESTIONS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

THE SIXTEEN BOOKS OF PROPHECY.

How many books of Prophecy are there?—Sixteen.

How are they divided?—Into major and minor Prophets.

How many major Prophets are there?—Four.

Name them?—Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel.

How many minor Prophets are there?—Twelve.

Which is the first?—Hosea.

Which is the last?—Malachi.

Name them in order.—Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.

Why are these styled minor Prophets?—They wrote so little.

Why do these several books bear the titles they do?—Each receives its name from the author who wrote it.

Were these books all written at the same time?—They were written at various periods.

GENERAL QUESTIONS.

The Book of Lamentation is a kind of an appendix to the Book of Jeremiah, though counted as a separate book.

How long was the Old Testament in being written?—Ten hundred and fifty years.

How many writers were there of the Bible?—About forty.

How many were writers of the Old Testament?—Between thirty and forty. The exact number is not known, as there were several anonymous writers.

How many writers of the Old Test-tament can you name?—Thirty, at least.

Who were they?—Moses, Joshua, Samuel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Solomon, Gad, Nathan, Zechariah, Haggai, Job, David, Asaph, Jeduthun, Heman, Ethan, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Malachi.

How many dispensations of religion have there been?—Three.

Name them.—The Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian.

What is the meaning of Patriarchal?—Fatherly.

When did it commence?—With the first families of man.

How long did it continue?—Twenty-five hundred years.

Who was High Priest under it?—Melchisedeck.

Who was he?—King of Salem.

When did the Jewish and Mosaic dispensation commence?—With the giving of the law on Sinai.

When did that take place?—About the year of the world 2500, or B.C. 1491.

How long did the Jewish dispensation continue?—About 1500 years.

Who was the Mediator under this dispensation?—Moses.

Who was the Lawgiver?—Moses.

Who was the first High Priest under this dispensation?—Aaron.

Of what tribe was he?—Levi.

Through which tribe was the Priesthood to come?—That of Levi.

When did the Christian dispensation commence?—At the first Pentecost after the crucifixion and ascension of the Saviour.

When did the Christian era commence?—With the birth of the Saviour.

Who is High Priest under the Christian dispensation?—Jesus Christ, our Advocate with God.

Was he a High Priest while here upon the earth?—He could not be. See Heb. viii. 4.

Was there a change in the priesthood?—There was.

Was there a change in the law in consequence of a change in the priesthood?—There was. See Heb. vii. 12.

Where are the Jewish Scriptures found?—In the Old Testament.

Where may the Christian Scriptures be found?—In the New Testament.

What is the meaning of Scripture?—Primarily, anything written—a writing. It is appropriated to the Old and New Testaments.

What is the meaning of religion?—Re and lingo, (Latin) to rebind, or bind again.

How many kinds of light are there in the course of a day?—Four kinds.

What are they?—1st, Sunlight; 2nd, Moonlight; 3rd, Starlight; 4th, Twilight.

Of what may a day be a figure?—Of the world, or of a man's life.

What of these lights may the Patriarchal age be compared to?—The starlight.

To which the Jewish age?—The moonlight.

To which the Christian?—The sunlight.

Who may be compared to twilight?—John the Baptist.

Define twilight?—It is the mingling of all lights.

In what form was the Bible originally written?—In manuscript.

When was the Bible now in use translated?—From 1607 to 1611, during the reign of King James I. of England.

What is the meaning of translation?—Changing from one language into another.

How many years is it since it was translated?—About 250 years.

Were the Scriptures divided into chapters and verses by the Apostles?—They were not.

When was the division into chapters first adopted?—In the twelfth century.

By whom?—Cardinal Cairo.

When was the division into verses first made?—In A.D. 1551.

By whom?—Robert Stevens.

What was the object of his making this division?—He did it as a matter of amusement.

How, then, should we study the Scriptures?—Without regard to the divisions of chapters and verses.

How many years are we dependant upon the Bible for our knowledge of the world's history, prior to the period of profane history?—About 3550 years.

REVIEW.

How is the Bible divided? What is the meaning of Testament? Of will? Of Covenant? How many books are there in the Bible? How many in the Old Testament? How many in the New Testament? How many divisions of books are there? What is the first division? What the second? What the third? What the fourth? How many books of Law are there? How many of History? How many of Poetry? How many of Prophecy? What is the meaning of the names of the first five books? How many major Prophets are there? Name them? How many minor Prophets are there? Which is the first? Which is the last? Will you name them all in order? How many dispensations of religion have there been? Name them. What does Patriarchal mean? How long did it continue? When did the Mosaic begin? How long did it continue? When did the Christian begin? Will you mention the figure used to explain these dispensations?

SKETCH OF D. S. BURNET, OF CINCINNATI.

BY GRAYBEARD.

THE subject of this sketch is a prominent minister of the Gospel, of the denomination known in this community as "Disciples of Christ." He is now fifty-one years of age, and has been for nearly thirty-five years a preacher, having commenced his evangelical labors while at college, at the age of sixteen. The Rev. (or Elder, as he prefers being designated) D. S. Burnet is the son of the Hon. I. G. Burnet, who was for thirteen years Mayor of Cincinnati, and the nephew of Judge Burnet, of the same place, (from whom the Burnet House, Cincinnati, takes its name); also, the nephew of Judge D. G. Burnet, quondam Provisional President of the Republic of Texas. Since entering the ministry, although uninterruptedly engaged in the great work he then espoused, he has not constantly occupied a pastoral relation. During this interval he presided for two years over Bacon College, Kentucky—one of their oldest institutions of learning; ten years he was president of a female college, and some thirteen years more he was engaged in editing papers and periodicals in the interest of his denomination, or, more properly, of the principles and practices they are aiming universally to disseminate.

Mr. Burnet is constitutionally a thinker, and habitually a close Bible student, as is clearly indicated in his sermons, which are always extemporaneous. The study of the Bible, it may here be remarked, is a characteristic of this denomination, and their preachers number some of the most eminent living Biblical scholars. Mr. Burnet's independence as a thinker was early manifested. He is of Presbyterian parentage, and was brought up under Presbyterian influences. In early youth, the bent of his mind was religious. At about fifteen years of age, without ever having himself questioned the Scriptural authority for infant baptism, he attended a series of discourses by a minister of the denomination to which, by education, he was attached, which had for their object the divine authority for administering the ordinance of baptism to unconverted children. Contrary to the design of the preacher, the effect of his argument on the mind of his young preacher, was exactly opposite to that which he intended. Not only was his confidence in the validity of infant baptism shaken, but he became convinced at the same time that the true mode of baptism was by immersion. Under these circumstances, the teaching of the Baptists seemed more congenial to his views, and accordingly, at the age of sixteen, he was admitted to fellowship in one of their churches. In this the free-thinking proclivities (I use the term, not in its opprobrious sense, of course) of our young inquirer were also manifested. When the questions were propounded to him respecting his belief in certain articles of faith, preparatory to his admission, he frankly declined to confess that he did so believe, for the reason that he had not had sufficient time or experience to determine the matter for himself on Bible grounds, and said that he must therefore refuse to profess his unqualified belief in anything else than the naked Bible. Seeing the boldness and evident honesty of the youthful neophyte, the prescribed conformity was waived, and he was admitted. Very soon after this, at the solicitation of his pastor, he began to speak in religious assemblies, and for which he evinced so much aptness that he was at once looked upon as "called of God" to the work of the ministry. The necessary preparations for taking this step were immediately commenced; but when the time for his ordination arrived, the same difficulty of non-conformity was again encountered. He was passed, however, on the ground of having evidently been "called." But in the course of time, when his dissenting views were more fully developed, a separation from the Baptist church became inevitable, and his identity with the "Disciples" was the result.

Mr. Burnet is a worker. For thirteen years he was the pastor of a church in Cincinnati, zealously engaged in the cause to which his life has been devoted, and to which church, it may here be stated, he has returned, after a protracted absence. During the last eighteen months his labours have been of an itinerant character, mainly in the States of Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, and Kansas territory. During this period he is said to have preached seven hundred times, and he has not unfrequently delivered as many as fifteen discourses in a single week.

In person, he may be described as rather fine looking. He has an excellent body, a large intellectual head, and a face (unshaven except the upper lip) full of purpose and expression. Though a little below the medium stature, his uniformly erect attitude and manly face, give him a dignified and commanding appearance. His hair and whiskers are of an iron-grey mixture; the former is combed back off his ears, which seems to be the favourite ministerial mode, although the loss of hair in his case may render this necessary—a slight tuft on his "organ of benevolence" being the principal argument of his top-head against the claims of baldness. His brows are arched and prominent, evincing strong perception, and his whole forehead is massive. Strength and endurance, physical and mental, are depicted in every lineament of his face. His dark eye, in conversation, beams with intelligence, while his fixed, well-defined mouth bespeaks a character wrought out in the man's life.

As a speaker he is thoughtful, confident, and earnest, rather than passionate or presumptuous. For an extempore speaker, he is remarkably terse and accurate in his diction, and is no less correct in his pronunciation. From a single hearing, I think he lacks pathos. He is persuasive, but his appeals are more to the head than to the heart. True, his effort to which I here refer—his discourse on the Sunday morning, at the church of the "Disciples," Twelfth Street, below Melon—was an exposition intended for a congregation of communicants rather than for the unconverted, and may therefore not have expressed his usual ardor as an evangelist. He is evidently not incapable of warmth, but his feelings are manifestly under the control of his judgment. His style is scholarly, though more noted for perspicuity than ornament. He does not undertake to compel assent by mere vehemence or force of sound, nor endeavor to cut his way through opposing obstacles by sawing the air, but proceeds to establish his propositions by appeals to the Word of God alone, from which he rarely quotes without unfolding the obvious meaning of the quotation as indicated by the context, and the circumstances under which it appears upon the sacred page. In this respect Mr. Burnet exhibits a more than ordinary acquaintance with the Bible, not only with its letter, but with its sublime and comprehensive plan as a whole. To a promiscuous congregation he may at times seem obscure and metaphysical; although he is less liable to be so regarded by those of his own denomination, the members of which, as already intimated, are generally well instructed in the Bible. This is, in fact, one of their cardinal principles. They do not believe in fishing babes (in a Scripture sense) into the church, and immediately setting them to work, without either strength or knowledge, to "convert only;" but rather hold that they should "tarry at Jericho till their beards be grown;" in other words, that they should be fed themselves before they are set to feeding others—that they should have instilled into their minds and hearts a respectable knowledge of the Bible, before attempting to enlighten others in matters of which they themselves are ignorant.

Mr. Burnet is not a flash preacher in any sense. He is learned, concise, and conscientious, and in the most important sense—that of making himself clearly understood—eloquent; but he does not possess the elements of what is termed a "popular" preacher. "Fashionable" congregations would probably quite as soon go without hearing the Gospel at all, as to have Mr. Burnet for their minister. Not that he is intellectually inferior to some who are deeply enshrined in the velvet affections of congregations of the latter class, but then he has not what the critical world would pronounce "sublime!" or even "splendid!" in a preacher. Mr. Guiness, by his warmth, his whole-soul interest in his subject, and fascinating manner, will attract thousands, where, under the same circumstances, Mr. Burnet would attract but hundreds; and yet the latter is unquestionably the greater of the two in mere intellectual power. For this reason a "great preacher" has come to be an unmeaning term, because universally judged from different stand-points. Paul, no one doubts, was a great preacher, and yet, in the estimation of the critical and cultivated Athenians, he was but a "bab-bler." I need hardly add, that similar verdicts are even now sometimes flippantly passed upon devout and able ministers of our modern wise Athenians, both in the church and out of it.

Mr. Burnet possesses, in a high degree, what, to one in his position, is an invaluable gift, a faculty for imparting instruction. Few can be so obtuse as to listen to one of his discourses, without receiving some substantial addition to their stock of Scripture knowledge. Even his views, from which the hearer may feel honestly inclined to differ, are presented in such a light as to impart an increased relish for the study of the Bible, if nothing else.

His discourse on Sunday morning, as already stated, was a running exposition, and was founded upon the Scripture contained in the First Epistle of Peter, from the fifteenth verse of the first chapter to the seventeenth verse of the second chapter inclusive. In the course of his remarks upon the various points contained in this passage, several of their distinguishing denominational peculiarities were indicated.

It would prolong this article unduly to introduce a sketch of the history and principles of this religious society; and yet, as they number but a single congregation in Philadelphia, and are therefore comparatively unknown, it seems proper that some reference should be made to them in this connection. With regard to their name, that of Christians was originally assumed, and it is said, but for fear of being confounded with the Unitarians, would have been universally adopted. Although known here as "Disciples of Christ," in the West, where they are more numerous, the simple term Disciples is their general appellation. They are sometimes nicknamed, from the conspicuous part taken by Alexander Campbell and his father, Thomas Campbell, in propagating their distinguishing principles; although, as the giving of a man's name to a religious society is always odious, especially where it is disavowed by those to whom it is given, it is very discourteous to do so, to say the least. In one respect the "Disciples" may be said to be a monument of the impossibility of ever effecting an outward union of the church. The accomplishment of this was the grand idea of their inception; and although they do not despair of ultimately achieving that result, it is none the less evident, that all they have hitherto effected, is the adding of another respectable member to the great family of religious denominations—one that has had an existence, in its present form, of about twenty-five years, and now numbers, upon the best-ascertained authority, nearly 300,000 communicants—principally in the West, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and portions of Virginia.

In belief and practice they are what are termed evangelical. They have no prescribed "confession," upon which to admit members, their sole standard of faith and manners being the Bible—as they interpret it, of course. They are neither wholly Calvinistic nor Arminian, but in these matters profess to be eclectic. The Messiahship and Sonship of Jesus Christ is the central truth of their faith and teachings, his manifestations in the flesh being regarded by them as the centre on which all revelation turns; and hence, they regard the denial of Christ's divinity as anti-Christian. Their plea with their religious neighbours is for the seven unities spoken of by Paul to the Ephesians, "one body, one spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God." In their church edifices and assemblies for worship, they exhibit, upon the whole, more primitive simplicity than many of their elder sisters. They hold "being buried with Christ in baptism" to mean something more than sprinkling, and so baptize (professing believers only) by immersion, and in compliance with the custom of the early church, habitually break bread on the first day of the week. The observance of this Christian ordinance on the Sunday morning, by the congregation above referred to, was beautiful and impressive. They believe that immersion alone constitutes baptism, but they do not exclude unimmersed believers from their communion. They are earnest in enforcing the doctrine of personal holiness, holding that sanctification comes through the study of the Holy Scriptures. Their "baptizing for the remission of sins" has been misunderstood and perverted. While it is true that they attach more significance than some others to the passage in Acts ii. 38, respecting Peter's instructions to the inquiring Jews, that they should "repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," it is not true, as some have supposed, that they regard the mere act of immersion as the only terms upon which the guilty can receive pardon for their sins.

They have, at the present time, some ten colleges in successful operation, besides numerous female academies, and are receiving their full proportion of increase to the churches. Their form of government is congregational.

We have extracted the preceding article from the Press of Philadelphia, Dec. 10, 1859. Although there are several statements to which we take exception, yet, on the whole, we think the sketch has been written by one who is free from prejudice against the principles which the Disciples advocate.—J. W.

OPEN COUNCIL.

NUMBER OF "THE DISCIPLES."

To the Editor of the Millennial Harbinger.

In the letter signed "Thomas Coombs," on page 30 of this month's Harbinger, there occurs this statement:—"Allow me to ask you how it is, that the adherents of A. Campbell, of Bethany, United States, have hitherto remained so inconsiderable a body? Last year I saw a table of the religious statistics of the United States—and this party were down at the very bottom of the list—with a very insignificant amount of numbers."

Now, it looks very unpolite to say to a man, "I question your truthfulness, Sir." And, of course, I should not be so unpolite as to say so to this said "Thomas Coombs, a Baptist minister." It looks queer though, I must confess.

Let us go to that respectable organ of the Baptist denomination, the Freeman newspaper. In the number for October 12th, 1859, is a letter "from our own correspondent" in the United States. In this letter "our own correspondent" quotes "the Baptist Almanack" for 1859, and thus he writes:—"In addition to regular Baptists, there are of them who practice immersion—Anti-Mission Baptists, 58,000; Free-Will Baptists, 56,026; Six-Principle Baptists, 3000; Seventh-Day Baptists, 6577; Church of God (Winebrewnarians), 18,800; Disciples, (Campbellites) 350,000; Tunkers, 8200; Mennonites, 36,280."

In this catalogue, those whom Thos. Coombs calls "so inconsiderable a body," nearly double the number of the seven other denominations here named put together! Who made up, then, I should like to know, the said "Table of Religious Statistics of the United States," in which "the Disciples were put down at the very bottom of the list?" That must be a poor tumbling cause which needs the props of such gross misstatements to hold it up.

Seeing that your correspondent W. S. S. wrote with some little hesitancy when rebutting this statement, perhaps you may think it worth while to give it this denial. I am, dear brother, your's affectionately,

S. J. CHEW.

P.S.—No doubt your friend the "Baptist minister" considered he clenched the argument by calling us "the adherents of A. Campbell, of Bethany." It follows, then, so logically, that we are not the adherents of Jesus of Nazareth.

Birmingham, Jan. 3rd, 1860.

A QUESTION FOR BAPTISTS.

To the Editor of the Millennial Harbinger.

Ought not baptism to be expunged from the list of Christian ordinances? It has caused many a division. It has been a source of bitter contention among many otherwise good and charitable souls. They have disputed as to what is its mode, its proper subject, its proper effect, till the milk of human kindness has curdled in their breast. Now, can we not settle the whole matter by doing away with it altogether? Do not think me mad or indifferent to truth, for making this inquiry. I am neither, but simply thinking of an argument often adduced against those who plead for the baptism of all who would wear the name of Christ, to wit: Paul says he "was not sent to baptize." Now what I want to know is, if this is to apply to us or against us, and prove to us that we ought not to insist on baptizing everybody who would be a Christian, would we not be justified in giving it up altogether; and not only so, but be doing thereby a little world of good, by removing at least one great obstacle to union? If there is any one of the Apostles whom we ought to imitate, it is Paul. He was our apostle, and he thought very highly of his office; and he says, "he was not sent to baptize." Now if, I say, Paul means, as our objectors say he does, that baptism formed no part of Paul's teaching, and that he did not enforce it on his hearers, I say with them, (that is our objection) Why should we? It must be obvious, with this idea, that baptism can only be administered at the request of the individual, and that it would only be the simple, ignorant, or punctilious who would ask Paul to baptize them. He unfortunately had not seemingly the power of refusing the applicant, but he thanks God that he had been called upon to baptize very few. Now would it not be a subject of congratulation to us, if we were rid of it altogether? Methinks I hear all the good Baptist ministers who fellowship with the unbaptized, wishing it were abolished, and those who have been so fortunate as to have baptized but few, using Paul's words, and thanking God they had baptized few. And never surely can they descend with the unfortunate candidate into the bath, without sighing at his narrow-mindedness and obstinacy. Now has not the time arrived to settle the matter for ever? Abolish the ordinance, and cast the responsibility on Paul. One of two positions he stood on, either speaking by the authority of heaven, and (as our objectors say) not only speaking lightly of baptism, but denying it a place among Gospel ordinances, and almost expressing a wish for men not to attend to it. If so, surely we should have his approbation, and God's, whom he invokes, if we were to accomplish its abolition. Or, on the other hand, Paul was speaking, not by inspiration, but under the influence of excitement, and in that state uttering things which his calmer judgment would repudiate. This, of course, would destroy the value of his expressions, and we would not be justified in quoting him. This idea, however, is obviously absurd. Paul was speaking by inspiration, and what I want to know of those who continually quote these words of his to us, is, what possible objection they can have to my proposition of abolishing the ordinance altogether. I would be ashamed to call myself a Baptist—aye, even to suggest it to a living soul, and I think Paul cast a reflection on it. It is no little thing they make him say. It is positively impossible there can be the smallest particle of virtue in it, if Paul means what they say he does. Not all the quotations we can gather up from all parts of the Sacred Word in favor of baptism, can outweigh these few words of Paul. Paul, thou hast cursed that ordinance—thou hast with one breath shorn it of all its hallowed influence. Though Jesus commissioned his Apostles to proclaim it concurrently with faith in him, when he stood the victor over death, the sole arbiter of human affairs, and appointer of human duties. Though He told them to proclaim to all people, that "whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved," thy words, Paul, are later from heaven than those, and thou sayest thou wert not sent to baptize. Thou dost thank God that few now required that of thee which Jesus said should be required of all. O, Paul! thou hast blighted that ordinance—would that thou hadst destroyed it altogether. Though Peter, on Pentecost, placed baptism so near remission of sins, as to make myriads think there was some connection between them. Peter told the thousands of eager, trembling Jews, to repent and be baptized, and three thousand were by his word induced to be so; but thou, Paul, thou hadst a later message not to baptize. O, Paul! why didst thou not speak a little plainer? Thou art our apostle—thy gospel is the gospel of our salvation. O, I would that thou couldst tell us now why thou dost differ from Peter—why thy Master told thee thou wert not to tell us to believe and be baptized, as were Peter and his brethren apostles. It sounds strangely on our ears, Paul; but we believe thou hadst thy mission from Jesus himself, and if thy quoters and interpreters who say baptism was no part of thy gospel preaching are right, we must yield. If thou wert not sent to baptize the penitent sinner, most assuredly we are not. Those who have labored long to prove thou didst not sprinkle, and that thou didst never administer baptism to infants, nor Peter, nor any of the Apostles or first Christians, have labored unprofitably, for thou hast with one fell swoop, with one stroke of thy divinely directed pen, shaken the virtue from the debate. What matter now, infant or adult, sprinkling or immersion, thou Paul hast thanked God thou didst baptize very few—thou wert not sent to baptize. I dare, then, in thy name say, that thou didst pronounce it as useless, and that thou wilt behold with joy from thy throne, a congregation unbaptized, a temple of worship without a font. O, Baptist ministers! why do you build a superstructure on an ordinance which you say Paul has rejected? Why will you glory in naming yourself after that ordinance which you say Paul has rejected? Why will you glory in naming yourself after that ordinance which Paul has said (as you say) he was not sent to administer? As soon should I expect to find some question of Mosaic ritual for ever abolished making a sect in the church, as that of an ordinance pronounced as you say by Paul, no part of his mission. No—be men—abolish it altogether! If Paul thanked God he baptized but few, do you thank God you have baptized none, or that you have now ceased from baptizing? Think you, if you persuade us that Paul's words really tell against us, we would stay at your half-way house, to trim between despisers of ordinances and improvers of them? No! If Paul's exclamation demolish us, it annihilates the ordinance altogether.—There is, there can be no half-way conclusion. I ask you, if Paul was not sent to baptize the penitent sinner, where do you derive your authority to baptize any? Dare you hold Paul firmly before us to destroy our pleadings, and then thrust him aside to get at Jesus and Peter for your own justification? It must be a wonder in heaven, to see a man adopt as his spiritual cognomen, the name of an ordinance pronounced by our great Apostle, no part of his Gospel mission. For consistency's sake give it up. I wonder if any Baptist minister ever addressed God from his pulpit, in hearing of his flock, "I thank thee, O God, that although I have studied long to find the true mode and subject of baptism, that I have baptized very few." Would he like to congratulate his hearers on that fact? I repeat, Dare he take hold of any unbaptized person's hand and say, I thank God I have not baptized you? Do not tell me I am carrying the argument to extremes. Unfortunately, you Baptists do not like us; we go too far for you, and you would rather fraternize with a baby sprinkler than with one who would answer a sinner with Peter's or Jesus' words. But I appeal to every man of common sense, if that so-called Baptist who says, Paul's declaration, that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel, is a condemnation of the conduct of those who require every penitent sinner to be baptized, should not give up his name, go for the abolishing of the ordinance, and thank God he had baptized few or none? These remarks I commend to Baptists, as worthy of their attention. It is certainly time the question with which I begun was mooted; that is, if they are right in thus applying Paul's words. That, however, I believe they are not. I will therefore further solicit their attention next month to an attempt to explain what he can mean. M. K.

London.

SECTARIANISM IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

To the Editor of the Millennial Harbinger.

AN incident has occurred in this colony which will afford interesting matter in its religious history, and is well calculated to effect an useful reflex influence upon the religionists of Great Britain and its dependencies. The popular preacher and writer, Mr. Binney, in his visits to these colonies for the good of his health, made South Australia a home in his sojournings for some time; and, as you may suppose, had his energies largely drawn upon by the religious multitude.

Between Mr. Binney and the Bishop of the Church of England sect, an intimate and apparent candid correspondence was commenced, carried on, and made public, through the instrumentality of the Governor, Sir Richard Macdonell; and the object it had in view was subjected to a rigorous discussion in their ecclesiastical synod, to which the attendance of the general public was invited. I say, apparently candid correspondence, for after the Bishop had gone the length of declaring his earnest desire for what they called Christian union, in the exchange of pulpits among the evangelical denominations, and even at the communion of bread and wine, (though this seemed to be rather confusedly apprehended) and had said he was not sure that in these things he should transgress any important authoritative point, he and his clergy insisted that the ministering of sacred offices should be attended to by themselves, else they would not be rightly administered.

Eventually, after having talked and written a great deal of nonsense about "bridging over the gulf," he and his clergy sat down on their side of the said gulf, and ensconced themselves as snugly as ever behind that celebrated fortification called "the tradition of eighteen centuries." This was impregnable. And so the popular, accommodating, latitudinarian, Mr. Binney, had to suffer defeat, as of yore, at the hands of uncompromising (Church of England) bigotry. Meantime we, as Disciples of Jesus, were compelled to look on, and one while mourn over the unpardonable ignorance betrayed by all parties, of the plain teachings of the Lord and his Apostles, both in precept and example, and the consequent presumptuous dogmatic assertions made by the leaders and the satellites on either side; and another while, to laugh at their various suggestions of "expediency." But as it has ever been, so it is now. The great point that has brought them up "all standing," is that "non-essential" matter, baptism. How strange! A non-essential made so great a point! Baptism, what is it? Is it, or is it not, effectual and essential for salvation? By whom are the "offices" to be "worthily" administered? Can they be worthily received if they are not worthily administered? Is the plain language in the prayer-book to be received in the plain way, or in the non-essential sense? Such is the admirable confusion into which the sects are plunged by the traditionary teachings they have received, and to which they are determined to cling, come what may. Oh, Lord Jesus, how are thy commandments done away by the traditions of men: and how little do they look for thy approbation as the only source of unalloyed satisfaction and delight to their responsible and immortal spirits! Under these circumstances, such thoughts as these have occurred to my mind. These sectarians are fond of drawing upon the Scriptures of the Old Covenant to justify most of their practices, if not the whole of them. Yet, as if by a strange kind of fatality (shall we not say perversity?) in this matter of baptism, they seek to establish a parallelism in the particular acts enjoined under the law and under the gospel, viz. circumcision and baptism, instead of in the causes which ensured the performance of both the one and the other, and rendered them effectual for their several purposes. It is here alone that a parallel exists, and in these it is indeed gloriously conspicuous. Otherwise from the two acts, each one pertaining to a totally different covenant, one of works, and the other of favour, confusion would necessarily result of such a character as would subvert the doctrine of Christ, at the very time that men were taught that they were obeying it. This is the necessary and awful result of the teachings of such men as neither know nor obey the Gospel of the Son of God. The great Apostle of the Gentiles saw at a glance, the destructive consequences that must ensue from an endeavour to incorporate, either in practice or in spirit, the law with the gospel, and denounced all such as preachers of another gospel, which, indeed, was not another; but they would pervert the gospel of Christ. Hence, he says, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach to you any other gospel than that ye have received from us, let him be accursed." But our sectarian preachers having eyes see not, neither will they understand, lest they should be converted and Christ should heal them. But to return to our parallel.

1st. Circumcision was the appointment of God in connection with the Divine promise "concerning the seed," which is Christ, in whom all the families of the earth should be blessed.

2nd. Abraham believed God and his promise.

3rd. He obeyed God's command, that the promise, which was of grace, might be assured to himself, and to all the seed. Such were the causes which issued in the blessed assurance, that he was justified by God, accepted as righteous, and heir of the promises in the Messiah. Just so it is in the New Covenant of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1st, Baptism was the appointment of the Lord Jesus, in connection with the promise that he who believed on him should be saved. 2nd, The sinner believes the Lord Jesus and his promise. 3rd, He obeys the command of the Lord Jesus, that the promise of salvation may be assured to him. Thus the same causes produce the same effects. Henceforth he knows that he is justified, accepted with God as righteous, rejoices in Christ Jesus, and in his heirship to all the promises of God which are given to us in him. Abraham's circumcision, then, was his own act, attended to in the obedience of faith. That obedience to faith God reckoned to him for righteousness. He was therein and thereby justified, viz. acquitted and accepted as righteous. The believer's baptism, too, is his one act in submission to Christ, attended to as the Lord appointed, in the obedience of faith. His obedience of faith the Lord Jesus reckons to him for righteousness. He is therein and thereby justified, saved, accepted of God as righteous.

Here, then, the parallel exists, and it is perfect. Three things are essential, therefore, to give assurance to a sinner that he is saved. First, divine promise and command. Second, belief of that promise. Third, obedience to that command. Justification by faith ever was, is now, and ever will be, the only assurance of salvation to the sinner. But where obedience is wanting there can be no faith. Faith can have no existence without obedience, however much men may flatter themselves that they have faith. "Faith without works is dead, being alone." By obedience the faith of Abraham was perfected; and by obedience is the faith of the believer in Jesus perfected, to himself, to the saints in Christ Jesus, and to God. The issue, then, is, that baptism into the Lord Jesus is the act which justifies the sinner, it being accounted to him for righteousness.

Thus are the eternal principles of God's righteousness maintained in justifying the ungodly who believe in Jesus. From what has been said, it follows, that as the obedience of faith in Abraham's case was his own personal act, so, in every instance, the same obedience of faith must be personally rendered to God, in order to the salvation of any one sinner.

To Abraham only was circumcision the seal of the righteousness which is by faith. The promise which God gave to Abraham, of the coming seed from his own loins, Paul tells us was the gospel proclaimed before by God to Abraham; and it was to Abraham's belief of that promise the Lord Jesus referred, when he told the Jews, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." No descendant of Abraham was ever saved by his circumcision, and no infant can be saved by baptism. Clearly, therefore, the design and use of baptism in the blissful assurance of forgiveness and salvation, and the gift of the Holy Spirit dwelling in our hearts, is utterly lost sight of when it is so applied that it is not the individual's own act, or when applied to any one who is not capable of submitting to it in the "obedience of faith." But such as are capable, and do so give themselves to Christ, are thereby justified, regenerated, sanctified, and heirs of eternal life. Just as Peter puts it when he opened the kingdom of heaven—having believed they reform their lives, and are baptized in the name (by the authority) of the Lord Jesus for the remission of their sins, and receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Thus are they called to be ever after, "holy and without blame before him in love," "observing all things whatsoever he has commanded them." Would to God that sectarians would open their eyes to all the grand simplicity of the gospel: then they would not pervert so sacred and blessed an institution as baptism in themselves, nor allow others to mislead them by their sad and melancholy perversions. May the gracious Head of the church, in his good providence, by the word of his truth, speedily sweep away their refuges of lies, that they may be able no more to "feed themselves of the flock" by "making a gain of them," and "having men's persons in admiration because of advantage."* God grant that the agitation in the minds of his sincere people among the sects, for the union of all believers, which now obtains, may largely increase, until they shall see clearly that so soon as they will render to Jesus the obedience of faith, in being baptized into the name and death of Jesus, and give then and there the solemn pledge to observe the "all things whatsoever he has commanded," the prayer of our adorable Redeemer will be answered, that all his people may be one, "as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us;" and the effect of that oneness in union will be, that the "world will know that thou hast sent me." To talk of union under any other circumstances, is but wretched trifling, drivelling pretence, and miserable deception.

W. H. BURFORD.

Adelaide, Nov. 18, 1859.

P.S. — The church in Grote-street is steadily progressing. Our fraternal communion is much enjoyed. We have had three deaths of beloved sisters, well matured in years and experience, and whose lives were exemplary and useful. Our comfort is great concerning them. Their death was delightfully serene, and in the fulness of hope. These have all occurred, I think, within the last twelve months.

* This will be found to underlie all the proceedings of sectarian teachers, whether they are themselves aware of it or not, or else the testimony of the Apostles must be denied.

A NATION'S STRENGTH.

PSALM XXXIII.—TRANSLATED BY G. R. NOYES.

HAPPY the Nation whose God is Jehovah!
The People whom He hath chosen for His inheritance.

The Lord looketh down from Heaven,
He beholdeth all the children of men;
From His dwelling-place He beholdeth all the inhabitants of earth;

He, that formed the hearts of all,
And observeth all their works.

A King is not saved by the number of his forces,

Nor a hero by the greatness of his strength.
The horse is a vain thing for safety,

Nor can he deliver his master by his great strength.

Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him;

Upon them that trust in His goodness;
To save them from the power of death,
And keep them alive in famine.

The hope of our souls is in the Lord;
He is our help and our shield.

Yea, in Him doth our heart rejoice;
In His holy name we have confidence.

May Thy goodness be upon us, O Lord,
According as we trust in Thee!

REVIEWS, NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CORRESPONDENCE, &amp;c.

A REVIEW OF MR. SPURGEON'S DISCOURSES : or, a new and complete refutation of Calvinism, from Reason, Analogy, and Scripture : wherein is proved from internal and historical evidence, that the chief design of the Epistle to the Romans was to remove the Jewish error of Particular Election. By REV. J. HUGHES, B.A. Thomas Hatchard, London.

WELL written—too high in price, and too pretentious in title. Fifty pages of ordinary argument, at one shilling, scarcely suits this printing generation. Then the purchaser secures disappointment—having parted with his money to obtain “a new and complete refutation,” he secures an essay, which contains but little, if anything, not contained in most anti-Calvinistic volumes. As to Mr. Spurgeon's discourses—said to be reviewed—only a few brief references find place in its pages. A second edition, with a fairer title page, published at twopence, would be a useful tract.

The ground hastily gone over, is indicated by the author's concluding remarks—

“We have shown that the Eternal Being is infinitely and essentially good—that He can have no possible motive to be otherwise—that He has so formed all mankind as to love and admire goodness and benevolence wherever they are discernible, and supremely his own—that He has created all intelligent creatures for the express purpose of making them partakers of his goodness, and to imitate the same in their conduct to each other—that to co-operate with Him to promote the welfare and happiness of the universe is the end of their being—the only way in which, by their acts, they can render Him service, and promote His glory, and reflect back His image. He has, moreover, so formed them that they cannot but hate, and that with the entire approval of their consciences, every sign of malevolence, and even insensibility to misery and suffering—by consequence that He has formed them so as to hate Himself, in the same manner, had He shown any disposition wantonly to torment any of them. But as men, with their limited faculties, cannot but perceive that goodness, benevolence, and mercy are qualities infinitely more glorious to Himself, as well as infinitely more beneficial in their tendencies; and as He cannot but perceive all this with a distinctness infinitely more clear than any of His creatures—these are the attributes which he delights to exhibit—by these only is He actuated in all His transactions. His sole design, therefore, which He had in view, in planning and executing this wondrous scheme of redemption, was the salvation of every human being; and they detract from His glory, bring dishonour upon His name, that say to the contrary.

“We have further shown that His dealings towards us, relative to the concerns of religion, are analogous and of a piece with His dealings towards us, relative to the concerns of this life; that although He has made, as it were, all things ready to our hand; yet that He has left it to the puny efforts of men to apply that benefit in every case; that industry, and care, and diligence are required, are even necessary to our existence in the present world; and, therefore, that this is a very strong presumptive proof that the same exertion of our active powers is necessary to secure the interests of the future world; that as idleness, and neglect, and imprudence, lead to disappointment and ruin here, the same are the cause of disappointment and ruin hereafter. And we have seen, further, that, much as depends upon men as individuals, still more depends upon them as members of society: that not only all the improvements of modern times, in the means of providing for our wants—of communicating our thoughts—of travelling from place to place with wonderful rapidity—the splendid cities and palaces which adorn the earth we live in—in fine, all the arts, useful and ornamental, which mark us off from a state of barbarism, and which contribute so much to our convenience and comfort, but also the elevation and development of our nature, in an intellectual point of view, are made to depend on our own exertions; so that, we infer, if men had banded together centuries ago—had they spent half the means, the energy, and skill, in extending the knowledge and happiness of religion, which they have done in the destruction of human life and the human means of enjoyment, in all probability all the millions of this earth's population had learned the way of salvation, long before any now living had been born; and millions more had been in heaven at this hour, raising high the praises of redeeming grace: and that when we add to all this, that to promote all that we have advanced is the only conceivable end of human existence, our views acquire a certainty, a strength of evidence, of which few moral propositions are capable; and that they who assert that it is not the Divine purpose that it should be so—that all men everywhere should repent and believe the Gospel—charge the Creator with the faults of His creatures, and bring undeserved dishonor on His glorious name.

"Our views, also, in all these respects, have been amply supported by the declarations of Scripture, which uniformly represent the Divine Being "as good and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and mercy;" that they inform us, moreover, that He so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; that the Son died for all—for every man; that in His eyes there is no distinction; that His love overleaps all the minor differences of country, and climate, and color; and that he offers himself alike to the acceptance of every creature under heaven. We have seen that one great design of the Gospel is to discourage the narrow tendency of our nature, and to teach us to regard one another as brethren, redeemed by the same blood, and heirs of the same promises; and that those very parts of our Lord's discourses, and of the writings of St. Paul, usually adduced in support of the tenets to which we have objected, teach the very opposite, and that they were intended expressly as a reproof to the narrow and intolerant spirit which they are calculated to engender.

"From all that has been advanced, we may, therefore, infallibly infer, that our Saviour Jesus Christ has died for all—that He knows no distinction, observes no partiality in the distribution of His gifts. All men are invited—all are welcome to come to Him. The concluding words—the riding clause, if we may so speak, to the agreement between heaven and earth, are a free and full invitation: as if He was unable to conclude the Great Volume of Inspiration without another hearty invitation: 'The Father and the Son say, Come—the Spirit and the Bride, the church militant on earth and the church triumphant in heaven, say, Come. And let him that heareth, say, Come; and let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.' Heaven and earth unite to invite men to come. And Jesus, the true and faithful witness, adds the awful threat, that 'if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part from the book of life.' And the winding up of the whole drama of our moral history will be in these significant words, 'Come, ye blessed children of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world.' And on the other hand, 'Depart, ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared—not for you, not for men, but 'for the devil and his angels.' whence also we may infer that the inheritance only was prepared for mankind, had they not forfeited it; and they who have done so shall wail and lament, 'The summer is past, the harvest is ended, and we are not saved.' How, or in what sense, can life be a summer or harvest to those who have not an interest in the benefits of the Redeemer's passion? To such, if there were any, life would be only a cheerless winter of fear and despair from the cradle to the grave. None, however, need to be alarmed—none discouraged. All are included, are alike included, in the blessings of redemption. Sinner, whoever you are, be consoled. In our Father's house there is room enough and to spare for all.

"THANKS, THEN, BE UNTO GOD FOR HIS UNSPEAKABLE GIFT."

REASONS FOR NOT CO-OPERATING IN THE ALLEGED SUNDERLAND REVIVAL, in an Address to his Congregation, by A. A. REES. Sunderland: Hill, High-street.

THAT which is here designated, "the alleged Sunderland Revival," is peculiar, inasmuch as a lady has no small share in the work. Mrs. Palmer and her husband, Dr. Palmer, from the United States, find certain Wesleyan chapels open to them—they both preach, and bring many sinners to pray and be prayed for. Mr. Rees objects both to the agents themselves, and the manner in which they work. He says—"I hold that a good woman is the best thing in the world—but then she must be in her right place. Even angels must not preach—see Acts x.—nor must women. Privacy is their proper sphere, and when engaged in works of charity, nothing becomes them more than the visitation of the sick." In support of this conclusion Mr. Rees quotes Lord Lytleton, Milton, Shakspere, Cowper, Wesley, Burns, and Paul. But after all, we doubt whether any word of Scripture can be produced which forbids Christian women to preach the Gospel. When saints come together as a church, silence is enjoined upon the women. So let it be. To carry the prohibition further, is to act without authority. Mr.

Rees' second reason for "standing aloof" is, that the modus operandi is illegitimate. He says—

"By all accounts that I have heard, and those from the most reliable sources, the 'penitent form,' or, as it is unscripturally called, 'the altar of prayer,' is almost a sine qua non of 'getting the blessing.' To this 'mercy-seat' all are invited who desire salvation, and not only invited, but, if possible, persuaded, by frequent visitations in the pews; and, to my knowledge, several, in compliance not with their judgment, but their feelings, have yielded to these entreaties. In truth, I should not like to publish all I know about some who have gone to the communion rail, and about the means used to bring them there. But the necessary inference is, that salvation is not so likely to be found in the pew as on the form—that the truth spoken and heard in one place, is not so likely to impart peace, as when spoken and heard in another, and that there is a sort of spiritual charm attached to the favored spot.

"This I hold to be a pernicious delusion, directly calculated to deceive precious souls. That I have not misrepresented the operations will appear by the following extract from Mrs. P.'s own letter to the Wynd Journal :—

"A Christian brother, whom I observed perhaps the first time about thirty days ago, kneeling at the altar of prayer, at one of the afternoon meetings, seeking the baptism of power, gave evidence that he had obtained the grace by the manner in which the Spirit spoke through him, in inducing others to yield to the claims of Christ. With no extraordinary influence of any sort—other than the gift of power with which Jesus would have all his disciples endued—he went out among the people, and with the holy discernment and singleness of purpose which this endowment of power ever gives, he continued from day to day bringing forward to the penitent form one after another. One evening, as I was observing his unobtrusive yet mighty influence, seemingly unmarked by other than the unseen angel with the ink-horn—and he had now come forward perhaps the sixth or seventh time that evening, leading those that he had ferreted out to the altar of prayer—I could not but speak to him of the divine record which was being kept of those who sigh and cry for the peace of Jerusalem. Modestly, yet joyously, he exclaimed, This is the fiftieth one the Lord has enabled me to bring! Think of a quiet unassuming man, with no extraordinary capabilities, either physical, intellectual, or social, being instrumental, in the hand of God, in leading fifty, in a few days, to the foot of the cross!" (?)

"Again, the test of the love of Jesus is not a reasonable answer to a reasonable question, but a show of hands, which is no test at all. What shadow of a proof is there that any one loves Jesus, simply because he holds up his hands? Nor is this test only untrue—it tempts to hypocrisy, for who would like to keep down his hands, and thereby publicly proclaim that he did not love Jesus? None would do so but those (and they are not many) who have sense enough to decline this unscriptural criterion. The same may be said of the test of anxiety—it is a show of hands, or an advancement to the rail—which is no test at all. It would be just as unwarrantable—but not more so—if I were to say to you, All ye that love Jesus stand up? Who would not stand up? and who would be the better for the posture? Nay, rather, I believe that the worst of you would stand up, and the best sit still as you ought to do.

"That this, too, is no misrepresentation, will appear by the following extract from a letter of the same lady to the same journal :—

"The work here bids fair to exceed anything we remember to have witnessed, either in America or Europe. (!) Last night the large chapel in Sans-street was densely crowded, and many, I presume, went away for want of room; but the best of all is, God was with us in His wonder-working power. The number of the convicted I would scarcely dare to estimate. The Rev. Mr. Rawlings, one of the able staff of Wesleyan ministers here, gives it as his opinion, that the number could not have been less than five hundred. The penitent-form, and every place available for the accommodation of seekers, was filled till we could invite no more forward. Dr. Palmer then, standing on a seat in the midst of the dense crowd, announced, We are informed that the people are weeping all over the house, and that there are hundreds of awakened sinners here. In view of the fact, we cannot invite you forward for want of room; we desire to know where you are, in order that we may unite our supplications on your behalf. (!) The Saviour of sinners is willing to save you wherever you may be, (why, then, invite them forward?) and let all those who desire to seek the Lord, raise the right hand. Quickly multitudes, in every part of the house, threw up their right hand. Probably not less than two or three hundred of these raising their right hand, were among those standing in the gallery. I will not attempt to describe the effect of this acknowledgement of convicting power, as Dr. Palmer requested that every one desiring prayers, would continue to keep their hands upraised, until heaven's recording angel might write the name in the book of God's remembrance. (1) Under such circumstances, we cannot say how many were blessed with pardoning mercy. Over a hundred names have been recorded, of those who have presented themselves as subjects of prayer."

"Again—those who come to the rail are led to suppose that they must make quick work of it, or else go away unsaved, as there are many more waiting for the 'movement of the waters,' who cannot get healed where they are, but must take their turn at the 'mercy seat.' The result is, that these professed penitents are on an unhealthy qui vive for any sudden emotion which feels like 'the blessing'; they are therefore peculiarly accessible to the operations of Satan in the guise of an angel of light—they are also tempted to hypocrisy, for if No. 1 avows that he has 'got the blessing,' (an unmeaning phrase by the way, for it leaves in doubt what blessing is meant) No. 2 will not like to go empty away, so he is naturally prompted to make the same avowal—the same may be said of No. 3 and the rest. Then comes another batch, and another, and another, who all go through the same process, the names are taken down, and the grand results are published to the world. Now all this I believe is both unscriptural and dangerous, and therefore I cannot join in it.

"I say nothing of the confusion and strife of tongues in these meetings—the unmeaning loud responses and doxologies, not suppressed, but encouraged by the teachers, who, on one occasion, told the people that there was 'more noise in heaven than amongst them.' I speak not of the whole scenes so opposed to Paul's inspired direction, 'Let all things be done decently and in order,' and so alien from the mind of God, 'who is the author of peace and not of confusion, as in all the churches of the saints'—but I do feel that my position as a minister of nineteen years standing in this town, demands some deliverance from me on the general movement: and now you have it—God is my witness—not in ridicule, but in regret—not in sarcasm, but in sorrow—not in anger, but in gravity and in grief: nor can I believe that the best ministers and members of this sect, throughout the country, approve of what is being done."

Comment is uncalled for—we know, and most of our readers know, that Dr. Palmer and his zealous wife have not arranged their plans by New Testament models.

QUO WARRANTO? Third series.
Published by DAVID KING, Birmingham.

THIS little periodical is to visit its readers on the 15th of each month, and is offered as a guide to those who are in Babeldom, a helper on their journey to Jerusalem. That it may be lent, given, or sold with as much ease as can be, its price is the lowest possible—ONE HALFPENNY: twelve copies, post free, 6d.

The Christian armoury is the Word of God, contained in the writings of the Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists. There are, however, many fallacies concocted by supporters of false systems, in regard to which the advanced may help less experienced brethren—and there is much information which may, with great advantage, be given to those who are yet in bondage. The Quo Warranto? promises to adapt itself to this work and want. No. 1 contains "Sectarianism," showing how it came, what it is and does, and how it must be destroyed—"Discussion on Baptism," the first of a series, in which will appear refutations of common and uncommon arguments in favor of infant baptism, pouring, and sprinkling, &c.—"Saying, but not Doing," under which confessions of truth are produced, and more promised—"Christ's Clergy," "Joe Rag's Difficulties," and "Our Saviour." The last is an appeal to those who speak of Jesus as their Redeemer, and make not the salvation he offers their own. We have thus stated what the Quo Warranto? proposes, and what the first number contains. The reader had better obtain the first issue, and judge for himself, for, being under the influence of relation, we might not give, were we to attempt it, an impartial judgment.

PLYMOUTH BRETHRENISM.

NO. II.

LAST month I made allusion to a letter to Plymouth Brethren, which appeared in the Harbinger for August, 1859, and was reprinted in the Quo Warranto? and also in the Birmingham Bible Advocate. That letter refutes the Plymouth Brethren notion, that the Christian dispensation must end in failure. In Birmingham there are two gatherings of these brethren, but the one party are heretics in the view of the other. From the leader of one of these parties a letter is to hand, which, omitting only introductory remarks not affecting the question, and a few personalities of no use to the reader, and of no credit to their writer—shall now be given.

"1. It is the duty of every Christian to come out from evil, 'to gather to the Lord.' Your attempt, therefore, to return to primitive ways, is quite laudable, as far as it is scriptural; and sorry should I be to put a stone in your path in restoring the ancient order of things, as far as possible—altogether if you can. I say this because you seem to labor under the idea, that the persons addressed do not wish for a return to scriptural ground. Perhaps there is not a community among Christians where the Bible is more read, its truths set forth, its precepts inculcated, or its influence on the character more manifest, in the private life, the social circle, the market stall, or the public walk, than among some of those known as Plymouth Brethren. The main point of your attack is, 'The ruin of the dispensation, and that it cannot be restored.' In order to disprove this, you make the astonishing assertion, that the last dispensation did not end in failure! I think that in all my reading, and in all my hearing, whether in the Bible or out of it, you are the first that ever suggested to my mind, that the Jewish dispensation was not a failure, and that it 'accomplished the purpose for which it was given.

"2. With what eyes do you read the Scriptures? Do you not see, that so soon as Israel took the responsibilities of their position on themselves, that 'ere their foot had stirred from where they said, 'All that the Lord hath spoken will we do,' they made a golden calf, and worshipped it? Was not that failure? And Moses had to put the Lord back on His promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, or He would have destroyed them there and then. Does not Moses foretell their failure in Deut. 28 and also 32, with a precision that has astonished historians by its minuteness? God did not destroy them, it is true; He sent them Prophets to call them back to the Lord and to His paths. Did they return? The Lord rose early and sent prophets, the very witnesses that the dispensation was going down; but they mocked, they slew the prophets, despised God's words, until the wrath of the Lord rose against them, and there was no remedy (2 Chron. xxxvi. 16.) Can you read these words, and say that this dispensation did not end in failure, that it accomplished the end for which it was given? David King, with your knowledge of Scripture, you astonish me.

"3. Perhaps you will say, 'They were restored again from Babylon, and the dispensation accomplished its purpose.' They were restored, a few thousands of them; but was the dispensation restored? Did the shekinah of glory overshadow the mercy seat? Did the Ūrim and Thummin give their responses? Did Israel, as in the days of Solomon, sit without fear under the vine and fig-tree? Above all, was their heart right with God? Let Nehemiah (ix. 36, 37) tell their temporal condition, and the crucifixion of the Son of God answer to the spiritual? And last, not least, their rejection of the Spirit in Stephen, and persecution of the saints of God, filled up the measure of their iniquity, till wrath came upon them to the uttermost (1 Thes. ii. 15)—and they are scattered in every land to-day, a monument of God's righteous severity upon their sin (Rom. xi. 22)—a reproach, a hissing, and a by-word, through whom the very name of God is blasphemed. And yet you say it did not end in failure!

"4. Such being the case with the last past, was any former dispensation better? Does the Garden of Eden answer its purpose, or does it end in judgment? Was the flood of Noah a witness of the close of a dispensation that did not end in failure? Did God restore man to the Garden? Was no new order of things introduced when the world that then was perished? Has Israel been restored to their land in blessing, Ezekiel's temple built, and is its name, 'The Lord is there?' If these past scenes were 'types of us,' as you repeatedly tell us, where is the hope that 'the present dispensation will not end in failure, but in having answered the purpose for which it was given?' That it has failed, I quote three witnesses to whom you will listen.

"5. Yourself. You say the flesh has been introduced into the church, priestly assumption has taken the place of liberty of ministry, a one man pastorate; the weekly breaking of the bread substituted by a quarterly sacrament; pew letting and begging sermons have cast out the weekly offering; divers methods of introducing believers into the church, and you might have said unbelievers too; and you might have gone farther in your account of the doings of the Apostles, and said, 'If ordinances have been put on a par with faith, as conditions of salvation—if the filthy rags of man's righteousness have been hung over his shoulders, instead of the spotless, seamless robe of Christ's righteousness—if man's obedience has been put as the ground of his peace with God, and so on—do we not want a change, and a return to primitive teaching, when a man was 'justified by His blood,' and 'not by works of righteousness that we have done,' 'otherwise grace was no more grace?' But all this proves the failure, the universal failure, of the dispensation of the church.

"6. Mr. Milner. So thoroughly does he see the ruin of the church, that from the time of her fall till now, he does not believe one proper effort has been made to restore her. Where, then, dear Mr. King, is that company of disciples, that not for one day has the world been without, attending in all things to the government instituted by the Apostles? And echo answers, Where? And all history answers, Where? And Mr. King's attempt to restore answers, Where? Why attempt to restore that which has never failed? The Scripture itself tells us there will be an apostasy—a falling away—that it was begun in the Apostles' days, and that 'evil men and seducers should wax worse and worse.' A good minister of Jesus Christ is not one who tells his hearers that the dispensation is not to end in failure, but one who puts them in mind, that the express testimony of the Spirit is, that in the latter days there is to be an apostasy from the faith (1 Tim. iv. 1-6.) Does not every epistle only tell of departure and judgment? Acts xx. 29, 20, Jude, and 2 Peter 2, tell also of the sad state of things in their day. James details the character of things when he wrote (v. 1-8); and the beloved disciple is not silent on the evil of the last days, that were to be known by many antichrists going forth (1 John ii. 18.) Every exhortation, every warning, every encouragement to the saint of God, are founded on the fact that all is failure around, and he must save himself from it. How sadly deceived must those persons be, who are daily bolstered up with the teaching, that there is no failure, that the dispensation is answering the end for which it was given, and a renovated earth, by man's energies, will soon proclaim his prowess! What pride it must foster! What cleanness in one's own eyes it must bring! The hope of the Lord's coming, that great hope of the church, must be put far away, to make room for the restoration proposed, and already boasted in.

"7. The Scripture says not, 'if thou wilt not return,' but 'if thou continue not in His goodness, thou shalt be cut off.' Has the church continued in His goodness? Mr. King, Mr. Milner, all Scripture, and all history say, No. Otherwise thou shalt be cut off. It is blessedly true, God has a remnant according to the election of grace, just as in Israel there was a remnant; but neither of these constitute the ostensible body of the dispensation. Thus Israel were not only 'types of us' as to their sin, but as to their cutting off, just as the vine of the earth will be trodden in the winepress of God's wrath. And this agrees with God's operations in nature. If a tree is cut down, and there is vitality in the root, innumerable shoots may spring from it, but neither of them reaches the size nor strength of the parent stem. If a branch is lopped off, the weeping resin may run over the sore, the protecting bark may hide it, but it remains a cut in the heart, never to be repaired. So, in the human body, an amputated limb, or an organic elision, is never restored. Nature may heal the wound where the limb was taken from, she may struggle on a few years with half or quarter of the wasted lung, but there stands the witness that her empire has been invaded, and never till corruption has put on incorruption, will the loss be restored. The true time of restoration, when Eden, Israel, the world, and the body will be restored, is when the Redeemer will come to Zion, and the church appear in glory.

"8. As to the persons to be received to communion, it is clear they were received because they were Christians. Their immersion followed as a privilege of faith, (Acts viii. 37 and x. 47) but it was their life, not their baptism, that gave them the title to fellowship. Though weak in the faith, (Rom. xiv. 1) deficient in knowledge, (1 Cor. viii. 7) and in many things walking as men, yet as having life they were received; just as again in Nature a child may be born with deficiencies, and even deformities, but if there is life the fond mother suckles and nurses it, in the hope that the child may grow up to usefulness and enjoyment. Is the boy, because of some bodily defect, to be cut off from the family, or even separated from the father's table, when the life's blood flows in his veins, and the spirit of life breathes through his nostrils, and the family interests lie close to his heart? I trow not. And would not the father reason that you did not belong to the family, that a brother's blood did not warm your heart, if you proposed that such a one, because a part of the foot was not developed, or two fingers had grown into one, or the vision was somewhat obscured, or the hearing was not so quick, that such a one should be turned out of the house? Go ye, and learn what this meaneth, 'ere you condemn the guilty. Ever your's, to serve you,

P. G. ANDERSON."

The reader is requested to read the letter in the August Harbinger, and then to consider the following brief notice of Mr. Anderson's argument.

1. Mr. A. admits that our efforts to restore primitive Christianity are "quite laudable," and says that he would not put a stone in our path, so as to obstruct the restoration of the ancient order of things. But what are the facts? Why, that he both writes and acts for the purpose of obstructing this restoration. He does not deny that baptized persons only were received into fellowship in primitive times—he receives the unbaptized now, and to defend himself, says the dispensation is in ruin—the former economy ended in failure—God did not please its restoration, neither does he call us to restore—things must get worse and worse—and, judging from his practice, the only acceptable thing is will-worship. Under the guidance of the Apostles the first churches did break the loaf every first-day, and only baptized persons were admitted to that feast—now we are to regard the first item because we please, and for the same reason pay no respect to the other. But, says Mr. A. “You seem to labor under the idea that the persons addressed do not wish to return to Scripture ground”—and then he tells us of the influence of the truth on their character, as manifested in private life. But what has that to do with the matter in hand more than the undeniable piety of certain Roman Catholics has to do with proving their position a correct one? I know the parties addressed do not desire to return to primitive practice. Take the one thing just named—did they desire to return they could do so—they admit the practice and they won’t adopt it—they see what the Apostles did, and they prefer to be led by their own vain reasonings.

2. Mr. A. is surprised that I should say, “the last dispensation did not end in failure and punishment.” It ended in punishment, but not in failure. The error of Plymouth Brethrenism is this—It mistakes the shortcomings and apostacy of a people for the failure of the economy under which they lived. The majority of the people have failed under each dispensation—neither the present nor the past, nor any former economy has failed, nor could fail.

Mr. A. puts it—“Ere their feet had stirred from where they said, ‘all that the Lord has spoken will we do,’ they made a golden calf and worshipped it! Was not that failure?” Certainly it was! But of what? Of the dispensation? Nay, verily, but of the people only. Again—“Does not Moses foretell their failure in Deu. xxviii. 32, with precision,” &c.? Moses says not one word about the failure of the dispensation—not one word about the impossibility or impropriety of the people returning to the ordinances of the Lord, in the event of their unhappy apostacy. He foretells what shall come upon the people, if they fail. What a strange question Mr. A. puts in view of his theory—“Did not the Lord send them prophets to call them back to his paths?” Of course he did—and that fact is proof that their failure was not the failure of the dispensation—the Lord called them back to what they had departed from, just as he is calling Mr. A. back to what has been departed from under this dispensation, but they would not return, and, unhappily, they are types of Mr. A. and his companions.

3. But, says the latter—“Perhaps you will say they were restored again from Babylon.” Of course I do, and so does Mr. A. for he adds, “they were restored, a few thousands of them.” Had it been hundreds only, that would have sufficed—God’s dispensation did not depend upon thousands. Mr. Anderson says, “these were restored.” I wish the Plymouth Brethren were. But then he adds, “Was the dispensation restored?” Certainly it was not! How could that be restored which had not failed—which could not be taken out of the way until after “It is finished,” had been uttered from the cross? No, no! The economy of which Moses was the mediator, rested on something more sure than the faithfulness of man, the existence of a house of stone, and the presence of the Shekinah. They were restored—the economy was not, for the reason stated—it had not been changed or withdrawn. God was faithful, another house was built, and in due time the true Shekinah came to it, filled it with the glory of the Lord, owned it as his Father’s house, even though men had made it a den of thieves. They failed again, and rejected him, though he would have restored them—he gave the temple up to them—“your house is left unto you desolate.” Even then the dispensation was not ended, and when its last day came, it terminated not in failure—it had remained its time, and answered its purposes, and among those purposes were the manifestations of the people’s unfaithfulness, and the bringing in of a better hope. To the last the people might have returned, but they would not, and they remain a monument, not of God's failure, but of their own—not of the failure of the dispensation, but of its fully answering the purposes for which it was given.

4. But it is further asked—"Did the Garden of Eden answer its purpose, or did it end in punishment?" Both! Why conclude that that which ends in man's punishment, cannot have answered God's purpose? The Garden of Eden answered its purpose as completely as Gethsemane answered its. No, that first dispensation, if so we may speak of it, did not end in failure, though man completely failed under it. As to the flood terminating a dispensation in failure, I do not know that a dispensation was then terminated, but if so, then only man's failure comes in view, and not that of the economy under which he lived. He departed from God's paths, and for 120 years God was calling him back, but he would not. As it was in the beginning, so it is now.

5. But witnesses are quoted to prove the failure of the Christian dispensation. 1, Myself. Yes, I have shown that Christians, like the Jews, have apostatized—have failed. I have pleaded for restoration, and it is argued, that unless the dispensation had failed I could not demand its restoration. But the former mistake is repeated here. I urge not the restoration of the dispensation—once gone, it will be gone for ever—but I pray for such restoration of failing professors as the prophets of old prayed for, and as God called them to. To plead that Mr. A. and others should return to what they or their fathers have forsaken, is not pleading for re-instituting of the economy of Christ.

6. "Mr. Milner thoroughly sees the ruin of the church," &c. He sees nothing of the sort, in the sense in which the writer sees it. He may see that Protestant Reformations have not fully and properly embraced the Scriptures as their rule of faith and practice. It may still be true that every generation has had its few who have stood by the truth—the opposite is not in proof, and if it were, my position is not touched thereby. If it could be shown that, at some period since the days of the Apostles, every living soul had apostatized, then, not the failure of the dispensation, but only man's failure would be established. We rejoice in this, that where the Bible is to direct, faith in Christ and love of God to move to obedience, then man can return to God and to his abandoned paths. So will it be till this dispensation ends in reward and punishment. But the end is not yet.

Mr. A. says, "How sadly deceived must those persons be, who are daily bolstered up with the teaching that there is no failure." There is no such teaching. Failure is admitted, but it is man's, not God's—not the dispensation, but man under it.

7. The Scripture says not, "If thou wilt not return, but if thou continue not in his goodness, thou shalt be cut off"—"Has the church continued in his goodness?" &c. "No." What does Mr. A. mean? Paul wrote that of the Gentiles, as a people. Are they cut off? Has their day of grace ended? Has the blindness of Israel, which was to continue till the fulness of the Gentiles had come in, departed? If so, then has Mr. A. no hope—and what does he preach to Gentiles? And if he has hope, and may still preach to Gentiles, why quote this text? Because there is nothing which can be cited to serve his purpose.

8. The remarks on receiving the unbaptized shall be noticed in the next article, "Open Communion."

As base coin is the more injurious in proportion as it is made to look like genuine coin, that form of apostasy is most to be watched which is made to look most like the economy of God. Plymouth Brethrenism, and some other modern isms, will (D.V.) have further attention in the Harbinger.

D. KING

OPEN COMMUNION.

SOME months back we advertized for one good reason for open communion. H. G. says—

"Taking the Word of God for my guide I find I can be in Christian fellowship with the godly, sincere, believer, although not immersed in water. Believers in Christ may differ in opinion on particular ordinances, some being strong in the faith and others weak. Rom. xiv. teaches me to receive the weak, for God has received them; also Rom. xv. 'Receive ye one another.' Christ also received us, to the glory of God, not judging one another; but judge the rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.' For the kingdom of God is not meat, (or drink, or the conforming to a particular practice or custom;) but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men. Let us therefore follow after the things where-with one may edify another, and not to doubtful disputations. For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Christ, that our faith may not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. For we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ."

Very remarkable! What wonderful things a man may see, when he looks for excuses on behalf of what he likes to do! Paul wrote to a church composed entirely of baptized believers, when they were disagreeing somewhat about meats and drinks, and called upon them to receive each other without regard to the weakness or strength of their faith on such matters. H. G. learns therefore from that unbaptized persons are to be received. Again, Paul in this part of his Epistles, alludes exclusively to eating, drinking, and observing of days, left open to each individual, and in all that he alludes to, not one ordinance or command is included. H. G. understands that because in those things concerning which God has commanded nothing, we may do or not do, the same holds good when God has commanded. What right has any one to apply to Christ's ordinances what applied only to things concerning which no divine appointment existed? What could induce any one so to do, but the desire to excuse his own practice? What could have induced the writer of the above extract to conclude it with the words, "for we are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ" — thus cutting in half a text—when he knew that Paul added, "for as many as have been baptized into him have put on him" (Gal. iii. 26-27)? What—but the wish to excuse his leaning to a course more agreeable to himself than the apostolic way? Let us hear him further:

"I distinguish between the practice of baptism and the doctrine—the doctrine being that which by the outward sign is presented to us, viz. the death of Christ, my death with Christ; also his resurrection from the dead, and mine with him to newness of life. And to affirm that a believer in Christ cannot possess the thing signified by baptism without conforming to the ordinance, is to me without authority—an ordinance being valuable only so far as we individually realize the doctrine taught or practiced unto us thereby."

Who told H. G. that baptism is only the sign of things signified? No inspired teacher. It is never called a sign—it is more than any mere sign ever was or ever can be. But if it were only a sign, would that furnish permission to dispense with it? Circumcision was a sign. Did Moses therefore say, receive ye one another? He said, the soul that is not circumcised shall be cut off from the people. This cry, then, is of no use, because baptism is not a mere sign, and if it were, the Lord has appointed it, and therefore it would be binding. H. G. further says—

"I also disapprove of baptizing for the remission of past sins. The Word of God declares, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved; and if saved by faith then, not of works, but of grace, there is but one Mediator between God and man, even Christ Jesus."

Baptism is not a work. The believer receives therein the salvation promised to faith—in baptism he does nothing. H. G. disapproves of baptism for the remission of sin. Of course he does, because baptizing for that scriptural purpose proves his notion of a mere sign unscriptural. Look at it in this form—

PETER SAID—"Repent and be baptized every one of you, for the remission of sins."

H. G.—Does not believe in "Baptizing for the remission of sins."

JESUS SAID—"This is my blood, shed for many, for the remission of sins."

INFIDELS — Do not believe that Christ's blood was shed for the remission of sins."

In what are H. G. and Infidels alike? They both deny the very words of the Holy Spirit.

Another reason is—

"Neither do I find any penalty specified in Scripture for living in neglect of the ordinance of baptism, which, like the Lord's supper, is a memorial ordinance, with this difference, one to be attended to by the individual believing, seeing it a duty, the other to be observed by the members of a church assembled for public worship."

This rests upon the supposition that every command may be disregarded, for the violation of which punishment is not threatened. Not only baptism, but the Lord's supper and prayer may then be dispensed with, and yet such prayerless souls should be received. But our friend forgets that God threatens by examples. Let him ponder this saying—"The Scribes and Pharisees rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized of John."

Here we shall leave H. G. and turn to Mr. Anderson, who has said something to this question in his letter inserted in the foregoing article, upon Plymouth-brethrenism. He says—"As to persons to be received to communion, it is clear they were received because they were Christians." Of course it is. We are quite agreed here: proceed—"Their immersion followed as a privilege of faith." Quite true. What next? "But it was their life, not their immersion, that gave them the title to fellowship." This is neither clear nor true. Say, if you please, life and baptism, and the truth will be expressed. Life qualified for the name of Christ—baptism imparted it. Those only who were baptized into the name, were acknowledged as bearing it. And so long as it can be shewn that baptism is INTO Christ and INTO the name, Mr. A. must be wrong.

Rom. xiv. 1 is also quoted by Mr. A. Let him read the above remarks on H. G. and learn that the persons there addressed by Paul were baptized, and the things alluded to not Christian ordinances. The same is true of 1 Cor. viii. 7. Mr. A. further argues, that "just as in nature a child may be born with deficiencies, and even deformities, yet the mother suckles it in the hope that it may grow up to usefulness," &c. Yes, but then it is born into this world, but here Mr. A. quietly assumes the question in dispute. We say, baptism completes the birth into Christ's kingdom. Again, says Mr. A. "Is the boy, because of some bodily defect, to be cast out from the family?" Perhaps not, but this illustration does not meet the case. We must speak of adopted boys—of a state of mind which qualifies for adoption, and of an appointed ordinance by which the adoption is consummated. This is the apostolic view; and the moment you put it thus, Mr. A.'s plea becomes absurd. His question would then be—Is the boy to be cast out of the family, because his adoption into it had not taken place? It will be seen that Mr. A. throughout assumes the point in dispute, and then rests his argument upon his own assumption.

Give us one command for receiving the unbaptized, or one example of it in apostolic times, or give up the practice, and be guided by the Word of the Lord.
D. K.

FOREIGN PROGRESS.

THE end is not yet, but there are rumblings which indicate coming convulsions. The Catholic (Roman) party are up, talking loudly of confidence in God, and indicating the greatest possible fear. The Freeman's Journal has a leading article based upon a letter written from Rome, by a high authority. That a boasting Papist journal could put forth such admissions as the following, without having good reasons for fear, cannot be conceived—

"Pope Pius has reason to withdraw his reliance on imperial good faith; he has not done so without pain and grief. He had confided, until the Pro-Regency had satisfied him that the worst might be feared. 'They,' that is the Pontifical Councils, 'share in common with his holiness, the gravest apprehensions. It is not improbable, from the gravity of the occasion, that the people of Ireland will soon be called upon, at the special request of the Holy Father, to offer up prayers simultaneously in all their churches, for his speedy release from tribulation and suffering. Only on very rare occasions, and in the most critical circumstances, is such a national solemnity resorted to.'"

It has been proposed in the Vatican, to hold a General Ecclesiastical Council in 1860, with a view to taking into consideration the condition of the Roman Catholic world, and to ascertain what means should be employed to maintain its influence.

Coming changes, which greatly affect the Pope, may not immediately result in a revival of Primitive Christianity, but they prepare for it—they give liberty and open the way for the Bible—or, as we should rather say, somewhat further clear its path—for the Bible is, and ever will be, the pioneer of true liberty. A writer from Florence gives the following :—

The progress of freedom of conscience is not likely to run smooth in Central Italy for some time. I informed you in some of my previous letters that a certain curiosity, if not interest, was awakening in Florence on the subject of an evangelical community assembling on Sundays and in the evenings of week-days in a ground floor room, or indeed a carpenter's shop, in that wide and sunny Piazza Borbano which has lately been dignified with the name of Piazza dell'Indipendenza. The room may contain from 700 to 800 persons, and as many as 1,000 are reported to have lately squeezed in; no place, I am told, can be secured except as a reward of an hour and a half to two hours' patient waiting, as persons crowd in, and indeed beset the entrance, not only long before the service begins, but even before the doors are thrown open. Priests, as you know, have been known to attend by scores in their peculiar out-of-door costume, and I have been assured that his Excellency the Consigliere, Cavaliere, Avvocato Salvagnoli, Minister of Public Worship, has been seen, foregoing his mighty affairs of State, all wrapped in his cloak, just to dropping in at the heterodox conventicle. These good evangelicals would, perhaps, willingly have dispensed with the honour of so distinguished a spectator. Salvagnoli, I am told, and, at his suggestion, Ricasoli, have summoned before them some of the most conspicuous evangelical leaders—the Neapolitan preacher, or "evangelical," as they call him, Mazzarella, and that distinguished patrician Dissenter and martyr of the Bible under the old Grand-Ducal regime, Count Pietro Guicciardini. The Minister rubbed his hands and declared himself as staunch a supporter of free religious inquiry as he was before the whole State of Tuscany hung on his shoulders. He congratulated the Dissenters on their thriving prospects, and wished them further success. "Still," he observed, "would not two evening meetings in the week, beside Sundays, answer all their purposes as well as three?"

May be the archbishop of Florence would stand the two without making too great a fuss, and there is really no end to the admonitions, threats, and recriminations the Government must stand the brunt of to screen these Gospel Christians from priestly ill-will. The ill-will of the "black" priests, the Ministers assert, would give them little uneasiness; indeed, they are not sure they would not rather strain a point for the mere sake of spitting these; but there are priests of lighter hues, too,—men are trying the "liberal dodge," profess themselves attached to the popular cause and devoted to its official champions, the Ministers; of course, however, with a clear understanding that political change is never to be allowed to interfere with the religious institutions of the country.

It is in vain for the evangelists to say that never a word, never the slightest allusion, ever escapes their lips which may, even by the perverse malignity of the most rancorous enemy, be construed into a direct or indirect attack against either the theory or the practice of Roman Catholicism, or even be ascribed to any even the most remotest participation, on their part, in the tenets of the Protestant persuasion. They profess utterly to ignore the orthodox and the heterodox churches alike. They read the Bible—the Gospels especially—explain and comment upon them without the least reference to other people's views; they have no priests, deacons, or elders; they build up no sect; they constitute no community; they are bound by no creed; their evangelists and instructors are neither paid nor ordained; they break the bread among them on terms of perfect equality, without any precedence or formal ministrations whatever. They make no attempt at proselytism; they keep no account of their flock; bind to no duties the members of their congregation; any man, or set of men, is free to join them, or any new set of men may assemble in other associations, upon their own plain principles; they import Bibles, Prayer-books, and a variety of tracts, which are very cheaply sold or freely distributed. The colporteur's work, that is, the diffusion of their Christian knowledge, and the right of meeting undisturbed, are all they demand at the hands of a Government which has theoretically proclaimed the principle of freedom of worship, and which found that freedom already established in behalf of the Jews, Greeks, and Mussulmen. It is this very latitude of the evangelists that the Minister endeavoured to turn to account, in order to bring about a good understanding between them and the jealous priests. "Since you are so little fettered down by your tenets, and so little troubled by scruples," his Excellency reasoned, "why can you not limit your instructions to those points which you have in common with the Roman Catholic teachers?" But, alas! the evangelical preacher has nothing, will have nothing, in common with the priests.

On such terms do these new Italian religionists stand in the presence of the head and ministers of the old established church and of the Liberal Government, under whom they live? The petty restrictions and rather silly admonitions they have lately been subjected to, hardly amount to anything like a serious check on their growth, nor are they to be looked upon in the light of incipient persecution. In Central Italy, since April last, as in Piedmont since 1848, the Italians have it in their power to emancipate themselves from the Pope as a Sovereign, if they will only agree to shake him off as a Pontiff.

All this falls short of the primitive model, but, What is it—whither does it tend? 'Tis the consuming of error by "the Spirit of His mouth"—the chasing away of darkness by the light of truth—the outworking of an energy more powerful than a million swords, the end of which is complete victory. D. K.

STRANGE COMMINGLING.

How fantastic are the tricks of men, and how extravagant the liberties they take with Christianity! The following came off in Kentish Town, on the 2nd of last month, in order to obtain funds to furnish a new church:—"A RAFFLE for a silver snuff box, a gold chain, a fancy velvet box, and other valuables. Tickets to be had of the Rev. R. Swift."

To this may be added the following:

"THINGS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL AT GREAT GLEN.—The following circular has recently been issued at Great Glen, by the clergyman of the parish:—"The Great Glen Feast of Dedication begins on the Sunday next after the 22nd day of November. My dear Parishioners—For such persons as we are, true joy can arise only out of the sorrows of repentance. If then we would enjoy the Feast of Dedication which again approaches, let us first be sorry, and confess to God, that we have not used so diligently as we ought to have done, the means of grace which he has ordained in his Church: after that it will better become us to rejoice and give thanks, that those holy things are still of his great mercy continued to us. It is to express such joy that we keep up our ancient feast. On Advent Sunday, the Holy Communion will be administered. I beg you to consider that solemn admonition in the prayer-book, 'When God calleth you, are ye not ashamed to say ye will not come? When ye should return to God, will ye excuse yourselves and say ye are not ready?' On Monday, November the 28th, divine service will be at ten o'clock a.m., that the football players may have opportunity to worship God before they begin their game. The children will dine at one o'clock. On Tuesday, the Evening Choral Service, and the 'Feast of Charity' afterwards as usual. On Wednesday, St. Andrew's Day, there will be a lecture after evening service, on the discoveries of the microscope and telescope, by R. Luck, Esq. On Thursday, the tea-party and dance. It is never without some fear that I invite you to a dance.

Again I entreat you to remember well what you were made in your baptism, that so your dance may be kept blameless. No persons can be admitted without a ticket. On Friday evening will be held a meeting for home missions. God bless you all, and keep you from evil. H. L. 'Donna.'—Leicester Mercury."

Fairly may we place here the following from the Christian World. Though not on a level with the above, the comingling is strange.

"TO CHRIST'S BAPTIZED WORKING MEN.—WANTED, in Christ's Establishment, situated in a densely-populated neighbourhood, on or before Lady Day next, a YOUNG MAN of good character and frugal habits, whose deportment we can look up to; who can well speak out for, and earnestly recommend his Master's person, property, and laws, speak a kind word to all who pass by, and attend to every duty belonging to the office. The amount of his temporal wages will depend upon pleasing his Master, and benefiting and attracting his admirers. To receive all incomings after necessary expenses (which are small) are paid. The building will hold 600 pieces of goods of inestimable value, for every one of which he must be officially responsible. No other establishment legally constituted near. No spurious charity is allowed to displace the Master's authority, nor childish customs practised. Address, B. P. (with full name and address) care of W. Arphor, Halifax Book Depôt, Bishopsgate Without."

Then we have the clergy BALLS.

"At the annual ball, held at the Bull Inn, Melford, there were ten clergymen out of a company of one hundred and thirty. At the Down hunt ball, Downpatrick, the names of twenty-nine clergymen are given, as among those to whom invitations were sent, and who, it is stated, were present. The dancing commenced about ten, and was kept up until an early hour next morning."—Record

Dr. Miller, of Birmingham, does not attend balls, but has thought it desirable to have something to do with RIFLES. He considers it "a fitting thing that rifle corps should inaugurate their enrolment by solemnly recognizing the duty of worshipping God in public, and asking His blessing to consecrate their embodiment." Consequently the Rifles were marched to a special service in the Old Church last Lord's day. Of course, all got up ready for action. Thus the name of Christ is brought in to furnish pretext for an extra display of worldly pride.

QUERIES AND REPLIES.

LIFE HID WITH CHRIST IN GOD.

An answer in your next number is requested to the following query, which will oblige a few of your constant readers:—“What life is spoken of in Col. ii. 2, which the Apostle says, is hid with Christ in God?”—G. R.

The Apostle, in this passage, is addressing disciples of Christ, and we understand him to be referring to the resurrection, or immortal life. In effect, the language of the Apostle is—“For you are dead, (by the sentence past on the first Adam) but your future restoration is sure—it is hid with Christ in God. So that when Christ, who is our life, shall be made manifest, you also shall be made manifest with him in glory. This is the testimony, that God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He who has the Son, has this life; he who has not the Son of God, has not this life. These things I have written unto you, that ye may know that you have eternal life—that you may continue to believe on the name of the Son of God. This is life eternal, that they may know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.” Perfection in character and holiness are peculiar to the blessedness of eternal life; and these are hid with Christ in God.

WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

The Apostle says, Rom. viii. 16, “The Spirit beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the sons of God.” Can you explain to us in what way the Holy Spirit witnesseth with the Disciple’s spirit to the great fact here mentioned?—T. M.

This is a passage respecting the meaning of which there has been much controversy. We can only state our own views thereon. We believe that the Holy Spirit is the author and revealer of those facts, commands, promises, and threatenings which are found in the New Covenant Scriptures, given by the grace of God to man. This record testifies, or witnesses, either against or in behalf of every man who hears it or reads it, being the language employed by the Holy Spirit for that purpose. To the obedient believer, then, these words prove a savor of life ending in eternal life; and to the disobedient unbeliever a savor of death ending in death. In the sight of God there is no neutral ground between the believer and the unbeliever. Let us read the passage in its connection from a translation which we have in our possession:—

“For all who are led by God’s Spirit, and they alone, are the sons of God. For you have not received a spirit of bondage, that you should go back again to the state of slavish fear, but you have a spirit of adoption, wherein we cry unto God and say, ‘Our Father.’ The Spirit itself joins its testimony with the witness of our own spirits, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; that as we now share his suffering, we shall henceforth share his glory.”

This testimony of the Holy Spirit was presented to the disciples of Christ in Rome, that they might be fully assured of the intimate relationship into which they had been brought to each other and to God, by the glad-tidings which, at least, some of them had heard proclaimed in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii.) Now to all who receive the great salvation of the Gospel, God promises thus:—“I will put my laws into their minds, and inscribe them on their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his fellow-citizen and every man his brother, saying, Know thou the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them. Because I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, their sins and iniquities I will remember no more.” Of this promise, then, the believer has an assurance, in the child-like love to God which he possesses, and in the anticipation of a more perfect state, when his relation to the Divine Father obtains its full development. This inward witness of the Spirit, which is the fruit of faith and obedience, springs from communion with God, and immersion into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. It is here that sinners, by faith, are washed in the blood of Christ, and that sins of deepest dye are at once and for ever pardoned by the God of all grace and consolation. The Holy Spirit then witnesses with our spirits that we are the sons of God. As it is impossible to describe the feelings with which an affectionate mother regards her only child, so, we humbly think, language fails to portray the feelings which accompany the inestimable blessing of a good conscience toward God. Nevertheless it is a reality, and every disciple of Jesus has the promise of obtaining the personal realization of this inward witness of the Holy Spirit—this sealing of the Spirit unto the day of redemption. But “the peace of God passeth all understanding,” and therefore cannot be described in human language.

J. W.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BANFF.

It is with feelings of joy that I communicate to you the progress of the cause of truth in this North country. Since I last wrote you, five promising young men (four of whom never made any profession previously) have been immersed into the name of the Lord Jesus, and three of them within the last three weeks. Oh, that men would take God at his word, instead of expressing their views as to his meaning to suit a particular creed. Let us take courage, for the Lord will be with his truth, which must prevail.

A. CAMERON.

December 23, 1859.

BIRMINGHAM.

During the last few weeks attention has been mainly given to things in the church. The brethren consider it desirable to obtain a more suitable place for meeting 'ere much is done further to call the attention of those who are without. One has been immersed during the month at Cherry Street, and several at Bond Street. A social meeting, of the members of the two churches, has taken place in the Cherry Street Room, when, after tea, addresses were delivered by Brn. Cornduff, Chew, Fraser, Moore, and King. Bro. Bridge, deputed by the Bond Street brethren, read the address following—

From the Church meeting in Bond Street, to the Church of Christ meeting in Cherry Street, Birmingham.

Dear friends in the Lord Jesus,—In reply to your address, as read to us at a recent meeting, we need say but little.

We return you our most hearty response, and we pray for you much prosperity and peace.

We feel with you that a great work has to be done. The laxity of discipline, and the disregard of the Word of God, which now characterise so many churches around us, are truly appalling; the need of reformation is great.

When a society of persons that trifles with, or throws contempt upon the Lord's ordinances, can be generally called a Church of Christ: tis time then for really thoughtful Christians to seek a definition of a Christian church. What is it? Can it be defined at all? Or, must the definition be so wide as that it shall include those, who not only do not practice, but who also jeer at one at least of the ordinances, we mean the ordinance of baptism.

We are persuaded that the time has come when a decided protest must be uttered against the contemptuous treatment of the Word of God, on the part of those from whom we should expect some better thing. We are persuaded, too, that truth is made to suffer through a misunderstanding of the meaning, and of the claims of charity. How many now forget that one of the characteristics of charity is this; that "she rejoiceth in the truth!"

We would, however, do our work of advocating the truth without bitterness and wrath. We would remember that not long ago we were in darkness about many things on which we now have light. This remembrance should teach us to bear with those who oppose us, while we shrink not from a manly utterance of our own convictions—while we teach, without fear of consequences, what God has revealed to us by his Spirit, in the written word.

In conclusion, dear friends, we would express our entire willingness to co-operate with you in any "work and labor of love." The field is large. There is enough for us all to do. We trust that we shall feel your success to be our success: believing that our aims and sympathies are but one.

Any means that may be devised for the promotion of the Redeemer's glory in this large town, and throughout this district, we should be happy to aid and promote.

And now we say, "Peace be to the brethren and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

Signed on behalf of the church,

SANDERS J. CHEW,
SAMUEL GILBERT,
JAMES EGGINTON,
THOMAS BRIDGE,
JOHN TONGUE,
WILLIAM EGGINTON,
PHILIP JONES,
HENRY COTTERELL.

The meeting in every respect was most agreeable, and it is hoped not without good results.

Bro. Fraser has done good service in regard to our publications—60 Harbingers are ordered, as the result of his canvass—the Gospel Advocate also has had his attention with good results, and, though he did somewhat forget the Quo Warranto? its sale has been considerable. Since the last communication the church in Cherry Street has taken an important step. After a careful examination of the New Testament teaching concerning deacons, a special meeting of the church was called, in order that the Disciples might look out from among themselves, brethren qualified for this important ministry. Bro. King, who has till now held in charge this service, stated his conviction that the church was blessed with brethren in every way qualified for the deacon's office, but urged that the election should be considered to have taken place only in the event of the church's ability unanimously to call to the work in question. Brethren Johnstone, Lemprier, Eskin, and Tompkinson were then named, and unanimously declared fit and proper persons for the office. On the next Lord's-day, after a brief address, and prayer by several brethren, the elected were set over the work to which the church had called them, by the laying on of the hands of Bro. King—it being understood that thereby was imparted unto them, the charge (in this particular department) which he had till then retained.

EDINBURGH.

Quietly and unostentatiously is the congregation of Disciples meeting in Bristol.

place chapel, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints—"walking in the admonition of the Holy Spirit—are much edified and greatly multiplied." That this may not appear an exaggeration of facts, it is necessary simply to mention that, in the presence of large, anxious, and attentive audiences, my wife was added to the church by faith in a glorified Saviour, and immersion into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, on the previous Saturday evening—three on the Thursday following, and four others on the last Lord's day forenoon. Having begun the warfare, may they fight the battle triumphantly, so that they may receive the victor's honors—an imperishable crown of glory. As we are strictly enjoined to "owe no man anything," I enclose payment in arrears for the Harbinger for 1859, trusting that the same "still, small voice" may be heard by all your subscribers, which may considerably lighten the burden of your editorial labors.

D. H. FAIR.

December 18, 1859.

PATHHEAD.

On Lord's day, the 15th instant, one male, and on Thursday, the 19th, one male and three females, having confessed Jesus before men, were baptized by his authority, henceforth, we trust, to "walk in newness of life."

T. HARROW.

Dysart, January 20, 1860.

SWANSEA.

It is encouraging to see that our labors are not in vain. I have an intimate friend who labors as a minister in a church numbering about six hundred members, who has abandoned the Papal formula of baptism, and now immerses believers into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. The church demanded his reasons for such a change. He then explained the inconsistency of the word in the commission, and the propriety of the word into, with which they were well pleased. It is the minister's impression that this church will not allow any one for the future to use the Papal rendering of the commission. I told him some time ago that every church of Christ should, according to the New Testament, have a plurality of pastors or overseers. After a little conversation, he saw that it was the order of the first churches, and mentioned it to the leading brethren of the church, who also fully concurred with it, and I am informed that they intend carrying it into practice.

I received a communication from Newtown the other day, in which I am informed that all the denominations meet together for prayer, concerning whom my correspondent writes the following:—"They talk of coming one step on our road—that is, they will organize into one great body, and drop all human names, and be called by the name of Christians only. I am informed that they feel indebted to Bro. Rotherham for this, that they saw the propriety of this in his discussion with Bevan. The words, 'How good and how pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity,' are still ringing in the ears of some of them." All things considered, we cannot anticipate any great change at once; but the above facts are proof that we do not labor in vain. Let us bless the Lord and take courage. His word shall not return unto him void.

About eight o'clock last Lord's day morning, a poor penitent sinner walked with me through the heavy waves of the sea, and at the same time he was calling on the name of the Lord, that his sins might be washed through the precious blood of Christ; and in this attitude of prayer he was buried with him in baptism, wherein also he rose with him through the faith of the operation of God. He is now going on his way rejoicing.

E. E.

January 10, 1860.

WIGAN.

Since the last report from Wigan appeared, seven individuals have been immersed into the Lord Jesus, on confession of their faith; and we think there is still a field open here, which, with the blessing of God on faithful labor, will prove very productive. May the good Lord give us strength and wisdom, enabling us to work in accordance with His will, that it may prove to the praise of His glory through Christ.

January 13, 1860.

J. C.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

We condense the following from the American Harbinger for January, 1860:—

ILLINOIS.—Bro. L. J. Correll writes from Palestine, that he recently introduced five into the kingdom, one of whom was 73, and three others between 60 and 70.

MICHIGAN.—Bro. L. Carpenter reports the results of a meeting at Seneca, Lenawee co. as being 38 additions. The meetings continued ten days. It was the first time the ancient gospel had been proclaimed in that community.

MISSOURI.—Bro. G. Myers reports meetings at Mount Gillead, at Randolph county, and at Howard county, which closed with 35 additions. The whole number added in two months had been 86.

FAMILY CIRCLE.

ANTICIPATING EVILS.—Enjoy the present, whatsoever it may be, and be not solicitous for the future; for if you take your foot from the present standing, and thrust it forward towards to-morrow's events, you are in a restless condition. It is like refusing to quench your present thirst by fearing you shall want drink the next day. If it be well to-day, it is madness to make the present miserable by fearing it may be ill to-morrow — when your belly is full of to-day's dinner, to fear that you shall want the next day's supper; for it may be you shall not, and then to what purpose was this day's affliction? But if to-morrow you shall want, your sorrow will come time enough, though you do not hasten it; let your trouble tarry till its day comes. But if it chance to be ill to-day, do not increase it by the cares of to-morrow. Enjoy the blessings of this day, if God send them, and the evils of it bear patiently and sweetly; for this day is only ours—we are dead to yesterday, and we are not yet born to the morrow. He, therefore, that enjoys the present, if it be good, enjoys as much as is possible; and if only that day's trouble leans upon him, it is singular and finite. "Sufficient to the day (said Christ) is the evil thereof;" sufficient but not intolerable. But if we look abroad, and bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable.—Jeremy Taylor.

WOMAN WITHOUT RELIGION. — A man without religion is at best a poor reprobate, the football of destiny, with no tie linking him to infinity, and to the wondrous eternity that is begun within him; but a woman without it is even worse — a flame without heat, a rainbow without color, a flower without perfume. A man may, in some sort, tie his frail hopes and honors, with weak, shifting ground tackle, to business or to the world; but a woman without that anchor called Faith is a drift and a wreck! A man may clumsily continue a kind of moral responsibility out of his relation to mankind; but a woman, in her comparatively isolated sphere, where affection, and not purpose, is the controlling motive, can find no basis for any system of right action but that of spiritual faith. A man may craze his thought and brain to trustfulness in such a poor harborage as fame and reputation may stretch before him; but a woman—where can she put her hopes in storms, if not in heaven? And that sweet truthfulness, that abiding love—lightening them with the pleasantest radiance, when the world's storms break like an army of smoking cannon — what can bestow it all but a holy soul-tie to what is above the storms, and to what is stronger than an army with cannon? Who that has enjoyed the love of a Christian mother but will echo the thought with energy, and hallow it with a tear!

FOLLY OF PRIDE.—Take some quiet sober moment of life, and add together the two ideas of pride and man. Behold him, creature of a span, stalking through infinite space in all the grandeur of littleness. Perched on a speck of the universe, every wind of heaven strikes into his blood the coldness of death; his soul floats from his body like melody from the string: day and night, like dust on the wheel, he is rolled along the heavens, through a labyrinth of worlds, and all the creations of God are flaming above and beneath. Is this a creature to make for himself a crown of glory, to deny his own flesh, to mock his fellow, sprung from that dust to which both will return? Does the proud man not err? Does he not suffer? Does he not die? When he reasons, is he not stopped by difficulties? When he acts, is he never tempted by pleasure? When he lives, is he free from pain? When he dies, can he escape the common grave? Pride is not the heritage of man; humility should dwell with frailty, and atone for ignorance, error, and imperfection.—Sidney Smith.

HEART HUNGER.—The heart hath hunger as the body hath. Where one person dies of physical want, a dozen perish from starvation of the affections. Men cannot live by bread alone, but the soul likewise must be fed. A pig can subsist on corn, and a horse on hay and oats; but men and women have spiritual natures that require spiritual food. We have seen a poor puny child to which neither nutriment nor medicine could give warmth and strength, suddenly rouse and become healthy and ruby when some large-hearted, elderly, unmarried aunt, with no husband or child of her own to bestow the rich store of her affections upon, came to feed the little thing with her heart's blood and tea-spoon. This hunger for love is a divine appetite, and it is folly to attempt to starve it out.

HEAT FROM THE STARS.—It is a startling fact, that if the earth were dependent alone upon the sun for heat, it would not get enough to keep existence in animal or vegetable life. It results from Pouillet's researches, that the stars furnish sufficient heat during the year, to melt a crust of ice 75 feet thick.—Dr. Lardner.

MARCH, 1860.

EDUCATION : ITS INFLUENCE AND IMPORTANCE

THE SUBSTANCE OF PRESIDENT MILLIGAN'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS DELIVERED ON THE OPENING OF HARRODSBURG COLLEGE, KY.

It has already become a proverb, that "The present is the age of improvement." There is not a branch of science within the wide range of human knowledge, that has not been more or less enriched by contributions from some of the master minds of the nineteenth century.

It is not, however, so much in the department of sciences, as it is in that of the arts, that we excel our predecessors. It is not so much in the discovery of truth, as in its varied applications to the practical purposes and conveniences of life, that we are in advance of all past generations. Some of the most sublime discoveries in science were made by the Galileos, the Keplers, the Bacons, the Lockes, and the Newtons of even the seventeenth century. But these discoveries were, to most persons of that age, what the gold mines of California were to the wild tribes of the West. Very few then knew how to appropriate them.

But now all is changed ; or at least, is rapidly changing. Everything is now assuming a more highly practical tendency. Agriculture and the mechanic arts are greatly improved by the application of science ; our rivers, lakes, and oceans are navigated by the power of steam ; information is carried from city to city, and from continent to continent, with the velocity of lightning ; and in a word, everything is onward, and upward, and Westward.

A question, then, rises just here, of very great interest to every true philanthropist :—What is the cause of all this ? To what particular agency or instrumentality does this state of universal improvement owe its origin and its progress ? Why does the nineteenth surpass every preceding century in all the elements of wealth, power, and civilization ?

This question has been very differently answered by different classes of individuals. The mere politician, who is wont to contemplate everything through the medium of political glasses, has usually found his answer in the great improvements that have been recently made in the science of government. But this does not satisfy the more enlightened and inquisitive metaphysician. The question still occurs to him, whence this great improvement in political science ? It is an effect, and it must have a cause, as well as the recent improvements in agriculture, horticulture, and the other arts and professions. The Christian philosopher, who stops not with the consideration of second causes, but who is accustomed to trace every event in human progress up to the Divine will—or rather, to the Divine nature, where all true philosophy ends—will, of course, refer all this to the agency of Him who made the universe, who governs it, and who is now evidently directing all things to the speedy introduction of that glorious era, when the wolf shall dwell with the lamb ; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid ; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them.

To this general solution of the problem, I have no objection. It certainly presents to us a very just and rational conception of the whole matter. But it does not meet the specific object of our present inquiry. Our question does not refer to divine, but to human agency. We do not ask, what has God done, but what has man done, under the Divine guidance, to bring about this happy state of society? Or, to be still more particular, what is the first link in the chain of human instrumentalities that has given rise to this wonderful progress in all the elements of modern civilization?

Waiving for the present the consideration of all the merely speculative theories of human progress, I hesitate not to affirm my solemn conviction, that the true answer to this question is to be found only in the superior education of the nineteenth century. This is the grand primum mobile, the great efficient mainspring of all the schemes that man has ever devised and executed for the elevation, civilization, and beautification of his race.

But let me not be misunderstood here. We often differ in our conclusions, merely because we use different nomenclatures. We often use the same word to represent different and distinct ideas. This is particularly true of the term education. But few words have a wider currency, and yet very few are more imperfectly understood. The popular meaning of this term is extremely erroneous. It is generally used, as you are all aware, in the sense of acquiring and storing away ideas, which, like so many measures of wheat, oats, or barley, are to be retained in the granaries of the human mind; or to be dealt out to the highest bidder, according to the wholesale or retail prices of such gross commodities.

But as its etymology denotes, it primarily and properly signifies a process just the reverse of all this. It is not the treasuring up in the mind of any thing ab extra; but it is the developing, moulding, harmonizing, adjusting, polishing, and refining of that which is within the man himself.

This idea is so fundamental, that I shall take leave to illustrate it with all possible simplicity, even before this very intelligent audience. As the occasion is somewhat elementary, I will, no doubt, be excused for introducing, at this point, a few very plain and elementary suggestions.

Allow me, then, in the first place, and by way of illustration, to call your attention to the world of wonders that lies concealed beneath the surface of even the most simple organized substance. Who, for example, that has ever witnessed the mysterious process of vegetation, could imagine, a priori, that a single grain of corn is susceptible of such a development as we every year behold? True, indeed, without the influence of certain external agencies, its vital energies would remain for ever latent. This may be well illustrated by the grains of corn that are sometimes found in the Egyptian pyramids, and among the ruins of ancient cities. But by the application of heat, light, moisture, and electricity, the germ is quickened into life. We have first the root, next the blade, then the stalk, after that the blossom, then the ear, and finally the full grown corn in the ear. It is now, allow me to say, an educated grain of corn. Whether it has been properly educated or not, depends, of course, on circumstances.

Now all this is very analogous to the education of the infant man. His is the most complex of all created constitutions. He is a perfect microcosm within himself. He has a material body, an animal soul, and a god-like spirit. These again are endowed with numerous and various faculties, each of which, by the use and application of proper stimuli, is susceptible of the most wonderful and astonishing development. How amazing, for example, is the difference between the muscular powers of the child and the full-grown Goliath! Or between the mental powers of the infant Newton, and those of the philosopher Sir Isaac, whom God "To mortals lent, to trace His boundless works

From laws sublimely simple."

We do not, of course, pretend by any system of education, to make every man a Newton. There is a natural limit to the development of every organized substance, whether vegetable or animal, beyond which no created power can extend it.

"For education ne'er supplied
What ruling nature has denied."

The educator creates nothing. He produces neither mind nor matter. He merely develops, moulds, and polishes the raw material. But if he cannot make the moss bloom as the rose—if he cannot cause the daisy to tower aloft like an oak of Bashan, or like a cedar of Lebanon, he may, nevertheless, develop every faculty in each particular individual to the full extent of his own natural capacity.

This, then, for the sake of distinction, we may call the first element of education. But it is only in theory that we can separate the developing from the moulding, polishing, and refining process. While our latent powers, energies, and susceptibilities are being brought out from the deep recesses of our being, by each one being exercised on its own appropriate objects, they all receive at the same time a particular cast: they are, as it were, moulded in the types of the educator: they are either brought into a state of more active and sympathetic harmony, or they are crushed beneath the fetters of the most inexorable and oppressive despotisms.

This is so very obvious that it scarcely needs any illustration. It is a matter of daily consciousness with every youth, that the performance of any one action begets in his system an increased facility for its repetition. This again strengthens the same tendency, and so on till a corresponding habit is formed. We all know with what fear and trembling we made our first essay in the simple art of chirography. To form the first letter of the alphabet required at that time a very considerable effort. But now it almost forms itself; that is, it forms itself if we have been so fortunate as to form a habit in harmony with the natural laws and constitution of our chirographic organs. But otherwise the die is cast. The decree of habit is, Let the fully developed hand that is cramped now, be cramped for ever.

This is a very simple and familiar illustration of the force and power of habit over all our faculties of body, soul, and spirit. So plastic, indeed, is the infant constitution, that it may be easily cast into almost any mould whatever. We do not, of course, by this intend to endorse the absurd dogma that "man is a mere creature of circumstances." Not at all. Such a hypothesis has no foundation whatever in fact. There is evidently in the mind of every man a natural affinity for truth, just as there is in his body a natural tendency to assume the upright position. But we all know that the human frame has, in its infancy, been distorted into a thousand hideous forms; and we are just as painfully conscious that the infant mind has been as often cast into false systems of politics, philosophy, morality, and religion. The present chart of the civilized world is a melancholy illustration of this fact.

How exceedingly important, then, it is, that during the process of education all the faculties of every youth should be exercised on their corresponding and appropriate objects, so as to secure their full and complete development, and so as to form, at the same time, habits in harmony with his own primitive constitution, and with the relations that he sustains to the entire universe. This is a matter on which there is no room for exaggeration. Here it is that all the powers of language become utterly bankrupt, and every attempt to hyperbole falls far short of expressing the simple, eternal realities and consequences that are involved in the education of every son and daughter of humanity.

The third object, or element, of education, is the acquisition of useful knowledge. Knowledge is the food of the soul.

"Man loves it dearly: and the beams of truth

More welcome touch his understanding's eye

Than all the blandishments of sound his ear,
Than all of taste, his tongue."

When, therefore, a man's whole constitution has been developed, moulded, polished, and refined to the fullest extent of its capabilities — when all his faculties have been made to harmonize with each other, and with the laws and principles of the physical, intellectual, and moral universe — when his mind has been filled with knowledge and his heart with wisdom; then, and not till then, can it be said with propriety that he has been perfectly educated. He may, indeed, have a strong and athletic physical constitution — he may have been well instructed in many of the arts and sciences; but a perfectly rational and complete education he has not received, while any of the things specified are wanting.

You now comprehend what I mean when I say that education, in its proper and comprehensive sense, is the basis of all that tends to elevate, enrich, adorn, and refine human nature. And not only so, but I am sure that you also now fully acquiesce with me in the justness of the sentiment. Indeed, it is only necessary to state the premises, and the truth of our proposition follows with all the clearness and force of a mathematical inference. For if matter is not capable of self-improvement — if it is mind that discovers and that applies all the elements of wealth, power, and whatever else pertains to the individual, the social, and the general good of mankind, then it clearly follows that the success of all this must ever be in the ratio of its own education. Of what use, for example, is all the gold of California, the coal and iron of Kentucky, or the diamonds of Golconda, to the man who has neither the intelligence nor the wisdom that is necessary to appropriate them?

We boast of our civil and political institutions; and well we may; for they are the very best under the broad heavens. But of what use would they be, with all their varied and multiplied excellences, to the savage tribes of the West? or even to our Mexican neighbours? The fact is, that men always have had, and that they always must and will have, laws and institutions corresponding to their own mental and moral development. Deprive the rising generation, therefore, of what is properly implied in the art and mystery of education, and you at once render worthless all that was ever purchased by the blood of our Revolutionary fathers — you virtually annihilate our whole scheme of civil government — you destroy our system of internal improvements, with all the varied comforts and conveniences of social life — you seal the Bible, shut up the fountains of human happiness, and convert this whole land, which is now beautiful as the rose of Summer, and delightful as the fragrance of Autumn, into one vast, dreary, and howling wilderness.

The greatest problem, then, that man was ever required to solve, is the problem of his own education. To show how human nature may be best developed and moulded, and in all respects adapted to the ends and objects of its being and destiny, is to do more for the elevation and general good of mankind than did Columbus by the discovery of a continent. And the man who does most for the execution of the plan is, next to its projector, the greatest benefactor of his race.

I have not the vanity to suppose that I have made the great discovery. An experience of more than twenty years in this most difficult of all the arts, has convinced me that the problem is not yet fully solved. It remains for a second Peter, bearing the keys of the kingdom, to reveal the mystery.

Some things, however, follow very clearly from the premises now before us. If education consists, as I have said, not merely in the acquisition of knowledge, but principally and chiefly in the development and proper discipline of all our faculties, then it is evident, for example, that it must of necessity be a very long, laborious, and expensive process : that there is in fact no royal road to it ; but that it requires the combined influence of the nursery, the school-room, the academy, the college, the church, and the university to complete it. These, I repeat, are all essentials. Take away any one of them, and the chain of means is broken ; our whole system of education is rendered inefficient ; and the feeble, irregular pulsations of society will soon indicate that a fountain of life has been exhausted, or, at least, that the stream has been diverted from its proper channel.

I am aware that all do not think so. I know there are some very honorable men, who seem to regard our colleges and universities as non-essentials, if not, indeed, as public nuisances. They refer us to a Franklin, a Washington, and a Clay, who, without a collegiate education, have gained for themselves a name and a reputation as enduring as the annals of our Republic.

But these men forget that the sage of Boston, the hero of Mount Vernon, and the orator of Ashland, were Nature's favourite sons. They also forget that each of these illustrious patriots and statesmen deeply deplored his own want of a thorough course of collegiate instruction and discipline. They forget that Franklin strongly recommended the study of ancient classics, especially to professional men ; that Washington was the founder of a college which still does honour to his name and memory ; and that Mr. Clay was always the sincere friend and eloquent advocate of a thorough and liberal system of public instruction.

But we need not the testimony and advocacy of even a Franklin, a Washington, or a Clay, in behalf of our colleges and our universities. To test their real value and importance in a scheme of education, we have only to look into their own intrinsic merits ; we have only to inquire what has already been accomplished through their instrumentality, and how much of the world's comfort, happiness, and prospective civilization still depends on them.

For if education is a blessing to society, why should it not be made as general and as thorough as possible ? Why stop with the instruction and discipline of the common school and the academy, while there is so great a demand for the very best educated mind in all the relations of life ? What would now be the condition of the world, had colleges and universities never been established as a means of education ? How many would now have the Bible faithfully translated into their own living vernacular ? Where would now be the fifty million copies of the Word of Life that have revealed to all nations the straight and narrow way that leads to honour, to glory, and to immortality ? What would we know of those polished arts and inventions that ———“have humanized mankind, Softened the rude, and calmed the boisterous mind ?”

Where would now be most of those standard works of literature and science which are at once the guide of the farmer, the mechanic, the pedagogue, the lawyer, the physician, and the statesman ? Is it not perfectly obvious to every student of history, that nearly all the great improvements that have recently been made in the arts and in the sciences may be traced, either directly or indirectly, to minds that have been thoroughly trained and disciplined in the halls of our colleges and universities ? And is it not just as obvious to every man of reflection, that upon such minds we must always rely, even for the preparation of text-books to supply the wants of the nursery and the common school, to say nothing of the solution of those higher and more complicated problems, on the demonstration of which must ever depend the progress of Christian civilization? Take, for example, the most popular text-books that are now used in our common schools. Who are their authors and compilers? Is not almost every child in this Commonwealth familiar with the names of a Webster, a Goodrich, an Olmsted, a Davies, a McGuffey, and many others who, having graduated with the highest collegiate honours, devoted much of their subsequent labours to the preparation of text-books for the education of youth? Regard this question, then, as we may, it is evident that the common school is just as dependent on the university, as the university is on the common school.

But I have no desire to introduce invidious comparisons. I do not wish to array the higher against the lower classes of our literary institutions; nor to discuss their comparative value as elementary parts of our social system. As well might we array the head against the heart, and contrast their influence on the life, health, and the activity of the body. No, let there be no antagonism between the nursery, the common-school, the academy, the college, the church, and the university. Let them ever be united; and let them always co-operate in the great work of qualifying each successive generation for more enlarged spheres of usefulness and happiness on earth, as well as for the higher, purer, and holier enjoyments of heaven.

You have done well in establishing at this place an institution of the highest grade for the education of young men. For this act of benevolence, you are entitled to the respect and gratitude of every citizen. And if, with the blessing of God, Kentucky University shall ever become a second Oxford or Cambridge, your names will go down to posterity, associated with the names of the very greatest benefactors of mankind.

ESSAY ON ROMANS VIII 16.

"The Spirit beareth (joint) witness with our own spirit that we are the children of God."

IN all propositions to be demonstrated and proven, it is important that the witness be in harmony with the proposition to be established; or, in other words, if it be a physical proposition, then a physical witness is necessary. A mathematical proposition requires a mathematical demonstration. And if it be a proposition of a spiritual character, then spiritual evidence should be sought after in order to its establishment.

The proposition now under consideration is one raising to view our spiritual connection with God, the divine Father, and at once suggests the importance of self-investigation, in order that each and every one of us may see the precise position that we occupy.

Am I a child of God? is to every responsible individual a question of eternal importance. To this question one of the following answers must be given:—1st, I am a child of God; or 2nd, I am not; or 3rd, I do not know whether I am or not. The great matter for us now is to labor to ascertain, if possible, which one of the above answers we will be compelled to give. Oh, will it be our inestimable privilege, through the mercy of God, to say that we are his children—that we are the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty? Or will we give the second answer named above? Or shall we, by our investigations, be constrained to settle down upon the doubtful and uncertain position, that we cannot tell whether God is our Father, and that we are his children?

I take the position, that every one may know, beyond all doubt, whether he is the adopted of God, and has been accepted of the Father in the Beloved.

We may just as confidently know that God, through Jesus our Lord, has pardoned our sins, as that we may know that Jesus is God's Son and the only Saviour of sinners. The manner in which this matter is frequently disposed of by persons claiming to be the disciples of Jesus, is dishonoring both to the system of Christianity and to its great Founder, and quite degrading to those for whom Christianity is said to have been provided. Often do you hear persons answer, when the question involving their spiritual connection with God is presented — "I hope I am a Christian" — "I hope that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," &c. We might just as well talk about hoping that God is God, and that Jesus Christ is God's Son, as to hope that he has pardoned our sins.

We will affirm that God has so arranged matters in the remedial system, right at this point, in such a manner, that every one may know for himself and not for another, but independent of all others, that he is a child of God, and that his sins are all remitted, if indeed this favor is his. If this were not true in every case, then there could be no consolation drawn from our relation to God, though we were in all truth his children. The very brightest jewels in the kingdom of God would be compelled not only to live in doubt, but die without any prospect whatever of heaven and immortal joys. If, indeed, the Christian was not permitted to know for himself that he was a child of God, and that his sins, though many, were all blotted out, notwithstanding the whole world were against him, he could see but little gained by Christianity. If what we have said be not true, where would Paul's prospect for an immortal crown have been? Where would Peter's hope of heaven have been? And from whence would all the Apostles of the Lamb have drawn their consolation, if indeed they had been dependent upon the world for their assurance of pardon and acceptance with God?

But again. Where would have been the consolations of the many thousands who died for the honor of Heaven's adorable King, if these consolations may not be enjoyed independent of the testimony of mankind? These all died, leaving the world with its voice against them.

And it may in all truth be affirmed, that in every case where persons have stood up for Christianity as Jesus gave it, without any additions or subtractions — without any changes whatever — that they have had the voice of men against them, and consequently destitute of any consolation from Christianity, if the decisions of men were anything in deciding and settling this momentous question.

I suppose that all those persons now standing upon the Word of God, as the only rule of faith and practice, to the exclusion of all human speculations, would at least in some cases have the voice of men against them to contend with. But you inquire, where are we to look for the witnesses proving to us that we are God's children, and that our sins are, beyond all doubt, taken away? We answer, that you have them presented in the passage now under consideration, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit," &c.

We have here two witnesses presented to our view. 1st, the Spirit of God. 2nd, the spirit of the individual pardoned. How is the testimony of these witnesses obtained? Here is the great point. If we were permitted to form our conclusions from the speculations of men sometimes in regard to this important matter, we should come to the conclusion that Paul, instead of using the language found in the passage above, taught that the Spirit of God witnesseth to our spirit that we are the children of God — that the Spirit of God gave us the evidence of our pardon, by producing some kind of undefinable impression upon our spirit or heart, that no one ever did or ever can understand.

In order to arrive at the truth as it is in Jesus, in regard to this matter of so much importance, we will state a proposition that no one will ever deny.

We now take the position, that the Spirit of God never tells any man that he is pardoned when the Gospel says that he is not — until the Gospel tells him that he is pardoned.

Can any one deny this proposition, and then say that he believes the Gospel? To say that the Spirit of God tells any man that he is pardoned, when the Gospel says that he is not, is to turn Infidel at once — is to reject the Gospel — is not to believe the Gospel. And what does the Saviour say of all this class of persons? He says they shall be damned. "He that believeth not (the Gospel) shall be damned." See Mark xvi. 16.

It can never, then, be made to appear that the one the Saviour says is condemned, the Holy Spirit says is saved.

Whenever the Gospel tells the sinner that he is pardoned, then the Spirit tells him that his sins are remitted. The Spirit and the Gospel never contradict each other, but always go together. If we can, then, ascertain when the Gospel teaches the pardon of the sinner, and his adoption into the family of God, we shall know when the Spirit tells him these things. The Gospel never tells the unbelieving and disobedient that their sins are pardoned. The Gospel says the man that believes not shall be damned. The Spirit can never be made to contradict this. The gospel not only teaches that the man who believes not shall be condemned, but also teaches that the man who obeys not the gospel shall be condemned and punished. (See 2 Thess. i. 7-9.) The Spirit never will teach different from this. How then does the matter stand? Just in this way: the gospel tells the man (and this man only) that if he will believe and obey it, he shall be saved.

The Spirit never contradicting, but always being in harmony with the gospel, says, "He that believes and obeys the gospel shall be saved."

That we may be enabled to advance still further in this investigation, we will state that certain points, as conditions of remission, are presented in the gospel, which we are called upon to receive and observe, in order that the promised benefits of the gospel be ours.

1. It is clearly stated that we must believe—believe the gospel.

2. Repentance upon all is enjoined.

3. Confession of the name of Jesus is required.

4. Baptism into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit is commanded.

The Scriptures are plain on all the above points. I believe all will agree that if the sinner attend to these things honestly before the Lord, they will lead him out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of light, and bring him, according to the gospel plan, into the church of the living God. It may be safely stated, that none ever require more, though some may enjoin less.

How, then, does the Spirit of God, in connection with our spirit, bear witness in harmony with these points presented in the gospel, that we are the children of God — that we are the accepted of the Father in the Beloved? Notice, then, how the two spirits, or witnesses, unite in their testimony in the conditions or terms of pardon, as arranged above. The first point presented in the conditionality of the gospel is faith.

1. The Spirit of God in the gospel teaches the sinner that he must believe, if he would be saved. The Holy Spirit does not testify that we believe, nor that we do not believe. This is the work of our own spirit. Our spirit, taking cognizance of the state or condition of our mind or heart, decides the faith or lack of faith in our hearts. Our spirit must decide whether we believe or not. When it has been ascertained by a proper investigation that we do believe, the blessing connected with faith we confidently claim. The witness of our spirit we will ever receive. Though all the world were to tell us that we do not believe, having that conscientiousness imparted by the testimony of our spirit, we know that we do believe. Our spirit, investigating the condition of our heart, can easily determine whether we believe with all our heart "that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God," and whether we believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him.

2. The Spirit of God, in the gospel of his grace, requires that we repent of our sins. Our spirit also investigates this point and decides whether we have repented. In order, however, that our spirit be enabled to determine that we have attended to this, or any other injunction contained in the Word of God, it is important that we know what that requirement is. Hence, in order that our spirit be enabled to testify that we have repented, repentance by us must be understood. What, then, is the repentance enjoined in the gospel, and required by the Spirit of the living God?

Some define repentance to be a "godly sorrow for sin." That this is an essential element of repentance there can be no doubt, but is this all that is required in the command to repent? Surely not. Let Paul the Apostle give us a definition of that repentance acceptable in the sight of heaven. "A godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, that needeth not to be repented of" (2 Cor. vii. 10-11.) What, then, was that repentance effected in those of Corinth, of which godly sorrow only constituted a part? It was a reformation of life, a turning away from sin. These persons, we learn, in their repentance put away the evil of their doings. And we may safely affirm that a repentance which turns no one from sin and sinful ways, is not the repentance taught by the Spirit of God in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Having, then, a proper definition of repentance, our spirit examining our hearts and lives, may testify that we have repented, if indeed it be true that with sincere hearts before God we have turned away from sin. If we have forsaken sin, we know it. So correctly, indeed, may our spirit determine this matter, that notwithstanding all the world were to say that we have not reformed, we know for ourselves that we have reformed.

If you, my dear reader, be conscious that many sins once practiced by you have been left off and abandoned, how long, suppose you, would it take the world to convince you that you were mistaken in regard to the truth in this matter? They might make their effort, if it were possible, even to the day of eternity, and then they would fail to change you. You would still believe the witness of your spirit, and rejoice in the consciousness that you have turned away from your sins, and were laboring daily to glorify God in your body and spirit, which are his.

3. The Spirit, as seen in the gospel, teaches and requires us to confess the name of Jesus before men; that we confess with our mouth what we believe in our heart. See Rom. x. 10; Acts viii. 34. Our spirit examines this point also, in order to see if this matter has been regarded as required. If we have confessed Jesus, our spirit, taking cognizance of what we have done, says that we have obeyed this injunction of Heaven, and consequently, this point is settled.

4. We are commanded to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins (Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts ii. 38.) At this point I wish to state, that by the changes and speculations of men, some claiming to be the children of God are compelled to stop in the investigation under consideration. They cannot go beyond the third point in the above arrangement. With them all connected with this fourth point stands in the testimony of men. Their spirits know nothing about the matter. They are not at this point independent of the world for a consciousness of having submitted to God, as enjoined in the gospel. The class to which we refer are readily understood to be those who have been baptized in infancy, before they had any mind or conscience in the matter. I once, in conversation with a friend on this subject, told him that I would lay aside the controversy and the action of baptism—say nothing at all about the way we were commanded to be baptized; and then I wanted him to give me a witness independent of the testimony of men that he could rely upon. He of course failed, having been sprinkled in infancy. Indeed, he was without witness of any kind, that he could call upon at all times to prove that he had obeyed God. In the defence of his submission to this ordinance of heaven, he said, "If my parents were living I could prove it by them." But his parents were dead. Then, says he, "I could prove it by the preacher." But, we replied, suppose the preacher is dead. "Well, then," he said, "I could prove it by the church record." But, we replied, suppose the church record is destroyed, what then? He said he had no further proof. But though he had the benefit of all the above witnesses, the best that he could say would be, that his confidence of having obeyed God rested upon the testimony of men, and not in his own knowledge of the fact. In such a case, the faith or confidence of the individual is neither in the testimony of God's Spirit, nor in the testimony of the spirit of the one claiming to have submitted to the Christian's divine Lord.

But now, if you please, take the case where the individual has been buried with the Lord in baptism, having first believed in the Saviour, turned away from sin, and confessed the name of Jesus before men, and you have a clear case before you. If you, my reader, have, as stated above, submitted to Heaven's King, I am sure that you occupy safe ground. Yes, you stand upon that foundation which can never be moved. Notwithstanding all the opposers of the kingdom of God were to tell you that you have not submitted to God, you know for yourself, independent of all others, that you have obeyed the Lord.

But, in conclusion, let me inquire, where can any man doubt, in regard to the pardon of his past or alien sins, and his adoption into God's family, and his right to claim God as his Father, and to look to Jesus as his elder brother?

When the Spirit of God says to the sinner, "If you will believe with all your heart what the gospel teaches, repent of all your sins, confess with your mouth the Lord Jesus, and be buried with your Saviour in baptism, to come forth to live a new life, you shall be saved;" and on the other hand, your spirit says, "Lord, I do believe, I have repented of my sins, I have confessed the name of Jesus, and have obeyed God in baptism"—"have been baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit"—in such a case, where is the room for doubt? If we doubt at all, it must be by setting aside the testimony of the Spirit of God, as found in the gospel, or by rejecting the testimony of our own spirit, or by refusing to believe either of them. We cannot see how any man can doubt for a single moment, who has faith in what God has revealed, and can at all rely upon his own consciousness of having done what God has commanded. May we all become better and more acquainted with God's system to save us, and better acquainted with ourselves, and from the heart do the will of our Father in heaven, that we may have the assurance of our acceptance with God here, and finally be received into the everlasting kingdom of our God above, is the sincere desire of my heart.

J. R. L.

PHILOSOPHY, DOGMATISM, SCHISM.

We are painfully informed by letter and the press, that "Bro. W. S. Russell" has, by his dogmatic and speculative theorizings, divided the church in Jacksonville, Illinois, causing 100 members to recede from it; and retaining on his speculative basis 108 members! This schismatic dogma which he has adopted and defended is the following:—"When the Spirit is declared to do this or that, the primary significance of such language is, that the Spirit accomplishes whatever is predicated of him, IN HIS OWN PERSON, AND BY HIS OWN PERSONAL PRESENCE, without the intervention of secondary instrumentalities." The Holy Spirit is, then, the missionary of Christ, not in the person of the Apostles—not in the person of any preacher, but "IN HIS OWN PERSON," alike a missionary to the world and to the church.

Where there is no preacher, but merely the written gospel in the hand of the sinner, in that case, the Holy Spirit himself makes a special visit to the sinner, and by an actual impact, indelibly prints or writes the gospel upon his understanding, his conscience, and his heart; and thus regenerates him by a special influence, or power invincible, or—physically, opening the sinner's understanding, conscience, and heart, to receive and embrace it. This dogma, opinion, or speculation, call it what you please, must, in your opinion, be affirmed, proclaimed, developed, argued, or debated in the sinner's spiritual court of oyer and terminer, before he can understand, appreciate, or entertain it, to any spiritual, converting, or regenerating power or efficacy. And this is called "preaching the gospel!"

Now, be it emphatically stated, that, whether this philosophy be true or false, the statement of it, as preliminary or necessary to the illumination, conviction, conversion, sanctification, or salvation of a sinner is wholly destitute of Apostolic authority or precedent. It is, therefore, unsanctified and reprobate. The Apostolic teaching and preaching regards it as reprobate silver, and wholly apocryphal in its whole spirit, front, and bearing. It is unsustained by any Apostolic authority, found in the Apostolic Scriptures. We care not what St. Augustine, St. Athanasius, Saint Calvin, or any other sainted theorist of the Kant or Cousin school may have written, or dogmatically affirmed, in their philosophy on the premises. It is wholly destitute of Apostolic commendation or affirmation. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in times past to the fathers by the prophets," and in these last days by a Son, whom he has constituted Lord of all, has never sanctioned a theoretic or speculative gospel or religion.

The very word gospel is negative of all speculations, theories, and philosophies. It is God's spell, or word of life eternal, declarative of fact and deeds spiritual, divine and everlasting in their import, bearings, and influences upon the person, character, and destiny of man. It is the power of God to salvation to every one who cordially receives it; and, consequently, worthy of universal acceptance. Its whole spirit is the spirit of union, communion, and co-operation—in reference to an everlasting empire, and in perfect union with the three personalities of Jehovah Elohim. It is a development of Divinity in union with fallen humanity, and adapted to it as light to the eye, or music to the ear.

Amongst the speculative dogmata to this theory of spiritual influence we select a few dogmatic assertions:—"Spirit operating through the word, is wholly unscriptural language, and is purely theoretical in its character." Of course he reprobates in these words—the idea of the spirit working in us or upon us through, or by, the word. Indeed, the idea is, in various forms, reprobated by our young friend. He will have the spirit to work upon man—sinful, fallen man, not through the word, but without the word; that is, by positive impact and contact or impression of the Spirit. That this is his position, is most evident from such assertions as the following:—"So long as the world perseveres in remaining the world, as sinful and God opposed, the Spirit can gain no access to it nor convince it" (p. 437.) The world, then, is beyond the power of the Spirit! How, then, is the world to be converted? He explains himself in the words following:—"But there is a point of transition, when the man begins to leave the world and commences to seek the kingdom of God, while as yet, strictly, he belongs to neither." This state he represents by twilight, "which is neither night nor day, but a mingling of both" (p. 437.) The sinner begins in this twilight, and then the Spirit comes to his assistance! But through what instrumentality? Neither light nor darkness—but through "twilight!" Is not, then, twilight a means to an end? Does God prefer twilight? Alas for such philosophy—for such theology, or Christology!

But he gives another illustration:—"Just as our Constitution says, that only a citizen has a right in our courts, yet it permits those same courts to admit the petition of him who desires to become a citizen. Thus actually granting by anticipation some of the rights of citizenship to the alien, to enable him to become a citizen!"

Why some of the rights of a Christian should be given to an alien to enable him to become a Christian, comes not within my speculative reasonings, nor my Bible readings! I must wait for some new light upon these premises. To balance the account, he says:—"Spirit operating through the word is wholly unscriptural language, and is purely theoretic in its character" (p. 438.) This is tantamount to settling a controversy, by affirming—"You are in error as well as myself." Poor logic! Worse theology! But we cannot admit this settlement of the debate or of the differences. While the identical words "Spirit operating through the word" do not occur in this form, it is scriptural in another form. The Saviour prayed for his disciples, saying to his Father:—"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is the truth" (Jno. xvii. 17)—"purifying, their hearts by faith" (Acts xv. 9.) To the same effect Peter says:—"Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth," "Born again, not of corruption, but of incorruptible seed"—"by," or "through the Word of God, which lives and abides for ever;"—"and this is the word which by the gospel is preached to you." This is not our theory, but it is our faith. See 1 Peter i. 23-25:—"Where no vision is the people perish."

Since the first act of the scene in the creation drama to the intercessory prayer of the Author and Founder of the faith, reported by the beloved John, all the illuminating, purifying, sanctifying, regenerating influences of the Spirit have been through the instrumentality of his own word. Well said the sweet bard of Israel—"Thou, O Lord! hast magnified thy word above all thy name."

In the 119th Psalm we have, under the caption of every letter in the Hebrew alphabet, eight lines, or verses; and in each of these we have a commendation of the Word of God under the name of "the word," "the law," "the testimony," "the statutes," "the judgments," "the commandments," "the precepts." In all, we have one hundred and seventy-six commendations of the Oracles of God in one of the songs of Old Zion. In contrast with these testimonies of the Holy Spirit, it is somewhat startling, to a well cultivated ear, to hear Bro. Russell say, "When the Spirit is declared to do this or that, the primary significance of such language is that the Spirit accomplishes whatever is predicted of him in his own person, and by his own personal presence, without the intervention of secondary instrumentalities." This is one of W. S. Russell's oracles. This is an inspiration above and beyond all the visions and revelations and teachings of the Divinely inspired writers of the Christian Scriptures. And in direct antagonism to the Reformer Nehemiah, who, in his address to the God of Israel, said—"O Lord, many years didst thou forbear them" (thy people) "and thou didst testify against them by the Spirit in thy prophets, yet they would not give ear, therefore, thou gavest them into the hand of the people of the land" (Nehemiah ix. 30.)

We presume to say that the Lord Jesus Christ fully understood and comprehended the person, mission, and work of the Holy Spirit; and that "the holy men of old" spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Let us, then, hear from them a few words. The Lord in his intercessory prayer, addressing his Father in behalf of his disciples, said:—"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is the truth." Why did he not say, according to Brother Russell, Sanctify them through the Spirit, for thy Spirit alone without truth, can sanctify a disciple or convert a sinner!

But let us patiently hear other testimonies from the Apostolic documents. Let us consult the Acts of the Apostles—speaking as the Spirit gave them utterance. When the unbelieving Jews heard Peter, "they were pierced to their hearts, and said to Peter and to the rest of the Apostles—men and brethren, what shall we do?" How did Peter respond? Did he say—wait for the Spirit, until he makes you a special visit? No such thing—But he responded—"Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Were not faith and repentance in this case anterior to the reception of the Holy Spirit?

And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying:—"Save yourselves from this untoward generation." What was the result? "They gladly received his word and were baptized." He did not say, wait till the Holy Spirit works faith in your hearts—or till the Holy Spirit enters your hearts; for he, without any instrumentality, will enter your hearts and write his gospel upon them, and then, and only then, can you believe and repent, for the remission of your sins." This would be another gospel!

This new gospel—of spiritual impact upon spirit, is as cold as death, and, therefore, never quickened into spiritual life man, woman, or child, so far as the Apostles have reported progress in their labours. Spiritual impact, or impressions, without faith in the testimony of the Apostles of Christ, is a metaphysical whim of injurious tendency, and without aid or countenance from any heaven inspired man.

"Means to ends," are as old as the creation of the universe. They are as necessary in recreation as in creation—in regeneration as in generation. It is the most eminently prominent fact in the records of the Bible from the first to the last period of Sacred History. "By his spirit he has garnished the heavens, his hand has formed the crooked serpent," or the milky-way. His Spirit and his hands have founded the universe. So the poetry of Job indicates. Peter, too, affirms that "by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing (or consisting) out of the water, and in the water, by which the world that then was, being overwhelmed with water, perished." "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word, are kept in store, reserved for fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. He can create and He can destroy, by his omnipotent word. Where the word of a king is, there is power; and where the word of God, the King of kings is, there is omnipotence. Naked spirit working upon or manipulating naked spirit, is nowhere affirmed in the inspired annals of the universe. It is only extant on the metaphysics of speculative and peculative philosophers.

We cannot but regret to see a mind we once esteemed full of promise, dwarfing itself by the baseless visions of a dreamy philosophy—a philosophy falsely so-called.

In the Common Version it reads:—"Beware lest any man spoil (or make a prey of you) through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments (or elements) of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. ii. 9-10.)

In the Lord's intercessory prayer, he emphatically uses these words: "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is the truth." There is, indeed, no sanctification, properly so-called, but through the truth, "no sanctification of spirit" without "the belief of the truth"—that is the gospel. The gospel believed is the power of God unto (or in order to) "salvation." Hence, the grace of God precedes faith, repentance, baptism, the remission of sins, and the residence of the Holy Spirit as the Holy Guest in the heart of the Christian!

We build on a sure foundation when we affirm that—the grace of God is the originating cause, the sacrifice of Christ the meritorious cause, faith, repentance, and baptism, the instrumental causes of a sinner's salvation—the fruits of which are righteousness, holiness, and peace.

We do not wonder, that some of the readers of the speculations of Bro. Russell have come to the conclusion that he maintains that true believers may yet work miracles, and that this power is still needed and may be yet expected. I have not seen this in these identical words, yet I confess that my fears have been, and yet are, that his progress is in that direction. His positive and dogmatic confidence in his own intuitions, and his philosophy of spiritual influence, are evidently in that direction, and that he is not one of us, is too manifest to be doubted by any discriminating and attentive reader of the outpourings of his dogmata. He has turned aside into vain janglings, and cannot legitimately be regarded as one of us. He is evidently now a schismatic, and as such, cannot be esteemed and regarded as a brother in communion with us.

A schismatic, or, as sometimes called, a heretic, was found in the churches planted by the Apostles; concerning these, he spoke in decided terms. Paul, to Timothy and Titus, gave directions in such cases (see 1 Timothy, vi. 5, Titus iii. 10, &c.) Nothing strange, or unprecedented in the Apostolic age, has happened to us. There was "an empty and deceitful philosophy," bold enough to withstand Paul and his associates. That same spirit yet lives. And no fleshly relation, no worldly consideration, no partial or special regard, could induce a true Christian to wink or connive at any one who will, in the pride or vanity of his own opinion, divide and scatter the family of Christ, contrary to all the teachings and preachings and exhortations of the Holy Apostles, and all this to make room for his cherished dogmatism.

He gives us his position in his own philosophical terminology. He first selects as a topic—"The spirit shall convince the world." He objects to "a round-about theoretical interpretation upon this direct and unqualified language, which explains it as meaning that the Spirit accomplishes this conviction only through the word." He adds, "there is no such declaration as this in Scripture." "Spirit operating through the word" is wholly unscriptural language, and is purely theoretical in its character. The very opposite of this, indeed, would be more in accordance with Bible ideas, and the truer doctrinal declaration would be—the word operates through the Spirit; for Paul, Ephesians i. 22, speaks of "obeying the truth through" (by means of) "the Spirit." "When the Spirit is declared to do this or that, the primary significance of such language is, that the Spirit accomplishes whatever is predicted of him in his own person, and by his own personal presence, without the intervention of secondary instrumentalities." Such is the marrow and fatness of his adopted theology.

The words used by our young philosopher in this case, to say the least, are quite as theoretical as those which he repudiates. And this is quite a "round-about theoretical interpretation upon the direct and unqualified language which explains it as meaning that the word accomplishes this conviction only through the Spirit." And with him we may add—"There is no such declaration as this in Scripture." This beating the air is rather a waste than a redeeming of time.

The word operating through the Spirit—"the word the cause, and the Spirit the means"—is a trifling with the words of the Lord's prayer, John xvii. 17, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."

From the first act of the drama of creation to the last, the Author and Builder of the universe employed his Word, and not his Spirit, as the instrument. This is not only a palpable fact, but a most significant one.

All power known to man in nature, providence, or grace, is resolved, and only resolvable, into pure will. This is power absolute, to speak philosophically. Beyond this there is no definite or definable power. Hence, Jehovah Elohim, in the grand drama of creation, exclusively employed the imperative mood. And in the same mood he calls and "commands the things that be not," as though they actually existed.

Such is the sublimity of the divine conception, in contrast or antithesis with all Grecian, Roman, or Anglican conceptions. "Let there be light, and light was," and is, and evermore shall be, while the volition that gave it birth and being is yet unchanged.

The ne plus ultra, or the grand and final ultimatum of the creation drama, as far as revealed in Holy Writ, is the creation of a new heaven and a new earth, in which righteousness, holiness, loveliness, and happiness shall flourish in unfading beauty and glory.

But while the remedial system continues extant—and that must be till the Lord returns—no change of dispensation or administration is promised; and therefore none is conceivable. Bro. Russell's day dreams of a new age of miracles, which I am informed he preaches, is a pleasing dream to a sickly and desponding heart; but it is a dream and no more: and such is his newly vamped and dressed speculation on spiritual impact or contact, in order to a new heart, a new spirit, and a new life.

His recent readings have been unfortunate. His plea for miracles is rather an alarming symptom; still it is borrowed from Rome, and therefore, there is some hope that he may restore it to the real owner. His German readings have not been fortunate. The facts, precepts, and promises of the Divine Teacher, without any such empty, imaginative, and deceitful philosophy, constitute the marrow and fatness of the word of life, and are all-sufficient to make the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished for every good word and work.

We know no man "after the flesh," and still less those "who give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines concerning demons," and who assume that if we had more faith we could work miracles and cast out demons, as did the Apostles to sustain and maintain their commission. When any one allows his idealities to riot in such excesses and extravagances, it is our painful and sorrowful duty to remonstrate as publicly as the brother or alien who gives out, prints, and publishes such visions and imaginations.

His positions, expressed in his own words, are these:—"We cannot have one theory of spiritual influence for the Christian and another for the sinner. If the Spirit operates through the word in conversion, it must operate in the same way in the sanctification of the Christian; and then how unmeaning do the strong expressions of the New Testament become which speak of the Spirit dwelling in man, and making man his temple and habitation! Again he adds, "He always works internally, and that is never called the Spirit's influence which is exerted merely through secondary agencies." These are his own definitive words. They are perspicuous, definite, and precise, and quite intelligible. It is, then, strongly affirmed as a fact, true and veritable, that the Holy Spirit alike positively enters into the heart of saint and sinner, and by actual impact, or by positive impression, operates immediately, without any instrumentality, or means, upon the naked spirit of man; just as the potter's hand manipulates or moulds a vessel out of the dead cold clay!

Again he affirms, "that that is never called the Spirit's influence which is exerted merely through secondary agencies." This "merely" is, in his style, out of place. When Jesus says:—"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth" (John xvii. 17); he ought not, according to this theory, to have added—"through thy truth," for that indicates an indispensable instrumentality. He certainly presumes not to say that "through the truth" does not indicate any instrumentality! And if he admits that sanctification is consummated without the knowledge and belief of the truth, then the Saviour's views and his views are in direct and positive antagonism. It would require more than any miracle reported in the New Testament to reconcile his theory with the teachings of our Saviour on the premises.

The conclusion of this intercessory prayer makes "the declaration of the Father's name," or character, indispensable to the enjoyment of the love of God on the part of saint or sinner. It is in these words:—"I have declared to them thy name and will declare it;" in order to, or, "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them, and I in them" (John xvii. 26.) Without faith in such a declaration of love could we by any possibility enjoy it?

"We cannot have one theory of spiritual influence for the Christian and another for the sinner." Hence, we affirm that the Holy Spirit works through or by the gospel upon saint and sinner, and upon neither but through or by the word, preached and believed.

But circumstances insuperable command me to lay down my pen for the present. A. C.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

In the Gospel by Matthew it is written, Jesus put the following questions to the Pharisees—"What think ye of Christ? whose Son is he? They say unto him, the son of David. How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If David then call him Lord, how is he then his son? And no man was able to answer him a word; neither durst any man, from that day forth, ask him any more questions" (xxii. 42.)

It is very evident the Jews, as a nation, expected the Messiah, who should be a mighty one, "whose name should be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace" (Isaiah ix. 6)—thus picturing to themselves the return of those days when they lived prosperously, and all nations acknowledged their supremacy. They felt their need of The Christ, i. e. The Anointed One, whom they understood to be the promised Messiah or Deliverer. They were living under the Roman yoke, which, in many particulars, was not easy to be borne; consequently, they drank in largely those promises which spoke of, or shadowed forth, the coming of him who should sit on David's throne, reign victorious, deliver them from the thralldom of foreign rule, and establish a kingdom, if not the greatest on earth, certainly not the least—a kingdom that should have no end. The Saviour, knowing as he did what their expectations were, very properly put the questions, "What think ye of Christ? whose Son is he?"

Unhappily for the Jews, they dwelt upon those parts of the ancient Scriptures which spoke of things so much desired by them, that they overlooked other portions which as certainly referred to humility of birth, sorrow, care, suffering, and death. Hence they could not understand that he must suffer before he was glorified. Jesus subsequently said to the two disciples going to Emmaus, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" (Luke xxiv. 25, 26.) Isaiah speaks very plainly concerning the sorrow, humiliation, suffering, and death of Messiah; then of his glory, riches, and honor; yet they did not understand that their Deliverer was to be a sufferer before he was glorified; nor could they understand how he was David's son and David's Lord. Hence the Saviour's question put them to silence.

Jesus said he was the Son of God, and they knew him to be the son of Mary; and neither understanding the Prophets, nor the purposes of God in redemption, they could not harmonize these two facts, and so rejected him as their Messiah, finally putting him to death for having made the assertion. The Jews are correct types of too many who live in this enlightened age, who suppose that truth can be measured by a yard-stick, and testimony proved by weight and measure. The decrees of Jehovah are sure—the promises and threatenings of the Lord are certain; and although they may not be so clear as we might desire, nor so evident that we could not disbelieve them even if we would, yet they may be implicitly and confidently relied upon, if we would but exercise more faith and less reason, believing unreservedly in the wisdom, power, and goodness of God. It does, however, clearly appear, that Jehovah promised a Deliverer, the Messiah, who should control the mind, subdue the heart, and ultimately redeem body, soul and spirit. This the Jews did not desire, would not believe, and therefore could not accept. They thought differently about Christ—they wanted a King, a Ruler, a Mighty One, whose name and power should be felt over the whole world; consequently they reasoned according to their notions, repudiating the testimony which God had given by his Prophets, and finally rejecting Messiah himself. But Jehovah approved him, raising him from the dead, and exalting him to his own right hand, there to reign until his foes become his footstool. The Apostle Peter said, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses: therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear" (Acts ii. 32, 33.) The Apostle Paul says that the believer has redemption "through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins"—"for in him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete in him." He was "delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification;" and "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow; of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 9.)

Reader, what think you of Christ?—whose Son is he? Do you believe that he is the Son of God, the Saviour of the world? If not, on what grounds do you reject the testimony of God? Is it because you cannot understand how God was manifest in the flesh—how he suffered, bled, and died? Rest assured, in the first place, God did not suffer, bleed, and die; yet most certainly was manifest in the flesh. Hear the news from Heaven's heralds, singing "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will toward men." Why? "For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii. 11.) If you regard testimony, listen to Jehovah introduce his Son. "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he (John the Baptist) saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo, a voice from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Mat. iii. 16.) If you believe in the existence of God, the great Creator of all things, you need not doubt for one moment that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." It may be that you cannot understand it, and no wonder, for great is the mystery of godliness : God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory (1 Tim. iii. 16.) It would be madness to give up so noble, so holy a theme, because we are unable to comprehend it. If we were to banish from our minds all that we cannot fully comprehend and clearly understand, might we not — or rather, should we not—be compelled to give up the greater part of our present knowledge, and sink into degrading ignorance of God, the world we live in, and of ourselves? Can we fully define the properties of matter, mind, soul, and spirit? I think not. And who doubts that man is possessed of these? Can we understand how, by the word of Jehovah, light shone out of darkness—how He caused the earth to bring forth grass, and the trees their respective fruits—how He created the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air; and having reserved the grandest of all His works, to complete the order, and to stamp with dignity and power all other operations, He formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into him the breath of life, whereby he became a living soul.

If such creative power be ascribed to God, who can rationally doubt His power, or call into question His wisdom, when, to redeem a guilty world—the blood of bulls, and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer, mingled with all the self-righteousness the world could produce, having failed—He took upon himself the form of a servant, passed by the nature of angels, and appeared in the fashion of a man, humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. This certainly is an exhibition of matchless love; “for scarcely for a righteous man will one die, yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die; but God commended his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us” (Rom. v. 7.) Have we not great cause to think highly of Christ, and to say, if God had not reconciled the world to himself, no ransom could have been found for the guilty? What think you of Christ? Is he a Prophet, Priest, and King? Yes, he is the Prophet of all prophets, the Priest of all priests, and the King of all kings.

Moses said, “A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you: and it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people” (Acts iii. 22.) On the Mount of Transfiguration Peter, James, and John heard a voice from heaven saying, “This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him” (Mat. xvii. 5.) To hear Jesus is to hear the Apostles and Evangelists, who have written that we might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that believing we might have life through his name. We must turn our attention to the teaching of Jesus, and mark distinctly his lessons and example. We see the very first act of public life was to fulfil all righteousness; he submitted to the baptism of John, thereby acknowledging the ordinance to be from heaven, and not of men; as well as presenting to his followers an example of piety, reverence, and subjection. His prophetic character was remarkable, not only as a teacher, but as a foreteller of future events. The past, present, and future were alike clear and plain to him. Let us notice an instance or two of his foreknowledge. “And he said unto them, behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, the Master saith unto thee, where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready. And they went and found as he had said unto them (Luke xxii. 10.) “When Jesus came near the city of Jerusalem he wept over it, and said, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave within thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation” (Luke xix. 41.) This prophecy was fulfilled to the very letter by Titus, the Roman General, in the year 70. Josephus informs us, that Titus built a wall around the whole circumference of the city, in order that he might compel the Jews to surrender by famine. The wall was nearly five miles in length, and was furnished with thirteen castles or towers, having been completed in the short space of ten days. Titus gained his object; the Jews were defeated, their temple was literally destroyed, and the very ground was ploughed up on which the temple stood.

Jesus said, "The Son of Man shall be betrayed into the hands of men, and they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again" (Mat. xvii. 22.) Judas, one of his disciples, sold him for thirty pieces of silver, and delivered him up to the Jews; but, repenting of what he had done, he took back the money, saying, "I have betrayed innocent blood," and went out and hanged himself. They led Jesus forth to judgment, and thence to Calvary, where they crucified him. He was buried in Joseph's tomb, but God raised him again on the third day, and showed him openly; not, indeed, to all the people, but to chosen witnesses. Thus not only fulfilling his own predictions, but accomplishing what all the Prophets had spoken concerning Messiah, the Christ.

His teaching was remarkable, his manner and matter astonishing every one who heard him. Even his enemies admitted that "never man spake like this man." He spake like one having authority, and not as the scribes. Hear him in that pattern of sermons. What a flow of love, of feeling, of eloquence bursts forth when he utters the language—"Blessed are the peace-makers—blessed are the pure in heart—blessed are the merciful—blessed are the meek—blessed are the poor in spirit, for their's is the kingdom of God" (Mat. v.) He enforced the duty of forgiveness and forbearance, without which no disciple can truly love God or his neighbour. Alas! how short we come, and how important the question, What think you of Christ? He forgives us our trespasses, he pardons our iniquities, and blots out all our sins. Not, indeed, by "works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit" (Titus iii. 5.)

Reader, have you thus been pardoned? Have you thus been renewed by water and the Spirit? Have you put on Christ? Have you been buried with him by baptism into death? If not, think on Christ—ask yourself whose Son he is—and then let those words of the Great I Am, move you to hear Jesus as your Prophet and Teacher, in whatsoever he shall say unto you.

The priesthood of Aaron was changeable, because death suffered them not to remain; but the Great High Priest, even Jesus, hath an unchangeable priesthood, because death had no dominion over him; wherefore he is able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us. He is the Mediator of the New Covenant, which he endorsed in sorrow, suffering, and death, ratifying it with his own blood: for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. "But Jesus, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God. Let us then draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water" (Heb. x. 22.) What think you of Christ? Is he the kind of priest you want? Do you feel your need of an Advocate before the throne of God? Can you trust the efficacy of his blood? Do you believe that he is the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world? If so, have you applied that blood to your case? Has your heart been sprinkled from an evil conscience, and your body been washed with pure water? If not, remember there is no other sacrifice, nor any other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved. There is no other name, no other sacrifice, no other priest; therefore, be persuaded to flee from darkness into his marvellous light, and from the power, and dominion, and slavery of Satan, into the peace, and joy, and liberty wherewith Christ makes his people blest and free.

What think you of Christ? Is he your King? Does he reign over you? Are his laws your delight? Are you swift to obey what he commands? Are you ready at all times to say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth?" Or, are you opposed to this Ruler? Be assured, your opposition will not alter one decree of Jehovah, for he has said, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. Therefore, kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him" (Psalm ii.) Pilate asked Jesus if he were the King of the Jews; Jesus answered, Thou sayest it (I am) but my kingdom is not of this world. No, the kingdom of God is a kingdom of righteousness, of joy, and of peace. Hence Jesus did not come with earthly pomp and fading grandeur, but with humility, grace, and truth. Wicked Jews and Gentile sinners reviled him, saying, Let Christ, the King of Israel, descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. But not so: it was to bleed and die that the Lord of angels came. Hence he could not gratify them by any such evidence, but remained on the cross, bearing their reproach, until "it was finished," when he gave up the ghost. Now he sways the sceptre—now he wields the sword of power—now he is honored, and all power in heaven and earth is given to him; he is seated at his Father's right hand, there to reign till all his enemies be made his footstool. This Saviour and King has sent ambassadors into every realm and to every creature, with the joyful tidings, that "he who believeth and is baptized, shall be saved," whilst he who refuses to believe in God's Anointed One, shall be condemned.

What think you of Christ? Is he your Prophet, your Teacher, your Priest, your Mediator, your Ruler, your King? If not, surrender at once, body, soul, and spirit, to him who died the just for the unjust, in order that he might redeem to himself a people who should be zealous for good works, and present them faultless before his Father's throne. If you are not under the government of this Anointed One, it is high time that you began to inquire into the facts concerning his life, teaching, miracles, death, and resurrection. Is he, or is he not, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, the Christ, or the Anointed One of the Father? Surely God has spoken the truth, when he said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"—and to confirm this testimony mighty miracles were performed, such as cleansing the leper, healing the sick, giving feet to the lame, causing the dumb to sing, opening the eyes of the blind, stilling the raging tempest, feeding the hungry, and raising the dead to life. God's word was further confirmed in the resurrection of Jesus, and the proclamation of the gospel by his Ambassadors, "God also bearing them witness both with signs, and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will." Indeed, there is every evidence presented that any reasonable man requires, and proof in abundance to any sincere seeker after truth.

If we were to ask the Prophets and the Fathers what they thought of Christ, we should hear Moses replying in the Book of Deuteronomy (xviii. 18)—"I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I command him." No doubt the prophet alluded to in this passage was the Christ (See Acts iii. 22.) "Moses chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward." "And God said to Abraham, I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee" (Gen. xvii. 7.) The Apostle Paul applies this promise to Christ. He says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; he saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. iii. 16.) That Abraham expected something more than the land of Canaan is clear, "for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. xi. 10.) Job says, "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God" (xxv. 19.)—David says, "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (Psalm cx.) Isaiah prophesies, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder ; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace" (ix. 6.)

Doubtless, too, the Fathers and the Prophets had strong faith in the promised seed of the woman, who was to bruise the serpent's head, and thereby wound a vital part, which should eventually end in death. The Apostle says — "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Jesus has conquered the deadly foe in his own domain, having burst the bands of death. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." He will come again, and bruise Satan under his people's feet ; for as he was raised from the dead by the Spirit of God, so shall his people be, when everlasting thanks will be given to God, through Jesus Christ the Lord.

As the time approached for the fulfilment of the promise, all men were musing in their hearts respecting John, whether he was the Christ or not ; and they sent Priests and Levites to him, enquiring who he was. He confessed that he was not the Christ, but that he was sent before him to prepare the way. Shortly afterward John pointed to Jesus, and called upon the multitude to "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." Jesus entered upon his mission, and the people said, "He teacheth as one having authority, and not as the Scribes." Certain officers were sent to apprehend Jesus, but his words so affected them that they returned and said, "Never man spake like this man." When, by a few words he had stilled the storm, his disciples said, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?" His whole life was devoted to acts of benevolence and deeds of mercy ; and although the hungry had been fed and the sick healed, and not a single instance appears in which any were sent empty away, yet, at the instigation of the chief priests and the rulers, the people cried "Away with him, crucify him." But on the day of Pentecost many sadly mourned their great mistake, when Peter told them that "God had made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." They cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do ? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized" (Acts ii. 36.) Whatever might have been their opinions previously, they thought differently now, concerning the Anointed One ; they gladly acknowledged him to be their Lord and Christ.

Reader, this is the step we recommend you to take. If you have not given yourself to Jesus — if you have not honored his institutions, nor kept his laws, at once acknowledge Jesus as your Lord and Sovereign Ruler ; let him lead and guide you by his word, and whatsoever he commands that do, and then he will give you a crown of life, that will never fade away.

R. MUMBY.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE CHURCHES.—No. IV.

PERSEVERANCE.

To build and launch a vessel only to leave her in port, is not the wisest of things. To plough the soil and sow the seed, without watching and waiting for the harvest, is rather unfarmerlike. Were such things done by sailors and landmen, the doers should find the sum total of the profit of their labor in their own disappointment and the scorn of their fellows. But men are not so unwise in the things of this life. Human folly shows itself in such absurd proportions only in relation to the life to come. There it is that professing themselves to be wise men become fools. The variety of utterly inadequate endeavours to the securing of the great good which are constantly being put forth by men of every clime and age, evinces that human wisdom in this respect, is merest folly. But unfortunately this foolishness does not confine itself to the unconverted. Even after a man has escaped the mists of human complications, and finds himself in the clear atmosphere of the great fairway to heaven, he not unfrequently exhibits his old follies in new phases. He begins well, but ends ill ; if he can be said to end at all what he has begun. He attempts a good thing, but does it so badly as almost to invert the proverb, that "what is worth doing, is worth doing well." Hence the constant failures, the many abortions of effort, the ever recurring changes that characterize the individual and associated life and labour of Christian men.

Is there any remedy for this ? Are we to account it one of the fixed characteristics of our present imperfect and changeful state ? Are we to account it of a kind with the many abortions under which all nature labors ? The first months of the year give promise of an early Spring, but soon the gardens are strewn with the fallen frost-bitten buds ; and further on branches that were white with blossom yield scarce a piece of fruit ! Is it under a similar and equally unalterable law, that the intentions of a good man's life far outnumber his accomplished efforts ? Are we philosophically, if not stoically, to make up our minds to allow as things we cannot help, talents lost for want of using, resolutions unperformed for lack of courage, arrangements carefully considered but never practiced, efforts begun but seldom consummated ? By no means.

We cannot alter the laws of nature, and it is well we cannot ; but it is left us to determine whether we shall act nobly or ignobly under their general operation. By different action under the same laws, one farmer has a good crop while another has a poor one. And in the same way, one branch on the true vine bears much fruit while another bears but little.

But what in innumerable instances forms a principal cause of unfruitfulness, is the want of sufficient perseverance. With many the deficiency is not in effort, but in continuance of effort. It were better in many instances to have fewer efforts. One well-sustained endeavour is better than a dozen unfinished schemes. Those who have been notably wise in winning souls, have very generally been characterized as persons who had made up their mind to effect a given issue. No amount of discouraging circumstances seemed to have any power to prevent the prosecution of the cherished enterprise. One particular unconverted companion, friend, or relative, has engaged the thoughts of some such Christian ; the idea occupying the mind, becomes a desire and then a purpose, and forthwith action is taken. A word is fitly spoken ; but apparently in vain. It is taken unkindly. But still the heart, nerved by divine sympathy and heavenly resolve, retires not from the conflict but for strength and prayer, and the first recurring opportunity is again seized. According to circumstances the living voice is aided by epistle and tract : or by invitation to the preaching or church meeting. Yet all this and much more may for months, or even for years, yield not the least blossom of promise. Still the motto is persevere ; and as in thousands of cases, when for the moment the person who had engaged so much desire, and prayer, and effort, is unthought of, the happy intelligence comes that the rebel has kissed the sceptre of mercy.

If, then, in such apparently hopeless cases, perseverance is at last so rewarded, how much larger might be the number of Zion's converts, were all her sons and daughters to exercise but ordinary continuance in well-doing ! We are persuaded it is for lack of this, to a great extent, the churches do not see much more fruit of their labor. It seems as if it were expected that a single word, or tract, or discourse, should do the whole work. But any one who knows the number of difficulties that stand in the way of a sinner's full and unreserved decision for Christ, multiplied as these are by family, church, business, and local connections and prepossessions, must be aware that in most cases it is only after a hard and protracted struggle that a full surrender can be accomplished.

Knowing this, as all of us do who have attained the liberty wherewith Christ emancipates his disciples, we ought to be prepared for the obstacles that prevent a more easily achieved victory. Our resolves and plans, individual and collective, should partake far more largely of the necessary persistency. No war can be waged successfully whose difficulties are not taken into account, and whose prosecutors are not armed with the necessary determination to conquer.

Be it understood, then, and felt and resolved, and let the resolution be as solemn and deep as the heart's own depths, that in order to the successful issue of the life-work of the Christian, perseverance is a primal and perpetual requisite.

It is so, first to the believer's own salvation. The exhortation is no exceptional one, which says, "Cast not away your confidence, which has great recompense of reward, for ye have need of patience — perseverance — that after ye have done ye might receive the promise." And it is only he who, giving all diligence, adds to his faith courage, and to the other virtues of the Christian character superadds that ever most necessary requisite, perseverance, to whom it is said, "For if ye do these things ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

And as with the Christian himself, so with his works of faith and labors of love. If the Lord has said of the believer, "But if he draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him;" he has also said of the laborer, "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." And if we have such warnings to deter us from being hindered in our well-doing, we are not without the most abundant encouragement to the most patient, perseverant continuance therein. But one in this place is enough: — "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Were these things weighed according to their intrinsic weight, the annals of the churches would be saddened with fewer backsliders—the younger membership would be more diligent, constant, and perseverant in their heavenly studies—every branch of ministry would be waited upon with increased tenacity and assiduousness—efforts for the young and the unconverted generally would be greatly more continuous and unwearyed—meetings public and social would show a larger and steadier attendance; and by consequence of the whole, the work done would be far greater in amount, much superior in quality, and greatly more abundant in result. Amen.

Edinburgh,

T. H. M.

SPIRITUALITY OF WORSHIP.

"God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

ALLOW me to present your readers a few reflections made ready to my hand by one who has drank deep at the spiritual fountain of our Lord.

God is a Spirit, and the only devotion compatible with his nature, is that which flows from the souls of his worshippers. In prescribing the ritual part of a religion, he is to be regarded as consulting not the spirituality of his own, but the materiality and infirmities of our nature; as relaxing the demands of his heavenly, to meet the necessities of our earthly. But as his only aim, in thus suspending the requirements which are proper to his nature, is to engage and assist our souls in his service; so the religion which attains this end with the fewest forms, is regarded by him as the most perfect. It is more congenial to his spiritual nature, and less ensnaring to our formality. On this principle it is that the Christian dispensation, which, when compared with the Jewish, ranks so much higher in moral excellence, was assigned to the hands of Jesus to bestow as an incomparable better gift. And of the heavenly state, where devotion is carried to the highest perfection, John informs us that he saw no temple therein: it is dispensed with there, as an unnecessary appendage. The worshippers there are independent of time, and place, and circumstance. By such restrictions they would deem their worship impeded and disfigured. Devotion there, divested of all its earthly vestments, is reduced to its pure essential elements, the soul of religion enters there alone, and hence the superiority and perfection of the worship.

The ritual of the Jews, indeed, prescribed a multitude of perpetually recurring observances. But though burdened with ceremonies, it was highly significant of all that is spiritual and essential to the present economy. That its rites were not necessary to salvation must have been evident to the reflecting Israelites, from the fact that many had been saved before they were prescribed. To secure and vindicate the spirituality of the divine worship was one of its chief and avowed objects. For this the Almighty proclaimed himself a jealous God. Hence, too, the rigorous prohibition of graven images ; the certain and awful punishment which followed every lapse into idolatry ; the frequency with which he directed his prophets to correct their formality by partially disparaging the appointed forms of their service, "desiring mercy and not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings ;" by insisting on the emptiness of ritual worship, unless accompanied by the sacrifice of a contrite spirit ; by reminding them during seasons of captivity and war, when the observance of their rites was not in their power, that if they still retained the piety of the heart, they possessed the essence and core of true religion ; all of which combined to preserve and promote the spirituality of their devotion. Piety, indeed, has always been composed of the same elements, and issued in the same result—the production of spiritual men. For this, the legal economy may be said to have travailed and been in birth. Yet, however laborious the process, and elementary the character it produced, it could be satisfied with nothing less. Disowning and rejecting the formalist as a reproach, it acknowledged for its offspring none who bore not its spiritual impress ; and equally with the gospel, reserved its ultimate rewards for the "Israelites indeed." Over every gate of the temple, it may be said to have exhibited this inscription, "He is not a Jew who is one outwardly ; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh : but he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter ; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

But though that economy contemplated the pure and cordial worship of God, yet spirituality was not its characteristic. It was light only in comparison with the surrounding darkness of ignorance and idolatry. As viewed from heaven its devotion must have appeared remote, laborious, and material. Its name, to be descriptive and appropriate, could only be taken from its ritual character ; hence it is denominated, "the hand-writing of ordinances ;" "the law of commandments contained in ordinances ;" "a figure for the time then present ;" "which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances ;" and for a similar reason its disciples call themselves the circumcision. Each of the supernatural doctrines it taught was veiled. It contained truth only in the seed or the husk. Its most striking and instructive parts were only figures of the true. The law made nothing perfect. It left the Adorable to himself in shadow. Like its own awful and unapproachable veil, it at once contained and concealed ; investing the spiritual with material forms, and placing the glorious in distant obscurity.

But it was only meant for a temporary purpose : being imposed until the time of reformation by Christ. In the execution of his office he gradually repealed the whole ceremonial. Go, said he, and learn what that meaneth ; I will have mercy and not sacrifice ; thus virtually discountenancing the ritual of their religion, he exalted character into supreme importance, implying its independent sufficiency, and the possibility that under a new dispensation it might exist alone. By dispensing with all pomp and state in his own person, and demanding regeneration as the only qualification for the kingdom of God, he taught that religion was henceforth to prove its independence of forms ; that, dismissing all its earthly allies and appendages, it was to rest its claims on its own intrinsic merits ; to walk the earth in unattended majesty, indebted for all its attractions and triumphs to the invisible Spirit alone.

His prediction of the entire destruction of the temple, intimated the approaching purification of religion. The temple was the fixed and only home of the ceremonial institute. During the early history of that institute it had been migratory ; "I have not," saith God, "dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle." The erection of the temple gave to it a locality, consolidation, and repose ; was the appropriate token and promise of stability ; and accordingly around the sacred fane the nation settled and built a home in reliance on that stability. The unqualified prediction of its fall then involved the abrogation of its peculiar rites. The prophecy of its former demolition, only involved the suspension of these rites ; for it was accompanied and even preceded by a promise of its restoration. But Jesus, by announcing the destruction, the utter erasure of the temple from the face of the earth, without any reserve for the future, intimated the irrevocable nature of its fall, the visible repeal of the religion which dwelt in it, and "the bringing in of a better hope by the which we draw nigh unto God."

By announcing that he was greater than the temple, he virtually displaced it with all its contents, and remained himself in the place it had occupied ; and by proclaiming himself "the way, the truth, and the life," he intimated that all the typic rites had found the prototype and fulfilment in himself, and that henceforth all the offices of the church would be absorbed and centered in himself alone. Hitherto the worship of God had been conducted, so to speak, at a distance, believers approaching him only through intermediate forms ; but Jesus annihilated that distance and dispensed with these forms, supplying them with the license of his own name ; he constitutes each of them a spiritual priest, leads them direct to an immediate audience with God, and placing them around the footstool of mercy, commands them to "ask and receive, that their joy may be full." When solicited to decide between the respective merits of the Jewish and Samaritan rituals, he intimated that the time had arrived when the question ceased to be important, since both of them were about to be annulled and superseded ; the hour cometh, said he, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth ; for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

In harmony with this representation, the disciples of Christ are distinguished as the true circumcision, who worship God in the spirit. He introduces them into a church from which he has swept every vestige of the ancient rites. He allows them to restore none of these rites, nor to substitute aught in lieu of them, at the awful peril of his displeasure. When they come into his courts, he requires that nothing be laid upon his altar but spiritual sacrifices ; that nothing appear before him but our spirits communing with his Spirit. He looks for an assembly of human hearts, of naked human hearts ; and when he beholds them engaged, delighted, absorbed in his worship, he contemplates an object far more acceptable than the flaming sacrifice of a whole world.

And the quality of the provision which he has made for his worship, perfectly corresponds with the spirituality of its nature and requirements. He has placed it under the entire superintendence of the Holy Spirit, whose aid he instructed his disciples to consider as absolutely necessary and all-sufficient. A convert from Judaism must have felt an amazing change, in passing from its crowded and pompous ritual to the severe simplicity of the Christian church. In a literal sense, he exchanged the gorgeous magnificence of the temple for the bare and unpretending plainness of an upper room ; and in a spiritual point of view, he did the same. But then, among the new and numerous advantages arising from the transition, it might be said that he found that room to be within the veil. He left the rites to stand in the presence of the God. He emerged from the cloud of incense to find himself alone with the great Spirit of the new dispensation. Likewise also the Spirit, he could say, "helpeth our infirmities." Employed by Jesus, the Divine Spirit whom he departed to send compensates for the loss of material sanctuary, by erecting the soul of the believer into a living temple. Having cleansed and consecrated, and kindled on its altar a sacred fire, he himself condescends to assume the office of conducting its worship. Acting the part of its highpriest and intercessor, he prepares and presents to God the welcome sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart. He calls the thoughts, and affections, and desires away from the world, and conducts them like a band of humble worshippers to the throne of God ; constraining the soul and all that is within it to bless and praise his holy name.

O, righteous Father, for the sake of thy well beloved Son, grant to thy humble servant, and all who may read, through the assistance of thy Holy Spirit, ever present with thy people, the power to render thee the spiritual homage which is thy due.

C. D. H.

PASTORAL OFFICE IN THE AMERICAN CHURCHES.

"I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan" (2 Sam. i. 26.)

THE lament of David over Jonathan slain in the battle, is one of the most pathetic portions of the Old Testament. How gushingly does young David pour forth his manly sorrow for that much loved, faithful friend, whose love towards him was of such a character that it is written, "Jonathan loved him as his own soul"—

"How are the mighty fallen,
And the weapons of war perished."

I am also distressed for Brother Jonathan. I do not mean the valiant son of Saul, whose blood reddened the Mountain of Gilboa. Deeply as one may be touched by his sad story, it is for a living Brother Jonathan that my present sorrow is felt. I mean our Brother Jonathan over the water; the other side of the Atlantic, as the Britons say.

To be explicit, I have read certain letters from America in the British Harbinger, and am thoroughly impressed from what they contain, and from other statements made in past numbers of the Harbinger, that many of the American churches have retrograded from the simplicity of the Gospel.

For instance, take the following extract from the October number of the Harbinger, page 506:—"Our American churches have each their preacher, who is engaged and paid by them, and, of course, monopolizes the speaking in the church, thereby absorbing the time and opportunity which would otherwise result in developing the gems which lie hidden in some rude and unpolished caskets in the church."—Why this is worse than Methodism; for that system of human policy recognizes a strong staff of local preachers, in addition to their paid men. But I would fain hope that there must be some mistake in the matter. It is difficult to suppose that all the American churches are thus placed in dependence on a paid preacher for their spiritual support. Surely this is not the case at Bethany, and in those churches of which our esteemed brethren, Franklin, Fanning, Henshall, and others are members. Yet this practice must have become alarmingly general, or our brother, from whose letter the above extract is taken, would not use the language he does. Speaking of the paid preacher, our brother says, "who, of course, monopolizes the speaking in the church." Does not this statement clearly show the connection between payment of pastors and monopoly of speech?

In New York, things appear in a more favourable light, for by Letter I. inserted in the July Harbinger, we are informed that there are a number of young speakers in the church; but in the same letter it is stated, that "they (the New York church) pay our Bro. Stark, as their pastor, 1200 dollars per year." Thus we find the objectionable practice of paying pastors (contrary to the instructions of Paul to the elders at Ephesus) is in vogue amongst the New York disciples.

However, to return to the letter first quoted from page 506. It is stated that the American brethren, "when particularizing their chief officer, are less timid than our British brethren, to denominate him bishop." But why have a chief officer, and make an invidious distinction between him and his fellow-elders? For I notice there are two elders in the Allegheny church, concerning whom our brother writes—Why not call them both bishops? I fervently trust that the wholesome timidity of the British churches in this respect will always exist; indeed, if it were to be otherwise, the British brethren would just have to eat their own words. No one can attentively read the articles in the Harbinger on the Pastorate, without perceiving that the payment of pastors, and making individious distinctions between them, involves a direct and flagrant contradiction of the principles for which the Disciples both in America and England have so long contended.

Let me notice another practical objection, which is afforded by the same letter. Towards the end the writer says:—"The pastor of this church (Allegheny) has been out West for several weeks; therefore, as no brother felt qualified to address the congregation which usually came, the house was not opened in the evening." "Tell it not in Gath." Here, indeed, is a pretty state of things — a church numbering 200 members, blest with two elders, has to close its meeting-house in the evening because their paid man was away out West!

After that, I should think, the daughters of the Philistines would indeed rejoice, and the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph (1 Sam. ii. 20.)

I think I have a right to protest against this state of things, inasmuch I have, in conjunction with others, for some years past, proclaimed the Gospel and the things concerning the kingdom of God, in this part of the world—the colony of Victoria. We have no paid men, not even an evangelist; and yet we have seen the work of the Lord prospering in our hands.

Let me, then, beseech our American brethren, and particularly the Allegheny church, to suffer my words of friendly criticism and remonstrance.

I can say of Brother Jonathan, "Very pleasant hast thou been unto me." How many precious truths have been unfolded, useful letters inculcated, and stirring sentiments uttered, by our American brethren. I feel personally indebted to them, and therefore the more earnestly implore them not to let their fine gold become dim. S. H. COLES.

Brighton, Victoria.

LOVE.

LOVE, in its purest aspect, is at once the deepest and most exalted feeling of which any being is capable. The mind cannot conceive, the universe cannot contain a nobler element. Nay, God himself, the infinitesource of all wisdom, power, and glory, possesses no higher quality, or one which to the same extent permeates the being of Jehovah. It is a principle girt with true nobility—noble in its origin, noble in its operation, noble in its results, and great because eternal. Its heights unaided man cannot scale, its depths he cannot fathom, its breadth he may not grasp, nor comprehend its nature. Thus wonderful is love! So great is its glory, and so pure its nature, that among the gorgeous palaces, the proud spirits, the high-flown intellects of the world, it finds no fitting abode, no great chamber in which it may be entertained. Once on a time, in an age long past, earth in her primal beauty and innocence was favored by this fair guest—was the undisturbed abode of love. And all was happy then. Man and his Maker met face to face, reciprocating love; and glad was the song he raised, and loud the praise he sang. Beautiful picture! But ah, how soon defaced! Too soon, alas! did joy and confidence give place to fear, glory to gloom, and order and harmony to discord and chaos, until love sickens and sighs as she beholds her once fair home a wreck; and as she sighs looks heavenward, spreads her wings, and — Nay, there is yet a resting place—Enoch walks with God, and she nestles in his bosom awhile, until "he was not, for God took him." And even now, while the heavenly dove lingers, there still is found one place where she may abide, for Noah is found righteous; and with him she rests, and through him she pleads, till his venerable locks are laid with his fathers, and she flies away;—away, through air and clouds, till the eye grows dim with watching, and sight fails to ken her goal. But we have a telescope, powerful, far-reaching, and by its aid we trace her radiant way, her heavenward flight—and as we look, we learn that the dove has returned to the ark—the stream to the fountain—love to the bosom of God, for "God is love."

Justly had the sons of men suffered, if the windows of heaven had been forever shut; ingratitude had then received its due reward. But no! this is not in the nature of love; the great heart of God melts at the sight of perishing humanity, and again He kindles the flame of love, and Abraham is found faithful. Nor does He kindle only, but stoops to fan the flame; and blessed be His name, ever and anon He pours the kindly oil, until the flame widens, and ascends, and radiates: the light is seen, the sound is heard, and sweet is that sound, as it tells of the coming day. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation." Sweet music falling on the ears of weary souls, and causing hope to spring and blossom as of yore, and making animate with joy. And thus burned the love of God, burning without consuming, yet unquenchable, till "in the fulness of time" the climax was reached—the full and abundant glory shining forth through the God-man—"God in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." O, mighty love! O, condescension great! And how it thrills the soul of God's humble child, to know that the moving principle of his new life is God-derived. 'Tis a sweet consolation, while living in the exercise of love, to feel in the image of our Father. May the love of Christ constrain us thus to judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that those who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them and rose again. J. O.

Wigan.

OPEN COUNCIL.

LETTER FROM MRS. CAMPBELL.

Independence, Mo. Nov. 10, 1859.

DR. A. W. CAMPBELL.—Dear brother,—To-day, we arrived at this beautiful city, in the far-off West, not far from the border of Kansas. We were taken to the house, situated near to the church edifice, of Dr. William Stone, one of the sons of the venerated Barton W. Stone. We were warmly greeted—after which we soon repaired to the very commodious house of worship, belonging to the brethren. Mr. Campbell addressed the audience in attendance with much strength and ease, although we had in the morning travelled from Liberty, a distance of twelve miles.

It is just six weeks this afternoon since we left home. Through the watchful care and tender mercies of our Heavenly Father, we have been preserved in health and safety through all our journeyings. I could not give you a tithe of the variety of scenery and circumstances through which we have passed; all of which have been peculiarly pleasant and interesting.

We arrived at the City of St. Louis on the morning of the 1st of October. We were met at the Planter's House by Bro. J. O. Carson, and taken to his residence. Since leaving St. Louis, we have had only two slight showers of rain. The weather all the time has been unusually fine. Bright days of sunshine and balmy zephyrs have blessed us. Indeed, Mr. Campbell has been congratulated, times without number, upon the agreeable state of the weather, in contrast with the cold and bitter blasts he encountered when he last visited Missouri.

In connection with the object of aiding Bethany College to rise above the calamity that befel it, you are fully aware that it is the high aim of your brother, to improve the favourable opportunity of sowing, as he expresses it "broad-cast, some of the good seed of the Messiah's kingdom."

This, in the kind providence of God, he has been permitted to do, with a liberality of soul, and liberty of speech, not surpassed, if equalled, in his younger days. This has excited, not a little, the wonder of his friends, when they think of his labours, both mental and physical, for years past. For my own part, I am constrained to say that "it is the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes." How often, how very often, within the past year, have I been led to think how short-sighted we are, and how limited our vision, in regard to what is best for us. He who, "from seeming evil, is still educing good," has educed a vast amount of good, from what appeared to us, a dark cloud in our horizon, a calamity from which it appeared scarcely possible to rise. The clusters of glory and blessedness that may accrue from it, I am impressed, cannot in time be computed. If the redemption of but one of the race of Adam, from sin and ruin, shall have been accomplished through Bethany College having fallen into ashes and ruin, it will more than recompense the loss. But when I recollect that it has been made the occasion of many thousands hearing the announcement of the gospel during the past year, which might not have been had the calamity not have occurred, I am induced to consider it a blessing in disguise! It is not likely, unless something like this event had happened, that Mr. Campbell, at his advanced age, would have travelled the thousands of miles which he has, and would have spoken with so much earnestness to thousands of his fellow men, upon the all-absorbing themes of the original gospel.

Without the slightest interruption from ill health, or any other cause, he has been able to make the present tour. He has spoken some forty discourses, and has, by special request, addressed four or five academies, male and female, besides his many conversations on the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. Neither speaking nor travelling appears to diminish his strength, which, I hope, will be continued to him throughout the tour.

The places visited, up to the present, are as follow:—St. Louis (where we spent several days, and visited the "Mercantile Library.") We there saw a large stone from the ruins of Nineveh, with one of their idol gods carved upon it; also many other things of interest to us.

From St. Louis, we proceeded to Clarks-ville, Painesville, Louisiana, Frankford, New London, Hannibal, Palmyra, Houston, Shelbyville, Paris, Santa Fe, Mexico, Sturgeon, Huntsville, Chillicothe, St. Joseph, Savannah, Bloomington, Weston, Leavenworth City, Platte City, Camden Point, Smithville, Gilead, Liberty, Independence, Missouri City and Lexington, are our next points. How many other places we are to visit, I am not yet apprised. We shall be governed much by the weather and other circumstances.

I have become acquainted, during my travels, with many excellent brethren and sisters. They are, indeed, to me, innumerable. Many of them are deeply inscribed upon the tablet of my memory, and cherished in my heart. It is said to be a distinguishing feature amongst our brethren, that they "love one another." It is truly a Scriptural characteristic; may it abound more and more!

I wish I could give you a full description of this country. Its spacious fields and open prairies, you cannot imagine. The richness of the soil, the largeness of the growth of the crops of every kind, is remarkable! But above all, the swarms of fellow-beings to be seen everywhere, on public occasions, arrested our wonder. Whence came the troops? was, with me, a question often occurring.

We met with many brethren and friends from Kentucky. My husband remarked, "that Kentucky was the mother of Missouri, as Virginia had been the mother of Kentucky." This State is evidently destined to grow and increase; the soil yields so bountifully for the labor bestowed. To my mind, there appears enough territory in Missouri, were it cultivated, to feed half the United States.

Mr. Campbell's vision has been greatly enlarged in travelling over the new made roads across the prairie. He had not before an adequate idea of their vastness! The prairie on fire, is a grand sight—it can scarcely be imagined. We saw it for miles; sometimes it would appear as though the iron horse was running into it. We were obliged to go by night from Chillicothe to St. Joseph, so that we had a good opportunity of seeing what can never be seen upon our romantic hills!

In Kansas, we visited the City of Leavenworth. Its rapid growth, its many fine houses, its ten thousand inhabitants, with all its comforts and refinements, have not been exaggerated. It looks as though it had been built by magic! Only think of it. I was told by General Enstin that it was just five years since he carried his printing press, and set it up under a large tree, from which he published his paper, the Leavenworth Herald; not a single house being then on the ground upon which the city now stands.

Mr. Campbell, owing to his brethren's house having been burned, preached to a large and attentive audience in the "Stock-ton hall," of that city. That morning a prairie wind visited the city. It lifted the white sand, and blew it about like drifting snow.

On our entering into the city, its contour and beauty, and that of the adjacent country around, brightened by the setting Sun, were, I confess, to my vision, exceedingly pleasing. There was a soft mellow-ness on the face of the heavens that gave a charming appearance to every object around.

While passing Fort Leavenworth, on the environs of the city, it created no little interest to the eyes of all our company. One of them exclaimed, that "Uncle Sam was rich to keep up such a magnificent establishment!" Numerous houses were erected, and new stone buildings were in progress. Multitudes of horses and mules were to be seen, and thousands of red and green painted waggons were standing in requisition. Soldiers were to be seen on parade, preparing themselves for the horrors of war! I could but heave the sigh of lament over the whole affair—and thought of the glorious time yet future, when nations shall "beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; and study war no more!"

At Leavenworth city, we were welcomed to the house of Capt. James C. Stone, one of the first class of graduates of Bethany College. He had been looking out for us at the river, and had just returned as we drove up.

We have met during the past year, many old and recent students of Bethany College, in the many places which we have visited, and never in one instance, did they cast a cold look, or give a weak shake of the hand! They have hearts possessed of noble principles and generous feelings, which gave expressions to their salutations. I feel a peculiar interest in them that cannot be eradicated by time or distance. Mr. Campbell speaks of them with a fatherly affection.

I have been happy to learn that there is a fine class of students at Bethany awaiting their President's return. It has been reported to us that the new Professors are giving great satisfaction to all.

I am hoping to return to dear old Bethany shortly—the memory of whose surrounding hills and valleys, are embalmed in more hearts than mine.

I think Mr. C.'s health promises to endure throughout the tour.—His appetite is good, and he sleeps profoundly. There is a number of places yet to visit. We hope the weather will continue favourable. I have not yet, Doctor, said anything about the aid that Bethany College is receiving. The friends are cordial in every place. Not a dissenting voice is to be heard, as respects its claims. But it is here, as Mr. Campbell found it last Spring amongst our Mississippi and other friends in the South—the failure of crops was the cry everywhere. Still, it will justify now, as it did then, the time and labour of the tour. We have had Bro. Proctor a short distance with us. Bro. Hopson, of Palmyra, met Mr. Campbell at Clarksville. He has been truly effective in aiding the cause of the mission.

I was not a little amused at the suggestive and wise method practiced by Bro. Hopson. He was frequently asked, "What was Bro. Campbell's age?" It was published in the St. Louis Republican, (in mistake) that he was an octogenarian. In order to gratify the brethren and others, he informed the crowds when addressing them, in behalf of Bethany College, "That Bro. Campbell was amongst them in his 71st year," &c.

Bro. Allen met us at Paris. His preaching, and that of Bro. Hopson, were attended with much good. Some 13 or 14 confessed faith and obedience to the Saviour. Bro. Allen is an ardent preacher, and a warmly devoted friend to Bethany College. These two brethren have done good service for it. The Missouri friends, in response to their solicitations, will no doubt, before the close of this call upon their generosity, be instrumental in putting many bricks into the walls, and of placing many volumes on the shelves of the library of Bethany College. Still there will be more required. It is a work of no small magnitude to erect a building on so splendid a scale, as the future prospects of Bethany College clearly indicate.

The brotherhood will be lawfully proud of it, when it shall have been completed.

Many have been raised up in Bethany College to do good service for the Lord and his people. I trust that in the future many more will arise—men of strong minds and pious hearts—who shall be enrolled beside our Procter, our Lord, our M'Garvey, our Carlton, our Robinson, our Henderson, our Mong, our Dunning, our Earl, our Wilkes, our T. F. Campbell, and H. H. Haley, and a host of others, too numerous to mention. Many, in other states, are labouring as effectively, but those named are now engaged in heart and soul, in this immediate part of Missouri. Now, I would add, ought not the brethren to take courage, and send up many more to be educated to labour in the great harvest-field? For how could their increasing flocks and herds, and the munificent productions of their rich soil, in crops of various kinds, be better appropriated than by setting apart a goodly portion for so heaven-inspired an object—as that of educating mind for the Lord's cause and people?

The "truth," as advocated by our brotherhood, is upward and onward. It must prevail. It is the Bible, apart from ALL theories and speculations. The Lord grant that, as they grow in numbers, they may grow in piety, in devotion, in consecration, and in all spirituality of heart and life!

Your brother unites with me in much affection to yourself, wife, and family, and in love to the brethren generally, at Bethany.—Your sister in the hope of eternal life,

S. H. CAMPBELL.

REPENTANCE BEFORE FAITH, & REMISSION OF SINS BEFORE EITHER.

THE following dialogue between Sincerity and Reckless will, I think, be found interesting to your readers. J. W. H.

Sincerity.—Ah, good morning, Neighbour Reckless.

Reckless.—Sir, your most obedient.

S.—Well, Neighbour Reckless, I was at your meeting yesterday and heard you preach.

R.—Indeed! How did you like my discourse?

S.—There were some positions that did not meet my approbation.

R.—Ah, Indeed! Pray, what were they?

S.—I understood you to say that repentance precedes faith. Did I correctly understand you?

R.—Yes, Sir; I took that position. What else?

S.—I understood you to say that the preposition for, in Acts ii. 38, has the retrospective signification, and not the prospective one, as the Disciples foolishly contended. Did I correctly understand you?

R.—Yes, Sir; I took that position too. What of them?

S.—This of them: If the two positions are true, remission of sins obtains without either faith or repentance.

R.—This is a strange conclusion to which you have been driven from my positions. I would like to know the process by which you have arrived at your conclusion.

S.—Answer me a few questions, and I will endeavour to show you the method by which I have come to my conclusion.

R.—Proceed.

S.—Can any law or commandment be obeyed before it is given or made known?

R.—Certainly not.

S.—When Peter commanded the inquirers on the day of Pentecost to “repent and be baptized,” had they repented and been baptized?

R.—They had not; for the law had not been given.

S.—Very well; if they had not repented when the Apostle said, “Repent,” &c. they had no faith: for you say that repentance precedes faith. Now, you have admitted that those inquiring Jews had not repented, and your position is, that repentance precedes faith; consequently they had neither repentance nor faith. If the preposition for, in the passage alluded to, has the retrospective signification, meaning “because of,” then the meaning of the Apostle’s language is this: “Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, because you have already received the remission of your sins.” If they had received the remission of their sins before Peter commanded them to repent, as your construction of the preposition shows; and if repentance precedes faith, as you stated yesterday: then my conclusion, that remission of sins obtains without either faith or repentance, is legitimate; and I cannot see how any escape from this conclusion can be made. Have you discovered the method by which I have arrived at this conclusion?

R.—I have discovered that you are a Disciple. I will have nothing more to do with you. Good bye.

S.—Farewell, Mr. Reckless. I believe you have a very appropriate name.

THE TERM “DAY.”

THE term day is first mentioned in Gen. i. 5, “And the evening and the morning were one day.” Not the first day, as King James’ Version reads, but one day. The ordinal number is used in the Hebrew, not the cardinal. (See Chaldee Paraphrase; Josephus Antiq. Jud. lib. 1, cap. 1; the Version of the LXX.; and the Clementine, or commonly named, Sixtine Vulgate.) On the other days of creation, as time had begun to exist, the second, the third, &c. are used, thus pointing out the progress of time, which did not exist till the commencement of the one day—proving clearly to myself, as yet, that the law of the creation respecting time, which law was given by God, was, that morning should succeed the evening, light follow darkness, and both united should form a day. I am not aware that any other part of Scripture annuls that law, and it will not do to plead the license or self-pleasure of man as a reason for change, for in direct opposition to him stands the law of God.

Exodus xii. 18 shews that the seven days of unleavened bread were reckoned from the evening of the 14th day to the evening of the 21st day of the month.

Lev. xxiii. 5 shews that the Passover commenced on the evening of the 14th day of the 1st month.

Deut. xvi. 6 shews that the evening commenced at the going down of the Sun.

The paschal lamb was killed between the two evenings, that is, between three o’clock p.m. and nine o’clock p.m. according to our reckoning; or, as the Jews would reckon, between the tenth hour of the day, and the third hour of the following evening. The 10th, 11th, and 12th hours of the day (morning) were by the Jews named the 1st even, and 1st, 2nd, and 3rd hours of the following evening (of the next day) the 2nd even.

The Passover was eaten on the 2nd even, on which even our Lord ate of it, and instituted the Lord’s Supper. It was on this same evening, that so many memorable scenes occurred, terminating in the betrayal of Christ.

On the morning of the same day, He was tried and condemned to be crucified. From the 6th hour of this morning to the 9th hour (that is, from 12 noon to 3 p.m.) darkness covered the land. Soon after which he yielded up His spirit, and was placed in the tomb on the 1st even. For the 2nd even, or the commencement of the evening, ushered in the Sabbath, which, on this occasion, was at the beginning of the feast of unleavened bread, and therefore a high day.

After being in the tomb the whole of the 7th day, and the evening of the 1st day, our Lord rose again from the dead early on the morning of the 1st day. On this same day he appeared to his disciples and Mary. In eight days from this he appeared to the disciples in the same place as on the previous 1st day, thus directly countenancing the observance of the 1st day. And we may well notice here, that He who set apart the 7th day as a day of rest after the work of creation was finished, could alone alter that day, and ordain that the 1st day should be the distinguishing mark of the completion of the work of redemption. But the succession of mornings after evening remained unaltered. It is immutable until the end of all things.

Acts xx. 7, the disciples met to break bread on the first of the week. It is apparent from reading this passage carefully, either that they met at the commencement of the first evening of the week, and that Paul discoursed until midnight, during which Eutychus was killed by falling from the third story, and was brought to life again — (following which occurrence Paul broke the bread, and it was eaten: then resuming his conversation till break of day, or the morning of the first day, he departed); — or, that the disciples met on the morning of the 1st day; if so, Paul's discourse would continue till midnight of the 2nd day, and consequently the bread would be broken on the 2nd day. I am strongly inclined to the first opinion, for taking into consideration the difference between the climate of this country and theirs, I cannot see, at present, why they could not meet with more ease than we should on the evening of the 1st of the week.

Compare the 27th verse of Acts xxvii. with the 34th verse of the same chapter, and it is obvious that Paul considered the night of the 14th day already gone, for he speaks of the 14th morning afterwards.

I conclude, therefore, from these passages alone, that the scriptural import of the word day is the succession of morning after evening, and that there is no command of God, after creation, that authorizes any one to alter such succession.

It is plain that on the first of the week the church met to break bread, but on what portion of the day, whether evening or morning, I conclude is immaterial, for no certain instructions, past the observance of the first of the week, are given by the practice of the early Christians.

It is in nowise remarkable, if we should consider that the Eastern Christians met on the evening of the first day of the week, if we constantly bear in mind the vast difference in the atmospheric influences of their climate and ours.

To argue that we must observe the breaking of the loaf at the same period in time as the Eastern day commences, is to argue without due consideration of the astronomical merits of the question.

What I contend for is, that in our idea of the import or meaning of the word day, we are radically wrong. We say that night follows day, or, more strictly speaking, we place part of the night after the conclusion of one morning, and the other part before the commencement of the next morning. The strict, scriptural definition of the term day should be, the portion of time included between two sunsets

If I am wrong, put me right. Produce scriptural evidence to the contrary, so as to satisfy and convince me, and I will gladly bow to its decision.

HENRY BRITAIN

RIFLEMEN WANTED.

WANTED, an unlimited number of loyal and energetic men, to fill up the ranks of various regiments in the army of His Majesty, the King of kings and Lord of lords. Conditions of enlistment run as follow:—

1st. That every person offering himself as a candidate shall swear allegiance to the King, that he will defend his cause to the utmost of his power, and that he will devote all his time, influence, power, and skill, to his service.

2nd. That he must be willing to use all the weapons of warfare to the best of his ability, and to go through his discipline with a desire to learn and obey his Commanding Officer, so that he may be ready prepared for action when called upon.

3rd. That he be willing to undergo any hardship that he may be called upon to endure, such as persecution for the sake of the cross of Christ, famine, sword, pestilence, imprisonment, false accusation, the scoffs of an ungodly world, and all the reproaches of the sectarian world: that he be willing to be called any name that they called his Great Captain, such as Beelzebub, a false prophet, a deceiver, and so on.

4th. That he be willing to fight against all invading foes, such as the following:—adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like things.

5th. As there is a three-fold deadly foe to encounter, all the courage they are possessed of will be required. They must be willing to use the shield of faith, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. There will be no carnal weapons required.

6th. Observe, all who are engaged in this mighty siege, and serve their time with honour, will be entitled to, and will receive, an everlasting pension, and a crown which will never fade away.

Recruiting parties wanted, to go into every city in the world.

Ardwick.

J. STOPFORD.

WORLDLY ENTERTAINMENTS.

I HAVE determined to name a subject, which has for some time engaged my attention, and caused me many painful reflections. Is it, think you, consistent with the Christian profession, to give entertainments such as the world loves to attend? Comic singing, recitations of poetry and pieces, attended with music, for instance. To me it savours so much of the world, that I fear it is a sign, amongst those who take a part in it, of a desire for a return to the "flesh-pots of Egypt." And to such a word of exhortation may, by the blessing of God, be productive of good. I hear, to my great concern, that this evil has crept into Christ's church. It certainly does not agree with the teachings of our Saviour and his apostles; indeed, I cannot turn over the leaves of my Bible without meeting innumerable commands and exhortations to keep ourselves unspotted from the world—not to have our conversation in the world, but to be holy, as He who hath called us is holy. We are to exhort one another daily—to let our speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt—to let the word of Christ dwell in us richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in our hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever we do in word or deed, to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. We are told not to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. Could any one, conscientiously, enter his or her closet before going to such an entertainment as I have named, and ask God's blessing? Could Christ's pure and holy presence be solicited? What pleasure could it give Him to see his children unite together to make each other, and those members of the world who were present, laugh? For what are comic songs but such a purpose. How much of the conversation amongst those who assembled there, would tend to spiritual, or even moral improvement? The more I reflect upon it, the more am I convinced that it is contrary to Scripture, and therefore a great evil which has crept in amongst us, that any little social enjoyment amongst the disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus, should be thrown open to the world, and be of such a nature as to give them pleasure and amusement; seeing their treasure is not in heaven, therefore their enjoyments are not holy. What fellowship hath Christ with Belial—what communion hath light with darkness? Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving—walk in wisdom towards them that are without, redeeming the time. Love not the world, neither the things of the world. What must the world think of those who profess to be in Christ—to have put off the old man with his affections and lusts, if they see them following after the vain amusements which give them pleasure, falsely so called? Is it not reasonable to suppose that their conclusion will naturally be this—that the pure and undefiled religion which is preached to them, must lack that abiding satisfaction, that life-giving influence, that soul-sustaining power which we all, who love the Lord in sincerity, know that it contains? Again, I say, I deplore the evil, and earnestly pray that it may be put away from our midst, that those who now sanction such frivolity, either by their presence, or by taking an active part in it, may be brought to see that it is contrary to Scripture, and if continued will, in all probability, lead to grosser errors. Great sins do not thrust themselves upon us all at once; it is by little and little that a person first goes astray—therefore our Lord's command, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." I know more than one who were staunch supporters of the truth, who, by allowing one error after another to have room in their hearts, now deny even the divinity of Christ, and are walking in open infidelity. And is it not possible that any of us might fall from the truth? Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. I do not feel myself competent to teach, but as a word will sometimes be sufficient to recall an erring one, if spoken in season, I trust, if you deem these few thoughts worthy a place in the Harbinger, that the blessing of God will rest upon them. I offer them in love and humility, knowing my own liability to error. A.

Feb. 5th, 1860.

AN ANSWER FOR THE BAPTISTS.

QUESTION, What does Paul mean when he says, "he was not sent to baptize?" ANSWER, That he was not sent to be the head or leader of a party. This we contend is the only natural answer which can be given to the above question. His declaration has nothing to do with the Christian ordinance of baptism. It cannot, therefore, be quoted to show the non-importance of it.

There are at least two arguments in support of this answer. First, it is in harmony with the New Testament style. Second, it is in exact accordance with the subject upon which he is writing to the Corinthians.

We have, fortunately, at least one definite instance of one having been sent to baptize, in the case of John the Baptist. He was sent to baptize (John i. 33.) He was, therefore, the head of a party, and those who were baptized by him were called his disciples by the sacred historians (Mat. ix. 14, Mark ii. 18, John iii. 25.) His baptism could only be received from his own hands. His disciples did not baptize (Mat. iii. 6, Luke iii. 7, John i. 28, iii. 28, Acts i. 5.) In John iii. 22, this is strongly supported: "Jesus made more disciples than John, though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples." This is noted as a singular fact; and the inference is, that in general the leader of a party administered the initiatory rite himself, rendering it thus more imposing, honorable, and attractive. That Jesus, who left the administration of baptism to his subordinates, should make more disciples than one who, having also a divine mission, deputed it to no one, was therefore worthy of note by the writer. There is a great charm in receiving ordinances from great hands, even in our day; and although the person of Jesus, as well as his mission, were infinitely exalted above those of John, this did not so perfectly account for the increase of the number of the disciples of Jesus beyond that of John's, as to make the first unworthy of recording. Jesus is evidently regarded as standing at a disadvantage before the people compared with John.

John, then, was sent to baptize, was the head of a party, and his converts were called legitimately by his name. All this Paul, in regard to himself, repudiated.

We might cite Moses as another instance. The Israelites were baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea. Hence he was their leader, and his name is given to a code of laws, which though divine, bore his name with the consent of Heaven. Paul had no such position or honor.

It was a common practice among the Pagan philosophers, to have their disciples named after them. The distinctions in their theories might not have been very great, yet they delighted in the honor, and their followers delighted thus to honor them. This practice was evidently introduced into the Christian church, and we may see to what an extent sectarianism had obtained among the Greeks, when the slight differences which existed in style and mode of expression between Peter, Apollos, and Paul, sufficed to divide the church into parties. Christ himself had his own peculiar manner, and thus might become a pattern for slavish imitation. It is evidently in this sense that Paul uses the words, "Every one of you saith I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ." There may be a kind of imitation of Christ even which will make a man a self-righteous judge and pedantic pretender. These four famous names certainly represent four different styles. Let a man beget and cherish a passion for any of them above another, and he begets strife. Nominal differences soon become real ones, and heresies are the result. This beggarly element of the world ought to have no place in the church of Christ. Those who yield to it should be asked the three questions Paul asked the Corinthians, Is Christ divided?—Was Paul crucified for you?—Were you baptized into the name of Paul? The subject of leadership is most certainly that Paul is dealing with in the presence of a vicious manifestation of it in the Corinthian church. Hence the three questions, each addressed to all, for all had been baptized. It is very singular though, that Paul individually baptized so few of them, seeing the church was founded by him, and under his teaching many of the Corinthians believed and were baptized (Acts xviii. 8.) Paul, however, must have foreseen the evil which was imminent, from the debased practice of the philosophers, and saved himself from the possibility of being afterwards reproached as the leader of a party, by abstaining from administering the ordinance with his own hands. If they still chose to call themselves after him, fancying a difference in style or thought, he was not to be blamed, and he could say, he thanked God that he had baptized so few of them, that they must all see he repudiated leadership, Christ having sent him not to be a leader, not to baptize and make disciples as John did, but to preach the gospel in common with Apollos, Cephas, and all the Apostles.

The connection, then, proves abundantly that Paul was not speaking here of the Christian ordinance of baptism at all, but of a baptism which would have made the individual baptized a follower or disciple of him. He was a great man, specially called to be the Apostle to the Gentiles; but although he was, he was not vested with any greater authority than the rest of the apostles. So great was he, however, that he may be excused for saying to the Corinthians, that he really was not sent to baptize and be a leader. Indeed it would appear as if this contingency had been specially guarded against by Peter opening the door for him, planting the first seeds of the gospel among the Gentiles, and plucking the first-fruits from among them. In spite of all this, however, the heathen leaven extended its baneful influence into the church, vitiating it, and leading weak-minded and strong-headed men to divide themselves into parties and set up to themselves leaders, bringing scandal to the name and cause of Christ, and necessitating the bold and vigorous rebuke of Paul, "I thank God, I baptized none of you." No more cutting reproof could he have given, than that he was glad it was not he who had baptized them into the Christian church. Those whom he had baptized were evidently faithful among the faithless. Crispus, Gaius, and the household of Stephanos, are honorably mentioned by him, disproving at once the assertion, that Paul was not sent to preach faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins; or that he slightly regarded the ordinance.

We say, then, most unhesitatingly, that those who endeavor to oppose our advocacy of baptism as a pre-requisite to church fellowship, by quoting the words of Paul, are entirely misapplying his language, and are endeavoring to make him say not only that which he did not mean, but that which would be opposed to the whole tenor of his preaching and writing.

The supplement of the word "only" after baptized, has been suggested by some who recognize the indispensability of the ordinance. But this would not at all agree with the subject on hand, or with Paul's conduct: because the associating of baptism with other things which he was sent to do, could not destroy the necessity he would still be under of administering it. Baptism is placed here in positive opposition to Paul's mission to preach the Gospel, and not in apposition, as such a supplement would require. By such a construction the whole force of Paul's rebuke is lost, and he fails, indeed, to be in harmony with himself, and would still convey the idea that there was virtue and leadership in the hand of the administrator.

We must turn to the terms of the Gospel Paul was sent to preach, to ascertain if baptism formed any part of it. These are not enumerated in this passage, but are found in many other places; such as when Jesus spoke to his disciples, after he rose from the dead — no common occasion; or when Peter preached on Pentecost — a noteworthy occasion also. These are quite enough for me, I confess.

One idea this passage teaches us, namely — that no particular official character is necessary to qualify one to administer baptism, the Christian ordinance. Any intelligent able Christian may do it. Paul might be quite indifferent about doing it himself, consequently knowing that fact. But that is very different from making him express a total disregard for it altogether.

Will Thomas Coombes oblige by refuting this answer, if he can; or will he admit he was wrong in quoting Paul as he did in his last letter? M. KER.

A. CAMPBELL'S VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Just a quiet question or two. Can you, or can any of your readers, tell me how it is that in A. Campbell's translation of the New Testament, 1 Cor. vii. 21, is thus given:—"Were you called, being a bond-man? Be not careful to be made free." In the Greek I find not these words, "to be made free." Though Macknight gives them, he does let us know they are not in the original. Why does A. C. insert them? And this without any intimation that they are not the words of Paul?

Again: in the Epistle to Philemon, at the 16th verse, Paul tells Philemon to receive Onesimus, "not now as a servant," or, as a slave if you will; but A. C. makes Paul say, "no longer as a slave only." Who gave him or any other man the right to put in that word "only?" According to this New Version he is to be received as a slave: yet not as a slave only. "Love not the world," says John: who will dare to alter that to "Love not the world only."

Then as to the translation of doulos. Sometimes we have "slave" and sometimes "servant." We all know that now-a-days these words have widely different meanings: so different that our servants would soon "give notice" were we to call them "slaves." I can fancy the Virginian slaveholders must like occasionally to see this word "slave." Well, if it be right, let it be there. But we don't read, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your slaves for Jesus' sake" (2 Cor. iv. 5.) We don't read, "Moses was verily faithful in all his house as a slave" (Heb. iii. 5.) We don't read, that the angel in the Apocalypse said, "Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the slaves of our God in their foreheads" (Rev. vii. 3.) Neither is this given as our prospect in the heavens, that there "his slaves shall serve him" (Rev. xxii. 3.)

Now, if the doulos in the New Testament necessarily means what our word "slave" means, as some affirm, why not in these instances, as in others so translated?

I think these are proper questions. And especially so as our Brother Campbell in his Preface writes:—"I do most solemnly declare that I would not give one turn to the meaning of an adverb, preposition, or interjection, to aid any sectarian cause in the world."

I ought to say that my references are to the edition published by G. Wightman, (4s. 6d) 1838. If the English printer be in error, then let the English printer answer for it.—I am, dear brother, yours very sincerely,

SANDERS J. CHEW.

Gerrard-street, Birmingham, Feb. 14.

[NOTE.—Some fifteen or sixteen years ago, a pocket edition of Mr. Campbell's Testament, revised and corrected by the late W. Jones, of London, was stereotyped and published by J. Haddon, Castle-street, Finsbury, since also deceased. This edition has precisely the same renderings as those to which our brother refers. The edition named was last issued in 1848, and is now out of print; but as the same passages occur in several other translations, the queries are equally applicable to them all. Perhaps the letter may catch the eye of Bro. A. C. and lead him, in one or other of his essays, to place on record, in the pages of his Harbinger, an answer to the above communication.—J. W.]

AUTHORITY AND INDEPENDENCE OF CHURCHES.

BRO. OLIPHANT, Editor of the Christian Review, (from which periodical we extract the subjoined queries and response) contends that there is no authority whatever given to one disciple more than to another—that the facts, commands, promises, and admonitions given to the disciples of Jesus, being matters of privilege, are intended for the mutual instruction and edification of the whole body—for the promotion of holiness and love, and not for the exercise of authority over others, as is invariably the case with those who follow the traditions of men.—J. W.

Every well regulated state or kingdom possesses both a legislative and an executive power or authority. The constitution of the kingdom of Christ, so far as legislation is concerned, is monarchical, or kingly, the Lord Jesus being King of Zion's hill, and the sole Lawgiver in his kingdom; but the executive power of this kingdom is in the church, and of course somewhat democratic. 1st, Each congregation is a voluntary association united upon the truth for mutual benefit, all members having equal rights, powers, and privileges. 2nd, Each congregation is fully authorized to interpret or expound the Bible for itself, preach it, attend to its own discipline and government, choose and appoint its own office-bearers, as well as receive and exclude members. No church can continue long in a healthy state without such authority being exercised in it; and if the churches do not possess this authority, I ask who possesses it? Thus far of the authority of the churches. 3rd, The acts and deeds of churches are not subject to be appealed from, revised, or reversed by any court or tribunal on earth, by whatever name it may be called, each church being accountable only to Jesus Christ, its King and Head. Thus far of the independence of churches. J. S.

RESPONSE.—The preceding is brief, and the subjoined is also brief:—

Each human government is to some extent unlike every other; and not one of them, either in legislative or executive powers, is like Christ's government 1, Every saved man is constrained or drawn to Jesus by love; and any number thus constrained by divine affection, are, as a consequence, drawn together by him; hence, they neither meet nor act on the voluntary (self-choosing) principle. "We love him because he first loved us." 2, Each church being built upon, directed by, and subject to Jesus, all phrases like "its own" officers, are, in a marked sense, inapplicable. Hear Peter:—"The elders that are among you." And Paul:—"The saints at Philippi (the church with its own bishops?—no, but) with the bishops." "The Holy Spirit hath made you overseers." 3, The acts of churches, if illegitimate, are to be reprov'd by authority on earth—the authority of the college of apostles, now found where it has always been, in their word. As one believer has no authority, and as a hundred times nothing is no more than nothing, so a church of a hundred members has the same authority as one believer; hence, there is no power in a church, except that of rebellion, to resist the apostles' word. Inspired authority corrected churches in Europe and Asia: the like authority, through any teacher skilled in it, or without a teacher as a living instrument, should correct churches in British and Republican America. Fearful doctrine to all despots, rude or genteel, great or small, whether of the one-man order, or of the democratic class! The Lord knows that none of us know enough to rule ourselves (Matt. xviii. 2-4 Luke ix. 46-48.)

D. O.

A ROYAL CONFESSIOIN OF FAITH.

In a public record, written in the year 1718, and enrolled amongst the archives of the Duchy of Holstein, is found the following summary of the belief of the Prussian monarch. It is inscribed, "Confession of Faith of His Royal Majesty the King of Prussia," and doubtless belongs to Frederick William I. who reigned from 1713 to 1746, and whose warm interest in Protestant Evangelical truth is well known. It was he who afforded an asylum to the persecuted Protestants of Salzburg, and to the Moravian brethren when they were driven out of Bohemia by Hapsburg tyranny, lending itself as usual to the Jesuits. Just a century after it was written, another Frederick William of Prussia gave expression to the Catholic spirit which pervades it, by consummating the so-called union between the Lutheran and Reformed or Catholic churches of his dominions, thus worthily commemorating the Tercentenary of the German Reformation, by putting an end, so far as that was within the power of an earthly ruler, to its most crying scandal. But it is not only in this respect that the royal believer was in advance of his age. The free, anti-hierarchical, truly Protestant tone of the document, is equally worthy of admiration. It is so closely akin to the noble utterance of Robinson, which the Christian Spectator has taken for its motto, that we reckon confidently on the thanks of our readers for laying it before them. It runs thus :—

"I. I BELIEVE not what the Pope commands me to believe, nor even in everything which Luther, Beza, and Calvin have written. But I believe in the triune God, and I make his holy word the revealed ground of my belief; and what does not agree therewith, such should never be believed by me; no, not even if an angel from heaven had written it.

"II. I believe, also, that through Christ's blood and death, through his wounds and wholesome merit, I and all pious Christians can and must be saved.

"III. And since salvation or blessedness is to be found in no other name, but only in the saving name of Jesus Christ, therefore I cannot call myself Lutheran, or Papist, but I am and call myself a Christian.

"IV. As to the eternal election of grace and predestination, this is my simple belief: that the mercy of God has called all men to salvation, and that the reason why all men are not saved is not for want of calling, but because of men's obstinate wickedness, who, as it were, spurn with their feet the proffered grace of God. For which cause they are condemned in their hearts' wickedness and sins, by the righteous judgment of God.

"V. With respect to good works, I believe this: that wheresoever there is an upright and true faith, there good works must also necessarily be found. For faith and good works can no more be sundered than the light from the Sun, or heat from fire. That men should be able by good works to merit heaven, is a damnable opinion, seeing that it is of grace, in true faith, and through the merit of Christ we are saved. And of what avail should the merit of Christ be to us, if we could be saved by the merit of our own works?

"VI. As to baptism and the holy supper, the whole of my simple belief is this: just as in baptism I am not washed with water only, but am washed from my sins through the true blood of my Lord Jesus Christ, and am received into the everlasting covenant of grace with God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, even so in the holy supper I am fed at Jesus Christ's table of grace, not with bread and wine only, but with the true body and blood of Christ; and through his power I am made partaker of all the benefits which the Lord Christ hath purchased with his holy passion and death, and, consequently, am made an heir of everlasting life. And this also is my belief, that he who believes on God, and seeks his salvation in Christ's blood and death, and lives a Christian life accordingly, can be saved.

"VII. In the next place, I leave to every man the liberty of his belief, and show by this writing, before the face of God, that I will live and die by this simple confession of faith, and that it is not for me to make cold, warm, or lukewarm. This I leave to the judgment of all conscientious and peace-loving men.

"VIII. I do not make myself responsible for the deserts of the souls and for those of the parsons, seeing that I have been in a position to learn from experience that all their juggleries tend not so much to the honor of God and to the furthering of our salvation, as merely to their own honor and the respect in which they may be held by men.

"IX. I have a reasonable scruple against calling myself Papist, Lutheran, or Calvinist. Nevertheless, inasmuch as of mere custom and the opinion of the world the simple name Christian does not suffice, without a man's holding to some church and to its confession, and being obliged to avow it, and since the pure, unsophisticated Reformed religion is most in accordance with my religion, therefore, per mundi errorem, I can also call myself Reformed, although I do not see why my confession of faith given above should clash with the pure and unsophisticated doctrine of Luther. Nevertheless, I cannot give myself the name of a Calvinist, but I abide a Reformed Christian. For a Reformed Christian is one who is delivered from all error of doctrine, and who abides in the faith which I have witnessed above; but a Calvinist is one who makes the doctrine of Calvin a rule of faith.

"X. And since Calvin also was a man, and to err is human, so was he also liable to err. With this reserve, however, I hold Luther, Calvin, and others to have been chosen instruments of God, who, by the power of the Holy Ghost, escaped from the darkness of Popery, and have testified to us the right way to eternal life. But, since they were both men, the one as well as the other was liable to err. For this reason, I believe the teaching of none, save in so far and so long as it agrees with the true Word of God."

REVIEWS, NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CORRESPONDENCE, &amp;c.

WATER AND THE SPIRIT : a Few Thoughts on John iii. 5. By DAVID WARDLAW SCOTT.—London : J. B. Bateman.

THIS remarkable pamphlet is by one whose words and deeds evidence his piety. It is singular by reason of its many truthful statements upon the kingdom, all of which terminate in a practical denial of that which is established by the clearest possible proof. An early page shows that the author starts with some apprehension of the Lord's meaning—

"It will be well, before proceeding further, to see the force of the word here translated born (γεννηθῆναι). The verb γεννάω has two significations: for want of better terms the one may be called causative; as Abraham begat (ἐγέννησε) Isaac; the other demonstrative, as Elizabeth shall bear (γεννήσει) a son; and the confounding of this difference has greatly hindered the right understanding of the passage in question. I think that I cannot better express my meaning than in the words of a dear brother in the Lord, Dr. H. of Edinburgh—

'In the natural birth, as before remarked, it is one thing to be begotten, and another to be born: and it is not less so in the spiritual birth. The two statements which Christ makes in these all-important declarations are themselves entirely different:—Unless begotten, an individual cannot see—unless born, he cannot enter. He is to be born of water, or baptized: and as little could a child in the natural birth be born through water into the world without previously having been begotten, as can an individual, according to Christ's declaration and the divine will, be really and properly baptized without having previously been begotten from above. Hence this conversation of Christ strikingly illustrates His commission. The seeing and entering here are parallels to the making scholars and baptizing: and beyond dispute, this is an additional and most striking declaration, in Christ's own words, as to those who alone are the proper subjects of the sacred rite.'

"The attempt to make 'of water and of the Spirit,' read, 'of water even of the Spirit,' will not, I think, bear strict investigation. The original is as plain as words can make it, ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ Πνεύματος, 'of water and of Spirit.'"

Passing a further quotation from Dr. H. — with which the author does not entirely agree, and which teaches that before conversion man consists only of soul and body, that in conversion the spirit is born, so that afterward he has body, soul, and spirit — (what strange fancies men palm upon their fellows!) we read—

"Let us now gather up the fragments :

1. "A Jewish Ruler is told by Jesus in the most solemn manner, that if any one is not begotten (generated) from above, he cannot see (ἰδεῖν) the Kingdom of God.

"2 If any one is not (manifestly brought forth) of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter (εἰσελθεῖν) into the Kingdom of God. From these statements we may learn,

"3. That, as the natural babe must be first conceived in the womb before it can live, so the babe in Christ must be first begotten by the Spirit before he can see the Kingdom of God; and, as the natural babe must be born into the world, through water, before it can visibly manifest its personal existence as a member of the human family, so the babe in Christ must be born into the church, by water and the Spirit, before he can visibly manifest his personal existence as a member of the kingdom of God."

"Scriptural baptism invariably takes place after belief; e. g. 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved' (Mark xvi. 16); 'Then they that gladly received his word were baptized' (Acts ii. 41.) See the cases of the three thousand on the day of Pentecost, the Eunuch, Paul, Lydia, the jailor, &c. (Acts ii. 37-43, ix. 17-18, xvi. 14-15-32-34) from the whole of which we learn that baptism is the public profession of private belief—the visible act whereby believers do visibly receive remission of sins (Acts ii. 38, and xxii. 16); in other words, 'the answer of a good conscience towards God, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ,' (1 Peter iii. 21) clearly proving that the baptism of infants or of unbelievers is nothing but a vain mockery, as they cannot answer for themselves, and to suppose that others can answer for them, is something worse than folly—it is sin. Hath not God declared that 'Every one shall die for his own iniquity?' Jer. xxxi. 30, Ezek. xviii. 20.)"

Here is an unusually plain statement of scripture truth, marred in the latter part by the author's attempts to mend the Word of God. After shewing what really is necessary to entrance, he is evidently conscious that his belief and practice do not fully accord, and instead of at once suspecting them, he casts about for some softening element.

"Scriptural baptism invariably takes place after belief." Quite true—but how does the author prove this? By citing, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But if the order of the words prove that baptism follows faith, does it not also prove that belief and baptism are in order to salvation? Again, "Baptism is the public profession of private belief—the visible act whereby believers do visibly receive the remission of sins." Now the addition made to the inspired record by the words private and visible, instead of giving light, furnishes a cloud which serves as a covering for the author's error. Baptism is nowhere in Scripture presented as a confession of belief. "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." The Apostles had five items in order to remission—faith, repentance, confession, invocation, baptism. The author throws two into one, and thus makes them four. Then again, that baptism was the public confession of private belief, is contrary to known facts. In all cases the faith was declared before baptism, and thus by the required confession belief became as public as it could be made by baptism. We pray the author—whom we love for his work's sake—to speak as do the Scriptures, and then he will not say, Baptism for the public reception of remission before privately received. His expression, "the visible act whereby believers do visibly receive the remission of sins"—implying (what he elsewhere states) the previous invisible reception—is unscriptural in style and untrue in import. Baptism is a visible act, but not a visible reception of remission—pardon is received in the act, but that which passes in the mind of God is not visible.

The passage last cited is followed by proof that baptism is immersion. Also, by an important, though common, mistake—that of confounding the quickening of the sinner, which is attributed to the Spirit, with baptism in the Holy Spirit. That men are now quickened is true, but that any one has been baptized in the Spirit since the baptism of Cornelius, cannot be proved. The kingdom of God further comes into notice—

"The kingdom of God on earth was intended to have a visible as well as a spiritual reality: hence in that wondrous prayer of Jesus to the Father before he suffered, He thus poured out his soul for believers—"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me; and loved them as thou hast loved me" (John xvii. 21-24.) From this it is clearly evident that Christ prayed that his redeemed should be gathered together into one visible body. Now, into this visible body our Lord directed that there should be a visible entrance, even through the waters of baptism. By this way He himself entered, and, without exception, every believer in the early church. 'They that gladly received his word were baptized' (Acts ii. 41.) 'But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women' (Acts viii. 12.) The very last commission our Lord gave to his disciples was to disciple (μαθητεύειν) all nations, baptizing them (βαπτίζοντες) (not the nations, but those who are disciplined, or who believe from among the nations) into (eis) the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit' (Mat. xxviii. 19.) Jesus says, 'He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned' (Mark xvi. 16.) Observe, here, the belief comes before the baptism, not after it, as most Christians would have it now.

"There is still, however, a difficulty in connection with the text in question, which, as far as I am aware, has never yet been satisfactorily explained. Let us now humbly endeavour to seek its solution. This difficulty arises from the very express statement of Christ, 'If any one is not born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.' This declaration is so explicit, and the fact of persons unbaptized as believers being saved is so undoubted, that many have thought that the expression 'of water' (ὕδατος) must here have a spiritual, and not a literal interpretation. Now this inference is drawn, as before hinted, not from the construction of the passage, but from the emergency of the case, and a conclusion so arrived at is generally, to say the least of it, to be received with great caution. * * * We learn that baptism by immersion in water was, and still ought to be, the one visible mode of entrance of believers into God's visible church or kingdom on earth. So long as we have God's meaning of a word, either sufficiently clear of itself, or explained from other parts of Scripture, as is that before us, man's interpretation is of little moment; still as a corroborative testimony it may perhaps be well to state that the literal meaning of the word water in this text is that which, almost without exception, has been held by the church in all ages, whether by those of its members adopting believers' baptism or infants sprinkling."

Here one observes something like the clear notes of truth. "It is evident that Christ prayed that believers should be gathered into one visible body"—"Our Lord directed that there should be a visible entrance, even through the waters of baptism—"They were to disciple, not the nations," but "believers out of the nations"—and baptism is "into the name."

Admitting the possibility of the salvation of believers who see not baptism, the author introduces an objector who urges—"You say that a believer can be saved without baptism—how do you reconcile this with the statement, that unless he is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God?"

"Not all who have been saved have entered the kingdom or church of God on earth, a family in which there are certain relationships which Abel, and Noah, and Abraham, and Moses, and even John the Baptist did not receive.

"These men, as well as others of whom we read in the Old Testament, were full of faith, were quickened by the Spirit, and were saved by the sacrifice of Him whom they saw afar off, even Jesus; and they will doubtless be partakers of the first resurrection, and of the heavenly glory. 'But,' as Mr. Trotter justly remarks, 'all these are represented to us in God's Word as individual servants of his—not as members of a body. They were men of faith. Their devotion and obedience shine brightly in the pages of the inspired record. But there is not such a thought suggested by all that is said of them as that they were members of the body of the church. * * * 'I say unto you,' spake Jesus to the people, 'Among them that are born of women, there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist; but he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he' (Luke vii. 28.) From this is it not clear that even the greatest, such as John the Baptist, may not enter into that particular community which constitutes the visible church or kingdom of God on earth, even although they undoubtedly are saved? * To enter as a visibly acknowledged member, into the kingdom of God, requires certain conditions to be fulfilled, and these are doubtless those declared by Jesus in the passage now under consideration, 'Unless a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.'

"The objector may probably to this statement remark, 'This is a hard saying, who can bear it? Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Independents, Friends, indeed all who have not been baptized after belief, are thus, although they may be saved, excluded from the kingdom of God. So saying, thou reproachest us also.'

"I reply, It is not for me to reproach any, but I dare not alter what God has written. 'This is my beloved Son,' spake the voice on the holy mount, 'hear ye him;' and that Son has declared, 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.'

"Still, it appears to me that those saints who are unbaptized as believers, yet belong to the church although they have not visibly entered into it in the appointed way through the waters of baptism, for they have been baptized by the one Spirit into the one body, and are, therefore, members of Christ. But I cannot help thinking that, like the volunteer previously referred to, the saint who has not been baptized as a believer, is not publicly recognized by Christ as in full, orderly fellowship with his church on earth, and also that he will 'suffer loss' in glory, through his not having obeyed the primary command as to the mode of entrance into the kingdom of God."

Here, again, we have safe journeying on something like scriptural ground—but when the author has gone all the way, he suddenly darts off into a neighboring slough. This is no doubt owing to a burst of kindly feeling and to the diverting tendency of his own practice. Look at the strange conclusion following the annexed positions:—1, Without baptism none can enter the kingdom or church. 2, Believers unbaptized may be eternally saved, as will be John and Abraham, but without entering the kingdom. 3, But these were not members of a body—not members of the body of the church. 4, Such believers are not recognized by Christ, as in full orderly fellowship with his church, and will suffer loss in glory. 5, Episcopalians, Wesleyans, and other unbaptized believers, are excluded from the kingdom of God, which the author terms the one body or church. After all this, strange to say, we read—"Still it appears to me that unbaptized believers yet belong to the church, although they have not visibly entered into it in the appointed way, through the waters of baptism." They have entered, or they have not entered. The author says in effect — They have NOT entered—they are not born of water and Spirit, and unless so born a man cannot enter, yet they HAVE entered, "for they have been baptized by one Spirit into the one body, and are therefore members of Christ." Whence comes this confusion? From putting an unnecessary interpretation upon one text of Scripture, by which it is made to contradict the Apostles who wrote it, oppose the Lord's plain teaching, and teach what no other verse in the Bible sets forth. Our author writes, "The special baptism of the Lord Jesus is that of the Holy Spirit, in distinction to that of John—to this distinguishing baptism, I think reference is made in 1 Cor. xii. 13, where it is said, 'By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body.' It is this baptism of the Spirit which alone truly saves." This interpretation of the text opposes the plain statement of Paul, who taught the Ephesians that just as we have one Lord, one faith, one God, and one Spirit, so we have one baptism. It opposes the Lord's saying, that the kingdom cannot be entered but through water, and makes the author absurdly teach that they are baptized without water into that body into which without water they cannot enter. It makes the Holy Spirit the baptizer, ("by one Spirit we are baptized") which is not taught in any other passage. Cannot the author see that the baptism of this text is the one baptism of Paul, in water, into the name and body of the Lord—BY THE SPIRIT, because consequent upon the Holy Spirit's teaching, and an act of obedience resulting from that change of heart affected by the Spirit-given and Spirit-attested word?

In conclusion, the author inconsistently pleads for the reception of unbaptized believers to the fellowship of that kingdom into which he says they have not entered, and on account of which omission he thinks they will suffer loss in glory. That some refuse such, he says, "with sorrow I admit; but such is not the fault of the doctrine, but of those who do not give that doctrine its proper place; in other words, of those sectarians who make baptism, and not belief in Jesus, the test of communion." But the point here raised is a very simple one. According to our author, the Lord has on earth one visible church or body, into which, without baptism, no one can enter—the only sanctioned fellowship in this church or body is that of members (those who have entered)—the unbaptized have not entered, therefore, are not members, and consequently not entitled to fellowship. Is the Lord's table in his kingdom? Unquestionably! Then must men enter the kingdom in order to approach the table. But we know that some believe and love the Saviour—what of them? Our author has answered, "There are relationships to the body into which they have not entered—they may suffer loss in glory, though saved"—so they may, and must suffer loss on earth—not because we "make baptism and not belief in Jesus the test of communion"—but because that communion is in a kingdom into which the Lord and Brother Scott say they cannot enter without baptism.

Heartily we approve the last page—

"If we are content with a lower standard, we despise the privileges to which God has called us by His grace, and are not walking in conformity to the will of Him who prayed that we might be One in Him, as He is with His Father. The desire of Christ is that His church should be not only spiritually one in Him, but visibly one before the world, as witnesses for Him (John xvii. 21-23); living epistles known and read of all men (2 Cor. iii. 2-3). If Christians prefer meeting in the sects of man's appointment, rather than in the one fellowship, simply in the name of Jesus, they are guilty of heresy or schism—they divide the church, not discerning the Lord's body (1 Cor. iii. 3-4, and Eph. i. 22-23.) In these days there is much acknowledgment of this sin, but alas! it generally ends there. Confession does not produce the fruits it ought, even the forsaking of sin, and consequently we find that men still continue 'miserable sinners,' instead of becoming rejoicing Christians. 'I have given you an example,' says Jesus, 'that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them' (John xiii. 15-17.)"

But does not Friend Scott "content himself with a lower standard," when he admits to privileges in the kingdom those who have not entered it? Is he not, however unknowingly, guilty of heresy when he keeps up division in that body which should be one, by compelling some of us to refuse fellowship with those with whom he gathers, because he, without authority, introduces persons whom he declares have not entered the kingdom. "Verily, verily, the servant is not greater than his Lord"—and we can find quite as much authority for the Pope's dispensation, as for that of our esteemed but erring author.

PLEA FOR A REVIVAL OF THE RELIGION OF JESUS. — Wilson, High Street, Edinburgh.

THE above is the title of a short paper, designed to attract attention to certain views of the Lord's kingdom, by an allowable play upon the word Revival. The Revivals of which we have all been reading are not intended, but a restoration of belief in certain truths preached by Jesus and his Apostles. In answer to the question, What is a Scriptural Revival of Religion, the tract says—

"It is humbly submitted, that the only answer which would satisfy an inquiring mind, bent on knowing the truth, is—THE FAITH AND PRACTICE OF THE FIRST DISCIPLES. Not the ideas of the nineteenth, or any other century since the Apostles fell asleep, but the 'one faith,' 'the truth as it is in Jesus.' Whatever may be the measure of truth possessed by any portion of the professing church, it is surely no disparagement to any party to take the doctrine of the Great Teacher himself, and of those who had the advantage of his personal instruction, with the subsequent enlightening influences of the Holy Spirit, rather than any form of faith which may have obtained at any time since the apostolic age. This, moreover, is the course enjoined by the Apostles. When certain men had crept in unawares, and threatened to corrupt the infant church, about 33 years after the ascension of Christ, we find Jude exhorting to 'earnestly contend for the FAITH ONCE DELIVERED to the saints.'"

Good, so far—only go not too far back. For THE FAITH AND PRACTICE OF THE first churches, we must keep on this side the day of Pentecost—if we go beyond that day we shall get the faith and practice of Jews, and not those of the members of the body of Christ—we shall get, not the order of a Christian church, but that of the order of a Jewish synagogue—not baptism into the name of the Lord, but circumcision—not the gospel of this dispensation, as preached by Paul, (see Cor. xv.) but a gospel peculiar to the closing days of the last Economy. Into this error the tract has fallen.

"Taking up the inquiry as to the faith and practice of the first disciples at this point, it becomes necessary to ascertain what was the faith once delivered to the saints. In other words, what was publicly preached as the GOSPEL OF SALVATION by Jesus and the Apostles.

"Notice first, here, that the only gospel publicly preached by Jesus himself, was what is styled 'THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD,' or more briefly—'THE KINGDOM OF GOD.' Thus he said—'I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent' (Luke iv. 43.) 'Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel' (Mark i. 14-15.) This was the burden of Jesus' preaching to Israel—Repent, or change your minds, and believe the gospel, or good news, concerning the kingdom of God; for that kingdom is at hand. A crisis in the course of events has come; the divine power, after a season of withdrawal, is again put forth—much will depend on the reception my message gets at the hands of the nation as such; in any event see to your own salvation—repent ye and believe the gospel. Such was the preaching of Jesus.

"The preaching of the Apostles, during the Lord's ministry, was precisely the same as that of their Master."

Now, if the author had merely intended the faith, practice, and gospel of salvation peculiar to the time which preceded the using of the keys by Peter, the above would be well enough—but he means that faith and practice to which we should return. The gospel of this dispensation was not preached by the disciples of Jesus during his ministry—it contains the truth that Jesus is the Christ, and the fact that he died for our sins—he commanded them to "tell no man that he was the Christ," and his death for sin had not taken place. The gospel—the present gospel of the kingdom—was first proclaimed by Peter after the resurrection, and pouring out of the Holy Spirit. A gospel—that is, glad-tidings—the gospel of that time was preached while Jesus was on earth—it was, “The kingdom of God is at hand.” But what says our tract? That it has not yet come, and will not until our Lord’s return.

“Our Lord, shortly before the conclusion of his ministry, taught that the kingdom of God should not be established until his return from the right hand of God to the earth. ‘He spake a parable because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that THE KINGDOM OF GOD SHOULD IMMEDIATELY APPEAR. He said, therefore, a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, occupy till I come. . . . And it came to pass that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him,’ &c. Those who had been faithful were rewarded, while those who had neglected their duty were punished. Thus the setting up of the kingdom of God is contemporary with the distribution of rewards and punishments at the return of Christ from heaven.”

Surely this parable teaches clearly the opposite of that which it is cited to establish. They understood that the kingdom was at hand—(though it was not so immediately near as thought, they understood not anything of his approaching death, &c.) — he instructed them upon their responsibilities. The parable sets forth that the nobleman went into a far country to receive a kingdom—the tract that he must come back again to receive it. We hold it that he was to receive it when away, as Jesus has done. Hence, says Paul, “We see not yet all things put under him, but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, CROWNED with glory and honor.” His coronation had taken place when Paul wrote to the Hebrews—he is Lord of lords and King of kings. But the parable is more explicit still—“And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded those servants to be called,” in order to reward them. This does not imply his coming again in order to receive the kingdom, but a coming after he had received it to reward his servants. In keeping with this Paul taught the Colossian Christians that they HAD BEEN translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son. The same Apostle declares that Jesus “must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet (1 Cor. xv. 25)—and the Psalmist shews that this is to be done while he is sitting at the right hand of God — “Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool” (Psalm cx.)

Want of space, however, admonishes us to conclude, which we shall for the present do, perhaps to return to the subject next month.

WORTHY OF NOTICE

IN our last upon Revivals it was intimated that our views were fully expressed, and that more might not at present be expected. By this, however, it was not intended that others who may have some good thing to say, should not be heard. The Interpreter has an article on the subject well worthy of notice, the latter part of which cannot be too highly commended. As its leading idea, though recognized, has not been fully exhibited in our previous papers, it shall be reproduced. After alluding to the rapid and remarkable extension of religious feeling by which Revivals are distinguished, and to the common impression that this result is owing to an extraordinary outpouring of the Spirit upon the particular locality which is thus blessed, it continues in the words following:—

“Assuredly no such theory is needed, either to explain revivals, or to give God the glory of all that is good in them. Why can they not be regarded simply as proofs, which indeed they are, of the mighty power of social influences, when brought to bear, as they ought to be, in favour of religion, instead of being used, as they ordinarily are, in opposition to it?

“This is, as we believe, after all, the great secret of such movements. As the excitement proceeds, and spreads from house to house, and from breast to breast, it affects, more or less, almost everybody it comes in contact with. ATTENTION to the subject of religion, in whatever way it may be viewed, is, then, the rule; at other periods it is the exception. In ordinary times, all society seems to be in league against everything like religious earnestness; to display agitated feeling on such a topic is to risk being regarded with pity or with scorn; emotion, therefore, if ever excited, is instantly suppressed, and the subject of it too often rapidly cools down to the average warmth or coldness of the religious atmosphere by which he is surrounded.

"But in a time of revival all this is changed; emotion is honored—smile meets smile, tear responds to tear, and a force, so to speak, is generated, of almost resistless character; but it is a force which partakes largely of human infirmity.

"Ought we then to clothe such movements with the miraculous or semi-miraculous character which is so often claimed for them? Could not the same power be brought to bear in favour of truth and righteousness, without the theological exaggerations of which we complain; without even the risk of exciting hysterical affections; without, in short, any unnatural disturbance either of mind or body?

"We think they might; since what is usually considered wonderful in periods of revival is, after all, but the normal condition of a rational being. The man who is insane is not the man who suddenly awakes to living convictions in relation to the unseen world, but he who habitually lives in utter forgetfulness of them. Why, then, should not this fact be recognized as fully every day as it is in periods of religious excitement? If it were so, the social principle, instead of being, as now, habitually exercised to suppress religious feeling, would be employed to promote it.

"In one sense, England is, at the present day, in favour of Christianity; for Infidelity is generally regarded as vulgar and disreputable. Few men would wish either their wives or daughters to form intimate friendships with avowed unbelievers. But all this is merely conventional. Nothing is more unpopular in general society than a living religious thought. Christian people have quite as strong a dislike to such an utterance as others. The discussion of a disputed doctrine, or a vexed question of ritualism—of a favourite preacher—of any given number of evangelical or non-evangelical platitudes, is quite another thing. These, if adapted to the particular circle in which a man at the moment finds himself, are seldom regarded with disfavour. Nobody objects, simply because nobody is disturbed by them—they are thoroughly superficial—they move no depths in the human heart—they interfere with no man's tranquillity—if they excite any feeling at all, it is that of mere partizanship, which is generally acceptable when on the right side. Godliness (for we like that old word better than its modern equivalents) is, on the other hand, deemed too esoteric to be spoken of. It is, therefore, generally treated as sceptics now-a-days treat the Bible—bowed to with an affectation of respect, but regarded as far too sacred for the common gaze. Alas! that this coldness should ever be partially excused by the empty phraseology, the insincerities, the sectarianism, and the bigotry which are too often mixed up with religious profession.

"But nothing can justify such a course. For who can deny that both above and beneath all outward unveracities—deep down in the hearts of multitudes, there are thoughts and feelings bearing on loyalty to Christ and duty to man, which are habitually suffocated out of regard to the false delicacies which, as a rule, govern society? A Revival, as it is termed, scatters all these falsities to the winds, and in doing so, removes one of the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of the rapid spread of Christianity. Then, may it be truly said, 'They that fear the Lord speak often one to another, and the Lord hearkens and hears.'

"What we really want is a healthy state of public opinion in relation to religion. Then, and not till then, will all excitement and extravagance, the result of reaction, pass away, and the 'still small voice' of God will be heard above the turbulence of the world, and in spite of the worldliness of the church."

And now, reader, are you a Christian? If so, what are you and the brethren with whom you worship doing in the direction indicated by the words just quoted? Do you say, "The church here has not made progress of late—we want an outpouring of the Spirit—or, we do not expect to do anything until we get help from an efficient evangelist?" In Revival seasons "ATTENTION to the subject of religion is the rule—at other periods it is the exception." But that attention must have a beginning—can often be traced to a first few, and by the all-seeing eye to one heart. If, dear reader, you were to make attention to the Lord's will the one prevailing thought—in the family, in business, and in leisure—if by word, but more so by deed—you urge this course upon the church, and wait much upon the Lord in earnest prayer, can you suppose it unlikely that some one heart, 'ere long, will beat in unison with your own? Can you suppose that when one is thus gained, the two can continue in the course prescribed, and not influence others? Impossible! Tell us not that you want preaching talent and efficient evangelists, (these are precious gifts, truly) but what you really want is devotion to the Christ who devoted himself to death for you.

D. K.

"THE NEW SECT IN BIRMINGHAM" (!)

THE letters under the above heading, reprinted last month* from the Nonconformist, have been followed by one from "A Deacon," which should also be placed before our readers:—

"BOND-STREET CHAPEL, BIRMINGHAM.

"To the Editor of the Nonconformist."

"Sir,—Allow me to reply briefly to the letter of R. H. J. respecting Bond-street chapel.

"I ask who has a better right to the chapel than the church that meets in it? R. H. J. considers the denomination has; but what is the distinctive principle of the denomination?—That every church has a right to manage its own affairs. He refers to 'the method which obtains among Congregationalists.' Well, what is that method? To 'protest against subscription to any human formularies as a term of communion' to manifest 'their jealousy of subscription to creeds and articles, and their disapproval of the imposition of any human standard, whether of faith or discipline.' 'They believe that human traditions, fathers and councils, canons and creeds, possess no authority over the faith and practice of Christians:' 'that the New Testament authorises every Christian church to elect its own officers, to manage all its own affairs, and to stand independent of, and irresponsible to, all authority, saying that only of the Supreme and Divine Head of the Church, the Lord Jesus Christ;' and 'that no church nor union of churches has any right or power to interfere with the faith or discipline of any other church, further than to separate from such as in faith and practice depart from the Gospel of Christ.' I quote from the 'declaration of Faith, Order, and Discipline,' issued by the Congregational Union in 1833. Concerning the Baptists, Mr. Horace Mann affirms: their churches are 'as independent of each other as the churches of the Independents.'

"From the tone of his letter, I presume R. H. J. would scarcely agree with 'the method which obtains among Congregationalists,' but that he would rather bring it in that we should not be so independent and irresponsible, saving that only of the Supreme and Divine Head.

"It may be a proper thing to bring others besides us to trial, if the 'sufficient, certain, and infallible' rule of faith and practice be the 'Bible and the Title Deeds,' or I may say the Titte Deeds and the Bible.

* Written for insertion in last number, but omitted from want of room.

"An examination of the Fen Stanton records, as published by the Hanserd Knollys Society, may convince R. H. J. that in going back to what they deem the practice of the Apostles and early Christians, the Bond-street church is much more like the baptized churches of the seventeenth century, than it was before. In those records he will find a plurality of Elders—baptism without delay, upon confession, and without an 'experience' before the church—mutual teaching, and the discountenancing of the singing of God's praise by unbelievers. He will not find there any deference to human creeds, not any pew rents, not any begging of ungodly persons to support Christ's cause: neither will he find there that 'Brother Henry Deene' is styled the Reverend, or that any one of the churches called itself a 'Baptist' church. The Baptist churches of 1859 can claim but little kinship to the 'baptized churches' of 1644—1720.

"We are satisfied with calling ourselves a Church of Christ, and so were they. Why should not those now called 'Baptists' be? And why should they prefer to wander from the good pattern? Even tried by the Baptist Confession, we should stand better approved than many of them. And tried by the practices of the godly baptized believers of the seventeenth century, we should stand approved — Baptists condemned.

"We are no 'new sect,' but of the sect which was inaugurated on the day of Pentecost (see Acts ii. 38-42.)

"We hold our faith and our conscience more dear to us than the bricks and mortar of our chapel; but until some more Christianlike, or, at least, more common-sense reasons than those of R. H. J. shall teach us otherwise, we can and shall, with a clear conscience, hold our chapel also.—With thanks for your space, I am, Sir,

A DEACON OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST,
Meeting in Bond-st. chapel, Birmingham.
32, Icknield-street, Dec. 12, 1859.

With this letter before us, and also more facts than are contained therein, we seriously say, that a number of the older Baptist chapels (now so called) ought to be given over to us. Since writing the above, the Nonconformist has inserted the annexed reply, and closed the enquiry.

"BOND-STREET CHAPEL, BIRMINGHAM.

"To the Editor of the Nonconformist."

"SIR,—I have read, and re-read, the letter of 'A Deacon of the church of Christ,' &c. in your last number, but must confess my inability to understand in what respect it is a reply to mine; except so far as the retention of the chapel is now made quite clear.

"The question at issue lies in a very small compass, and to meet it by no means necessitates an appeal to so many antique authorities as 'A Deacon' has resorted to, and which looks like an evasion.

"The case is simply this:—

"Did those parties who built Bond-street Chapel design it exclusively for use by those who call themselves 'Baptists,' according to the received meaning of that denominational term; or did they not?

"Do those now in possession hold the same views? If they do, the matter is settled, and I have not another word to say. If they do not, by what code can retention be justified?

"The inquiry, 'Who has a better right to the chapel than the church that meets in it?' is a piece of casuistry so illogical, and so worldly, that I am astonished it should have been made.

"I would inform 'A Deacon' that not merely the principles of the gospel, but English law, reasons very differently, taking cognisance of antecedents, and right of possession; and so far from possession constituting the right, as 'A Deacon' seems to suppose, such processes are existent as Writs of Ejectment."

"If 'A Deacon's' law be sound, Trust Deeds are nullities, and so newly-framed churches may as well be advised to save themselves the expense of making them; since, if their successors should choose to turn Irvingites, Mormons, or Catholics, they still continuing, according to their own view, a 'church,' may properly remain in possession of their chapel.

"'A Deacon' has extensively quoted authorities, to prove his case, and demolish mine. So completely, however, is this beside the mark, that I must decline to follow him: your columns being, in my opinion, by no means a proper place for the discussion of those views which have been so recently embraced, and which, beside, are by no means relevant to the question I have mooted.

"I formerly stated, men are free to think and believe what they please, and I am the last man who would wish to interfere with them for so doing. Only, 'A Deacon' must not imagine that, because I decline to answer him in the Nonconformist, as to whether what he believes is 'old,' or 'new,' therefore his conclusions, based as they are upon assumed premises, are unanswerable.

"I merely call public attention to this matter, because a principle is involved, and an important one too.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, R. H. J.

"December 24th, 1859."

It appears to us that R. H. J. has altogether failed to make out his case—that he has abandoned the main points of his former letter, and only replied lest he should seem what he is—a defeated one. The main point of this reply is the question, Did the builders of Bond Street Chapel "design it exclusively for use by those who call themselves Baptists, according to the received meaning of that denominational term?" Do the parties now in possession hold the same views? "The same views!" On what—and the same as held by whom? This is our question! In Birmingham there are several, so called, Baptist churches that send representatives to, and are acknowledged by, the Midland Association. These churches differ in the following and other particulars. One or more receive at the Lord's table only baptized persons—others receive the unbaptized. Some will admit only the immersed to membership—one, at least, admits unimmersed members. Most of these churches support a pastor—one will not have a pastor, and will not pay a preacher. Some of these churches say that the Lord's table is in the church—one teaches that it stands outside the church, and that the members go outside to commune with those believers whom they will not admit to membership. Generally it is held that church membership is important—the pastor of one church teaches that it is of little or no use. Most of these churches elect their pastor, and dismiss him when they please—one boasts that church meetings have no power over him, that members have nothing to do but pay or go, that the house is his, and he will keep it straight, and that, except in the matter of infant sprinkling, the Church of England supplies the best specimen of church order. From some of the pulpits Calvinism is taught—in one or more its opposite; and in one, at least, both Calvinism and the converse of it. Now to be able to make this statement, we have not glanced at any church out of Birmingham. This is Baptist harmony. Some one has said, "Discord is harmony not understood"—but really the harmony of this Association of Baptist Churches is discord, though R. H. J. don't understand it.

The Bond Street Church has resolved to call itself Christian—others can call it Baptist, if they please. If they mean what the word originally signified a baptized church, the Bond Street Church is that—if they mean something else, what is it?—which of these Birmingham churches shall define it for us? When it is defined, let it be shewn that the builders of the chapel in question tied it to such views and practices, and then, when the claimants present themselves, if the Bond Street Church is possessed of common honesty, the chapel will be handed over.

In his former letter R. H. J. argued mainly on the violation of the principles of Independency, but now that "A Deacon" has given him those principles in authorized words, he declines to follow, and by no means thinks the Nonconformist a proper place for discussing the very point which he introduced. All of which merely means, he has not a word to say. His reply to the question, "Who has a better right to the chapel than the church which meets in it?" is a false issue. "A Deacon" did not affirm the right of the church on the ground of possession, but on the ground that changes had not taken place, which the principles of Independency, by which R. H. J. would have the case tried, would not sanction.

But this must suffice. To this tessellated Midland Association of Baptist Churches we may pay further attention.

The above having been written for insertion in the last number, but omitted from want of space, we are enabled now to add, that the friends in Bond-street Chapel have offered to submit their claim to retain that place of worship, to a testing by trust-deeds, the customs of Baptist churches, &c.—to which they have been urged by Baptist ministers in Birmingham—provided said ministers will bring their doctrines and practices under the same test. Of course men so orthodox, so uniform in faith and practice, will find such offer most congenial, and forthwith fall in with the proposal. When they do we shall report progress. D. K.

RISE & FALL OF THE PAPACY.

UNDER the above heading, and dated Jan. 10, 1860, two letters, signed Daniel Macafee, Lisburn, are before us. From the first we shall give an extract or two, and the second (without being understood as falling in with every item) we give with but little omission. That the three kingdoms which have fallen by the little horn, will 'ere long be taken from the Papacy, is indicated by the Word of God and the state of Europe—and both seem to point, not so much to the Pope's loss of civil authority by some one act, as to the wasting and consuming of his dominion. How completely the recommendation of the Emperor of the French agrees with the prediction of Daniel! The one says, give up the revolted states, and we will help you to retain the remainder (vain help!)—the Prophet says, they shall consume and destroy to the end. Mr. Macafee expects that the anticipated congress will take away part of the Pope's dominion. Whatever the congress may do, should it assemble, there is little room to doubt that the Romagna will soon be free.

LETTER I.

"The kingdom of sin has always been a most religious and zealous kingdom. Its arch-founder, Satan, tried his hand to reign without religion among the Antediluvians, but found he could not keep up a succession in opposition to the reign of righteousness. When Christianity was introduced, his kingdom was assailed, its idolatry was overturned, and the chief spirits of darkness must have been puzzled how to succeed. To carry it on in the old form was out of the question. Some new plan must be tried. All hell was on the watch. This continued for ages. They saw wealth corrupting the church under Constantine. Pride took the place of humility, external that of internal religion, and the spirit of the world the true spirit of the gospel. Now was the time to organize the kingdom of sin afresh, and carry on the opposition to the kingdom of Christ in a new form. Satan looked for a foundation on which to raise a slow but finished superstructure. He found it in Rome, the capital of the world, and centre of the ancient idolatry.

"He knew that the grand principle of the Gospel was justification by faith; his grand principle is justification by works. He clearly saw that around this principle he could gather up idolatry of every form, rake all existing heresies into this focus, and gloss up a system of sin into the semblance of Christianity, without any of its essential qualities. He therefore tried his plastic hand anew, gave prime attention to the work, and in course of time saw his masterpiece completed. In our Lord's temptation he was taken up into a high mountain, and shown all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. 'All these things will I give thee,' saith Satan, 'if thou wilt fall down and worship me.' Jesus said unto him, 'Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.' He was unsuccessful with our Lord, but he evidently succeeded with 'his vicar on earth.' Let the reader judge. Let us just glance at a few of his vicars, and the kingdom of sin will appear in all the glory that can beam through the mantle of Satan.

"In 1073 Gregory VII. ascended the throne. He became lord spiritual and temporal over all the earth. He set himself up as supreme judge of all affairs, ecclesiastical and civil. All benefices, kingdoms, states, and revenues, were at his disposal. As a proof of this, he excommunicated Henry III. in 1076. His successors possessed the same power, and exercised it for ages. The following short list of excommunications may suffice as a specimen. Thus in 1120, Calixtus II. deposed Henry IV.; in 1160 Hadrian IV. Frederick; in 1195 Celestine III. Henry V.; in 1219 Innocent III. Otho; in 1220 Honorius III. Frederick II.; in 1535 and 1538 Paul III. anathematized Henry VIII. of England; and in 1570 Pius V. cursed to perdition Queen Elizabeth. In fact, history furnishes about 64 Emperors and Kings that were deposed by the Popes. In 1197 Innocent, on ascending the papal chair, found the promise of Satan amply fulfilled, and had no reason to complain of his patron. He enjoyed the glory that others accumulated. Then was the reign of the leaden age. Gross darkness covered the earth—darkness that was felt. The pure Gospel was unknown; the Scriptures, buried in traditions, fables, and lying legends invented by monks, were the gospel of the day; and superstition stretched her gaunt wings over a prostrate world. Civil and religious liberty were strangers on the earth, and even the social circles were influenced and ruled by the Pope's militia, composed of monks and friars. Morals were as low as superstition was high; literature had died out under the rule of the Popes. Many priests could not write their names, and hence the sign of the cross is still perpetuated, as a remnant of former ignorance. The Popes aimed at universal rule, and for ages it was attained. The idea was colossal, and yet it was realized. Had this system not been checked, the world would have become like Sodom and Gomorrah.

"Constantine divided the empire into four provinces, and he must be bishop of the chief one. The chief city of each gave the title of 'metropolitan' to its bishop. The bishop of Rome was the greatest, because it was larger and more famous than the others. Constantine must fashion the territory of the church according to the plan of the empire; and hence each metropolitan must be called an 'exarch' or 'patriarch,' in imitation of the Pretorian prefects. These exercised authority over the metropolitans, and presided in diocesan synods. The bishop of Rome was now a patriarch; but still others were so as well as he. The scheme devised by the subtle architect has succeeded thus far. Here it is, saith Satan; let there be a primate over the patriarchs, and the tower of Babel will be complete. The bishop of Rome was appointed, and thus the popedom was prepared for all the operations described in history. Still the little horn of Daniel is small, or the second beast in Rev. xiii. is but the mere skeleton of the first beast. The first is the Roman empire, the second the Papacy. The second, like a vampire, is to suck the blood of the first, incorporate its vitality, religion, and tyranny into its system, grow fat and full, and perpetuate its existence for 1260 years."

LETTER II.

"In my last letter I traced in the briefest manner, the rise and progress of Papacy. The rapid sketch was primarily founded on history. Let us now turn to revelation. In this case we shall confine attention to the 7th chapter of Daniel's prophecy, one of the most wonderful books of inspiration. It contains the history of four empires—1. The Babylonian—a lion with eagle's wings, indicative of rapacity, cruelty, and rapidity of pouncing upon nations as a prey. 2. The Medo-Perian—a bear, hungry, voracious, all-devouring, exhibiting spoliation and robbery. 3. The Macedonian—a leopard, depicting variety, courage, rapidity, exhibiting the conquests of Alexander the Great. 4. The Roman Empire—diverse from all others—teeth of iron, nails of brass, devouring, breaking in pieces, stamping the residue with his feet, and having ten horns. These represent the ten kingdoms into which the Roman Empire was divided. Out from, or among these, arises the horn or kingdom of the Papacy. Mark the divine description, 'Behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom three of the first horns, or kingdoms, were plucked up by the roots, or fell before him. In this horn there were eyes like the eyes of man; his look was more stout than his fellows; he was diverse from the first, and his mouth spoke great things, or words against the Most High. He is to wear out the saints of the Most High, think to change times and laws, and they shall be given into his hand until a time, times, and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end.'

"Now let the reader mark every characteristic. The beast of the Roman Empire or kingdom indicates the nature of the little horn, as it grew out of him. It is therefore not of a heavenly, but an earthly origin. In Revelations xiii. the same beast is represented as having arisen out of the sea, or from the agitating troubles and commotions of nations. The second beast of John's Revelation is to exercise all the power of the first, and arises stealthily and imperceptibly out of the earth. This one and the little horn exhibit the same power under a different symbol. Each grows and progresses. The Papacy was not the creation of a day. It was the growth of ages. Like a tree, horn, or beast, it grew to full maturity. It arose out of the ruins of the Roman Empire, and the corruption of the times. Let us mark the indications suggested by the prophet. 1, It arose by degrees, as mysteriously as the growth of an animal's horn. 2, Three kings fell before it, and the popes fell into their dominion. This constitutes his present possession. 3, As the fourth beast was different to the other three, so the little horn or kingdom is stated to be different from any of the ten horns or kingdoms. The Papacy was different in its constitution, uniting the spiritual and temporal power. 4, It had eyes like the eyes of man. The Papacy claims universal episcopate, oversees all bishops, sovereigns, and nations. This indicates the perspicacity, foresight, cunning, and prying disposition of the whole ecclesiastical agency. These eyes penetrate into the secrets of the confessional, the affairs of families, the organization of parties, and the councils of nations, all for the good of the church. 5, His look was more stout than his fellows. It was steadier, more piercing, confident, arrogant, and enchanting, like the eye of a serpent, than that of any of his fellow-rulers. Hence, its glance has penetrated emperors, kings, princes, judges, bishops, and men of all classes. 6, He had a mouth speaking great things. He did this in excommunicating emperors and kings, laying kingdoms under an interdict, stopping baptisms and sacraments, shutting up heaven, opening purgatory and hell, dividing the earth between the Spaniards and Portuguese, as a boy would divide an orange, and interdicting the circulation of the Divine Word, cursing to perdition all who would disobey. 7, He speaks great words against the Most High. He does this in claiming his titles, such as King of kings, our Lord God the Pope, the most holy who carrieth the most holy, the victorious man of God in his See of Rome, the Lamb of God, the Infallible, and, to crown all, his Holiness. Thus, he is represented as sitting in the temple of God, exalting himself above all that is called God, dispensing laws and judgments for both worlds. What a pity such a mighty deity should tumble down, that Dragon should fall before the ark! That man who can weep for him would require a dozen of eyes to weep for his own sins. 8, He thinks to change times and laws. Thus, the Sabbath ending after mass, holy days, times of fasting, as in Lent, and Fridays, extra fasts, feasts, and jubilees, canonising saints, dispensing pardons, granting indulgences, imposing new articles of belief, denying the evidence of sense in transubstantiation, forbidding priests to marry, and decreeing the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary in direct opposition to the Word of God. 9, Wearing out the saints of the Most High. This was done in every conceivable form of persecution. One million of Albigenes and Waldenses perished in France alone. From the rise of the Jesuits in 1480, nine hundred thousand individuals obnoxious to Rome were slain in little more than an age. Not long after the massacre of Paris, seventy thousand Huguenots were destroyed on account of their religion. It is calculated that from the year 1518 to 1548—a term of thirty years—less than fifteen million of Protestants perished by the Inquisition, the common executioner, and the sword. Thus Rome tried to wear out the saints of the Most High, never dreaming that God would wear her out. 10, The reign of the little horn is limited to three prophetic times and a half. Each time is a year of 360 days; hence, the whole is 1,260 years. This is the set time. It is now near at hand. The free institutions of Britain have produced their influence on the world. Sardinia has followed the example; the states of Rome have followed in the train, and the Pope is thrown aside by the oppressive heaviness of his own people. Thus the doom of Babylon is come, 'and her days shall not be prolonged.' The present year may commence what '64 or '66 will complete.

"To complete this view, let us glance at the providential arrangement depicted by the Prophet, in effecting this purpose. The providential reign of the Divine Being is portrayed in the glowing language of the day of judgment. The Ancient of Days sits; his throne is like the fiery flame; his wheels like burning fire; thousands minister unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stand before him: the judgment is set, and the books are opened. One like the Son of Man comes in the clouds of heaven and to him is given dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people may serve him. Such is the preparation for the trial of Antichrist. If Christ is to reign over all people, the reign of the little horn must end. But will there be no human agency employed in this work?

God will judge alone in the last day; but, in the rule and judgment of his providence, he employs the agency of man. In all probability, this is indicated in the words marked in italics:—‘But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it, unto the end.’ Who, now, are meant by the relative they? Where is its antecedent? It was left for time to determine. Who knows but it may be found in the coming Congress? The Ancient of Days will preside, and overrule—the records of nations will be opened up—the trial of the little horn will take place—and it will be found that his reign must come to an end. If this be done by the coming Congress, then it will constitute the judgment; and they are the parties included in the prophecy uttered 2415 years ago. Two things are noted as being done. They shall take away his dominion, put an end to his rule in the Romagna by a judicial decree. Second—consume and destroy it unto that end. The same parties that are employed by Providence to begin the work, will be used as instruments to finish it. According to this idea it will not be totally destroyed by the judgment passed, but thrown into a state of consumption, that will end in complete destruction. How marvellous is the providence of God in its workings among the nations! In the year 479, Odoacer overturned the Western Empire, and was proclaimed King of Italy.

In 493 Theodoric upset the reign, and established the kingdom of the Ostro-Goths. In 553, the Eastern Empire, supported by the Lombards, put an end to this reign, and under Justinian it was governed by an officer called the Exarch of Ravenna. The Pope, getting alarmed at the growing power of Aistulphus, the King of the Lombards, appealed to Peppin, King of France. He re-conquered the whole, gave the Pope his present dominions, which was confirmed by Charlemagne, the son of Peppin. This was completed in 744. Thus, three kings fell before him, or in his presence; and from that period his Holiness wore the triple crown. One ruler of France, and a noted one, gave the Pope his dominion, and now Napoleon III. another ruler of France, is the chief agent in taking it away. The history of Napoleon I. is like a romance of nations; but the chief design of Providence in relation to him was to prepare the way for the present emperor, that he might effect the ultimate design of God in putting an end to the temporal rule of the Papacy. This will leave the Pope but one leg to stand on, the rotten one of infallibility. He will soon appear upon crutches, soliciting the charities of nations, and singing:—

“Pity the sorrows of a poor old man,
Whose trembling limb has borne him to your door,
Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span—
Oh! give relief, and heaven will bless your store.”

ITEMS OF NEWS.

CLERKENWELL (LONDON.)

I am happy to inform you, that on the 22d of January, I immersed one who has labored as a London City missionary for 14 years. For 20 years he had been connected with the Wesleyan Methodists—a sect possessing more zeal than knowledge, and certainly full of old wives’ fables. I rejoice now to find him by my side, worshipping God in spirit and in truth, according to the Divine plan, inasmuch as he is the very man who some years since stirred me up to the necessity of diligently studying the Word of God. He meets with the brethren and sisters assembling at 16, Great Warner-street, Clerkenwell, where they now number 10. Although the church is small, the neighbourhood is densely populated, even to the number of 100 families in a row of 12 houses, all living in a state of spiritual destitution. Our brother, who is quite au fait at domiciliary visitation, is laboring now as an evangelist, visiting from room to room, arousing the people from their lethargic state, and shewing unto them the way of life.

Believing that this news will be refreshing to the churches, I write in order that my brethren and sisters may rejoice with me. J. M. DAVISON.

CRICCIETH.

I am glad to inform you that an addition of thirteen has been made to the church at Criccieth, ten having been immersed, and three restored. December 29, 1859, one was immersed; January 8th, four; on the 15th, three; on the 29th, one; and on the 5th of February, one. W. J.

LEICESTER.

The following handbill, copies of which have been freely circulated, will convey to our readers some intimation of proceedings in this town, and the engagements of Bro. King in connection therewith :—

"Temperance Hall, Leicester.—'The poor are not found in great numbers in those places of worship, and I have often discussed with ministers of the Established Church and members of Dissenting bodies as to the reason. It is, I think, unfortunate that we cannot, in these days of luxury and civilization, resort to the simplicity of the early Christians.'—Lord John Russell. 'Must we be content with that poor substitute for apostolic fellowship in the Gospel, let us agree to differ; or an evangelical alliance which, transient and incomplete, betrays a sense of want without satisfying the craving?'—Bishop of Adelaide. 'It will, we think, be generally acknowledged, that neither our Lord's day services, nor such church meetings as are most common among us, attain the end we seek.'—The Freeman (the Baptist organ). 'Something must be done, or Popery, Infidelity, and general Atheism will yet awfully increase.'—Rev. John Angell James. —The revival of New Testament Christianity being absolutely necessary to the union of believers and the conversion of the world, the necessity, practicability, and duty of returning to Christianity as instituted in the beginning, and thus finishing the work on which Luther and others have labored and suffered, and to which a numerous host have devoted themselves, will (n.v.) be advocated in the above Hall. —Lord's-day evenings, February 26 and March 4, at 6-30, Lectures by David King, Author of 'Christianity, the Apostacy, and the Restoration,' Editor of Quo Warranto? &c.—Subjects: 1, 'God's Voice from Italy to British Protestants.'—2 'The Journey from Jerusalem to Rome, and from Rome to Jerusalem.' Also, on Monday and Wednesday evenings, February 27 and 29, and March 5 and 7, at eight o'clock, on 'Christian Union' and 'Christianity as it was and is.' After the Monday and Wednesday Lectures, opportunity for questions will be given.—Lord's-day mornings, 10-30, Disciples will attend to the Apostles' Doctrine, the Fellowship, the Breaking of Bread, and the Prayers. —The Sunday Evening Lectures in the Large Hall, the others in the Lecture Hall.—Admission free: no collection."

MARLBOROUGH.

We have been favored with a visit from Bro. Chew, of Birmingham, and have the pleasure of stating, that three males and one female confessed the faith after his address, and have since been added to the church by immersion. Since our last communication, we have immersed four others, making in all an addition of eight. In this village the Word of the Lord is arresting the attention of sinners, converting some and confuting others. As a church we are walking in peace and love, the effect of which is seen in large gatherings from the neighborhood, the room being frequently found much too small for their accommodation. The brethren have come to the unanimous conclusion, to build a room sufficiently large to meet the requirements of those who may desire to attend the proclamation of the gospel, and at the same time accommodate a flourishing Sunday School. The brethren are poor, and would gladly accept any sum of money from those who love the Lord, and desire to see His work prosper in this locality. Bro. R. Mumby, Market-place, Nottingham, is appointed to receive contributions.

MIDDLESBORO'-ON-TEES.

It is with some degree of pleasure that I now write you respecting the congregation here. The brethren being freed from recent anxiety and trouble, are in the enjoyment of peace, and are no longer in fear of strangers being disappointed by the introduction of untaught and speculative questions. As disciples we are endeavoring to edify one another, and to hold forth the word of life. Already good fruits are seen, and within the last few weeks one male and one female have confessed Jesus, and been baptized by his authority, into the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. May the Lord keep them to the day of his appearing.

J. HUTCHINSON.

NEWTOWN (ASHFORD, KENT.)

On Lord's day, February 5, we baptized one into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who is now going on his way rejoicing. May many more become obedient to the truth in this town and elsewhere. W. SMITH.

PORTMADOC.

Three males have been baptized and added to the church in this place, viz. one Sept. 18th, one October 2nd, and one December 18th, 1859. We now number about forty. We are about to erect a meeting-house, which is much wanted by the brethren and congregation. Though, to some, we may be objects of contempt, we trust that we shall be strengthened by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, to fight our way through this valley of tears to the eternal home.

W. JONES.

SWANSEA.

Since I wrote you last month, five more have been baptized into Christ. We attended a prayer meeting held in the Bethesda Baptist chapel, in this town, to whom we delivered a short address on John iii. 5 and Mat. xx. 19. After which, we immersed three of the above number in the baptistry of the chapel, in the presence of many spectators. The minister and church most cordially expressed their approval of our remarks on the ordinance of baptism, assuring us that they would be happy to afford us the use of the baptistry whenever we might require it. We again joined them in prayer on the Saturday evening last, and baptized one in the name of the Lord. Yesterday, Mr. Jones, the minister, immersed 18 into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. We hope they will yet learn to observe all things whatsoever our Lord has commanded. Two English Baptist churches in this town practice what is termed "Open Communion." By request of our Baptist brethren, we published 2000 copies of a tract on "Open Communion," extracted from the Christian Baptist and the British Millennial Harbinger, showing its inconsistency, with which the church referred to are much interested, purchasing 1000 copies for distribution. (The tract is given on the cover of our present number.) We rejoice to say, that our room is comfortably full on Lord's day evenings. Brethren, pray for us!

February 14, 1860.

E. E.

WAKEFIELD.

You will be glad to hear of success in the Lord's vineyard. A year ago the brethren residing in Wakefield, but meeting at Ossett Common, determined to open a room for Christian worship in Wakefield. We did so, and shortly after an intelligent young man embraced the truth as it is in Jesus. Since then we have had the pleasure of witnessing others make the good confession. On Jan. 28 the wives of Bro. Exley and Lockey, together with three young females, were all buried with Jesus in the waters of baptism, that they might receive, by faith in the blood of the Lamb, the full forgiveness of all their past sins, and henceforth walk in newness of life. On Lord's-day, Feb. 12, another young woman was immersed into the ever-glorious and adorable names; and on the 18th of February we had the high gratification of seeing three others take upon themselves the Christian profession by putting on Jesus in baptism, for the remission of sins. One of them is the daughter of our much-esteemed brother, Elder Corbridge, who, with her husband and another intelligent man, were baptized as above. We are in expectation that, before long, several more will confess the faith.

H. E.

WORTLEY.

We are progressing very well in our new room. On January 1 we baptized two, on the 11th one, and on the 31st two others. On February 9th we baptized a woman 63 years of age, on the 14th three others, and on the 19th one. Within the last fourteen months we have baptized eighteen into the name of Jesus. There is a plentiful harvest at Wortley, if we had only laborers to gather it in. If we had Bro. King or Bro. Chew with us, we should soon have our room filled; but we do not see that it is possible to have either of them with us at present, and therefore we shall endeavour to make the best use of the instrumentality we have. Brother Chew, when here in January, baptized a brother who was speaking for us last Lord's day, and who would be a great help to us if he resided at Wortley, but he lives ten miles distant. We hope to be refreshed often by his presence.

G. ROBERTS.

HINDMARSH, VICTORIA.

Since I last wrote, two months ago, twelve disciples have been immersed into the holy and divine names, upon a confession of their faith in the Christ, the Son of God. A very pleasing feature in connection with the above is, that whilst so many are entering into the ark of the New Covenant, by the heaven-appointed way, the number at the door does not seem to decrease. We discover more of Pentecost in this steady advance of the simple truth, than in the loud vociferations and ravings of modern revivalism. Men and women hear the word of God, and do it. Pardon and the gift of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, are promised by the Saviour to all who obey him. No need, now, to plead to God to come down and have mercy, for His mercy is so abundant in Christ Jesus, that whosoever accepts him as the Saviour, shall not perish, but have everlasting life. The uplifted, suffering Saviour, is to draw men to God. May the time soon come, when all man-made bonds of union and communion shall be broken, and all the zealous advocates for Christ, unite on the Word of God alone.

Dec. 15, 1859.

H. WARREN.

MELBOURNE, VICTORIA.

On Wednesday, November 24, I arrived at Warnambool by steamboats. I remained about ten days, and gave nine lectures on the way of salvation and "the things concerning the kingdom of God." Our meetings, after the two first nights, were encouraging. Night after night numbers attended and listened earnestly. A public testimony was given to the fulness of the proofs from Scripture of the principles and precepts taught in the lectures, with the single exception of dissent from the testimony, that the Jews will yet return to Palestine. The testimony was the more valuable, because made by an intelligent, consistent, pious Independent. Doubtless the seed sown will vegetate and appear fruitful. — I baptized one female, on making the good confession, on the morning of the day that I left. The church there consists now of six members, two males and four females. Both males are from Wales; one of them, Mr. Roberts, used to address large meetings in the Welsh language at home, but his English is so broken that he does not attempt to speak in public. They are therefore under the disadvantage arising from the want of one to proclaim the gospel to the world. The distance from Melbourne is about 160 miles, which cost me, going and returning, in the cabin, £7, and takes about 17 hours each way. — Warnambool lies high above the Pacific Ocean, which is only about a mile distant, has a beautiful bay, and much of as good agricultural land as is known in the colony. Fields of wheat were numerous on the road to Belfast, which is about 18 miles from Warnambool, and runs along at various distances, averaging probably about a mile from the sea. I do not remember ever having seen better crops of wheat than I saw in the vicinity of Warnambool. Bro. H. R. Thomas, chemist, Warnambool, thinks if any English farmer, or any wishing to come to farm connected with the Disciples, such could scarcely do better than Warnambool. He thinks such a one might benefit the church.

R. S.

MILANG (SOUTH AUSTRALIA.)

Although personally unknown to you, yet presuming on our fellowship in the Gospel, I send you a few lines. — It is a pleasure to know that some progress is being made in the good cause here. — In this place we number 20 members, of whom it may be truly said, that they dwell together in unity. We meet on the first day of the week, to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of our crucified but now exalted Lord, and are looking for his appearing a second time without sin unto salvation. — We hold two meetings on Lord's days for proclaiming the gospel, and have abundant reasons to thank God and take courage. It is our intention to preach the word, whether they will hear or forbear. Secarianism here is in the full meridian of its earthly glory; yet with all this, we occasionally meet with more thoughtful persons, who are willing to give heed to God's word, and attend to the things spoken therein.

G. PEARCE

NEWTOWN (SYDNEY.)

Since I last wrote we have received seven into the church, 4 males and 3 females; six were by immersion, and one from another church. — Our Lord's-day evening meetings for discussion are well attended, and very encouraging, though we meet with opposition on baptism and the work of the Spirit. We expect to obtain a more suitable place of meeting in the city.

T. GOODIN.

APRIL, 1860.

MODERN SPIRITUALISMS.

"Necromancy,"* or divination by the spirits of the dead — and the modern word "spiritualism" are equally destitute of scriptural warrant or authority. They are not once found in the Christian or Jewish Scriptures. They are a fungous growth on the rotten tree of a decayed or corrupted Christianity. Even the word spirituality is not once found in Holy Writ. It is merely tolerable in antithesis with the word carnality, but without divine or scriptural use or warrant.

Still, we maintain the position that, "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is not his." But "the Spirit of Christ," or "the mind of Christ," is the poles apart from our spiritualisms and spiritualities. We, indeed, find the words "Spirit of Christ," but twice in the Apostolic Scriptures. Once it simply indicates "the mind of Christ," as used by Paul (Rom. viii. 5.) In 1 Peter i. 11, it indicates the spirit of inspiration. Little, however, can be inferred from this formula, because in the Sacred Writings we find "the spirit of adoption," "spirit of Antichrist," "spirit of bondage," "spirit of burning," "spirit of counsel," "spirit of divination," "spirit of error," "spirit of fear," "spirit of grace," "spirit of glory," "spirit of jealousy," "spirit of judgment," "spirit of knowledge," "spirit of meekness," "spirit of slumber," "spirit of understanding," &c. These Hebraisms in our idiom, are a mere conversion of adjectives into nouns — as a meek spirit, a knowing spirit, a slumbering spirit, a divining spirit, &c.; for a spirit of divination, a spirit of slumber, a spirit of meekness, a spirit of knowledge, &c.

There has been, ever since the Protestant Reformation, a tendency in one school, to materialism, and in another, a tendency to spiritualism. We, however, still have both matter and spirit in our respective personalities.

There is, indeed, a species of trinity in man as in God. Man has a body, a soul, and a spirit — in one personality. He has a sooma, a pseuchee, and a pneuma, in his own individuality. These, indeed, are as distinct in sense as in sound. Not one of the three can be transmuted into either of the others, till the curtain falls upon the present drama of the Christian institution. At present, we know ourselves only in part, and only in part can we interpret ourselves in our mysterious and divine mechanism. The Gospel, indeed, contemplates the regeneration of man in his whole constitution and mechanism. A spiritual body can have an eternal life commensurate with its own spirituality. Hence, we must be physically regenerated at the resurrection of the just, and transformed by the renewal of the body as well as of the spirit.

"Before the throne, and first in song,
Man shall his hallelujahs raise;
While wondering angels round him throng,
And swell the chorus of his praise."

There are, in the history of humanity, two regenerations, one in the beginning of his spiritual life, and one at the commencement of his eternal life; for we shall wear or bear the image of Adam the second, as perfectly as we now bear the image of Adam the first, as he was when exiled from the presence of his God. Hence, the necessity of understanding and realizing the evangelical doctrine of regeneration.

There are two regenerations presented to our contemplation in the Christian Scriptures. Both of these were clearly propounded by the Great Teacher while sojourning in the world. The regeneration chiefly prominent in the present dispensation was, by the Messiah in person, propounded to Nicodemus, the then prominent teacher of the Jewish nation. It was to be, and is, effected by "the water and the Spirit." It is preliminary to introduction into the Christian kingdom, as now existent. The other as precedent to admission into the everlasting kingdom of Prince Emanuel, which is called "the regeneration," or "the resurrection of the dead." To the school that Christ himself educated, he once said, "You who have followed me, shall, at the regeneration—or resurrection (the second regeneration) sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve"—the whole "tribes of Israel."

* A word derived from necros in its root — no-see, without a heart.

As assessors, as inferior officers of justice, concurring in, and consenting to, the final and irrevocable sentence shall they sit with him, and concur in the final sentence—"Come you blessed," "Depart you cursed," &c.

Such is our exordium to the investigation of that ignis fatuus—modern spiritualism. The meteor shines only as it rises from the marshes. The low grounds of obliquity and corruption, are peculiarly favourable to the decomposition of animal or vegetable substances—and to the production of an inflammable gas, generated in the brains of sickly fanatics. This "Will with the wisp," as vulgarly called—this "Jack with his lantern," is a false light, "a perfect phantom of a bewildered imagination," seeking rest and finding none.

This new fangled spiritualism is not from heaven. It is of the world beneath, not from the world above. Satan transforms himself into an angel of light. He patronizes this spiritualism, but his spiritualism is a satire on the Bible. "God," says Paul, "who at sundry times, and in divers parcels, spake in times past to the fathers of mankind, has, in these last days, spoken to us by a SON, whom he has constituted heir of all things," by whom "he ordained" or constituted the ages, or the dispensations of his remedial grace. He crowns him "Lord of all," and gives to him the Holy Spirit without measure as his ambassador. Hence, he plenarily inspired his apostles, and sent them into all the world to announce his coronation and investment with absolute authority over heaven and earth—angels, men, and demons all being under his control. As the first fruit, or the first act of his reign, he sent, as his primary ambassador and the special advocate of his cause, the Holy Ghost, who visibly appeared upon the persons of his called, educated, and commissioned apostles on the very day programmed by the descent of God on Mount Sinai, in Arabia, when from his right hand issued the fiery law—on this day the promised Holy Spirit—the Holy Guest—visibly appeared in clearly separated and well delineated tongues of vivid light and power, bright as the lightnings of heaven. Simultaneously the consecrated twelve were inspired with the word of life, and arose to address a miniature world—men of every nation and dialect of earth—proclaiming the soul-stirring fact, that the recently crucified Jesus of Nazareth was then enthroned in glory, as LORD OF ALL, being constituted the rightful sovereign of the whole creation, and the henceforth dispensator of the Holy Spirit to become the Holy Guest of his mystical or spiritual body—the church of the first-born from the dead, and prince of all the princes of earth.

Three thousand conquests crowned the glories of that day.

This is the last of the twelve three thousands enrolled on the pages of the Holy Scriptures. The first of them is inscribed upon the pages of the Law. They perished by the sword of steel in the hands of the Levites, commanded by Moses, because they had created and worshipped a golden calf (Ex. xxxii. 28.)

Thus rebelling against God and his servant Moses, under that fiery law which he had received, three thousand men were made an eternal monument of the justice of his incensed majesty and of the provisions of his law. What an antithesis between the spirit of the Law and that of the Gospel! Those under the latter were immortalized because they heard the gospel; the former were destroyed because they disobeyed the law which God, by the hand of his servant Moses, had delivered to them!

Those three thousand monuments of the rigid justice of the theocracy, and these three thousand monuments of the abounding grace of the Christocracy, are most instructive lessons, demonstrative of the spirit of the Law and of the spirit of the Gospel. Thanks be to God that we are not placed under the stern justice of the fiery law, but under the sin-abounding grace of the gospel of the grace of God.

But, alas! this glorious gospel has been so mystified and perverted by "an empty and deceitful philosophy," that with a fearful multitude of those who preach and teach it, it is accounted "a dead letter," until again accompanied, preceded, or quickened by some super-added physical or supernatural impulse or operation of an abstract spiritual agent, they call the Holy Spirit. Half the preachers, at least, that we have heard, outside of our own community, are more or less addicted to theorizing or speculating upon certain spiritual impacts, impulses, or accompanying influences as indispensable and essential to the favourable or salutary reception of the testimony which God the Father has given to our Lord and Saviour Jesus the Christ.

Hence the factitious spiritualisms of the living age, are but the wild offshoots from the roots of this "dogmatic orthodoxy."

As a fruit of these spiritualisms, there has been generated a prolific race of factitious "peepers and mutterers," with their well trained "mediums." Despatches from hadees are, in several regions, as current as some of our bank notes. But they are, one and all, base and palpable impostures.

No prophet, apostle, or evangelist, named in Holy Writ, ever spoke or wrote such stolid nonsense as they express. But unless a man fully repudiates the Bible—the whole Bible—repudiates Moses and the Prophets—rejects the Lord Jesus Christ, his apostles and evangelists, as impostors, he cannot, for a moment, hearken to them.

Did not Paul the Apostle—the Great Apostle to the Nations, unambiguously say—Though any one—"we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than that which we have preached, let him be anathema maranatha;" let him be accursed until and when the Lord comes! To corrupt or pervert the Word of Life, to subtract aught from it, or to add aught to it, incurs the most terrific anathema that ever sounded in human ear.

Let us take a lesson from the evangelical prophet, Isaiah—"And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits—and to wizards that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek to their God?—should they seek for the living to the dead?" or rather, should they seek to the dead for the living, to inquire of them as to their own or another's future destiny? "To the law and to the testimony" let us look for our own destiny.

"Blindness to the future" of our earthly destiny, or that of those we love, "is kindly given." He is as foolish as wicked who would seek to know of himself, or of others, what God has wisely and benevolently reserved for himself. Hence, in the valedictory address of Moses, speaking by inspiration, he says, "There shall not be found amongst you" a medium—"one that useth divination—a consulter with familiar spirits, a wizard, or a necromancer; for all that do such things are an abomination to the Lord" (Deut. xviii. 10-14.)

Every approach to this impertinent curiosity is, in fact, if not in form, treading upon forbidden ground, and is justly obnoxious to the reprobation of God.

Evoking or imploring intelligence from the dead, as to their destiny or ours, or seeking it through any other medium than the public revelation of God, in his written law and in his gospel, is, in fact, superlatively irreligious and immoral; and is, in no respect, advantageous, but always disadvantageous to us. It is, indeed, not only impertinent and unprofitable, but also impious and profane. Harken to the Lord—"Seek to them that have familiar spirits? Should not a people seek to their God? Shall the living seek to the dead?" "To the law and to the testimony" (of God) "if they speak not according to this word, there is no light in them" (Isaiah viii. 19-20.) This is tantamount to eating "the sacrifices of the dead" (Psalm cvi. 28.) "They joined themselves to Baalpeor and feasted 'on the sacrifices of the dead.'" "Thus they provoked the Lord to anger; and a plague came upon them."

This is, in effect, deifying men after death. Are the spirits of the dead omnipresent? Is the spirit of Franklin, of Washington, of Wesley, or of any dead man omnipresent? If not, can they be present in London, in Paris, in Washington, in New York, in Boston, and in the midst of a thousand other circles, at one and the same moment? What stupidity—or rather, what hideous credulity! Of all the hoaxes or mesmerisms practiced upon human credulity, this caps the climax! At ten o'clock last night there were a thousand circles in these United States—and over a thousand circles outside of them, and at one and the same time, the spirit of Franklin, of Calvin, of Luther, of Wesley, were in attendance, answering questions propounded to them! What man, of common sense and a little reflection, could believe it?

Of all the responses that have been given from the infernal or supernal regions to any circle, touching human destiny, we have yet to hear the first one reported that any person not initiated could believe or appreciate, as coming from any intelligent spirit in the universe.

Has not blindness to the future of time and human destiny, as respects this life, been kindly given to man? Has not the way to heaven and immortality been fully opened to human vision, by the express and intelligible oracles vouchsafed to man by God's beloved Son and his holy Apostles?

What need we more than that which the Holy Spirit himself has spoken to us through his inspired Evangelists and Apostles? Did not THE ORACLE of God himself depose, that if man, constituted as he is, "hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither would he be persuaded, though one rose from the dead;" and rehearsed to him his whole experience? In that case, more doubts would arise as to the credibility of that one man, than could arise as to the testimony of Moses and the Prophets, of Jesus and his twelve Apostles. The testimony is so overpowering, so overwhelming all rational doubts, that untold millions of the wisest and the best of men that have ever adorned humanity, have fully accredited it; and multitudes untold have sealed their testimony to the claims of the Lord Jesus with their blood.

The triumphant conquests of the gospel, in their innumerable multitudes, seal the lips of every impartial man. None but those desperadoes, whose sins have seared their consciences and hardened their hearts, can, for a moment, doubt, or deny, its divine origin and its transcendent claims.

But we find in our professed Christian communities not a few who are properly called, at least, in one acceptation of the word, spiritualists. They are in alight shades somewhat diverse from one another. They make a prominent distinction between the Word and the Spirit of God. It is plausible, because there is a difference between the word and the spirit of man, and of God.

The Lord Jesus Christ is "THE WORD OF GOD," who became man in order to redeem man. He was in the beginning of the universe; nay, he was "THE BEGINNING," by whom, and for whom the material and the spiritual universe was created. The universe, spiritual and material, was not only created "by him, but for him." "He was before all things, and by him all things consist," exist, and stand together. He is the beginning and the ending, "the Alpha and the Omega," the "first and the last."

The universe, spiritual and material, is the work of his Almighty hand. All things were created by him, and for him, and therefore he is Lord of all. His full-orbed glory is found in Jehovah Elohim. With Locke, the great moral philosopher, we read, Exodus vi. 3, "By my name Jehovah was I not known to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob?"

We, therefore, read this verse as follows:—"I appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, and by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them?" It occurs but six times in the Holy Scriptures. Five of these are connected with Jirch, Nissi, Shalom, Shamamah, Tsiddkenu*—found only in the Jewish Scriptures. Half of its occurrences are found in the writings of Moses. God's ineffable glory is expressed only in this awfully sublime name.

Spiritualistic theories in our modern sects have entrenched themselves in an inappreciable nomenclature. God always works by means. Hence, the creation drama was a speech. God always works by means since first he formed the world. Has he ever wrought by any other instrumentality than his word? If he has, the Bible has concealed it!

Hence, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe it. And what is the gospel? Let us quote the etymological definition of the word, according to the most erudite lexicographer of our language. Webster defines the word from the Saxon etymology of it—"Godspell—God—good, and spell—history, narration, word, speech, that which is uttered, announced, sent, communicated—answering to the Greek—euaggelion, a good, or joyful message." He adds, "it is called the gospel of God" (Romans ii. 1); "the gospel of Christ" (Romans i. 16); "the gospel of salvation" (Eph. i. 13)—"a history or narrative of the birth, life, actions, death, resurrection, ascension, and doctrine of Jesus Christ." He is minus only in one point. It does not culminate in the ascension of Christ; for angels and spirits ascend to heaven. He lacks the capital idea, which was not the ascension of Christ, but his coronation as Lord of the universe—"angels, authorities, principalities, and powers," celestial, terrestrial, and infernal, were placed under his absolute power. Unless he uses the word "doctrines" as teachings, we would also demur at this term, because "doctrines," in the original tongue, in the plural, are connected with "men and demons"—and never in the plural form in reference to the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ. We find "the doctrine" (didachee) thirty times in the Christian Scriptures: always singular, never plural, when connected with Jesus Christ. It is once found in the plural "with diverse and strange doctrines." But these are the doctrines of men.

Didaskalia, a different word, is found

* JEHOVAH JIRCH, "The Lord will see or provide." JEHOVAH NISSI, "The Lord my banner." JEHOVAH SHALOM, "The Lord send peace." JEHOVAH SHAMMAH, "The Lord is there." JEHOVAH TSIDKENU, "The Lord our righteousness."

repeatedly in the Christian Scriptures, and in the plural form represents—"the doctrines of men," and "the doctrines of demons." In the singular number it also frequently designates the teaching of Christ and that of the Apostles. We find "good doctrine," and "sound doctrine," in the Christian Scriptures, represented by both didaskalia and didache; but never in the plural number of either word when the Christian doctrine is meant.

These are suggestive facts, of much value to the disciples of Christ, who desire a pure speech, in order to the union and communion of the whole family of God, and the spread of his gospel throughout all the nations and tribes of humanity.

We have in Polytheism, Judaism, Philosophy, and in Paganism, diverse forms of doctrines, theories, sects, and parties. But none of these enter into the letter or spirit, the doctrine or teaching, of the original and true apostolic gospel.

The more popular forms of sectarianism are essentially theoretic, speculative, political; and, therefore, necessarily of a schismatic tendency. Hence, the numerous forms of Episcopacy, Presbyterianism, Congregationalism, Methodism, Arianism, Unitarianism, and Trinitarianism, &c.

Apostolic and primitive Christianity had but one Lord, one faith, one immersion, one body, one spirit, one hope, and one God and Father of all, who is above all, and by his good Spirit dwells in all his children, without respect to their theories, speculations, or politics, ecclesiastic or national.

There are two prominent and rather popular methods of making both the law and the gospel void and valueless to any, and to every community. If asked what these two methods are, we promptly and decidedly affirm that they are, what is usually called, philosophy and tradition. The Greek stood pompously upon his philosophy, and the Jew upon his tradition. So devoted was the Jew to the traditions of the elders that he called them "THE ORAL LAW."

The Roman church, in her Council of Trent, when legislating on tradition, says: "The truth and discipline of the Catholic church are comprehended, both in the Sacred Books, and in the traditions which have been received from the mouth of Jesus Christ himself, or of his Apostles, and which have been preserved and transmitted to us by an uninterrupted chain and succession."

Protestantism is clearly expressed in the following words:—"The Holy Scriptures containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation." To this we say, Amen.

The Great Teacher himself said to his contemporaries, the Jews—"Why do you transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?" And again—"You have made the commandment of God of none effect by your traditions" (Matt. xv. 3-6, Mark vii. 3.)

We Protestants, of the last half of the 19th century, are excessively theoretical and speculative. We have a few domestic manufactories. And we even sometimes place the Sacred Writings of prophets and apostles in the hands of our rabbinical doctors, who distil them, and extract essences from them, and these are gulped down with the avidity of inebriates, on the part of the sickly patients, found in their spiritual hospitals and ecclesiastic infirmaries.

The Great Physician, however, adopted quite another system of medical ethics—and with his perfect science of humanity, and of all the elements of the universe and of man, past, present, and future, he prescribed to all the patients in the world's infirmary but three remedies; and these are pure air, pure water, and pure unleavened bread, made out of pure unbolted flour, with a reasonable amount of both mental and physical exercise in the open field.

These are the consecrated types of Holy Writ. Hence, our Lord himself, in person, spoke to his contemporaries in Jerusalem, Samaria, and throughout the Holy Land, of the "bread of life," "the water of life," and "the breath of life." His imagery is perfect and complete in itself, without any foreign aid, or ornament of philosophy or science, truly or falsely so-called, on the part of man.

The speculative theories of orthodoxy, or heterodoxy, are wholly impotent to heal the mortal wounds of sin, or to give health or life to any representative of Adam and Eve. The Spirit alone, the Divine Spirit—the Holy Guest of the Christian church, is alike the life and health of his body, the church. He alone quickens, animates, strengthens, purifies, and consoles, by his own breathings, the wounded heart and the sickly conscience. "The entrance of thy word, O Lord, giveth light, and makes the simple wise." "I will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways. I will delight myself in thy statutes. I will not forget thy word" (David.)

We need no "sealing ordinances." The sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ sealed up all such ordinances as had their roots and reasons in blood. "The testimony was bound up" and the "Law sealed among the disciples," when the expiring sacrifice gave up the ghost.

Messiah's throne, like all other thrones on earth, was founded, and is still founded, on blood and conquest. But unlike to, and above all, imperial thrones in the universe, Messiah's throne was, and is, and evermore will be, founded on his own blood. It was not, however, on his own blood as a martyr, but on his own blood as a free will sacrifice and offering for the redemption and reconciliation of his own enemies.

This is the climax of all climaxes, exhibited in the innumerable circles of creation's immeasurable area.

Hence, the Holy Spirit received by him, was despatched by him to the City of Jerusalem and its surroundings—the theatre of his cross, his sufferings, his ignominy, and his glory; and then, and there, declared him to be the divinely constituted Lord Messiah—the divinely legitimate Autocrat of the entire area of the universe—angels, authorities, principalities, and powers—celestial, terrestrial, and infernal—being subjected to him.

Such are my conceptions, and such is my faith in the person, the position, the offices, the work, the personal glory, the official dignity, and the all-transcending splendour and majesty of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

To make proclamation of these honours, dignities, and glories vouchsafed to him, no angel, no cherub, no seraph was adequate in rank and dignity. The HOLY SPIRIT himself, in person, becomes the ambassador, descends to Jerusalem, when and where a world's convention was in session—and when the Pentecostal congratulations were over, Peter, on whom the Lord himself had bestowed this honour, crowned with tongues of lambent flame, surrounded with his eleven co-apostles, alike decorated by the same brilliant coronal tongues—and with one heart and voice announced the most soul-stirring oracle enunciated by mortal man, viz.: "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God has made that same Jesus whom you have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

The grandeur of the scenes, the grandeur of the oracle, the grandeur of the concourse, and the grandeur of the success, were all in good keeping; and altogether original in the drama of humanity: unprecedented, and unsucceeded, by any subsequent displays of equal power, majesty, and glory.

No change, no addition, no emendation, is conceivable on the part of humanity. Like the drama of creation, it was good—good, in every sense, perfect and complete. Hence, simple, honest, cordial submission to it, and compliance with all its requisitions, are alike the safety, the honour, the glory, and the happiness of man, conditioned as he now is.

The first dispensation of remedial mercy was paternal or patriarchal, in its highest conception. The second national, of one blood; the third imperial, of one faith, embracing all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

As far as sunlight transcends moonlight, and moonlight starlight, so far transcends the last dispensation of remedial grace and mercy—the starlight or patriarchal form—the moonlight, or the national form. “The Sun of Righteousness,” or the sun of justice and mercy combined, has, in his ineffable grandeur, risen upon the nations in full-orbed splendour and glory, “with healing in his rays.”

But Jehovah Elohim, in the remedial interposition, is manifested in three distinct personalities. The reasons of these personal manifestations rise ineffable above all human appreciation or comprehension. But faith rises ineffably above all human reason. Reason has no creative power; but it has an appreciating power, which to man is all-sufficient as respects his origin, his relation to creator and creature, his position in the universe, and his endless destiny in it. We can walk by faith far beyond the regions of reason or imagination, guided by the omniscient, omnipresent, and omnipotent God.

Hence faith can master that which neither reason nor imagination can scale or fathom—even that which neither reason nor imagination can create or annihilate. And hence, Paul's men of faith (Hebrews xi.) achieved objects, conquests, victories, and triumphs, which neither mere rationalists nor imaginants* ever did, or ever could achieve.

The objects of Christian faith, hope, and love are ineffably grand, and rise above all our present powers of appreciation or comprehension. Hence, Paul says that human eye has never seen, nor human ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things—(the glorious realities) “which God has prepared for them that love him.” But God has revealed so much of them to us by his good Spirit, as we can now appreciate and enjoy.

His revelations are stereotyped in words suggested by the revelations of his Spirit, as Paul deposes, 1 Cor. ii. 13. Still it is in words or ideas, and not in vague impulses, that the will and purposes of God are made known to us; and hence faith, hope, and love come into our hearts through the words employed by his amanuenses—the Prophets and the Apostles. It was not by an extrinsic but an intrinsic influence of the Holy Spirit, that his own amanuenses—the holy men of old, spoke his mind and will to Prophets and Apostles. It was by that Spirit that searches out, and gives utterance to, the grace and mercy of our God, they spoke and wrote.

The idea that the Holy Spirit, “independent of the word, and without the word of the truth of the gospel,” does by any impact or impulse, regenerate a sinful man—one “dead in trespasses and sins”—is without scriptural or evangelical authority or reason; and greatly paralyzes the understanding, the conscience, and the heart of every individual who entertains such a dreamy speculation.

Who can rationally doubt the testimonies of the Four Gospels, or that of the Twelve Apostles in all their writings and revelations, sealed as they are by the plenary inspirations and the miracles attesting them furnished by the hand of the Lord, through the indwelling of that Holy Spirit promised to be with them, and to speak through them, to the consummation of the mediatorial reign of Messiah the Lord.

Of the reality of these facts, precepts, promises, and warnings we have the most satisfactory evidence that can be given in proof of any facts or events enrolled in the pages of all time, or accredited by any man compos mentis, now living, or that has lived. “If,” said the Messiah himself, “they do not believe Moses and the prophets,” and we may add, Jesus and his apostles, “neither would they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." Is not this enough?

* Had we a patent for creating new words we would have preferred imaginists. Lord Bacon introduced “imaginant.”

But in conclusion of this already prolonged essay, I must say, that in my opinion, the metaphysical theories of regeneration debated through the last century, and through much of the present, have contributed to the coldness and barrenness of the pulpit and the press. And, strange to say, no sinner, male or female, parent or child, was ever regenerated, or born again, through an assent to, or a consent with any theory ever promulgated by tongue or press; no more than that any one was ever literally born of his own theory, or of that of any other person. According to the Great Teacher, when addressing Nicodemus, no one was ever begotten or born of, or by, anything he himself performed, or of or by ANYTHING WHICH HE HAD PREVIOUSLY RECEIVED.

Equally indisputable it is, that in the generation or creation of the heavens and the earth, nothing was created without a special oracle of God. Hence, as we have often said, the creation drama was but a speech of God.

Job, some 1520 years before Jesus the Christ was born, had written, (speaking of the creation) "By his Spirit he has garnished the heavens; his hand has formed the crooked serpent"—"the milky way," as now almost universally understood.

Peter, the Apostle, with the keys, severely complains of the prospective scoffers, whose antecedents he gives in his second Epistle.

"Of this," says he, "they are voluntarily ignorant; that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; by which water the old world perished." Need we again and again reiterate — that no spirit incarnate, or unincarnate, acts upon another spirit incarnate or unincarnate, by any special touch, contact, impact, or impression?

Teachers are not motives in the spiritual universe. They have exclusive reference to materialities. We could not move a stone by all the reason, logic, rhetoric, or metaphysics in Christendom. Nor could we move a spirit by all the mechanical powers developed in all their potency in the highest artistic combinations known to science or art. The whip of the ox-driver upon his team is infinitely more potent than all the reason, logic, rhetoric, mathematics, and metaphysics of Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, or even Sir Isaac Newton himself.

The volition of Jehovah alone is omnipotent. Embodied in words, in a single speech, it formed the heavens, and the heaven of heavens, and all that live and exist in them. For the sake of the tenancies—the spiritualities and powers of a spiritual universe, he embodied his volitions in words—the thenceforward instrumentality of every specific demonstration of his will, presence, and power. Hence, the divine agency was, in its consummation and manifestation, embodied in that personality, or impersonation of Jehovah Elohim, emphatically called THE WORD OF GOD. Hence, his most beloved disciple (while Jesus himself kept a peripatetic school in Judea and Jerusalem) in his gospel memoirs, introduces him in unrivalled simplicity, pathos, and beauty; attesting in the most suggestive and loving style: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God." The universe, with all its tenancies, "was created by him and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things 'subsist and' consist"—standing in rank and file, attesting in reason's ear his eternal power, wisdom, and goodness.

When these prefatory indications of the hero of man's redemption are realized and clearly apprehended, and not till then, are we prepared to understand, to preach, and to teach the gospel in its original simplicity, pathos, and power. And not till then can any man discourse intelligently and scripturally upon the standing text of the modern pulpit oratory—regeneration. This, indeed, emphatically is made the primordial element and standing theme of the modern pulpit, though only twice found in all the books of Holy Writ, Old Testament and New.

One of these two has exclusive reference to a date—and that is the day of the final judgment; Matthew's gospel, chapter xix. 28. It is in the following words:—"You who have followed me, at the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, you also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Properly printed and punctuated it so reads in the Bagster editions of the Christian Scriptures. The first reference in the Bagster's margin, is to Isaiah lxi. 17 : "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind."

This is a pregnant proof of the superficiality of the modern pulpit. Instead of referring to conversion or baptism, it has exclusive reference to the final judgment and its fruits. Again, their use of the reference to Isaiah lxvi. 22, is quite as wild, which reads—"For as the new heavens and the new earth which I will make shall remain before me, so shall Abraham's posterity and name remain before me for ever!" The third reference is Acts, chapter 3rd, "Whom the heaven must retain until the times of the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." This restitution of all things is frequently cited to prove the personal regeneration of sinners! "The washing of regeneration, or of the new birth, is appositely referred to baptism by multitudes of the most popular and respectable commentators and interpreters in Protestant Christendom. So much only in passing.

This is, however, a speculative theory of spiritual influence that is alike unevangelical and incompatible with the apostolic exhibitions of the gospel and its institutions. There is, indeed, no preaching, no teaching of any abstract spiritual influences, as preliminary to faith or repentance, in all the records of the apostolical labours from the day of Pentecost, after Christ's ascension into heaven, to the final amen of the Christian Scriptures.

Such preachings and teachings are but mere innovations of modern theorists, and have greatly encumbered both the preaching of the gospel and the evangelical developments of its primary institutions.

There is not, we repeat, one abstract or speculative view or theory of regeneration, stated or reported, in any sermon, or sentence of any apostle, evangelist, or preacher, from the day of Pentecost (Acts ii.) to the end of their preaching, and their evangelical labors. They preached "the Christ crucified," to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; as "the wisdom and power of God to every one who received him." They repudiated all speculations and philosophies of men on the person, the mission, and the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. They preached the gospel as Paul stated it in his First Epistle to the Corinthians, xv. They did not preach the Holy Spirit, but occasionally introduced him as a witness. This was in good keeping with his office and mission. He was the commissioner—the divinely commissioned Advocate of the claims of Jesus of Nazareth to be both Lord and Christ—or the christed, that is—the anointed Lord of the Universe, and the divinely constituted ambassador of Jehovah, the plenipotentiary of the universe.

It is only at this stand-point that we can duly perceive, and realize, and acknowledge that Jesus of Nazareth is now the sublime Autocrat of the universe. Hence, the coronation of Jesus of Nazareth, as Lord of the whole creation, was the divinely ordained symbol of his plenipotentiary power, and the consummating act of his investiture with the government of the entire universe of God. "For, to the end," says Paul, "Christ has died that he might be Lord of the dead and of the living" (Rom. xiv. 9.) "Therefore," says Paul to the Philippians, "God also has exalted him, and given him a name" (a title) "which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow—of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth."*

His representative gift and ambassador was, and is, the HOLY SPIRIT. Hence, his descent on the first Pentecost after the ascension of Christ. Hence, all the gifts and graces vouchsafed on that occasion were designed to be, and are, the standing, the perpetual pledges and monuments, as well as the first fruits of his accredited reign. The Lord Jesus is, therefore, the divinely accredited Monarch—Autocrat—that is, the Lawgiver, the Judge, the final Arbitrator of the destinies of the universe. In whose hands could it have been placed more honorable to God, more honorable to man, more satisfactory to all the estates of the universe?

* Things, in the connection, is awfully sublime; indicative of all the states, orders, ranks, and dignities in the universe. No official names of earth's grantees can represent these celestial ranks and dignities.

The first petition of what is usually called "The Lord's Prayer," was then literally fulfilled. No one needs now to pray, "Thy reign" or "kingdom come,"* since that prayer was answered on the first day of the week, the day of the Lord's resurrection, on which the Holy Spirit literally descended to Jerusalem.

"The Holy Spirit" himself honored this day. He descended upon it on the first Pentecost after our Lord's ascension. He gave a splendid collation of gifts to his consecrated apostles. Tongues with flaming brilliancy crowned their heads. The Holy Spirit inspired their hearts and gave them eloquence to proclaim the coronation of Jesus of Nazareth as LORD OF ALL. So that the kingdom of Christ — the reign of the heavens, was formerly inaugurated and splendidly attested. The first petition of the Lord's prayer was now answered, and three thousand souls were added to the one hundred and twenty, then in expectation in the city of the temple. So commenced the reign and kingdom of the Lord Jesus the Christ.

We now live under his reign, and so has his true church ever since the Holy Spirit descended, as the missionary of the Lord Jesus Christ. So our Saxon forefathers designated him as the Holy Ghost—more pertinently and truthfully the Holy Spirit. But he is emphatically noted that he appeared in tongues of lambent flame, and perched upon the heads of the Holy Twelve. So opened the reign of the Lord Messiah. But now arises the much litigated question as to the present modus operandi of this Divine personality. He made a splendid use of tongues — of human language. Jesus the Christ was the theme, His coronation the topic. Tongues, or languages, were his chosen instrumentalities. Jesus was, and is, "The Word." And words were apposite alike to his person, to his audience, and to his theme.

* The frequent and formal repetitions of this prayer, repeated so often in the Old World and in the New—consecrated in the Rubrics "the red books" of Constantinople, Rome, England, and by not a few in these United States, are no great proofs of our Protestantisms, or of our evangelical appreciation of the true Christian worship.

Now, the question, the great question—WHAT IS THE GOSPEL? can be more satisfactorily answered and understood. And, also, what the preliminary work of the Holy Spirit was, as the gospel's advocate. He descended from heaven—attested Jesus of Nazareth—perched upon his head—took possession of his whole person—waited upon him through all his earthly life—inspired his apostles—accompanied them through all their ministration—made himself visible upon their persons in tongues of lambent flame, imparting to them, in a moment, command of all the languages of all the nations of the then living world, represented in the first world's convention, held after his investiture with the crown and sceptre of the universe. God the Father and the Holy Spirit publicly signified and certified the person and the mission and commission of the Hero of man's redemption.

The apostolic teachings of the gospel are our only true and reliable models. They never theorized on any topic. They proclaimed the gospel facts and institutions, and commanded all men everywhere to repent—to reform—or to bring forth fruits worthy or indicative of a true faith, and of a true spiritual evangelical repentance.

The philosophies of regeneration are yet matters of debate all over Protestant Christendom. With not a few, baptism is itself regeneration. This is of Papal authority in Western Christendom. It is so, too, in Eastern Christendom, alias the Greek church of patriarchal authority. Rome and Constantinople canonize tradition, in the form of councils and creeds, as tantamount, if not paramount to, the apostolic institutions. Both these communities have their seven sacraments—baptism, chrism, the Eucharist, confession, penance, ordination, marriage, and extreme unction. Chrism and baptism accompanying each other, complete one sacrament.

Baptism, in Protestant creeds, is more commonly presented and regarded as "the washing of regeneration." Renouncing all human creeds and human formulas of religious conventions, and adopting the Apostolic writings as the Alpha and the Omega of all Christian institutions, we have no "sacraments," nor "sealing ordinances" of Roman or Grecian institution. We repudiate them one and all, as weak and beggarly elements. But in this we may, and do glory, that we have but one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one body, one spirit, one hope, and one God and Father of all.

There is, then, we repeat, a speculative view of spiritual influence, that is neither evangelical nor compatible with the Apostolic preachings and teachings. The evangelical dispensation affords no precedent for preaching or asserting an abstract and speculative theory of either generation or regeneration. There is no preaching, no teaching of abstract spiritual influences, as preliminary to faith or repentance, in all the records of the Apostolic labors, from the day of Pentecost after Christ's ascension into heaven, to the final amen of the Christian Scriptures.

Such preaching is an innovation on the part of certain theorists, that has greatly perverted the gospel, and encumbered the preachings and the teachings of the Christian ordinances and institutions.

We have fearfully presumed to improve upon the divinely instituted and approbated teachings and preachings of the commissioned Apostles—the chosen heralds of the Christian institution.

Under this preaching, teaching, and exhortation of the ambassadors of Christ, as reported in the Christian Scriptures, the primitive churches were intelligent, faithful, hopeful, joyful, rejoicing in the Lord, in the full assurance of faith, in the joyful anticipations of hope, and in the fellowship of a pure love, and an affection that almost annihilated selfishness, censoriousness, envyings, jealousies, rivalries, and all the fleshly lusts that war against the peace, the love, and the happiness of the family of God. Ought we not, then, to abandon all partyism, and its theories, and cultivate that holiness without which no man can enjoy God? A. C.

THE NEW TESTAMENT PERIODS.—No. I.

AFTER relating incidents connected with the birth of Jesus and John, the New Testament history opens with the ministry of John the Baptist, who proclaimed the coming reign of heaven; and it closes with an account of the rapturous visions of another John, even the beloved Apostle, who was permitted to look upon the inconceivable splendors of the heavenly city, and to hear angel-speech portray the felicities pertaining to all its tenantry.

From the time when John proclaimed a coming kingdom on earth, down to that period when the holy city shall be the inheritance of the redeemed, how great and momentous are the events which have and shall transpire—how fraught with consequences affecting earth and heaven! There is a history here, the most remarkable and interesting that human eye ever read, or human understanding studied. The New Testament embraces a history—the history of redemption. It opens with all men sinners—it ends with the glorious truth, that out of every kingdom, tribe, and tongue, a people, numerous as the stars of the firmament, shall be raised to the exalted dignity of the angels, and made joint inheritors with Jesus Immanuel, Lord and Owner of all things.

This history should be studied. Its subject is Jesus, his character, his work, his word: its object, redemption for man.

The design of these numbers is to glance at this history; and it shall be the endeavor to do so in such a way as to attach more interest to it, and incite more desire to read and study it. In this history we study Christ and Christianity; we learn ourselves, our relations and destiny. Here we have all of real and eternal good which Heaven has kindly offered to a fallen creation. If we can create, even in a small degree, a renewed interest in this best of books, a good end will be accomplished.

It has occurred to us that the history of things divine should be studied after the manner in which students investigate profane history—that is, by periods; noting how events succeed and depend upon each other. This is a much more rational method than to study by books and chapters. No one can read the New Testament to best advantage who does not have its distinct periods before his mind. It is not enough to distinguish between the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles, and their distinctive designs. It is evident to us that this great history derives increased interest from nicer divisions of the word of truth—that a sublimer interest attaches to it when, step by step, we study its distinct periods, and pausing with each, inquire, What is accomplished here? What progress is made towards the great consummation of the divine benevolence to man?

If the writer has studied this precious book to advantage—if he has been happy in learning its true divisions—the following periods include the New Testament entire:—

1. The period including the personal ministry of John the harbinger.

2. The period including the personal ministry of Jesus.

3. The brief interval of three days and nights. Subject: The death, the burial, and the resurrection of Christ, first fruits from the grave.

4. The time which elapsed between his resurrection and ascension—forty days, or more.

5. The short interval between the ascension of the Saviour and the descent of the Holy Advocate.

6. The dispensation of favour proper, spreading over a period of two thousand years, more or less.

7. The interval of one thousand years—the day of rest and peace to the church—the millennium.

8. The finale—the heavenly state—the beginning of the saint's eternity.

Let one study these periods, the work accomplished in each, and the design of such work, so far as he may be able, and we opine that he will read as he has not read before; and like the scribe well instructed by heavenly wisdom, be able to bring out of the rich treasury of revealed truth "things new and old."

In a few numbers to follow, the Lord willing, we shall attempt to glance

(and it can only be a glance) at the distinctive work in some of these divisions—the first of those named. Upon the last two we can say little—we know too little. However much they may occupy thought—to whatever extent they may attach power and dignity to every preceding event, it were unsafe to write much. Of this we can be assured, that, however much thought and speech may fail, their reality shall be worthy of the Infinite benevolence, and of a character to excel the highest conceptions of the brightest intellects, and the purest hearts among God's sainted family on earth. Presently, then, we speak of the past; the future requires an understanding and a tongue more than human.

We here premise: It is not ours now to look into the anterior dispensations, and inquire into the dependencies of the New Testament events upon the preceding ones. God's design from the creation has been one; but his work, in accomplishing the redemption of man, has been varied. Through Patriarchs, Prophets, and Seers, in the Law and in the Psalms; by all the holy men of old, he has wrought for the same end. No one of the ancients ever spake or wrote, as dictated by the all-inspiring Spirit, only to contribute to the grand object, first in the mind of God, but last in execution. Indeed, the spirit, the burden of prophecy, was testimony concerning Jesus. A mighty work had been done before the New Testament history began. We cannot go back and show how much, and the progressive steps of its accomplishment: what was the full extent of that work into which Christ's own Apostles entered and reaped whereon they had bestowed no labour. To include all would require a book, rather than a few articles for a work like this.

A. CHATTERTON.

(To be continued.)

TROUBLE.—Our lives are better for the rain that falls into them. They who have known no sorrow, have never felt the honey-dropping balm of consolation. We are nearer heaven after the ministry of grief. As the rain drops gently from the skies, so may all things lovely and of good report fall into our human hearts.

MERCIES.—Were there but a single mercy apportioned to each moment of our lives, the sum would rise to a very great number; but how is our arithmetic confounded, and how are our thoughts enlarged, when we reflect that every minute has more mercies than it is in our power to distinctly number.
—Rowe.

PRIDE.

Luke x 17-21.

THIS is a very remarkable passage. The seventy rejoiced in the possession of power over demons. Our Lord says: "I saw Satan, like lightning, fall from heaven."

This, Erasmus thinks, was designed as an admonition to the disciples not to be moved by pride, which so readily arises in the possession of power. See 1 Tim. iii. 6: "Not a novice lest, being puffed up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil." It is as though he said: "Take heed, I saw Satan himself fall, like lightning, from heaven (suddenly and swiftly) through the pride of power. It is true, indeed, that I give you power to overcome the enemy and to be secure from assaults, but do not rejoice in this, glory not that you have power over demons, but rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven. It is not the possession of miraculous power that saves. A man may have all power so that he could even remove mountains, and cast out demons in my name, yet I may not acknowledge him in the day of final account. He will be as sounding brass or as a tinkling cymbal, if he be without that love which will induce him to keep my precepts, and to depart from all iniquity."

"Rejoice not then in the possession of power which really avails you nothing in the value of your own salvation, but, on the contrary, is rather a trial to your faith and your humility, but rejoice rather in the assurance that your names are written in heaven, and that you will have a name and a place with me, in the heavenly kingdom."

Power conferred is nothing—no more is wealth or lineage. No one can take himself to heaven by power. No one will be admitted there on account of ancestry, for God can raise children even to Abraham out of stones. Wealth can take no one to heaven, nor can any one carry it thither. These are mere accidents and exterior things, and the reward is not based on these, but on the radical and interior qualities of the moral nature—humility, love, purity. Blessed are the poor in spirit—the pure in heart—those who hunger and thirst for righteousness. Blessed are they who do my commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life. The end of the commandment is love out of a pure heart and faith unfeigned.

Our Lord then proceeds to thank the Father that it had pleased him to conceal these precious truths from the wise and prudent who rest in their own wisdom and philosophy, and who are proud of heart, and that he had revealed them to babes—to those who were humble and teachable, as little children. He finally concludes his remarks most appropriately, in emphatically asserting the blessedness of those who saw and heard the things presented to the disciples.

R. R.

WHERE IS OUR LOVE?

Is it not lamentably clear that LOVE is the most wanting of all the Christian graces, where we should have expected to see it enthroned in majesty and ruling in power—I mean in the Christian church. What do we see in Christendom? A vast complication of ecclesiastical machinery—churches established and churches unestablished; a vast accumulation of doctrine to be believed, duties to be performed, and rites to be observed; a vast array of Biblical learning and criticism, in which every word is examined, weighed, and defined. We have creeds, confessions, liturgies, prayer books, catechisms, and forms of faith and discipline—in short, a wondrous and complicated mass of means, instrumentalities, and agencies—but WHERE is OUR LOVE, without which all these things are but as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal? Where is that love which is more excellent in the sight of God, not only than all our natural endowments, but than all our spiritual gifts? Where is that love that suffereth long, which seeketh not her own, which thinketh no evil, and which, for the sake of others, cheerfully endureth labour, sacrifice, and self-denial?

IS IT THE DUTY OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES TO SUPPORT THEIR PASTORS?

AN ADDRESS BY J. EPPS, M.D.

1. THE question for discussion this evening is one of the highest importance. It is one which has been present to my mind for many years, and the conclusion to which I have come, namely, that pastors need not to be paid to fulfil the duties of their office, is not of to-day, or yesterday; it is one of solid growth—it is one which every day's reflection and every day's observation convince me is true.

2. In discussing this question, I shall deliver my thoughts under the following heads; not only for the sake of impressing my views upon others more permanently, but also to give an opportunity to those who may undertake the refutation of them of more easily attacking any fallacies or errors which I may bring forward. First, the name, pastor; second, the characteristics of a pastor, and his duties as thereby indicated; third, that there is no duty connected with the pastoral office which requires that, for its performance, the pastor should be paid; fourth, an explanation of the passages referred to as indicative of the necessity of giving remuneration; and fifth, the evils which have resulted, and will result, from the payment of pastors, thereby establishing the same cannot be a Christian duty.

3. In regard to the first point, THE NAME, PASTOR, it is curious to observe, that the word occurs but once in the New Testament; namely, Ephesians iv. 11—"pastors and teachers." The Greek word is ποιμενας, (poimenas) derived from ποιμην, (a shepherd) meaning also feeder of a flock, leader, ruler. This same word is translated shepherd in other parts of the New Testament. Why this difference should be made, I cannot pretend to state.

4. Another term frequently used in reference to pastors, on account of a duty belonging to them, namely, taking the oversight of the flock, is επισκοπος, (episcopos) meaning simply an inspector, an overseer. It means also a scout or spy, the primary meaning being a person taking an oversight. It matters not what it be of which he takes the oversight.

5. That this term applies to the same individual, namely, the pastor, is evident from a passage in 1 Peter, ii. 25—"Jesus Christ, the Shepherd and Bishop of souls;" ποιμενα και επισκοπον, (poimena kai episcopon) the shepherd, even the bishop.

6. The word επισκοποι, (episcopoi) bishops, is applied by Paul to the pastors of the church at Ephesus, who, by Paul, are characterized in the passage by another name, namely, πρεσβυτεροι, (presbuteroi) presbyters; so that it is quite evident that presbyters, bishops, shepherds, and pastors mean the same individuals. It is curious that we do not find the word clergyman anywhere, or one in any way correspondent thereto.

7. These names, as applied to the individuals referred to, are not at all indicative of a particular order of men; the difference of terms merely illustrating different points of aspect in which the men were viewed in reference to a particular office. In other words, there is nothing peculiarly sacred—sacerdotal, these gentlemen themselves call it—in the bishop; and the noun, επισκοπη, (episcopo) thence derived, is translated visitation or vengeance, (1 Peter ii. 12) referring to the overseeing or visiting of God: "Glorify God in the day of visitation;" thus making it apparent that the term bishop, as the representative in English of episcopos, means simply overseeing, not what is overseen.

8. Again, πρεσβυτερος, (presbuteros) a presbyter, is the comparative degree of an adjective, πρεσβυς, (presbus) old; and therefore the simple meaning is an elder person. It refers to advance in age, as generally associated with experience. Hence this word is applied to ambassadors, to delegates in peace.

9. So the word ποιμην, (poimen) although it means the feeder of a flock, means also a leader, a ruler.

10. Having thus pointed out the names attached to those who fill the pastoral office, I now proceed to notice the second subject, namely, THE CHARACTERISTICS OF A PASTOR, AND HIS DUTIES AS THEREBY INDICATED.

11. From Paul's letters to Timothy and to Titus we may gather the characteristics, and thence deduce the duties as connected therewith. They amount to twenty-four; and it may be useful to give these characteristic qualifications individually, in the Greek, in our translation, and in the enlarged view of the terms, for they are very expressive—that is, when there is a difference.

	English Translation.	Enlarged Version.
1. Ανεπιληπτον , anepilepton.	Blameless.	Not liable to censure.
2. Μίας γυναικος ανδρα , mias gynaikos andra.	Husband of one wife.	Man of one woman.
3. Νηφαλεον , nephaleon.	Vigilant.	Sober-minded, opposed to ranting. This term was applied to those rites in which wine was not used.
4. Σωφρονα , sophrona.	Sober.	Rational, wise, just, temperate.
5. Κοσμιον , kosmion.	Of good behaviour.	Orderly, elegant, beautiful; comes from κοσμος , kosmos, the world, which is beautiful in its order; and hence this term is applied to beauty as resulting from order.
6. Φιλοξενον , philoxenon.	Given to hospitality.	Kind to strangers.
7. Διδακτικον , didactikon.	Apt to teach.	Capable of teaching; disposed to be taught; docile.
8. Μη παροινον , me paroinon.	Not given to wine.	Not one who indulges in wine to excess.
9. Μη πληκτην , me plecten.	No striker.	Smiter, a violent disturber; applied to the intoxicating effect of wine.
10. Μη αισχροκερδη , me aischrokerde.	Not greedy of filthy lucre.	Not covetous of dishonour-gain.
11. Επειικη , epieike.	Patient.	Indulgent towards another on account of his likeness to myself.
12. Αμαχον , amachon.	Not a brawler.	Contentious, fond of fighting.
13. Αφιλαργυρον , aphilarguron.	Not covetous.	Not a lover of money.
14. Καλως προϊσταμενον , kalos proistamenon.	Ruleth well.	Presiding well over.
15.	Keeping his children in subjection with all gravity.
16. Μη νεοφυτον , me neophuton.	Not a novice.	Not lately planted; a new plant.
	A good report of them which are without.

In the Epistle to Titus the characteristics are very similar. He adds some, however, which may be noticed.

18. Ανεγκληταν , anegkleton.	Blameless.	Unimpeachable.
19. Μη αυθαδη , me authade.	Not self-willed.	Insolent.
20. Μη οργιλον , me orgilon.	Not soon angry.	Not angry.
21. A lover of good men.	22, Just.	23, Holy.
	24, Temperate.

Titus defines more fully the nature of the teaching. "Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and convince the gainsayers."

12. These characteristics are referable to two heads, namely, those which refer to the duties of a president, and to the duties of a teacher.

13. As holding so prominent a situation, he must be a man who will not do dishonor to the cause, by being associated in the minds of the world with anything disreputable; and in order to preside well in his office, he must have a great self-command, not over his temper, but over the taking of those stimuli which have in their operation a tendency to destroy the power of self-rule; he must, moreover, have exhibited this self-command, and the capability of wisely exercising that command over others, and that for no inconsiderable period, by ruling well his own house.

14. The other characters refer to his teaching ; concerning which there are but few particulars.

15. We have now to notice the duties as connected with these characteristics. In common life, as we judge of an individual's fitness for an office by a knowledge of his character, so we, generally speaking, could judge of the duties of an office from information as to the qualifications of the person appointed to fill the office. Now, beholding the characteristic qualifications of a pastor, we shall find they are essential to enable their possessor to perform two duties ; first, that of ruling or presiding ; and second, that of teaching ; in accordance with that much to be respected saying, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, specially they who labour in word and doctrine." Here are the two points we referred to ; namely, the rule and the teaching.

16. This ruling evidently embraces his watching over the flock in a church capacity ; and this we shall find is the only duty the pastor has to perform after his election, in addition to that which he attended to before. I do not doubt that he will exercise his gifts more frequently : the very elevation will be a fresh stimulus to exertion.

17. Nevertheless, it is maintained by many, that in order for the pastor, the bishop, the presbyter to do his duty, he MUST BE PAID. To me, however, it appears, that there is no such additional duty laid upon him, when elected to the pastor's office, requiring this new circumstance of pay ; and in proof of this, I shall enter upon the consideration of the third subject, namely, THAT THERE IS NO DUTY CONNECTED WITH THE PASTORAL OFFICE, WHICH RENDERS IT NECESSARY THAT THE PASTOR SHOULD BE PAID.

18. It is true, if we take the common idea of the pastor's duties, amounting almost to this, that he is to take charge of all his hearers' religion, that he is to be the sole instructor, the sole prayer-maker, the sole hymn-chooser, the sole reader of the Scriptures, in fact the sole mouth, of not the church, but the congregation ; the sole visitor of the sick, the sole visitor of the members ; then, indeed, we should be led to conclude that he had duties which required the entire devotion of his time to pursuits so numerous as these.

19. But Christianity does not throw any such loads upon its followers. There is so much good to be derived by individual Christians from attending to the duties specified, that they are directly called upon to attend to those duties, as to means having a positive tendency to promote their spiritual well-being.

20. Thus, to take the first of those duties which are considered to be pastoral, namely, visiting the sick and the afflicted. I do not deny this privilege to the pastor as a Christian, but I deny it to him as his peculiar duty as a pastor. It is his duty, as an individual Christian. "Pure religion and undefiled before God, even the Father, is this ; to visit the widows and the fatherless in their afflictions," &c. Now this is imperative on every Christian ; and why ? Because, as Solomon says, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than the house of feasting."

21. Again, another duty of the pastor is to watch. No doubt it is his duty—it is now his duty to watch over the aggregate body, the church ; but it is the duty of individual Christians to watch over one another. Every Christian man is bound to care not only for his own things, but for those of his neighbour. Christianity is a religion of mutual care. It is true the pastor has the highest care ; this is the honour of his office : becoming a pastor does not destroy the duties belonging to him as an individual Christian.

22. Again, another duty of the pastor is to teach. True—for he is to be "apt to teach." But this duty belongs to the whole body of the members, those exercising it who have the aptness. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching, and admonishing one another," is an order addressed to all Christians, leaving to those who have the qualification of being apt to teach, to communicate to others out of this fulness.

23. In fact, almost all the exhortations contained in the Apostolic writings, evidently refer to the exercise of the gift of teaching. The brethren are told, "Seek that ye may excel, to the edifying of the church." "Covet ear-neatly the best gifts." "As every man hath received, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." If these passages mean anything, they surely must be understood as calling upon the brethren to seek to fulfil the highest offices of the Christian church, and not perpetually to sit in the passive condition of hearing.

24. Many good persons have thought that teaching is the peculiar and exclusive privilege of the pastor alone; both from the very name pastor, and also from the command "to feed the flock." Such a conclusion arises from attaching too much to these figurative expressions; and it is worthy of remark, that perhaps nothing has done more injury to the cause of religious truth, than the overstraining of figures. The only relation in which the pastor is the shepherd, is in reference to the care he is to take that the flock shall be fed properly. The shepherd does not make the herb for the sheep, he merely leads them to the green pastures. The sheep must gather the food for themselves. The absurdity of making so much as is made of the figure, is shown readily by carrying the figure out. Thus, the sheep do not appoint the shepherd, therefore, to follow out the analogy, the church should not appoint their bishop, or pastor, or presbyter, or president. The sheep are very silly things, it is said: the members of the church are poor senseless things also. The sheep cannot dismiss their shepherd, however ill he may behave towards them: so the church, it would follow, have no right to dismiss their shepherd or pastor. The shepherd has absolute power over his sheep: will it be pretended, that because the figure is used, therefore the pastor should have a similar power over the church. It is true, priestcraft succeeded during many ages in obtaining this despotic power. It has been dwindling away since, and the great means of its destruction will be the cessation of the stipends.

24*. Nothing, therefore, as to payment, can be deduced from this figure, in reference to the pastor. But we are told that the shepherd is to live of the flock. Well, carry out the metaphor, and what have we? Why, the shepherd can live only by the sale of the produce of the flock. Is the Christian pastor to act thus? No, says an advocate for the payment of pastors, he is not to make gain of the flock: but the flock, who are fed by his instructions, are to give of their temporal food and means, a compensation for the spiritual food that the pastor supplies. But do not the brethren who have the word of Christ dwelling richly in them in all wisdom, and who teach and admonish, feed the church also? These men, therefore, should reap the temporal things also; they give spiritual food; and so all will, if they stand in need.

25. What then? Is the pastor to be paid for the exercise of qualifications, which, before election, he attended to without pay?

26. For what then is he to be paid? It cannot be for teaching, because the brethren should be paid too, for they are bound to teach and admonish one another. It cannot be for watching, because the brethren are bound to watch over one another. It cannot be for visiting the sick, because the brethren are bound to attend thereto.

27. But may I be allowed to ask this simple question: Is it not strange, that if it be true that the pastor cannot perform the duties of his station without being paid, Paul should not, in addressing the elders of Ephesus, have told them that such was the case, instead of recommending them to follow his example, of using their hands* to minister to their own necessities? It would be not only strange, but also wicked; for if payment is essential to the proper performance of the duties of the pastoral office, it follows that Paul, in persuading the elders to neglect that which is essential to the proper performance of the pastor's office, was actually recommending the adoption of a practice which must inevitably impede the progressive development of the Christian character towards its manhood state. What would be thought of the sanity of an individual, who, in recommending another to a particular office, the duties of which he tells the person whom he recommends, cannot be performed without the circumstance of remuneration as enabling him to devote all his energies, tells him to support himself by his industry in another direction? I ask, what should we think?

28. But when I add to this the consideration of the peculiar frame of a Christian church, I think it must be clearly seen, that there is no authority for the payment of pastors. Paul, in writing to the church of the Ephesians, gives the following splendid apostrophe :—"But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ, from whom the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase with the body, unto the edifying itself in love" (Eph. iv. 16.) Here we read not of any one joint doing all the duty of compacting the body; we read of no one joint working effectually, but we read of "every joint;" we read not simply of "the working," but of the "effectual working of EVERY part." What can this mean? Can it mean that one joint is to be paid in particular? Can it mean that the arm or the leg is to do the duty of all the other joints, and as doing it, to be paid for such a work of supererogation? There might be some excuse for paying the head, if this joint had been the representative of a member in the church; but no, the head is Christ.

29. Such are some of the grounds on which I build my conclusion that the pastor should not be paid. To repeat them may be useful: they are — first, Because the pastor possesses all the qualifications necessary to, and has performed all the duties save one, namely, that of ruling the church, connected with the pastoral office, before election; under which circumstances he was not paid: why, then, when elected, should he be paid for doing those very duties, with the single addition noticed, which before he attended to without pay. Second, Because the brethren, in a properly constituted Christian church, are bound to perform the duties of teaching, watching, visiting the sick and the afflicted, thought to be more peculiarly the pastor's duties, and for the performance of which it is maintained that it is necessary that he should be paid. Third, Because as all talents are from God, and the purchase of Christ by his death on the cross, it is quite contrary to the spirit of Christianity to give "wages" to a pastor for exercising those talents, which God has given him for the good of the church, and for his benefit, as one of the church. This, to me, is the worst kind of simony.

30. Still further to justify my conclusion, I shall enter upon the fourth subject, namely, THE CONSIDERATION OF THOSE PASSAGES GENERALLY REFERRED TO AS INDICATIVE OF THE NECESSITY OF GIVING REMUNERATION TO THE PASTOR.

31. The first passage is, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in word and doctrine."

32. In order to understand this passage, it is necessary that we should define the terms used, and the context in which these terms occur.

33. The great word in the matter is the word "honour," the word "double" is generally forgotten by those who advocate "pay." The Greek word for honour is τιμή (timé), which has several meanings, the primary meaning being "honour;" hence Paul uses this word in writing to the Romans, when recommending humility, "in honour (timé) preferring one another" (xii. 10.) No one will translate this, "in pay preferring one another." Again, in ix. 21, Paul, writing of the power of the potter over the clay, asks, "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour," εἰς τιμὴν σκευῆς (eis timen skueos.) The verb from which the noun τιμή (timé) appears to be derived, namely, τιώ, (tio) means, I honour, value; so another verb, which seems to be derived from the noun τιμή, (timé) namely, τιμάω, (timao) means, I honour, I esteem.

34. The primary meaning, then, is honour; that which is understood when we are told to honour our parents, to honour men in office, the king, for instance.

35. But I am quite willing to allow, that besides this principal meaning, the word τιμή (timé) has other secondary meanings, through which the primary idea passes: it hence means price, value, reward, pay, recompence; it means also, authority. These secondary meanings necessarily arise from the first; for if we honour a man, we shall ever be happy to give him, if his wants require it, pecuniary aid.

36. This leads me to notice the context, in which this recommendation of the apostle, to give double honour to those that rule well, occurs. This context has reference to widows. He distinguishes widows into widows indeed, and widows who are to be taken into the number, who were not to be under three-score years old ; that is, in a state in which they could not support themselves : and in order not to burden the church with the support of widows, Paul commands, " If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged, that it may relieve them that are widows indeed." Here the apostle brings the word relieve, as manifesting that this is one manifestation of the honour that is to be paid to the widow, that is, if her necessities require this support.

37. The church, it is worthy to remark, is not allowed, notwithstanding its peculiar and exalted position in reference to the widows, as of them, to render null the natural duty of the relative to support the widow ; and if we are to carry out the idea to the elders ruling well, does it not plainly appear, that even elders are not to be assisted by the church, if they have children that believe capable of giving support ; otherwise, the relationship of the church would render void the relationship of the filial bond.

38. After thus defining the duty towards the widow, the apostle then states their duties towards the elders that rule well, namely, " Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour ; especially they who labour in word and doctrine : " and then, to establish their right to this double honour, he shows that even the beast's necessity is recognized as needing supply : " Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn ; " and " The labourer is worthy of his hire." Just as if he had said, You have, by your free election, raised your brethren to places of honour, and as such, if they fulfil the duties therewith connected well, you must bestow upon them that degree of honour, which their office, properly attended to, requires. Paul does not state that they are to be paid ; and he does not suppose such a baseness on the part of the brethren, as would have been implied, had he added, Should these elders be placed in necessitous circumstances, then you must give them aid. The spirit of Christianity was a guarantee to such a manifestation of honour, if needed.

39. To establish still further that this word honour cannot mean pay, in reference to its use in this passage, it will be well to notice the word "double." If honour here means "pay," or "money," or "maintenance," then the elder is to have double what the widow has. But it is to be hoped that the widow was to have plenty ; if so, the pastor could not need double plenty. There is no such waste recognized in the Christian system. But taking the word honour in its primary meaning, all this difficulty passes away. The elder is to be honoured for the sake of his office ; and that honour is to be double in reference to amount as given to others, because his office is so honourable.

39* It has been intimated that this honour is but poor reward ; and that we are told to "honour the king," and that kings would think it but poor honour, if they received no tribute. This is reasoning which may suit very well the worldly, but it does not at all suit the Christian mind. "The exceeding great reward," which the apostle looked for, was beyond the limits of this world ; and we are taught, "by a patient continuance in well doing, to seek for glory, honour, (τιμήν, timen, not pay) and immortality, eternal life."

40. Another passage brought forward to justify the payment of pastors, is that addressed to Timothy : Meditate upon these things ; give thyself wholly to them ; and the reason is added, that thy profiting may appear to all (1 Tim. iv. 15.) This giving himself wholly to them, it is said, implies pay, because he could not otherwise have been wholly devoted. But this expression does not necessarily imply so much : when we behold an affectionate brother, we say he is wholly devoted to his sister, or a dutiful son, he devotes his whole attention to his parents. But no one concludes that he neglects the pursuits of life to attend either to the one or the other ; but that all the spare time he has, he devotes, and manifests every possible care to promote the happiness of the objects of his affection.

41. In addition to this, it is worthy to remark, that the Greek expression in the New Testament, does not justify the interpretation. The phrase translated "Give thyself wholly to them," is "εὐνοίας ἰσθί," (eu toutois isthi) which cannot by any interpretation, be made to mean so much as is usually made of it.

42. Again, those passages which warn the elders not to take charge of the flock for filthy lucre, it is said, evidently indicate pay ; because, if no money was given, there could be no temptation. But the apostle does not warn them against pay, against remuneration, against lucre, but against "filthy" lucre, against dishonorable gain. Now surely those who advocate the payment of pastors to be scriptural, will never maintain that such pay was "filthy lucre." But a man who has no salary, may still make use of his pastoral office, and the members of their membership, for obtaining dishonourable gain. Do not we see this every day ? Do not we find men joining congregations for pecuniary ends ?

43. The last passage that I shall notice, is one that is considered to be most conclusive upon the point, namely, the duty of paying pastors. It is this : "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. ix. 14.) I say most heartily, amen, to this. I have always advocated that they who travel from place to place, who have no fixed habitations, no opportunity for pursuing any occupation, should live by the gospel. But these men are not the pastors of Christian churches. The church of Christ is composed of persons, who having heard, have believed the gospel, and they meet as a church to worship God, and to nourish one another, so that they may become men in understanding ; not always remaining at the first rudiments. Besides, Paul, in the passage quoted, is maintaining that he had as much right as the other apostles to be supported ; but he preferred to preach the gospel without being bound to any man. And noble man was he. Missionaries are bound to be supported ; but missionaries are not the elders of Christian churches.

44. I allow, therefore, this passage to its full import ; and will maintain against any individual, that missionaries have a right to reap the carnal things of those to whom they contribute the spiritual things.

45. I have thus endeavoured to notice those passages on which the practice of supporting pastors of the Christian churches is founded, and I trust I have shewn that these afford no solid ground on which to base such payments.

46. The last subject to which I beg to draw the attention of the Society, consists of THE EVILS WHICH HAVE RESULTED, AND WILL RESULT, FROM THE PAYMENT OF PASTORS.

47. The great object of Christianity is to develop the human faculties ; is, in other words, to educate man for heaven. In order to effect this, Christians are taught to attend to certain duties, by which this development, this education, are to be promoted. One of the most important of these duties is the duty of mutual instruction. I would ask any one what is the most effectual mode to promote an acquaintance with any science, and the answer will be, attempting to teach it. We are taught by divine wisdom, "He that teacheth others is himself taught." Hence Christians are called upon "to teach and admonish one another ;" not, be it observed, for the mere circumstance of teaching, but because this very attempt to teach necessarily requires the diligent study of that word, which is profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work. Contrast the conduct of two Christians, one who goes Sunday after Sunday to the meeting-house, to hear the minister preach, and return home ; and who, perhaps, in addition, reads the Word of God, both in his family and in private, morning and evening ; I say, contrast him with his fellow Christian, who feels it to be his duty to study the Scriptures with a view of communicating to his brethren. The former reads the Bible—the latter studies it. The former finishes his chapter, and shuts his Bible—the latter examines all the corresponding passages, compares spiritual things with spiritual, and brings out of the treasures of God's word, things new and old. The mind becomes developed in all its energies—the intellect is brightened by the beams of heaven's own light—the moral character receives a heavenly beauty—and the human being becomes clothed with the true dignity of a Christian. This is the education which the Christian requires—this is the education of the heart ; and of the head with the heart. This is true education : for what is education but the drawing forth of the faculties ; and what is Christian education, but the drawing forth of the faculties by the application of the truths of Christianity ?

48. Such an education as this, how far superior to that miscalled classical education, to which the noviciates of the pastoral office are subjected. A youth shows capabilities of speaking, and fervency of feeling in matters of religion ; he is taken up by some good people, sent off to some Highbury College or Hoxton Academy ; he is made to study the pollutions of Ovid, the impurities of Virgil, (read the 2nd Eclogue) the addresses of Horace to his courtizans ; perhaps to read the plays of Terence, which for their grossness have been excluded from the course of Trinity College, Dublin — reads Homer, learns to admire the lusciousness of love (not the pure love of chaste affection) from the verses of Anacreon, and becomes, finally, a classical scholar. And this, we are taught, is necessary, that a man should understand the Scriptures. Such a supposition is in opposition to the grand, the noble, the heart-rending declaration, "To the poor the gospel is preached."

49. Let me not be understood as decrying education. No, I value education too much to do this ; but let the education of the Christian be the education of a Christian. I hope the day is fast arriving, when every man, even in the common walks of life, shall be able to read the Greek Testament and the Hebrew Scriptures ; a power which, I am sure, that if we take any hundred clergymen, will be found possessed by not more than five out of the hundred.

50. But the young minister, as he is called, acquires a classical education. He gets what is named a call. He receives a regular stipend. What, then, must be his feeling when he perceives a brother in the church, teaching without pay, while he teaches for pay ? Can he have any feeling, save a jealous one, of this interloper ? Can he encourage the word of Christ dwelling richly in his members with all wisdom, so that they may teach and admonish one another ? It is impossible. He may do this to a certain extent, but only thereto. He gets his bread by his preaching—another, preaching and teaching for nothing, must be to him an object of dread.

51. Again, another evil. The very idea prevailing, that to understand the Scriptures fully a classical education must have been gone through, has crushed the rising talents of many noble-minded men, whose hearts were warm in the endeavour to do good to the souls of men, but who were prevented from exercising these talents, because it required this and that, embraced under the name of classical education. Ministers have encouraged the idea of this necessity ; and why ? Because this classical education forms an excluding precinct to those whom they consider intruders.

52. Another evil connected with this payment of pastors is, that men are not encouraged to search the Scriptures. This is a bounden duty upon all ; but if it is necessary that a man should be wholly devoted that he may understand the Holy Writings, it follows that it is impossible that the man who is engaged in every day life can search to any advantage. Many have thus been led to throw the care of their religion upon the clergyman's shoulders ; and, in fact, if the Scriptures cannot be understood but by an entire, an undivided attention to them, it must follow that those who do not and cannot give this amount of attention, cannot understand the Scriptures : and how, then, can they presume to judge of the productions of the mind of him who has time, the whole time of his life, to devote to them ? It is this which has given the priest so much power, in all ages ; a power to destruction.

53. But it may be said that in science there is a division of labour ; there is a devotion of the time to one particular pursuit ; and it may be asked, if this be the case with scientific truth, why should it not be so with moral and religious truth ? In relation to the first part of the inquiry, it is worthy of remark, that this division of labour does not prevail so much as has been supposed. It is a curious fact, which the history of sciences will demonstrate, that many of the most active promoters of science have been those who have been engaged in other pursuits. Numerous illustrations might be given ; and I verily believe, that if the names of those who have thrown light upon scientific truth were to be collected, and those who devoted their whole time to science were arranged opposite to those who could pursue science only by casual opportunities, but then pursued with an intensity of love, the latter will be found attached to more discoveries, more truths, more experimental investigations than the former.

54. To leave this first part of the question, I beg to offer a few remarks on the latter part, in which I shall endeavour to show that the nature of the truth with which Christianity has to do, is quite different from that on which the sciences are based; and that though the truths of religion constitute the grandest science existing, the mode of obtaining is different.

55. The Creator has given man two books to read: the book of nature, and the book of revelation—the one to promote his external happiness, and the other his internal. The laws of the one teach him the influence of external agents upon him—teach him those that are injurious, those that are beneficial—teach him what to avoid, and what to take advantage of—teach him how to act in accordance with the natural laws of the Creator, so as to produce the grandest results in the sciences and in the arts; for it is an important fact, that all men can know, after the most minute and extended study, is nothing more than the laws which the Creator has stamped upon the pages of creation; and all that man can do is to put these laws into practical operation.

56. Now it is evident that men must discover the laws regulating the universe before they can practically apply them. Sir Isaac Newton discovered, by a patient observation and long-continued reflection and calculation, the laws which regulate the motion of the heavenly bodies; and by that knowledge we are enabled to calculate with certainty the appearance of comets before they arrive, and many other important results in relation to navigation.

57. The laws of the natural world, moreover, are more or less concealed. They require a great amount of research to find them out—they require an immense collection of facts—they are written, it is true, upon the pages of creation—but they are written in such a large hand that it takes years, sometimes ages, to decipher the writing; in fact, they are THE PENMANSHIP OF THE INFINITE: hence the necessity of a greater devotion of time to their investigation.

58. But this is not the case with the laws regulating the moral government of God, as contained in the volume of Revelation. They are written with the legibility of a sunbeam; that he who runneth can read. Those laws which philosophy failed to develop during a period of nearly two thousand years, notwithstanding “the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made,” and made known in lettered plainness, so that the youngest child who is acquainted with the simplest truths in Scripture, knows more than the greatest philosopher who lived before the time when light and immortality were brought to light by the gospel. Here the mode to be adopted to discover the laws of the natural world is not necessary to be pursued in discovering the laws of the moral world. God has kindly revealed them to us; and thus the Christian has, as it were, put down beside him all the laws of the moral government. They are discovered to him. He has only to read to know. There are difficulties in the Scriptures, I am willing to allow. But when we consider that the promise of God’s Spirit is made to every one, who, in a teachable spirit, inquires the will of the Lord, we at once perceive, that though the Scriptures must be searched, it is not necessary, in order to obtain a thorough acquaintance with the laws regulating the moral government of the universe, that a man should devote his whole time to their investigation. If it did, then religion, which is the duty of the many, yea, of the whole human race, must be the business of the few.

59. And when we add to this, that the perception of the truths of revealed religion is dependent more upon the state of the heart than the head, we may readily understand the fact that some of the most uneducated, that is, in the misused sense of the word, have the grandest conceptions of the moral government of the universe, and of the relation in which man stands to his Maker; and understanding this fact, we may readily arrive at the conclusion, “If any man will do his will, he shall KNOW OF THE DOCTRINE whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself”

(John vii. 17.) So intimate is moral perception connected with moral doing.

60. And when, in addition to this, we behold the fact that notwithstanding the entire devotion of the time of thousands of pastors that have been, religion wants that tone which it possessed in the early ages of Christianity, and that many doctrines remain in the same state of obscurity, we shall perceive that the payment of pastors is not a necessary part of the means to develop the progress of Christianity.

61. Viewing the subject in all these relations, first, in regard to the names applied to the persons holding the pastor's office—names not at all indicative of pay; second, in regard to the characteristics of these pastors—characteristics not requiring for their manifestation pay; third, their duties—almost all of which they are to perform in common with their fellow Christians, and consequently, which latter should be paid as well as the pastors, that is, if the duties require for their proper performance pay; fourth, viewing the subject in regard to the evils that have been produced in connection with the remunerating system; and finally, in regard to the nature of the truths of revelation, and the state of mind necessary to the understanding thereof, I am compelled to come to the conclusion that I stated at the outset, namely, that pastors need not to be paid to perform their duties, and consequently, that it is not the duty of Christian churches to support them.

“WHO HATH BELIEVED OUR REPORT?”

How often does the appeal of the Prophet find an echo in the souls of Christians who love the Lord Jesus, and desire to abide by the word of his truth! As they look abroad among men, they behold sad confusion on every hand: scenes are enacted before their eyes that appear, some tragic, some comic; but the fact that they involve momentous questions gives to them a solemn reality, and makes them such as an honest, truth-loving soul revolts at. All have their darling theme—the subject or theory on which they delight to dwell, and, if need be, to defend; or the carnal propensities which they labor to satisfy. Some have their dear old creed, handed down by tradition from the elders; and this they hug with a devouring fondness, cover it with the shield of prejudice, and defend it with the sword of a spirit(?) Others, blinded by ignorance and inflamed by passion, are running their headlong course to a terrible ruin, having no eye for the grand and the beautiful in all that surrounds them, which speak of the wisdom and goodness of the Great Creator; no ear for the sounds that fill the soul with divine melody: in fact, dead to all that can ennoble and uplift the spirit of man. Deplorable plight! Some plunge still deeper, and adopt the woful alternative of standing bold and unmoved before God and man, and denying the God that made them and the Lord that bought them.

Moved by such a picture constantly haunting his life, the disciple of Christ utters his protest against existing evil; denounces all human creeds, cunning refuges from the unflinching requirements of truth—lying prophets, saying “Peace, peace, when there is no peace”—dealers in conscience-salve at a penny, sixpence, or a shilling a collection. He cries “Breakers ahead” to the poor sinner, and points to the lighthouse and the harbour of refuge “in Christ”; and cries shame to the fool that hath said in his heart there is no God. But after all, what satisfaction has he? What comes of it? To the sectarian Greeks he is a preacher of foolishness—to the sinner, as a man that mocks and an enthusiast—and to the sceptic, as the dupe of superstition, whose faith is in a myth and whose hope is founded on romance. He shrinks from the cold reception, and wonders that the report is not credited. And well he may. How can it be? Is not the Word of God quick and powerful—the power of God? And yet he has preached the gospel, the grand old glad-tidings, that “Christ died for our sins, according to Scripture; that he was buried and rose again the third day, according to the Scripture”—aye, the ancient Gospel, to whose overwhelming power and convincing energy three thousand yielded in one day—that made the multitude of them that believed of one heart and one soul—the very primitive truth! Where, then, is the lack? The Word of God abideth the same, and is the same as in the days of the Apostles. The nineteenth century may be higher in culture, and more refined in sin than the first century; but it equally needs salvation: it is neither beyond redemption in its wickedness, nor above it in its wisdom. Philosophy may boast itself—may talk of wondrous things on earth, and of things passing wonderful among mighty shining worlds that throng immensity; but the Spirit of God, towering above them all, discourses from the throne of the universe of things beyond the telescope's ken—on themes which, while they defy the grasp of mightiest intellect, are possessed by simple faith; and stoops to offer the philosopher the boon he needs in common with his fellows, while it becomes the companion of the ignorant and ignoble, that it may raise them from their degraded condition to a position worthy of their manhood.

If the Gospel, then, be really power—if such be its adaptation to the wants of man, whatever be his social, moral, or intellectual position—how is it that the question must be so oft-repeated, “Who hath believed our report?” There yet remains another question that may affect the subject, viz. while it is the same world and the same Gospel, have we, as Christians, the same Spirit—the Spirit that was in the Master, whose meat and drink it was to do the Father's will—or in Paul, who became all things to all men, if by any means he might save some—or by the first disciples, who, scattered abroad by persecution, yet undaunted, carried the good news through the length and breadth of Palestine—then to the Gentiles, content to sacrifice social position, home comforts and attachments, in fact all, if they might but become instruments of salvation to man and glory to God? Again, have we this Spirit? If not, why? Do we not believe the report? “Ask, and ye shall receive”—“How much more shall not God give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him,” &c. Or, having the Spirit, do we refuse to work out its teachings—its implanted principles? To Him, whose is the Spirit, shall we render our account? Brethren, we appeal to you. Are we not lacking in the soul-earnestness manifested by the first converts to the Lord? Do we not need to add to primitive theory and institutions, primitive devotion? Oh! if the present is fleeting, passing away, sooner or later to give place to a great future, that shall be eternal—whose ages are big with unspeakable bliss to the righteous, while to the sinner they are the “blackness of darkness for ever”—and if the world be perishing for lack of knowledge, let us lay it to heart, let us arouse ourselves from sloth, and, leaving earth's pleasures and gains to earth-worms, go forth to the fight like men, and strong in the Lord and in the power of His might, we shall succeed. Let us leave ordinary routine, and go to the perishing, study their manner of life and habits of thought, and adapt our language to their understandings—let our self-denial prove to them that we are alive to their danger, and agonizing to save them; and that we are constrained by the love of Christ. Surely, then, we may hope for minds to bow to the power of truth, and for hearts to answer our appeals. We know individual cases where this course is pursued, who are receiving souls for their hire, and for their crown of rejoicing in the world to come! J. C.

---

PRAYER. — No. I.

---

“Pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks.”

---

THERE has been much said upon the subject of prayer, and it may be thought unnecessary to again call the attention of the readers of the Harbinger to its consideration; but when we think how much attention it received from the

Apostles—how earnestly they enjoined it upon the ancient disciples, urging those to whom they wrote to pray for them, and telling them that in all their prayers they made mention of their brethren—showing how solicitous they were for the blessing of God upon their much loved brethren in Christ—we can feel satisfied that it is proper for us to bestow a good degree of attention upon it. And I am the more inclined to do so, from the conviction that, as a people, we are lamentably negligent in the matter. There has been a vast amount of philosophizing, and wondering how it could be that God would answer prayer, and yet govern the world by fixed laws; and some have concluded that prayer only had an effect upon the mind of the petitioner, &c. Now let us either have a religion of faith, or else of philosophy, and if we are satisfied that philosophy is entirely too weak to furnish a religion—that, as saith that more than philosopher, the Apostle Paul—"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," "neither can he know them, because they are spiritually examined"—that the mere philosopher is entirely too puny and short sighted to develop the system of salvation—then let us come in faith to God's Word, and believe that he means what he says, and can and will do what he has promised. Our religion is emphatically a religion of faith, and therefore we are to examine this subject only in the light furnished in the Book. The privilege of prayer is as precious to the pious heart as any enjoyed by mortal man. The privilege of coming in his wretchedness and misery, in his loneliness and sadness, to a friend that can hear his faintest sigh, and is ever ready to sympathize with his aching heart, is a most precious favour. Frail, sinful man, invited to come to the great God, the Author of his being and Giver of his life, and to pour out his inmost soul in his august presence! Prayer is to be considered a privilege, not a duty merely. The first form given to the disciples was at their request. "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples;" and in all the instructions upon this subject, we have it in the form of exhortation rather than command. But prayer has been so much abused and perverted, that people have been driven to the other extreme, and almost discard it entirely. This is not wise. What one of God's blessings has not been abused? Shall we refuse to eat and drink because people have become gluttons and sots? Shall we refuse all money because there are counterfeits in circulation? If not, then we certainly ought not to neglect prayer because of its abuses. I know of many brethren who are languishing and dying because of this neglect. Many of our churches are languishing for the want of piety; and this can never be found among a people who are a praying people. A congregation that is not a devout, praying congregation, cannot long flourish, but ought to die, and must die. When I see a person who claims to be a Christian almost entirely negligent of prayer; or, if attending to it at all, doing it in such a cold formal manner, that there is no soul in the effort, the words falling upon the ear in a cold and lifeless sound—the effect upon the spirit being like feeling the air surrounding an iceberg—I think how little does such a man appreciate his privilege. And again, when listening to those who call upon God as though he were deaf, or needed to be urged into a compliance with our wishes, vociferating and gesticulating in a vehement manner, I am satisfied that they neither realize what is propriety in religion, nor good manners even in society; for who would like to have his son come to him for a favour, and begin to slap his hands and make a great ado, saying, Now father, you know your promise, and I want you to keep your word? If such actions would be disgusting in a child, how much more so in a man who comes to God, who is kind even to the unthankful, and is more willing to give good gifts to his children than an earthly parent is to his.

Having now suggested a few reasons why this subject should receive our most deliberate attention, I hope the readers will not consider it a waste of space, nor a useless labour, for us to give the subject a somewhat thorough investigation. The Christian life is a matter of the very greatest importance to us, who are here forming characters for eternity; and that our lives may be what we might desire, we must attend to those exercises and duties that tend to cultivate the heart; for from the heart proceed those things that form the character. May God assist us in this great work.

In the investigation of the subject, we will consider the following questions:

- 1, Who may pray? 2, For what may they pray? 3, How shall they pray? 4, When shall they pray?

First, then, Who may pray? All are ready to admit that the child of God, the Christian, may come to his Father and ask for favors. But while this is admitted, it is too often denied in fact, by denying that God can answer; and if we do not believe the prayer can be answered, it is no prayer, it is but mockery. The Apostle says, Heb. ix. 6, "He that comes to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." We are taught that what is not done in faith is sinful; that "the effectual,  fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much;" but how can it be effectual and  fervent, when the one who prays does not expect it to be answered? But the Scriptures teach us that the Christian may pray, assured that God can hear. In proof of this, see James v. 16-18, 1 John v. 16, Philippians iv. 6, 7, 1 Pet. v. 7; where we are encouraged to pray, "casting all our care upon God," assured "he cares for us;" to "be anxious for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your request be made known to God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep (or guard) your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Let Christians, then, improve this privilege: they are invited to come to God as a child to his parent.

"Come, then, with all your wants and woes,
Your every burden bring,
Here love, unchanging love, abounds,
A pure celestial spring."

But not only may the Christian pray, but the penitent sinner may pray also. This has been denied by some, and as we have agreed to appeal to the Bible to settle these questions, we will see if this position is sustained by it. Before the advent of our Saviour, while the Jews were the chosen people of God, and their prayers were to be presented according to his directions, he nevertheless heard others in their distresses, as in the case of the Ninevites; when Jonah went and preached to them, they humbled themselves in sackcloth and ashes before God, and he spared the city. See also Paul's argument in Romans ii. 14, concerning the salvation of those not under the law. When the Saviour was upon earth, he declared he was not sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, yet he heard the request of the Syrophenician woman. But to come more directly to the case, we hear the angel say to Cornelius, your prayer is heard. Now, it is argued that no person has a right to petition the throne but a citizen, and here is a man who was not a citizen whose petition was heard.

There was also the case of Paul. It was said to Ananias of him, "Behold, he prayeth." He had certainly opportunities to hear the gospel when he was persecuting the Christians, and compelling them to blaspheme. And Ananias says to him, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord." We shall then consider it clearly established, that the inquiring, anxious, penitent sinner is encouraged to pray for the divine blessing, and for such aid as he may need to come to God, and enjoy the full privileges of adoption.

But God has not given prayer as the institution of pardon for the alien. Though he heard the prayer of Cornelius, it was necessary for Peter to come and tell him words whereby he should be saved; and though he heard the prayer of Saul, it was necessary for him to be baptized, and wash away his sins.

But this comes more properly under the second question, which we will defer to the next number, praying that the thoughts here presented may awaken some minds to the importance of a closer walk with God. J. C. G.

THE IMAGE OF GOD.

"God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea. So God created man in his own image: in the image of God created he him. And God blessed them: and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea," &c.

How few, yet how pregnant with thought are the words in which the inspired writer tells us of the creation of man. The Creator has plenteously fitted and adapted the earth with and in all things needful to the uses and requirements of the being he is about to create, and then says, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." Man forthwith is formed out of the dust of the ground—the inanimate material is endowed with life, and man becomes a living soul. In the image of God he stands, a perfect work, bearing in his natural body the wondrous traces of an Almighty hand; united by this same body to the earth of which he was formed, the mechanism of his frame wrought to the highest perfection, eclipsing all prior created things. But, far above material things, shines resplendent the spirituality of the man: with spirit unclouded by the darkness and doubts of fallen man, he forms the link between the materiality and animal life of the world and his God. Like unto the natural things of the earth by his natural body, but the image of God stamped, as it were, in the righteousness and uprightness of his spirit. Well qualified was he, in his newly-created state, for the important trust with which the Creator endowed him. "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it; and have dominion." Then the natural body, with its impulses and desires, acknowledged the rule, and was guided only by the promptings of the spirit. The carnal man, the subject—the spiritual man, the king.

So long as this condition of man lasted, so long was there harmony and joy unspeakable. A solitary test was applied to prove his obedience; the natural man obtains a victory, the spiritual man is subdued. Their positions are changed; the subject becomes the king, the king the subject. Thus dominion, which was entrusted to man in subordination to his spiritual faculties, instead of ruling in love and holiness, usurps power, and reigns by force. Well might it be said, "How art thou fallen, O son of the morning!" The image of God still remains, but, like a beautiful statue suffering from the ravages of time, how marred, how defaced the lineaments! The descendants of the first man inherit his failings; sons are begotten in his own likeness, after his image. The link of his pure spiritual nature, uniting him to God, is broken. Who shall unite it?

Years roll on; men present two aspects to our inquiring gaze: one part seek after God, the other after unrighteousness. One man stands prominently before us, approaching nigh to the perfect image of God; but the earth was not his fit dwelling-place, God took him. Is it not written, "Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him?" Subduing his natural powers, his spiritual man aspired unto God, and he received the reward. After him we know that the earth was filled with wickedness; its inhabitants resisted the pleading of God, and brought destruction upon themselves. After the flood, soon forgetting, or heedless of the bitter lesson their forefathers had received, they built a high tower, and were again punished by confusion of tongues and dispersion. Did not these men overrule their spiritual, by their natural, desires, and so turn the dominion with which they were entrusted to an improper use?

Looking down the vista of years to the coming of the Redeemer of men, does not this forcibly present itself in many and oft cases? Wherever we see a man approved by God, we see one who has gained the power over his natural impulses, and consequently come nearer to the true image of God. Recall to mind faithful Abraham and enduring Joseph. See the meek and learned Moses, struggling between a nation and their God: mediating, praying, and offering himself to destruction for them. Through him the law of God was given, in order to point out wherein was righteousness. From the time it was given to their final destruction by the Romans, is not the history of the Jews a perpetual struggle between the obedience of the spiritual man to the law of God, and disobedience of the natural man? Whether dominion shall be exercised by the one or the other? Contrast a Samuel with a Saul, an Elijah with an Ahab, a Jeremiah with a Zedekiah, and then ask who approaches nearest to the true image of God. As one man in the patriarchal age is taken unto God on account of the holiness of his life, so is also one man in the Jewish age. Are we not all acquainted with the history of the patient Elijah? Can we not sum up the follies and the vices of men in the words of the wise Solomon—"God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions?"

Although many are the holy, glorious, and righteous examples of men which shine upon us from the pages of holy writ, yet how far short do they fall of the glory of the image of God! Ever and anon their earthly nature, with its grossness and impurities hanging about them, obtains the victory. The natural man obtains the sway—the spiritual has to succumb to the influence. What man could not accomplish, God has accomplished. He sent forth his Son, born of a woman, thus being made in the likeness of men; born under the law, in order that he might fulfil its righteousness, and so obtain that position for man which he lost by transgression in Eden. The Saviour of men—born in a stable, the son of a carpenter, possessing neither land nor riches, without a dwelling-place of his own in which to shelter his head, despised and persecuted through life, crucified in death—how quickly he causes the thought of earthly dominion to flee away from his presence. Harken to his words, My dominion is not of this world, else would my servants fight. Yet will any Christian deny that he has dominion and power given unto him—that he is not the king, really and professedly, over the nations of the earth? In him were and are centred, in the highest perfection, the noblest attributes of man. His natural desires, tried in every way conceivable by man, constantly rose triumphant. And why? Because God, knowing his complete righteousness, gave not His Spirit by measure unto him; destroying, by his spiritual perfection, the power of that death which the first man had brought in by his being found wanting in it. Truly he was the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power: when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. He was the only man who, since the fall, had united in his person, the perfection of his natural and spiritual bodies; restoring each to its proper sphere, and giving to each its proper development. Worthy, indeed, was he to receive dominion, and glory, and honor for ever! Surely he, the image of God, is deserving of our highest praise and adoration. Acknowledging him as our King and High-priest, knowing that he is ever ready to help all that come unto God by him, that he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, was tempted as we are, let us boldly approach the throne of grace, that we may obtain help in time of need.

Let the Christian beware of foundering on the rock of earthly dominion. Seeing only in Christ the true dominion of God, let him recollect that to live—Christ, to die—gain; that in following in the footsteps of Christ, in perfecting ourselves on the pattern of his life, we approach nearer to the true image of God. Seeing that he is enrolled in the ranks of Christ's army, let him put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, and he will not fail in the end to reap to himself eternal life. H. B.

OPEN COUNCIL

"A. CAMPBELL'S VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT."

MR. EDITOR.—On page 138 of the Harbinger, under the above caption, S. J. Chew asks:—"Can you, or can any of your readers tell me how it is that in A. Campbell's translation of the New Testament, 1 Cor. vii. 21, is thus given—'Were you called being a bondman? Be not careful to be made free.' In the Greek I find not these words, 'to be made free.' * * * Why does A. Campbell insert them," &c. If the question on said page should catch the eye of Bro. A. C., which you think probable, and if he should think proper to answer them, it will be some months before the answer can be placed before your readers: therefore, in the meantime, I submit the following—not that, in doing so, I flatter myself that I will be able to tell S. J. C. anything which he does not already know, but lest some readers be made to stumble through these questions, and think less highly of A. C. and the New Testament which he has published, than they would otherwise do.

This question appears to me—from the introductory clause—to be drawn up under a most important but unfounded assumption. It is put thus: "In A. Campbell's translation of the New Testament," &c. whereas the work to which it refers—if it is a reprint from the New Testament published by Mr. Campbell—bears on its title page, "Translated from the original Greek by Doctors George Campbell, James M'Knight, and Philip Doddridge." This title suggests the answer to the question—"Why does A. C. insert them?" Because he found them in the work which he was re-publishing, and requiring no emendation from him—namely, in the "Apostolic Epistles translated by James M'Knight, D.D." If there is a wrong committed in printing the words, "to be made free," as being the words of inspiration while they are not, the sin does not rest on A. C. Any one reading the prefaces of the New Testament published by Mr. Campbell, and considering the small size of the volume and its low price, will at once see that it was no part of his plan to cumber the work with Roman capitals, italic, italic capitals, commentaries, footnotes, exegeses, &c.; or give "intimation" that this or that phrase has not its full equivalent in the Greek. It is true, the book is published with "various emendations," by A. C., but he tells us that, owing to the prejudices of the people, "the emendations substituted, except in some few instances, were from other translators of note, or from one of the three authors of the work;" and as the words under our consideration are not emendations from A. C., but are reprinted from M'Knight, in the same character of type as the other parts of his translations are printed, there is no ground for supposing that A. C. has published that rendering on account of his position to American slavery, which some persons might be led unwarrantably to suppose.

Although I am not able to read Greek, nor say anything about the comparative faithfulness to the original of 1 Cor. vii. 21, as rendered by M'Knight and by King James' translators, perhaps, as an imperfectly educated English reader, it may not be much out of place for me to venture a remark. The "Authorized Version" reads thus: "Art thou called being a servant? Care not for it." The meaning of the Apostle does not seem to be fully expressed by these words, and the question arises, What thing is it that the servant is not to care for? Is it his present state of servitude, or is it a prospective state of freedom? Carefulness or anxiety about a thing is more apt to arise in the mind in reference to the future than to the present. It makes little difference, however, which of these states is understood—the advice to the servant is perfectly applicable in either case: he is not to be anxious about it. The Apostle adds, "if thou mayest be made free use it rather," which seems to imply that the servant is apt to be "careful to be made free;" therefore, the translation of M'Knight appears to me preferable to that of the Authorized Version, as he substitutes the Apostle's plain words, "be made free," in place of the obscure ones "for it." Still, I consider the passage as printed in both versions to convey the same meaning. An undue anxiety on account of being a slave, and an undue anxiety to be made free, seem to be the same thing.

The next question proposed is as follows: "In the Epistle to Philemon, at the 16th verse, Paul tells Philemon to receive Onesimus, not now as a servant, or, as a slave if you will; but A. C. makes Paul say, no longer as a slave only," &c. The answer submitted to the first question may, to some extent, be held as an answer to this one. There is, however, a noticeable difference in the language accompanying this question. With the first question we are told that the words "to be made free" are found in M'Knight, but here it is asserted that "A. C. makes Paul say, no longer as a slave only;" and then it is indignantly asked, "Who gave him, or any other man, the right to put in that word only?" Perhaps your readers will be surprised to learn that in this passage also A. C. has not altered one syllable of M'Knight's rendering. It seems curious that this should have been passed over in silence, and A. C. be charged with putting words in Paul's mouth which were published by another man in 1795, when A. C. was but a lad at school! All that can properly be said in reference to A. C.'s course in this case amounts to this: he saw no necessity for any emendation of M'Knight, which, indeed, is not peculiar to M'Knight, but agrees with the interpretations of Burkett, Whitby, Adam Clark, Dr. Chalmers, &c.

As if to depreciate the book published by Mr. C., this question is followed by the words: "According to this New Version he is to be received as a slave; yet not as a slave only. Love not the world, says John: who will dare to alter that to love not the world only?" That would be too gross, for the love of the world and primitive Christianity were incompatible with each other. Such a question has no relevancy in determining the propriety of adding the word "only" in Phil. 16. If it were evident from the New Testament, that slaveholding in the first century and primitive Christianity were as incompatible with each other as is the love of the world and the love of God, then we would have the authority of an apostle for saying: If any man is a slaveholder, the love of the Father is not in him. The Epistle to Philemon does not seem to be also a deed of emancipation to Onesimus, for Paul says to Philemon, "without thy mind would I do nothing." * * * Perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever," &c. Paul, then, did not know whether Philemon was disposed to give Onesimus his freedom, or to "receive him for ever" — that is, all his lifetime; and therefore he sent him back to his master, with a certificate of a better character than that which he had before he ran away from him. No evidence exists of his having been made free by Philemon, though various traditions are current respecting him. The words, "not now as a servant, but above a servant," do not necessarily imply, when taken into consideration in connection with the context, that the state of servitude had ceased to exist by Onesimus becoming a Christian; and the fact of his being sent back to Philemon, when Paul so much desired his services, is irreconcilable with such a supposition. The Saviour says: "He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me. * * * Labour not for the bread which perisheth, but for that which endures to eternal life." Would there be any culpable presumption in inserting the word "only" after the second "me" in the above quotation, and after the words "labour not?" His general teaching and the common sense interpretation of these passages warrant us in supplying the word "only" in these cases (mentally, at least.) So Paul's general teaching on the duties of servants, or slaves, and masters, seems to me to warrant the supplement "only" in Phil. 16. The man who could write: "Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed: and they that have believing masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren, but rather do them service because they are faithful and beloved partakers of the benefit"—would not be likely to ignore the right of his dearly beloved Philemon to partake of the benefit of the services of his slave Onesimus; on the contrary, he told him that though Onesimus had "in time past been unprofitable to him, he would now be profitable to him." He had learned the lesson: "Servants be obedient to them that are your masters with fear and trembling, in singleness of your hearts, as unto Christ. * * * Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free."

"Then as to the translation of doulos. Sometimes we have slave and sometimes servant. * * * If the doulos in the New Testament necessarily means what our word slave means, as some affirm, why not in these instances, [see the Harbinger, p. 138] as in others so translated?" I think M'Knight and A. Campbell are not of those who so affirm, and I cherish a feeling of gratitude to them and to other translators who have rendered that word slave, when it means a person under involuntary servitude, and servant, when it means a free man. I consider it unjust to insinuate that A. C. retains the word slave to please the "Virginian slaveholders." The passages cited by S. J. C., and rendered with the word slaves, are apt to startle the cursory reader; but when he reflects that the sense in which that word is to be taken is determined by the context, the apparent monstrosity of such rendering vanishes. The word servant appears to be indiscriminately employed in the Common Version, and tends to obscure the meaning of many passages. Perhaps our translators had a laudable object in view by employing that word so exclusively, and some good Christians may be shocked at the idea of the word slave being used in an English Version of the New Testament, however faithful such version may be to the original Greek, and would uncompromisingly retain the old familiar word servant in all cases. Yet how various are the ideas conveyed by the word. Virginians, and members of the American Congress, speak of their slaves as their servants; and when it is used in England, it is often necessary to strengthen it by an epithet, such as domestic, before that you can feel quite sure that you will be understood. The man who declares in writing that he is your very humble servant, would be quite indignant if you ordered him to black your boots. To see a "humble servant of the church" driving about in a carriage and pair, with a second humble servant of the church on the box, in livery, and a third hanging on behind in the same livery, would astonish an unsophisticated person, who always attached the same meaning to the same word.

Apologizing for the length of this communication, I beg leave to recommend to all who study the New Testament published by Mr. Campbell, carefully to peruse the prefaces which he has written for that work.—In the Gospel's good hope, yours truly,

J. SOMERVILLE.

Edinburgh, March 1860.

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

THE Harbinger for November, 1859, contains an article entitled "God was manifest in the flesh." The sentiment of the article being, I presume, according to the opinions of the writer, opposed to my views contained in a previous article, entitled, "Christ is not God;" how far they refute the sentiments of that article the readers will judge. As he appears to doubt the sentiments I entertain respecting our Saviour's Divine nature, I will state them in express terms. That I believe our Saviour to be a Divine being, distinct from God and dependent on him. John v. 19-24, "Then answered Jesus and said unto them, verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth, and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickened them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which sent him. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." Now I should like to see this language made to coincide and square with the sentiment that our "Saviour was God manifest in the flesh." This language defies the present powers of metaphysics to reconcile, whatever in a more advanced state they may be enabled thereby to effect. Should my friend think differently, happy should I be to see his effort to gain the precedence for his opinions. Again, one of the emphatic reasons of the Scripture why Christ is called the Son of God is, because he was conceived by the Holy Ghost. Luke i. 35, "And the angel answered and said unto her, the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." I think the writer will not be now under any misapprehension respecting my views of Christ. The writer affirms, "That before creation was brought into being, he was the life-giving word," and he appears to rest this idea on the language contained in the introduction of John's Gospel. The language employed by John in the commencement of his Gospel is, by many, thought to be proof of the supreme divinity of Christ; but the evangelist does not say anything even indirectly about Christ till the 11th verse of that chapter, nor expressly till the 17th, but alludes to the power of God which resided in Christ; so that, in a figurative sense, he was said to be made flesh. If Christ, as he supposes, was the "life-giving word," it is highly imperative on him to reconcile such a sentiment with the following language of holy writ: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. He spake and it was done: he commanded and it stood fast" (Psalm xxxix. 9.) In this the Psalmist evidently alludes to Moses saying, "God said let there be light, and there was light," &c. The evangelist, who was well acquainted with the Scriptures, could not mean by the language he employs anything which would contradict them; but this he would have done had he intimated that any other than the Supreme Being himself made all things. He certainly alluded to the well-known language of the Scriptures; therefore, some other interpretation must be given to this language, otherwise we make the Scriptures contradictory. On the language of that introduction I have read and studied much, and I feel confident that it teaches no such sentiments as are too often founded thereon. The sentiments in general entertained from the language are not only opposed to the design of the gospel, but contrary to its internal language. I have not time at present, but will, at some future, give an article on that language. The next assertion which struck my attention was, "The Jews regarded Jesus as the son of Mary, and a man like themselves, addressing him as such, and our Lord often speaks to them in language which accorded with the ideas they held respecting him; yet, in the course of his ministry, whenever the occasion demanded it, he demonstrated that 'in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.'" I think my friend, when he uttered the above language, had forgotten himself, or presumed on the forgetfulness of his readers. Did not our Saviour plainly inform his disciples that of the day and hour of the day of judgment he was ignorant; that of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven; but my Father only? Strange and inexplicable language this, to utter, if in him dwelt all the "fulness of the Godhead bodily." It affords one conclusive instance, that he did not always, when occasion demanded, demonstrate that in him dwelt "all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," at least, not in the common acceptation of that language.

I feel persuaded the sentiments of the writer would never have been such as they are, relative to that portion of Holy Writ, "in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," had he endeavoured impartially to ascertain the Scriptural meaning of that language. Had he forgotten that the same Apostle prays that all Christians "may be filled with all the fulness of God?" In the conclusion of his article, he trusts that I shall be able, on further reflection, to receive implicitly the declaration of Scripture, that our Divine Saviour was "God manifest in the flesh." That the Scriptures implicitly teach that God did, in our Saviour, manifest himself, I firmly believe; but that they teach that he was God, I cannot believe. Such a belief is opposed to his own teaching, to reason, and to the Scriptures generally. "I ascend unto my God and your God, my Father and your Father." He prayed to God himself, and sought others to pray to him. He is the Mediator between God and man—he came to do the will of God, and to finish his work. Now, it will be to me an intellectual treat to see these passages reconciled with the theory that Christ is God; but I am very doubtful that I should be amused rather than enlightened by the attempt. If the passage, a portion of which he has cited, does teach that our divine Saviour was God manifest in the flesh, the same passage teaches that "God was justified in the Spirit, seen of angels," &c. Now will my Brother, at his earliest convenience, favour me with an intelligent scriptural account, when, where, and by whom, God was justified in the Spirit, and who received him up into glory? I hope he will not ignore this request, but either attempt it, or give his reasons for not attempting it.

I must now offer a few remarks on an article by G. Y. T. in the same Harbinger, relative to the same subject. At the conclusion he submits a selection of Scripture passages, and imagines that great violence will have to be employed before they can be made to teach anything but the "Deity of Christ." I hope G. Y. T. will give me a scriptural definition of the Deity of Christ, in order that I may know what sentiments I have to combat before we join issue; and then we will see whether, in the explanation of the passages, any violence is required. I have long fully endorsed the view, that the language of Thomas, "My Lord, and my God!" is nothing but an Eastern exclamation; but will no longer do so, when I see good and sound reasons shewing the erroneousness thereof. It would have been more graceful on the part of G. Y. T. to have made the attempt by just laws of interpretation, than by a bare affirmation to call it a perversion of Scripture. I shall be very happy to learn, from his next communication, that the faith of Thomas was anything more than this, that Jesus was really risen from the dead. For when the Apostles had told him they had seen the Lord, he answers, that "Except I see in his hands the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." Then Christ, coming a second time, saith unto him, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thine hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing"—viz. that I am risen. Our Saviour saith, "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed;" which shews that he could believe only what he had seen, viz. that the same body was raised which had been crucified; neither had he seen, nor could he see with his bodily eyes, that he who was thus raised was his Lord and his God supreme. As Dr. Whithy says, it may have this import, "My Lord and my God" have done this, to wit, raised him from the dead. I would advise Bro. G. Y. T. to assume a more humble position than to make his opinions of our Saviour's duty the measure thereof; and because our Saviour did not reprove Thomas as he ought, according to his opinion, to have done, found a principle therefrom for interpreting Scripture. What, I ask, would not such a principle of interpretation lead to, and what would it not prove and disprove? It is one of the leading principles of those who have waged war against Christianity, and one of the most successful in beguiling their victims. He calls my philosophy lame, because I ask if Christ is God, follows it not that what is said of one will be true when affirmed of the other? Now, I believe it is not lame, but too sound in every limb for him to catch and cure. Well, I will just examine his sound logic. If it have any force at all it is this—God and Christ are two terms: God represents the genus, and Christ the specie—therefore, because all cannot be affirmed of Christ that is affirmed of God, Christ is God; or because the whole genus does not belong to a certain specie, therefore the specie is the genus. What admirable logic and conclusions! Let us examine another instance, "Woman may always be spoken of under the generic term man, but in no case can it be said of man that he is woman." This conclusion suits my purpose, but not his—it ought to have been in order to support his theory—therefore, woman is man. This is the proper conclusion from his premises. But I want G. Y. T. without fail to inform me in his next, if he be prepared to maintain that the terms genus and specie bear the same relation to what they represent, as do the terms God and Christ to their representations. Now, is God a generic term, and may Christ, as woman is of the generic term man, always be spoken of under it? If not always, just by way of illustration and example, favour me with a few instances from Scripture.

G. Y. T. concludes his article by a selection of Scripture passages confirmatory of his position, upon the latter section of which a few remarks are necessary. They are headed, "Worship due to God offered to Christ, and never refused by him." Now I wish G. Y. T. to pay particular attention to my remarks on this head. Our readers will observe that the potency of these Scriptures as arguments, obviously depends upon two things. The first is worship which was due to God only being offered to Christ, and the second is, Christ not refusing that worship; and from this proposition he makes the following logical conclusion — that therefore Christ is God. Now I will expose his logic and show its sophistry. In the first place he assumes without proof, that the worship there offered to Christ was not due to him. This is a legitimate inference from his premises, because if it was not due to Christ, the latter part of his proposition, viz. and never refused by him, is of no force. 2nd, Why, in the name of common sense, should Christ's non-refusal of that worship, be made an argument to prove that he is God? Why, I ask, should he refuse it when it was his due? The plain English of this logic, if I may so call it, is this: according to the proposition, the worship is not due to Christ, but the conclusion to the proposition makes it due. But I ask G. Y. T. and I hope he will endeavour to give a scriptural answer, how has he come to know that the worship alluded to in those passages was not due to Christ? Also, who told him that the worship was due to God only? Now, don't ignore these two requests, but meet their demands in an intelligible answer from Scripture. Again, if his conclusion be true, that Christ is God, will he be kind enough to show the error of this conclusion? Then it also follows that Christ and God are synonymous terms. Is he prepared to maintain the latter conclusion as well as the former? And if he gives up one, I shall be happy indeed to listen to the words which fall from his lips, how he is to retain the other. As I am big with expectations, I hope he will not disappoint my hopes. Also tell me what he means by the expression, "Worship due to God." Does not this language imply that there is some worship not due to God? Is not all worship due to God? This language savours strongly of orthodoxy, so-called; however, it is not, I think, Bible-dox.

J. E.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.

It is not our intention to enter upon a lengthy discussion respecting the divinity of Jesus Christ. We shall, therefore, give to the subject, on the present occasion, but a few passing observations. The divinity of our Saviour is presented to us in the Scriptures as matter of testimony and faith, rather than of knowledge and speculation. "There are three that bare record in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; and these three are one" — one in essence, attributes, and purpose — one in creation, providence, and redemption. Confessedly, "Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit," &c. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men." * And the Word was made flesh," &c. Yes, "He who was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through him might be made rich:" and we now "have redemption through his blood," even the forgiveness of sins. "He is the image of the invisible God, the first-born from the dead. For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible; whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him." It was he who said, "Let there be light, and there was light." Passages in harmony with this idea, implying the creative attributes of Jesus, might be greatly multiplied.

Bro. J. E. says, "I believe that our Saviour was a divine being, distinct from God, and dependent on him." He does not inform us, however, wherein the distinction from, or the dependency on, God consisted; but he refers us to John v. 19-24. Now whatever these verses teach, they do not, in our judgment, invalidate in the least the divinity of Christ. On examining the context we find it remarkably illustrative of other passages of Scripture. Jesus was then at Jerusalem, and on the Sabbath went to the pool called Bethesda, where he saw a man who had been waiting for thirty-eight years, that he might obtain a miraculous cure for his infirmity through the medium of the water, when, at certain times, it was troubled by an angel. But Jesus, the Creator and Lord of angels, was now in his presence, and addressed to him the inquiry, "Wilt thou be made whole?" Then the man repeated his affecting story and oft-disappointed hope, and Jesus, in a compassionate tone, said to him, "Arise, take up thy bed, and walk. Instantly the man was made whole, took up his bed and walked. Now that day was the Sabbath." If the subsequent portion of the narrative be carefully read, we shall see that Jesus identifies himself with the Father—"I and my Father are one," and ascribes to the Father dwelling in him, the power to perform these works. Hence we are informed that "the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he had not only broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his Father; making himself equal with God." Clearly, therefore, we have nothing supplied to us in this passage, or its connection, which supports the position taken by J. E. Paul informs us that "there is one God, even the Father, for whom are all things; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." Here we recognize the Divine Word impersonated in Messiah, who was "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." Jesus could say, "Before Abraham was, I am." He was omniscient, for he knew what was in man—he was omnipotent, "the Father worketh hitherto, and I work"—he is immutable, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever"—and he is declared to be "God over all, blessed for ever." Our faith, then, rests on the clearest evidence of Scripture, and not on the opinions of men.

But our Bro. J. E. takes exception to Col. ii. 9, "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily," and supposes that we have overlooked the prayer of the Apostle, that the saints might know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and be filled with all the fullness (revealed, v. 17) of God" (Eph. iii. 14-19.) The fountain of eternal life and the stream may be the same in nature, but not in origin or extent. The church is the body of Christ, the purchase of his love, the temple of the Holy Spirit, and is described as the fullness of him that filleth all in all. Thus every divine attribute is developed in the new creation, which was not the case in the Adamic constitution of things.

Bro. J. E. refers us to some passages in proof that Jesus was inferior to the Father, and not "God manifest in the flesh," as, for instance—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels of heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark xiii. 32.) The version by W. Jones reads—"But of that day, or of that hour, knoweth none, (not the Heavenly Messengers—no, not the Son) but the Father." Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "But that day and that hour no one maketh known; no, not the angels who are in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father." Another reference is, "The disciples being assembled with Jesus after his resurrection from the dead, said to him, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? He said unto them, it is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the Father has reserved to himself." But does this prove that the Father, speaking in Jesus, could not have answered the question? Assuredly not, because there is a point in divine communications to man, beyond which, directly or indirectly, there is no advance. "To preclude the curiosity of men, and to excite vigilance, the Lord is pleased to tell us, that no dispensation of God, by man, as Daniel, or angels, or the Son of Man, had ordained us to know the seasons; this being no part of the prophetic office, or within the commission of Christ himself." "Secret things belong to the Lord our God, but those revealed to us and our children for ever, that we may do all that he commands."

J. E. desires to know "when, where, and by whom Messiah was justified in the Spirit." We read, in the Family Testament of A. Campbell, the passage thus:—"And, confessedly, great is the secret of godliness. He who was manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of messengers, proclaimed to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, taken up in glory" (1 Tim. iii. 16.) J. E. admits that by the circumstances connected with his conception, Messiah partook at least of borrowed divinity: "Therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God." Now Paul declares that all the fullness of Deity resides substantially in him (A. C. in New Ver.) 1, Was not Jesus justified in the Spirit at his immersion, when, as he rose from the water, "the heavens opened to him; and the Spirit of God appeared, descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: while a voice from heaven proclaimed, This is my Son, the Beloved, in whom I delight?" 2, Was not Messiah justified in the Spirit, after his conflict with the Evil One in the wilderness? The first Adam failed in a single combat, but the second Adam came off victorious, after a conflict and fasting of forty days, again appearing publicly in the power of the Spirit to conflict with evil. 3, He was justified in the Spirit by all the prophecies concerning him. He was evil spoken of and maltreated, and condemned and crucified as a blasphemer and criminal, being numbered with the transgressors. 4, But on the morning of his resurrection, and especially on the day of Pentecost, he was justified by the Spirit both in heaven and upon earth; and crowned Lord of all, has sent forth the Spirit, to convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. That portion of the letter which is addressed to Bro. G. Y. T. we leave him to answer. J. W.

REPLY TO J. E. ON THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

I HOPE you will not object to insert the following remarks on the subject of J. Ellis' article in the October Harbinger, although that was addressed to W. T. H. more particularly. The subject is of universal interest, and is likely to call forth many remarks on this, as well as on the other side of the Atlantic.

Our brother acknowledges the divinity of our Lord. That is well. But what he means to convey by that is by no means clear. If he means merely that he was an inhabitant of heaven before he came here, this would not prove his divinity; even were it admitted that he was invested with a power and authority transcending all other created beings. We do not speak (at least I do not) of the divinity of angels. These are all created beings, superior in intelligence and position, indeed, to man, but none the less creatures moving in certain spheres which are prescribed for them, and which are, compared with that of God, narrow and subordinate. Among them it is evident Jesus cannot be classed. He has little in common with them. A continual distinction is maintained between him and them. They have been his ministers, have wondered at him, have worshipped him, but have never been classed with him. Paul, in the Hebrews, introduces them to show their infinite inferiority to him, even in his human state. Still the angels were great, honoured with many important commissions, and rank high in the spiritual world. But to speak of them as divine, would be altogether a mistake. J. E. would not venture to speak of the divinity of the angels, I apprehend, yet we can hardly, if at all, conceive of a higher subordinate position than that of the glorious angelic intelligence.

Divinity, as a substantive, means the Godhead. To say that Jesus is divine is to say that he partakes of the nature of God. There is a sense in which Christians are said to partake of the divine nature, but this is totally inapplicable to Jesus. The question at issue is, the essential nature and origin of Jesus. There seems to me, then, but two positions at all compatible with that of his divinity—one is, that he is divine essentially, therefore God; the other, that he is divine by an act of God, and therefore God. If he is divine he must be God. I have yet to learn how the divinity of Jesus can be maintained without admitting his Godhead.

That which became flesh is called "the Word." This expression is intended to convey some idea to our minds of the dignity of the person. What is it? It suggests to us that the wisdom, reason, and communicating power of God had become flesh to reach men's low condition. To suppose a time when the Word was not, is to suppose that God was once without wisdom, reason, communicating power. The revelation that the Word was made flesh, is intended to enlarge our ideas of the dignity of Jesus, and to proclaim his eternal dignity as the effective power of God. J. E. must remember that in revelation all names represent things and qualities. He treats the Word as if it were a common name, instead of its being the expression of a quality or principle. These cannot be created, neither can they be spoken of by any common name; and when they are spoken of by a name, they cannot be disaccounted from existence. Thus, in calling the wisdom and legislating or arranging power of God, "the Word," we must associate substantive or real existence with the expression—real in regard to the Godhead, though not material in regard to man in his physical state. In order to manifest it to man in this state, a change has to take place; it must become flesh. The Godhead was not exhausted, or swallowed up, in the manifestation of the Word. Although it would be difficult, if not impossible, to say what the invisible Deity possessed that the manifested Deity did not, still, as a universe had to be maintained in order, as men must be preserved in the belief of his omnipotence, and as the manifestation was to be only for a time, it was essential that God should be so addressed as to establish these truths in the mind. Hence the prayers, appeals, and communion of Jesus with God invisible. These were not for himself, but for his disciples. He was set for our example. It may be difficult thus to divide, as it were, the Godhead into manifested and unmanifested, and to harmonize the sorrows and sufferings of Jesus with his Godhead; but I hold it much more so to believe that he was a created being, endowed with God-like attributes, by means of which he wrought out salvation for mankind. That idea contemplates him planning and maturing his plan in heaven, guided by his own love and mercy, wisdom and power, and under their influence carrying it out into a triumphant termination. This must present him willing but impotent, possessing a something that God could not save man without, yet unable, unless God inspire him, to bring his benevolent intentions to a successful issue. God can only be regarded as possessing will and power in the abstract, (as a man possesses power and will to construct a house, whether he has the materials or not) while Jesus has substantiality by which God may work. Supposing this to be the case, to whom should the greater glory be given? To him who, contemplating what sorrow, sufferings, and contempt he must undergo, consents to submit to all if God will show him the way, make him intelligent in regard to what is required of him, and work with him in confirmation of his approval? Or to him who, sitting on this immovable throne, simply sends forth his Spirit to accompany, confirm, and instruct? Wonderful and incomprehensible as the truth of the divinity of Jesus is, I find it the easiest to believe, the most harmonious with the Word of God, the most suited to exalted ideas of his love and mercy, the most consolatory to my soul.

The long quotation J. E. gives from some "eminent individual" in exposition of our Lord's prayer, seems to me not to affect the subject, even if it were correct, while it entirely overlooks the truths taught by inference in it. The glory which Jesus sought from his Father was truly that his mission might be successful—that his labour for, and among men, might not be in vain, but that the world might be lieve to its salvation. But Jesus evidently refers to the success of the former works of God, when he says, "Glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory that I had with thee before the world was;" that is, I apprehend, before the beauty of God's universe was marred, and His glory obscured by the sinfulness of man. Let that glory return — let success crown his mission, his labour of love. How glorious must the wisdom of God "the Word" have been, when all the productions of it were pronounced "very good." More labour, more glory. 'Twas glorious to call a world from naught, but more glorious to redeem.

This had not been accomplished when Jesus spoke, therefore glory in relation to it must still be future. But how does this disprove his eternity on the Godhead? Although a thousand years are to God as a day, and a day as a thousand years, still there is with him a fulness of time, and until this arrives, the glory cannot be given. Jesus' words, then, evidently meant, "Let the redemption of man be as successful as his creation. As I was with thee in the former, so shall we be one in the latter;" but the glory, consequent on accomplishing each, cannot exist till each is accomplished. Its accomplishment was dependent on Spirit, not flesh — God, not man. Therefore, Jesus, in the presence of his disciples, invokes heaven, and shows the celestial origin of his mission and the divinity of himself; while, at the same time, if they understood the burden of his prayer, viz., the success of the gospel, they could not but feel the responsibility of their position, and that it depended somewhat on their own faithfulness whether this glory was ever manifested. To encourage them, therefore, he prayed that they might share in that glory. He gave them the opportunity of doing so, declaring that he had given the glory that he himself had received in this work, to them; not to the denuding of himself, but that there might be harmony—aye, unity—in the great work. The glory of planning, the glory of accomplishing, and the glory of developing that stupendous plan, thus combine in all, while it is the great God who is working. It is He who does all, and, to Him, ultimately and alone, must revert all the praise, honor, and glory. If so, Where is Christ? Where is he who died for us? Not with the Apostles—who simply, yet nobly, proclaimed him—but with God, as God, the Eternal Word.

How contracted and partial is the idea, that Jesus possessed no glory, save on promise, e'er the first sinner had believed on him. There is no eminence in the thought, whatever the individual may be who asserts it. He who alone knew us, and could save us—He will not give his glory to another.

I would ask, Is the knowledge of God distinct from the knowledge of Jesus Christ? Can God be known without him? And when we know Christ, do we not know God? Is not the love of Christ, the love of God? Is not the character of Christ, that of God? And for all practical purposes may we not say, that the sent, or manifested, contains the eternal life spoken of? The word "God" is ever associated with heaven and invisibility. When one like ourselves appears to manifest God, no higher name can be given than "Son," because this condition is not his native one. That Son came for a purpose, possessing, as a son, only certain powers. He was to do all that a son could do. It was not in his mission, then, as Son, to proclaim the day spoken of. But will J. E. venture to say, that that Spirit in the body of Jesus, was not cognizant of all the deep things of God? I would not.

When we come into the presence of God, or reason till we arrive at Him, reason will follow us no longer. She stands impotent as a guide, awe struck as a creature, on the borders of the infinite. Still must we not tarry with her, but wing our upward way, borne up by faith in the Word of God. Creation does not stop, when reason can go no further. The heavens may, doubtless are, peopled with intelligence, the handiwork of Him who sitteth on the throne of the universe. Our eyes see no sight, our ears hear no sound; yet may there be realities and communications, music and pleasure, beyond the region of our reason. Where God is, there is no reason—when He speaks, there is no reason required. Faith takes its place, and confidently enters where reason cannot come. So with our Lord; he is from heaven. It is for us to believe. He is the Word, the Word is God. What does J. E. mean by saying "a God?" The absence of the article does not demand it. Indeed, I would be inclined to think, that in this case the divinity of the Word was intended to be more emphatically expressed. While an apparent distinction was maintained between the Word and God, the article might point out God as the true God; but when identity is intended to be expressed, the word God is shortly and emphatically used. It does not always denote inferiority, or an inferior sense when the article is omitted. What can be an inferior sense of the word God? There is one certainly. There are gods many, and lords many. Jesus is not in this category; neither is he to be classed with those whom Jesus himself says have been called gods. Jesus never manifested himself as God in an inferior sense, neither can we apply any degrees of comparison between God and the Word. They are one in creation—they are one in redemption. Glory be to Him for ever and ever. M. Kex.

REVIEWS, NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CORRESPONDENCE, &amp;c.

PLEA FOR A REVIVAL OF THE RELIGION OF JESUS. (Wilson, Edinburgh.) SECOND NOTICE.

THAT more space should be given to the few pages, entitled as above, than to some large and interesting volumes, may be accounted for by the consideration, that some small publications carry error a long way, and that, too, without effort to stay its progress.

The perversity of those who will not admit that Christ is a King, that now the members of his church are subjects of his kingdom, is indeed singular. Their use, too, of Scripture would be highly amusing, were it not that even the slightest perversion of the Sacred Word is a matter far too serious to warrant any other feeling than that of sadness. Let us notice two or three texts, designated by our author "distinct and positive testimony."

"I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom" (2 Tim. iv. 1.)

What can lead to the conclusion that the beginning of his reign is here referred to? Not the receiving of a kingdom, but his appearing, or glorious manifestation, in that kingdom, is set forth. Just as well might we say, members of the Lord's church are not yet children of God, because Paul, pointing to the very period indicated by this text, says, we are waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. The glorious manifestation of the Lord in his kingdom, with his saints, is what we look for, and that will come because he does reign, and not because his kingdom will then commence. Epiphania, translated appearing, is in 2 Thes. ii. 8 rendered brightness—"with the brightness of his coming," and denotes rather, that glorious outshining which will make manifest, to all, his kingly authority.

"Ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Mat. xix.)

To this the tract adds—"If it be asked, When shall the Son of Man sit on the throne of his glory? let Jesus answer—

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. xxv. 31.)

But this is nothing to the point. Grant that when the Lord comes, his twelve apostles will sit in judgment upon Israel, and that at that time the Lord will sit upon the throne of his glory. Every one understands that he will do so, and our tract should prove that then he will sit thereupon for the first time—that he is not now crowned, and upon the throne of his kingdom. Judges sit on thrones, and kings too, not only during the first, but also during the latter days of a kingdom. The difference between that time and this consists, not in his sitting upon a throne, but upon the visibility and glorious manifestation of his throne and self.

"These testimonies (this is the language of the tract) are submitted as evidence, that the kingdom of God preached by Jesus and his Apostles, is a kingdom to be set up when the Son of Man shall come from heaven to reward his faithful followers, and punish the wicked." That they testify nothing of the sort, will be clear to all persons not blinded by prejudice. Now let us look for testimony that indicates when the kingdom was set up.

"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. ii. 44.)

The kingdom here promised is called, in the Gospels, the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven. It was to be "set up" in the days of "these kings." The Kings or Empires mentioned in the chapter are four—the last of the four was the Roman. Before that empire passed away, the kingdom of God was set up, or the prediction has failed. Coming down to the time when the fall of the Roman Empire was fast approaching, we have further testimony.

"In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 1, 2.)

"And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you: and heal the sick that are therein; and say unto them, The kingdom of God is nigh unto you" (Luke x. 8, 9.)

Since the Lord and his Harbinger proclaimed the kingdom "at hand" and "nigh," eighteen hundred years have passed away, and now we are gravely told it has not yet come. The fall of the fourth empire was nigh, the kingdom was to come during its days, and it was then "at hand."

"If I by the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you" (Luke xi. 20.)

As a man would cry, fleeing to a city of refuge, "The avenger is upon me"—that is, close at his heels—or as a general might say to his army, when the enemy is very near, "The enemy is upon us."

"But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God" (Luke ix. 27.)

"And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power" (Mark ix. 1.)

These are the Lord's words to his Apostles. They have tasted death, the kingdom therefore has come. Peter first introduced subjects on the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were born of water and the Spirit, without which the Lord had said no man could enter (Acts ii. John iii.)

"A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come. But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. And it came to pass, that, when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading" (Luke xix. 12-15.)

A certain man went from his home to a distant bank to receive cash for a bill, and when he was returned, having received the cash, he called his children to reward them. This means, according to our tract-writer's logic, he received the cash after he came back, in his own house, and not at the bank. But we cannot admit it—the man went to the bank to receive the cash, and the nobleman went into the far country to receive a kingdom. When the risen

Lord, in that heavenly country to which he ascended, heard the command, "Sit thou at my right hand, rule thou, (or reign) till I make thine enemies thy footstool"—when he sat down on the throne of God, (which became his throne the moment he was placed upon it) he received the kingdom. His manifestation in his kingdom, and the glory of his throne, are yet to be waited for, but when he appears it will be, "having received the kingdom," and not to receive it.

"Thou madest him a little lower than the angels: thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him: but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour" (Heb. ii. 7-9)

Here, just as making him a little while lower than the angels, refers to the past, so does the crowning. Paul teaches us, in the exercise of our faith, to distinguish between what is actually done, and what is not done. All are not yet under his feet — we see they are not. "But we see Jesus (who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death) CROWNED"—and if crowned, a King—and if a King, he has received a kingdom.

"Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son" (Col. i. 12, 13.)

Not only have immersed believers been introduced into his church, but they have been "translated into" his kingdom. Just as well may you tell us, we have not redemption and forgiveness of sins, as to tell us, in direct contradiction to one of the most positive declarations of the Word of God, that we have not been translated into the kingdom of His Son.

"The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool. The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies" (Ps. cx. 1, 2.)

Here Messiah is seated on his throne of his rule—his rule, or reign, is not over his enemies, but over a willing people in the midst of his enemies. They shall all be put under his feet, and till then he is to sit at the right hand of Jehovah. Paul applies to this ruling at the right hand of God the word reign. "He must reign, till he has put all enemies under his feet, and the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." We have shewn, that when he appears he will sit upon his throne, and the living and the dead will stand before him, and what then? Will he then, as our tract teaches, receive the kingdom? Verily, no! But he will "deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father" (1 Cor. xv. 24); and in all eternity the throne of God and the Lamb will be in the midst of the redeemed.

The revival, then, of the expectation that the Kingdom of Heaven—of God—or of God's dear Son, is yet to come, would not be a revival of a first principle of Christianity, but a return to a Jewish expectation, which the well-instructed of the Lord's people know to have been already realized.

—
"SECTARIANISM AT AN END:
or the Causes, Consequences, and Cure of Divisions in the Church of Jesus Christ,"—A Discourse delivered in the Temperance Hall, Bradford, November, 1859, by GEORGE WOOLER. (Nelson, Market Street, Bradford.)

"YE have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered to you," is the author's text, which he renders, "Ye have obeyed that mould of doctrine into which ye were delivered." He brings into view the Papist mould, the Protestant mould, the Episcopalian mould, the Wesleyan and other moulds, and then dwells upon the Gospel mould.

"If the Gospel mould were used alone, all professors of Christ's religion would have one name only. Christ's men were first called Christians at Antioch, and before that they were called disciples; so that Christian disciples is the name by which, alone, all the followers of Christ should be known. To be called by any other name is antisciptural and insulting to the Captain of our salvation. When the Corinthian believers began to arrange themselves under different banners, saying, 'I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ,'—the apostle of the Gentiles asked, 'Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were you baptized in the name of Paul?' It was in reference to this state of things that Paul used the earnest entreaty—and I suppose he was under the influence of inspiration when he penned it—'Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you.' 1 Cor. i. 10. If it is wrong to be called after the name of Paul, or Peter, surely it must be wrong to receive a name from uninspired leaders, such as Calvin, Arminius, Luther, and Wesley. And is it not worse still to be called after a form of church government, or any single duty enjoined upon believers, as Independent, Baptist, &c.? If a man bear any of these names, he has been cast from a mould other than that of Christ and his Apostles, and not one of them is identical with the Gospel mould."

"And what has human legislation to do with the Church of Jesus Christ? Did Christ ever authorize any man, except the Apostles, to make a single law for the governance of His Church? If so, when and where? Have not all Councils, Synods, and Conferences, been sources of tyranny to the people of God? The Presbyterian and Wesleyan would inveigh against Popish Councils, but do they know that they themselves are subject to bondage? Whatever laws the Synod or the Conference may enact, a man is not called upon to obey them; and if they are right, he is not to obey them because they demand obedience, but because Christ does: for, if the Synod and Conference enact right laws, they are laws which Christ enacted before; if others are produced they are wrong; therefore, all Councils and sacred Conclaves are a superfluity, and may with advantage be dispensed with. I know that these Councils are necessary to keep up a sect; but sectarianism is not Christianity. Substitute the positive commandments of God for human legislation and tradition, and sectarianism could not exist.

"The Papacy is remarkable for its pomp and show. It has exalted the externals of religion so as to arrest attention, and please the taste of fallen humanity. The Papist is taught that to perform these external rites and ceremonies, is to be a Christian, and that not to do so is refusing to be a follower of Christ. To be an Episcopalian you must comply with its outward forms; and so with every other sect in existence. And if you do not comply with these externals, you cannot belong to any of the sects; and not to belong to any of these sects is not to be a Christian. These externals are exalted above piety. But, perhaps, the reader is demurring to this, saying: 'A man may be a Christian although he is not an Episcopalian, Presbyterian, &c. That is the very confession at which I wished to come! And what does the confession amount to, but this; that your ceremonies are not essential to true religion? Do away then, with your jarring rites and ceremonies, for they are stumbling blocks to the unity of God's people."

FOREIGN PROGRESS.

THE New Testament order of things is, by the innate force of truth, not only brought more or less before the eyes, and pressed upon the mind, of every sect in Britain, but the same may be said of those parts of the Continent of Europe, where truth is not exactly at liberty to walk about in daylight. Interesting facts from several districts, and through various channels, are before us, but as these are well exhibited by our promising contemporary The Interpreter, we shall reprint from its pages.

"The awakening of spiritual life among the Protestants of France and Switzerland has, it appears, for some years past, led to investigations among devout men, concerning the original constitution of the church of Christ. These investigations, as might naturally have been expected, have not always issued in a persuasion that the Presbyterianism which generally prevails in the continental churches is of apostolic authority. Some, indeed, have openly avowed their dissatisfaction with its ecclesiastical forms, and, refusing to be fettered by usages imposed on them at the Reformation, have felt themselves at liberty to advocate, at least, a somewhat nearer approach to what they regard as a more Scriptural order.

"Alarmed at these tendencies, Dr. Merle d'Aubigné opened the controversy now in question by printing a small tract, entitled 'L'Ancien et le Ministre,' in which he endeavoured to show that the two offices of elder and minister, far from being one, were, in the primitive church, totally distinct.

"This publication soon led to a second, by Col. Charles Saladin, called 'L'Ancien et son Ministère dans l'Eglise selon l'Ecriture,' in which it was maintained that the Apostles established no other spiritual office in the church beside that of elder.

"These productions ultimately gave occasion to three articles in the 'Archives du Christianisme' of Paris, from the eloquent pen of Count Agénor de Gasparin, in defence of the position taken by M. Saladin. They appeared respectively in the numbers of the Archives, published on the 23rd of January, the 13th of February, and the 13th of March, 1858.

"M. Merle was, of course, not backward in justifying his own views through the same journal. This was done in five separate articles, which, when completed, were immediately reprinted in the form of a pamphlet, under the title, 'Il y a un Ministère de la Parole, institué de Dieu—Maintenons le.'

"To this brochure M. Gasparin quickly replied in other articles, which have also been published separately, under the title, 'Encore le Ministère! Réponse à M. le Professeur Merle d'Aubigné.'"

"M. Gasparin attacks clericalism in all its forms, and denying that any such distinction as that which is involved in the terms clergymen and laymen is sanctioned by Scripture, bids us choose between a purely clerical system, like that of Rome; a partial one, like that established at the Reformation; or the entire abolition of every form of clergy, in conformity with apostolic principles.

"To Rome, he says, a clerical order is indispensable; catholicism is but an expansion of clericalism; the two facts are, in truth, but one. On this question, Rome openly abandons Scripture. The elder disappears altogether, and in his place we have the priest—the consecrated one; a man separated from his brethren, and a stranger to the age in which he lives; a being supposed to be surrounded by a peculiar sanctity, and invested with an indelible character; a person distinguished from ordinary mortals by his education, by the language he speaks, by the garments he wears, by his tonsure, by his celibacy, and by his claim to be a mediator between God and man.

"Such is the Priest of Rome.

"The reformers, he goes on to say, rejected the priest without returning to the elder, and invented the modern minister of the gospel: a priest, but without celibacy, and without pacific sanctity; an elder, plus consecration and the renouncing of secular employments.

"And now for the apostolic organization. There—that is, in the Acts and the Epistles—the very notion of clergy, he maintains, finds no place. Not a hint do we get there of a distinction between clergy and laity. Men are there sacred or secular, not according to their office, but according to the time they are able to give to the service of the gospel; receiving remuneration, it may be, but remuneration differing in amount according to need; and all, whether paid for services or not, submitting alike to the duties and conditions of common life. They were not only husbands and fathers—they were men who never dreamt that they could be soiled by contact with a secular profession or a worldly calling—they were men who could understand and estimate the value of St. Paul's teaching, when he exclaims, 'Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands minister unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have showed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive' (Acts xx. 34-35.) They knew nothing about consecration, or indelibility of character—they recognized nothing beyond that solemn benediction by imposition of hands, which was given to all those who undertook any work in the name of the Lord.

"We are told (adds M. Gasparin) that in thus flying from clericalism we shall inevitably fall into 'Darbyism, or semi-Darbyism.' We might have merited such a reproach if we advocated the suppression of any one of the apostolic institutions. But we do nothing of the sort. We carefully preserve doctors and evangelists, as well as bishops; for we advocate study and science, as well as preaching."

"If the Apostles really established but two orders in the church—those of elder and deacon, and yet, while acknowledging this, we claim liberty to say that circumstances have changed, and that therefore new organizations are required—others, on the same ground, may maintain that a hierarchy has become needful, and others still, a Pope. Let it not be forgotten that the papacy itself was accepted by Melancthon, at Augsburg; as a human institution; and that the other reformers, in virtue of the theory which refuses to discover in Scripture any obligatory rule relative to the government of the church, preserved under the title of 'usages in themselves indifferent,' a mass of traditions which both Anglican and Lutheran High Churchmen are now turning to sad account."

"For myself," he continues, "I believe that we have arrived at a period of crisis and transition—a period when various questions relative to the ministry, to baptism, and to discipline, demand a solution, and must have one. I profoundly pity those religious societies, in the bosom of which, such subjects dare not be discussed."

So much for the controversy. But while in France they contend about the truth, in Italy they make haste to practice it.

"The movement out of which the communities to which we refer have sprung, is generally supposed to have commenced about 1848. Amid the commotions of that eventful year, the Sacred Scriptures first found their way into the hands of the Italian people. They were received with eagerness, and read with interest and delight. To what extent they were circulated it is not easy to say, for little or no official agency was employed. As a forbidden book they passed from hand to hand, and from house to house, rapidly and secretly. In Sardinia, in Tuscany, in Lombardy, in the Papal States, and in Naples, in spite alike of the custom-houses and the priests, they made their way and were everywhere welcomed. Individuals who are supposed to know more about the facts of the case than others, estimate, although on what data it is not easy to say, that at the present time upwards of twenty thousand Italians are, more or less, reading the Scriptures with interest. * * * Churches have been formed in different places, and officers appointed, in conformity, as they suppose, with the Apostolic pattern. In Sardinia, fourteen or fifteen brethren are employed as evangelists, and in other parts elders or pastors are to be found, although without formal designation. * * *

"Of course he [an elder] is the unpaid servant of the church, maintaining himself, like the rest, by his own industry, and desiring to be an example to the flock, as far as may be, in the discharge of those social and secular duties which belong to the Christian professor. Such pastors constitute at present the ruling eldership, so far as there is one, of churches which exist in those parts of Italy where secrecy is essential to safety.

"The peculiarity of this system seems to be mainly this—the denial altogether of a priestly class of the church of Christ, and the substitution in its place of lay pastors or elders, and teachers or evangelists.

"Its operation, if successful, will therefore develop, first, a numerous body of lay pastors or elders—by whatever name they may be called—who will be untrained, unpaid, and undistinguished from their brethren, except by their supposed possession of qualities which constitute fitness to teach or rule; and then, in addition to these, a limited number of evangelists, educated or trained for the work they have to do, and supported for the exclusive service of the church, by the contributions of the faithful.

"Whether or no these simple arrangements can be perpetuated remains to be seen. At present they can only be regarded as experimental. The effect, however, hitherto has certainly been every way beneficial, promoting a spirit of evangelization, preserving unity both in doctrine and practice, and developing in a remarkable degree the family character of Christianity. So far, at least, the theory of M. Gasparin finds support in the experience of Christians who have tested it under circumstances unusually trying and difficult.

"In Sweden, where a great awakening has for some years been going forward, clericalism has been shaken, and old ecclesiastical usages set aside, under circumstances differing in every particular from those which surround the Italians. Here the experiment is trying, not as a reaction from Popery, but within the bosom of an old Protestant church, and under no other influence than the felt necessities of a new and higher spiritual life.

"Much as we had heard and read of these awakenings," says a recent deputation from England, "nothing had been exaggerated. The movement extends, with less or greater power, over the whole country. The nobility, the gentry, professional men, tradesmen, mechanics, labourers, all partake of it. Sometimes thousands of persons assemble where so-called laymen declare the Word of God, and meetings conducted by plain unlearned men, mechanics or labourers, are well and eagerly attended."

"And how have these great ends been brought about? Chiefly, nay, all but exclusively, by lay agency — the agency of colporteurs and tradesmen. 'We most impressively felt,' say the ministers who formed the deputation, 'as we mingled with the recent converts, that we were no longer amid the fixed forms and conventional religious usages which obtain in our own country. The new life flows in new channels, and throbs with a quicker pulsation.'"

To the above we are tempted to add a few lines from a leading article in The Freeman.

"When we have asked them, Are you Protestants? they have answered with singular unanimity—'If by Protestants you mean that we have joined any of the organisations which we find existing in England or elsewhere, then we answer, No; but if you mean that we have thrown off the domination of Rome, and, taking God's Word as our sole guide, are feeling our way to an organization in accordance with its teaching, and adapted to our Italian habits, then we are Protestants.' The Italians will not accept the Waldensian discipline, which they find ready made to their hands, but insist upon searching the Scriptures independently for themselves, that they may discover and follow apostolic precedent.

"It cannot be doubted that many have learned 'the truth as it is in Jesus' in the spacious edifices of the Waldensian church, who would never have entered the small rooms of the Italian Christians, or even heard of their existence. In the words of one who is in a position, beyond most men, to judge correctly on the question, 'the Vaudois Temple in Turin, Geneva, and Nice, may stand open to all who may choose to resort to the preaching of the everlasting gospel,' and 'a Sunday may seldom pass without some new face being observed;' but it 'will never be the church of the Italian people.' It may do much good to popular preaching in these large towns, inducing, by the character of its edifices, some to enter and listen who would shrink from frequenting the humble rooms of the Italians; and it ought to be supported; but it will never retain any firm or permanent hold even on the converts it may make. One by one, as they grow in knowledge and piety, they steal off to their brethren, and eventually form part of that irregular but ever-acting body, which alone can be fairly called the Italian church.'"

Surely in these facts God is speaking to the Protestants of England—teaching them the New Testament order, and reproving them from the lips of those Italian believers who in effect say, if to be a Protestant is to be as distant from Apostolic Christianity as you are, then we are not Protestants.

PLYMOUTH BRETHRENISM.

NO. III.

In all societies there are some who allow zeal to overreach discretion, and who at times do what they should not. We have written to and about Plymouth Brethren, because we love them, and believe that, for the most part, they love the Saviour. In this we have committed a grave offence, and some of their leaders in Birmingham have gravely erred in their manner of dealing with us. Our words have not been unkind words—they have not been wanting in love—they have been plain, and outspoken against error. All we have said has been openly said, and if competent members of that body will address us in our meeting-place and shew us our wrongs, they shall have free use of the same, and our members will gladly listen. But anything fair and open does not find acceptance with certain leaders in the Birmingham gatherings—they decline controversy, and fill letters with false statements concerning our views, avoiding true issues—they speak the same things into the ears of persons likely to be affected thereby, and charge them not to reveal what they have heard — they assume so much of the Pope as to forbid converse with their members. Our last article, under these circumstances, was distributed at their meeting-place, but the copies were immediately collected. In the true spirit of the Papacy — which says, burn the Bible—they said, “Don't read it—it will do you harm,” and thus collected every copy possible.

But we must be heard—we must have leave to speak — we will (God helping us) gain the ears of many of these brethren, because convinced that they love truth, and are in degrading bondage to men whom the system has lifted into leadership, and because encouraged by results before us. Our last gave parts of a loving letter from John Hamilton, London, who retires because they withheld the true liberty from Christ's disciples; and we now give two letters, one from R. Dillon, Bath, to S. J. Chew, and the other from the same writer to the gathering in that city.

“February 6, 1860.

“Dear brother in the Lord,—For some years past I have been meeting with Christians known as Plymouth Brethren, and recently, while united with them, I have been deeply exercised about the unscriptural character of their church principles in admitting the unbaptized to the Lord's table. I have, under a false impression, sought hard to continue among these dear people. I thought I might do so with some propriety, seeing that they, as a gathering of believers, recognize open ministry, in distinction from the one man system; and seeing that I should be free to teach any disregarded doctrine of the Word of God. But I found this impossible—for how can two walk together except they are agreed on the first rudiments of the faith.

“For instance, I found I could not, as a faithful witness for Christ, testify against the then existing evils, while I remained in such an anomalous position — warning them against that which I practiced in my own person. How unlike the testimony of Jesus this would be, to condemn myself in the thing which I allowed. I therefore sent unto them the letter, a copy of which I forward to you.

“I now write to you under peculiar embarrassment of spirit and great mental trial; seeing I have not to wage war with an enemy, but with my own familiar friends, with whom I have taken sweet counsel. In my going in and out among these friends, I have observed a great de-range and confusion in their teaching when the subject of believers' baptism is touched upon; which, however, is very seldom. This also I have observed in their preaching of the gospel; which, alas, in too many instances has not borne a resemblance in all its features to that gospel preached by Peter to the Jew and Gentile; by Philip to the Eunuch; by Paul to the Philippian jailor;—‘he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.’ As the dead fly in the apothecary's ointment causeth it to send forth a bad odour, so do the strange and unscriptural acts of these dear brethren, in relation to their receiving into Christian fellowship the unbaptized, destroy the character of their testimony as the church of God, in these last days of religious declension and apostasy.

“I know the plea for so doing is on the ground of expediency, but from close experience I feel assured that, putting it on such a low ground even, it is quite inexpedient to real communion, and to the cementing of true Christian fellowship. How can that be considered ‘the unity of the Spirit’ when one person says he was made a child of God in infancy by sprinkling, and another says he was as a believer immersed into the name of Christ? How could such Scriptures as Phil. i. 27, ii. 1, 2, iii. 16, iv. 2, and 1 Cor. i. 10, apply to such a heterogeneous assembly: one beginning his spiritual alphabet with Z, and another with A?

“I acknowledge that the ministrations of the Spirit may be as varied as the physical appearance of man, but in the alphabetical truths of the way of access God has shown his infinite wisdom and condescension, in giving us monosyllables to learn: ‘one Lord, one faith, one baptism.’ Here is the foundation and real bond of spiritual unity.

“I shall in future be truly happy to meet with any two or three who may come together in the name of Jesus ‘according to the Scriptures,’ or to correspond with such in and around this neighbourhood.—I remain, yours affectionately in the Lord,

“ROBERT DILLON.”

LETTER SENT TO THE CHURCH MEETING IN PRINCES' STREET, BATH.

“Beloved in the Lord, — With many tears and with great exercise of soul; after mature deliberation and many years of experience; I am compelled to state, that I can no longer with the testimony of a good conscience, commune with you in the breaking of bread.

“The doctrine of believers' baptism is, and has for years past, been treated by you as a truth of minor importance, and kept in the back ground. It has thereby been disparaged in comparison with other truths only equally important; such as the breaking of bread. You have also by your collective endorsement in admitting the unbaptized to the Lord's table, deranged and inverted the order of the Spirit; and that without either inference or precept from the Word of God, or example in the Acts of the Apostles. Believers' baptism is not only taught in the plainest manner in the Scriptures, but is also as clearly proved in order by the Holy Spirit, as preceding the Lord's Supper; and it becomes us to ask, who are we that can thus change the ordinances from their original position as first delivered to the saints? Such a procedure must ultimately lower the tone of respect and reverence for that particular truth and portion of God's Word: and if we once admit, by the laxity of our church principles, that one truth is unimportant, we thereby lay the groundwork for Infidelity and sectarianism. The church is still 'the pillar and ground of the truth,' and not that which is to bear the records of a doctrine diametrically opposed to believers' baptism.

"By writing the foregoing, I do not wish to give to believers' baptism an undue prominence; neither do I make it in itself, the term of communion. The atoning blood of Jesus Christ, God's dear Son, is the only procuring cause of all our vast blessings; present, past, and future. Baptism takes the same place as repentance, faith, or consistency of walk, without either of which you would not receive a claim from any one to sit down at the Lord's table at the breaking of the bread. Therefore, in that case you would make communion to depend, not only on faith in the blood of the Lamb, but also on a consistency of walk. And quite right too. This is parallel to receiving only those at the Lord's table who have expressed their faith by baptism.

"I desire still to be one with you in those great truths, which I trust are still dear to us all; and I am truly sorry that I am thus compelled (even though in part) to leave those I sincerely respect and love. But Christ has a prior claim upon my affections, for, as you know, he died and gave himself for us. I trust nothing short of faith in Jesus would lead me to take such a step; but, like him, I can say, concerning the truth in question and its order, 'It is written.' Therefore, with all due deference to you, dearly beloved, I must say, 'let God be true and every man a liar.'

"Still hoping that grace and peace may be multiplied to you all, through an increased knowledge of God's mind in the word — farewell. — I remain, yours still very affectionately in Christ Jesus,

"ROBERT DILLON."

Having thus written, the good brother retired to meet with a few in his house—not because he does not feel the separation — not because he does not love the brethren, but because he loves Christ more. Surely epistles dictated by love, and written in tears, merit candid consideration. DAVID KING.

WHAT IS IT NOW?

"THERE was a movement throughout the country for the purpose of having the gospel preached to the masses. If these masses would not attend the ordinary places of worship, was the Church of England prepared to resist the movement, and leave these people to the Nonconformist clergy? Should this be done, the masses, when converted, would remain under the ministry of those who had been instrumental in effecting their conversion, and then the Church of England would become the religion of a sect."

Thus said the Earl of Shaftesbury, a few days back, in the House of Lords, when Peers, lay and spiritual, were discussing the recent appearance of clergy upon the boards of London theatres. There can no longer be any doubt, unless the Noble Earl is an exception, that Peers can sometimes talk nonsense, and that too, in the upper house. What can his Lordship mean when he says, that should the masses be brought to Christ by the Nonconformist "clergy," and remain under the ministry of those by whom they were converted, "the Church of England would become the religion of a sect?" What is religion? How can a church become a religion? Did our life depend upon it, we could not tell — nothing less than the whole bench of Bishops could throw light on the Noble Earl's tribute to the Parliamentary church. As we cannot interpret the words used, we must guess the speaker's intention. We shall suppose the words religion of to have fallen in unnoticed, and then a plain statement is in print. "The Church of England (under the circumstances) would become a sect." Certainly this is not over modest—from the Bishop of Exeter we might have expected something of the sort, but from the evangelical Shaftesbury, who could have looked for it! The truth is, this State-Church is, as it ever was, overbearing, presuming, and insolent to the highest degree. Why did the Earl designate this sect "the Church of England," when he knew that the majority of the people of this realm do not belong to it? Call it the State Church, or the Parliamentary Church, but not the Church of England, for that it has ceased to be (if ever it was)—call it not a Christian Church, for that it never was, and never can become. We have no particular liking for the "Great Denominations" of this country, but why the Episcopal Denomination should term itself the Church, and all other denominations sects, does not appear—unless, indeed, it be upon the principle of mutual accommodation. Nonconformists seek to have a Peer for Chairman on great occasions, when money is wanted. Then, again, Nonconformist respectability is considerably increased when a real clergyman consents to act with them in special services, and condescends to designate the pastor of Mount Zion, his fellow-laborer in the Gospel—after which, said pastor, somehow, looks and feels quite clerical, and many of his people love to have it so. But the price must be paid—patrons must be allowed the airs of patrons, and they will not forget to put them on. Still, it matters but little—the Parliamentary sect and its half-and-half neighbours, have all notice to clear the stage—changes will come because they must, and men in the spirit and power of the primitive church, will take the position they now occupy.

D. K.

"THE CHURCH OF THE ATONEMENT."

BIRMINGHAM has not only a church the head of which is the Redeemer, and a church the head of which is the Queen, but also another notable church designated "The Church of the Saviour"—its head and founder George Dawson. These with numerous Baptist, Wesleyan, Independent, and other churches, might, we think, have sufficed for one town. Not so, however, for Dr. Brindley has determined to have a church of his own, and to call his church, "The Church of the Atonement." The Doctor has recently given up school-keeping, (which has not kept him free from County-courts) and taken to church-building work. After vain endeavors to induce Churchmen to help him to ordination, and thus convert the layman into a real clergyman, that he might work in "the regular way"—he gives them one chance more. "Now or never," in effect, are his words. Make a priest of me—put me into office, and secure me remuneration, or I will have a church of my own, and will name my church, The Church of the Atonement.

Of course Dr. Brindley does not put it quite so plainly as we have done. As he may object to our mode of stating it, his own words shall tell the tale.

"DR. BRINDLEY'S NEW CHURCH FOR BIRMINGHAM."

"In a few weeks time, it will be three years since Dr. Brindley commenced his opposition to Mormonism in Birmingham—with what result is known to every one. For many years Birmingham had been the stronghold of Mormonism—its executive, its staff, its chapels, its Sunday schools, its wide-spread propagandism—where are they now? That it has pleased God to bless Dr. Brindley's exposure of the Mormon fraud; as in former years was blessed his controversy with Mr. Robert Owen and the emissaries of Socialism, few, probably, are ready to deny.

"But his recent conflict with Mormon error has produced results of a positive and more permanent character—as gratifying as they were wholly unlooked for. Great numbers who listened to him became convinced, not merely of the falsehood of Mormonism, but at the same time of the truth of Christianity. Hundreds, who at first were attracted by curiosity only, have continued constantly to attend upon his exposition of God's Word, and very many to their souls' health. Finding this to be the case, Dr. Brindley has from time to time consulted with clergymen and other Christian friends in and out of Birmingham, as to the course he should adopt. Without a single exception their expression of opinion has been 'you must not give them up,' 'on no consideration give them up.' But not one could or would suggest a practical and consistent means by which, as a member of the Church of England, Dr. Brindley could continue his unusual and very anomalous work—unusual and anomalous simply because the Church of England of our day does not permit what the Church of England of former days, and what the church of Christ in the Apostles' days both permitted and encouraged—namely, lay preaching, and lay ministration generally. The churches of John Wesley, the Independents, the Baptists, have all made use of lay agency, and most effectively too. They make the lay preacher the pioneer and founder of additional churches, and when the foundation is laid, step in and confirm the work, as did the Apostles of old, at Antioch, and other places where, under the persecution that arose about Stephen, all the disciples were scattered abroad, and went everywhere preaching the Word.

"Dr. Brindley has thus been rather hardly dealt by. For, while they have with one consent approved his work, not one has offered to assist him in clearing away the difficulties that made that work irregular. As Dr. Miller truly stated to Dr. Brindley, had he, Dr. Brindley, 'belonged to the Church of Rome, instead of the Church of England, a week would not have elapsed but they would have found occupation for him,' and in a regular way too.

"What, then, is Dr. Brindley to do? Give up his present work he cannot, he dare not. To continue any longer mere special services, unconnected with, and unacknowledged by any of the accredited branches of the church of Christ, is what he is most unwilling to do, especially now that he has laid aside occupations that have been his source of maintenance for more than a quarter of a century, in order that he may devote himself wholly to the work which he sincerely believes God has given him to do.

"Left to himself, and to God's direction, he has determined after much long, and anxious, and prayerful consideration, to form his present congregation into a church, and now seeks help from those who wish him 'good luck in the name of the Lord,' to assist him in building a suitable edifice in a populous but neglected district, that shall accommodate one thousand persons, four hundred of the sittings to be free. If the authorities of the Church of England will assist him in this matter, and enable him to connect it with that Church, to which, from infancy, he has belonged, and to which he is still attached, most gladly and gratefully will he accept their assistance. If not he will give to his church the name of 'The Church of the Atonement,' to distinguish it from the various forms of Socinianism that have for many years prevailed more largely in Birmingham than in any other provincial town in England.

In aid of his Church Building Fund a Bazaar will be held during Whitsun week, and several members of his congregation will be appointed to take charge of collecting cards."

"On Thursday evening, an important meeting will be held at the Thorp-street room, consisting of those only who shall have previously given in their names and addresses as being attendants upon Dr.

Brindley's services. At that meeting Dr Brindley will acquaint them with the site of the intended new CHURCH OF THE ATONEMENT; he will confer with those present upon permanent church arrangements; and the working means by which the whole can be promptly carried out.

"The outline of the plan is to erect a church, where it is by common consent much needed, that will seat a thousand persons: from 300 to 400 of the sittings to be free. Also Day and Sunday Schools, for sound useful instruction of 400 children, male and female; the meeting will be held at eight o'clock, commencing with a prayer.

A BAZAAR IN AID OF THE ABOVE OBJECT will be held in Witsun week. Two excursions are also in course of arrangement for the first Monday in July, and the first Monday in September; the profits to be devoted to the Building Fund.

"The Lecture on Tuesday evening, the 14th, will begin punctually at eight o'clock, and close at a quarter past nine, to allow time for conversation upon the above named matters."

Now about this there is very much of what some uncereemonious people call cant. We are asked to believe that the proposed church is to be formed, because "no one could suggest a practical means by which Dr. B. as a member of the Church of England, could continue his work." What was that work? Preaching in the open air to people who are of no church — getting them to rooms for further instruction, and, when considered to possess fitness, taking them to receive the sacrament from the minister of the district. Such preaching and teaching Dr. B. declares is consistent with Church of England polity. Now, where was the difficulty? Why could he not continue this work? The truth is, the Doctor wanted—not to continue, but ordination — priestly place and position.

Then, again, the ill-used New Testament is brought in. The Apostles made lay preachers founders of additional churches, and when the foundation was laid stepped in and confirmed the work — or, in other words, made the lay preacher a clergyman, gave him power to administer the sacraments, and the right to live of the Gospel. Do, Dr. B. learn the A B C of Christ's ministry before you attempt to teach! What knew the Apostles of converting laymen into clergymen -- of ordaining men to preach and administer the sacraments? Nothing!

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM AND LEICESTER.

Since my last communication, additions, by immersion and otherwise, have been made both to the church in Bond-street and that in Cherry-street. Little has been done at the last-named place beyond the ordinary meetings for members, and the proclamation of the Gospel on Lord's-day evening, owing to the consideration that the term for which the room is held expires on the 25th of this month, and a suitable place for the operations of the church has not yet been found. Somewhere we shall have to go in a few days, and then something like a new public effort must be made. If able to obtain an acceptable place, there is no room to doubt much larger success than anything we have yet recorded, but much, very much, depends upon the place of meeting.

According to announcement, copied into the last British Millennial Harbinger, the few brethren, who have met in a private house in Leicester for some time, and broken the loaf every first day, met in the Lecture-room of the Temperance Hall, on Lord's-day morning, Feb. 26th. A few lookers on were present. In the evening, in the large hall, I discoursed on the things of the kingdom to a company, estimated at from 800 to 1000 persons. The circumstances, however, were not favourable—a clergyman whose church "had been under repair" had occupied the hall for some weeks before, and had, when we engaged it, notified his intention to return to the repaired building on the day in question, which induced the proprietors to let the hall to us. When our bills were out, a change of mind was notified by the "Rev." Gentleman, and he would not go back to his "church"—he must have the hall. We could not give way, and as we had, both legally and morally, the right of possession, he announced his service for five o'clock. My discourse was advertised to commence at half-past six, and, of course, the hall should have been cleared, and the doors open for our company at the latest by six. But at 6:15, this good clergyman and his flock, holding possession of the place for which he knew we had paid, were sounding forth the organ and their voices to the praise and glory of God.

True, they had just before publicly confessed themselves "most miserable sinners," and therefore we were not entitled to expect much better treatment, but that did not at all lessen the inconvenience. When they would have made their way out it was wet — the stairs were blocked, and those who came, expecting to find ready entrance, found confusion, the meaning of which could not be readily learned. Then, from the conduct of part of the audience, which, some while after the time I had commenced to address, it was inferred that some of the former congregation had turned back for shelter, or from curiosity. Many, however, gave most marked attention, though much disturbed by others.

On Monday and Wednesday evenings, both in this and the following week, I had in the small hall both attentive and enquiring congregations. On Lord's day, March 4, I addressed nearly the same number in the large hall — with considerable improvement in regard to attention and order. Two persons, formerly in church fellowship, (one of them had been in the world again for 20 years) applied for membership with our little band, and there were several promising enquirers. At Loughborough, on the Tuesday evening in each week, I addressed good congregations. Lord's-day, March 11, Bro. Mumby of Nottingham, delivered highly acceptable addresses in the morning to the brethren and a few strangers, and in the evening to a most attentive audience.

Lord's-day, March 18, Bro. Chew discoursed on "Bible Trials and Bible Triumphs," in the large hall. A letter just received from Leicester will indicate further particulars—

"Dear Brother King. * * * The people are applying for tracts, especially those of your's—the Gospel of the Grace of God—bring a quantity. We are delighted to hear that you will be with us next Lord's-day. We met Bro. Chew on Saturday in Leicester; he was in high spirits and so continues. At our meeting on Lord's-day morning we had about thirty strangers—in the afternoon he addressed about 1000 in the Haymarket, and at night about 900 in the large hall. After the discourse he was surrounded by old friends and smiling faces. There were many enquirers, some requested our address and promised to call — Baptist friends signified their intention of uniting with us—a worldly man said he intended to be saved—a Primitive Methodist expressed his willingness to obey the Lord in baptism. This evening (Monday) Bro. C. has spoken again in the Haymarket, to about two hundred, and after that, delivered a lecture in the small hall—it was a good meeting, and questions were presented.

"Sister —'s mother has expressed her desire to obey the Lord. When you come bring copies of your debate with Holyoake, some persons want it. I must add a few words—nearly all the people I have conversed with ascribe their first convictions to your lectures, so you could not revisit us at a more favourable time. I hear from all parts great approval, and I expect great good from your next visit. Leicester must not now be neglected—the results of your labour here depend upon the present—enquiry is finding its way into congregations and families, and if now allowed to die away, the opportunity will be lost. Bro. Chew, too, must visit us again. * * * May the Lord bless us all.—Yours in Christian love,
T. LEAVESLEY."

May the Lord raise up labourers, so that Leicester, and many other Leicesters, which only await a fair and faithful presentation of primitive truths, may hear, believe, and obey. D. KING.

Birmingham, March 21, 1860.

BATHGATE.

The Morisonian minister here having become an Open-communion Baptist, he preached his farewell sermon on the 12th of February. The meeting-house was crowded on the occasion. He read Mark xvi. and on arriving at the 16th, 17th, and 18th verses, he observed that Tichindorf says that these verses are not in some of the best Greek manuscripts, and that therefore these verses were of doubtful character. This should be compared with the Notes of Dr. G. Campbell on Mark xvi. I have looked into the Common Greek Testament, and also into the Critical Greek Testament, but I find no remarks as to their being of doubtful character.

R. MILLAR.

GLASGOW.

THE practical and awakening influence of the revival movement has extended itself to the several Baptist congregations in Glasgow and neighbourhood, in a most sensible and manifest degree. This is accounted for only on one reason, that ministers and people in that body have contributed to aid the cause, and lend their ready service to minister to the relief of those who became alarmed at their state, and desirous to be delivered from it. The four leading congregations of Baptists in Glasgow, namely, North Frederick-street, Mr. Williams; Hope-street, Dr. Paterson; North John street, Messrs. Watson and Shearer; and Blackfriars-street, Mr. Johnstone, have had added to their number by baptism, during the last year—79, 35, 30, and 44 respectively; while during the same period at Dumclair, near Airdrie, Mr. Abercrombie, 102; Airdrie, Mr. Dun, 68; Paisley, Messrs. Macalpin and Smith, 30; and at Helensburgh, Mr. Dickie, 29—making in all nearly 400 persons; and it is worthy of notice, in one of the four congregations in Glasgow, there are two of the number not more than eleven years of age each—two interesting and intelligent little misses. It is well known that Baptist congregations' practice immersion in water as the mode of baptismal rite, and that to all introduced to their fellowship, this is recommended and enforced. There are about twenty congregations who adhere to this practice in Glasgow, and however much they differ in other acts of obedience, they all concur in this one baptism by immersion. In the year 1765, the first known Baptist trode the streets of Glasgow, in the person of Archibald M'Lean. He was born at East Kilbridge, on May 1st, 1733—educated partly at Cathcart parish school, and partly at Glasgow academies. In 1763, he became a Baptist in principle, and two years after, one in practice, and the first person baptized by him in the Clyde, opposite to Herd's House, in 1769, was Mary Munro, wife of Neil Stuart, both residents in Glasgow. Mr. M'Lean was not only the first Baptist in Glasgow, but the first in Scotland, as the person who baptized him, Robert Carmichael, required to sail from Leith to London to be baptized, which service was performed by Dr. Gill there, on October 9th, 1765. This year, 1860, must necessarily form a noted epoch in the spread of Baptist principles, and if the increase be at all in the same proportion in time to come, the begun revival will long be continued, yea prolonged, indefinitely. At Dumclair, near Airdrie, where such remarkable "stirring of dead men's bones" has moved the surrounding villages, the work has been begun and carried on almost by one man — Mr. C. Abercrombie, the village teacher. Mr. Abercrombie had his attention drawn to adult baptism by a brief course of lectures given at Airdrie, by Francis Johnstone of Blackfriar's-street congregation here, in 1842, and since that time, till the present, Mr. Abercrombie has not labored in vain; and now he has the satisfaction and delight to witness the community become changed—even externally in their daily habits; men, women, and children changed—and all things made new, and the people now work willingly in those things for which formerly they cared not. Few things more openly betray the workings of a corrupt and carnal mind than envy at another's success. Many strive to be pre-eminent, and to outreach their neighbour from no other cause: and to transfer that feeling and that working to the matters of the kingdom of God is "spiritual wickedness in high places." "Whatever is not of God will come to naught," is a truism that will ever stand. The words are faithful and true—they are tried words—they are unchangeable words, and they will ever be maintained. God the Lord sitteth as a refiner of silver to purify the sons of Levi—that they may offer an offering in righteousness—"Our God is a consuming fire," and whatsoever will not stand the fire, the consuming fire, shall be burned up, root and branch; and seeing this is, and ever will be, the cause with all that pertains to godliness, be that godliness true or false, every one should study for himself that which is gold, silver, precious stones, and learn to avoid the wood, hay, and stubble, for the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

J. B.

MARLBPOOL.

Since last month's notice we have had the pleasure of baptizing three males and two females, upon a confession of faith, who are now added to the church.

MARYPORT.

As a church of Jesus, the Christ, we have again great pleasure in informing our dear brethren, that three young men have been added to our number in the appointed way. We earnestly pray that they may walk to the end of life even as Christ walked.

JOHN FERGUSON.

SWANSEA.

Since our last communication, two believers have been immersed by Bro. Evans, in Bethesda chapel. We have also received into our little community an intelligent brother from the Baptists. May these gracious indications of Immanuel's pleasure be only as the few drops of rain before a copious shower.

D. HOPKINS.

MELBOURNE, VICTORIA.

I received your note, and Bro. Kinder got your mourning card. We join in sympathy with you. If God our Father had not taught us, that "all things work together for good to them that love" Him, we might sometimes doubt. But so He says.

On Lord's day, the 8th of January, a young female made the good confession, and was born of water.

Bro. Kemp has been long and severely afflicted, and his medical adviser fears that there is pressure of some kind on the brain. He is deaf and nearly blind, palsied and severely pained, yet he rejoices in the God of salvation. He is a bright example of the sustaining power of Christianity, rejoicing greatly in hope of seeing the Lord, and enjoying the exceeding eternal weight of glory. His relatives in Old England will feel interested to know these circumstances.

R. SERVICE.

Melbourne, January 17, 1860.

NEWTOWN, SYDNEY.

Since my last, per December mail, we have had six additions, three males and three females, who were all immersed on New Year's Day. I trust they may, with all who love the Lord, adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things.

We have taken a more commodious and central place for our meetings in Sydney, in which the churches of Sydney and Newtown broke bread together on New Year's Day, the occasion of opening our new room. It was a goodly meeting, and we felt it to be a promising commencement for the new year.

THOMAS GOODIN.

January 14th, 1860.

OBITUARIES.

We have to record the decease of three sisters, members of the church in Barker Gate, Nottingham. — MARY GUNN was baptized and added to the church October 3, 1837, and died October 3, 1859. She was quite blind, and through bodily weakness had been confined to her home for several years. — ELIZABETH ALLEN joined the church in July, 1853, and died on the 31st of January last. — FRANCES BEASTALL was added to the church in June, 1848, and died on the 1st of February last. — These several sisters died in the faith and hope of the Gospel, each desiring to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. J. W.

We have neglected to report the decease of our Sister NEWELL, on the 8th of August last; also, Sister GLOVER, on the 2nd October; and Brother JARMIE, on the 13th of February: members of the church meeting in Camden Hall, London. We rejoice in the assurance that they sleep in Jesus; that they were of those who are "looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life." W. D. HARRIS.

Our highly-esteemed and venerable brother, GEORGE BARR, fell asleep in Jesus on Monday, February 9th, in the 82nd year of his age. For many years he was connected with the Baptist congregation at Tottle-bank, by whom he was much respected. His acquaintance with the Scriptures gave him courage to oppose whatever he saw to be contrary to the spirit of truth. Being desirous to have New Testament Christianity established in his own neighborhood, (Kirby) he, with others who had obtained like precious faith with himself, formed a church of disciples, over which he faithfully acted as overseer, withal laboring with his own hands for the support of himself and household. In the decline of life, the New Testament (New Version) was his constant companion, from which he drew consolation and life. Bro. Barr not only contended for the faith of the Gospel, but he lived a life of faith in the Son of God, who loved him, and gave himself for him. For nearly half a century did he earnestly seek for that wisdom which cometh from above. He finished his course with joy, rejoicing in the hope of a resurrection unto eternal life. G. SINCLAIR.

It is deeply affecting to me to have to convey to you tidings so mournfully interesting, as doubtless they will be to you, and to those of your readers who knew the subject of these remarks — and in proportion to their knowledge will most assuredly be their sympathy and regret. Our beloved and loving brother, G. KEMP, is no more; his voice to warn and encourage, is heard no more amongst us. On Wednesday, March 7, his remains were deposited in Abney Park Cemetery, to await the call of Him he loved, and who is the resurrection and the life. The feelings excited by his loss, whether regarded in their bearing on the church or on the world, the ties of friendship have been too painfully sundered — to say nothing of family bereavement — to admit of any notice in detail, so soon after the event. And the occurrence is the more lamentable, as the result of a "mind diseased." Who, or what, can minister to such? Happy was it for our departed brother, that the consolations and duties of religion were his experience and delight, during the manhood of his brief existence, and that he was no stranger to the Great Physician, whose "Balm of mercy soothes the soul, Heals the disease, and makes it whole."

It may be said emphatically of our departed brother, that he was "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;" and this feature of character was alluded to by Pastor Harris, who, by the grave side, improved the occasion, by reading a portion of the 7th chapter of Job, and by a few brief remarks, which the lateness of the hour and the extreme coldness of the day rendered it necessary to make thus short. On Lord's day evening, the 11th, Brother Inwards further improved the event in a discourse on "Death, the Resurrection, and the Life," as well as by a supplementary address on the Second Coming of the Lord — a favorite subject with our departed brother, who had prepared notes for a discourse thereon, to have been delivered to the brethren and friends at Chelsea, on the evening of the 4th, but which were employed by Bro. I. to improve the death of him who had prepared them! Camden-hall was crowded, and Bro. I. delivered a most impressive discourse, which, we trust, may lead some who heard it to die to sin, be buried with Christ in baptism, and arise to newness of life, that, with our departed brother, they may look for Him at his coming, when He shall "appear the second time, without a sin-offering unto salvation."

[We deeply sympathise with our Sister Kemp in this bereavement; but she well knows Him who is "the Father of the fatherless, and the Husband of the widow" in his holy habitation. To Him we commend her, in all confidence and hope.—J. W.]

We have to record the departure of a brother for the "better land"—the first that has taken place since the establishment of the church in Prahran, Victoria. Our beloved brother, JOHN SUTHERLAND FORSYTHE, died of consumption, on the 17th of October, 1859, at the house of Brother and Sister Proctor, whom he regarded through a protracted illness of many months, as almost second parents. His own mother and father reside in his native town, Duffies-by-Elgin, Scotland.

The disease in our brother's case was hereditary, he being the fourth or fifth son of the same family to whom it has proved fatal. An early death, therefore, came to him, not—unexpectedly; and as he had (through the instrumentality of the brethren here) heard the the gospel messages, and accepted the offers of mercy on the part of a gracious God, it found him not unprepared. At his earnest request he was immersed at his bedside, after being confined to it for nearly three weeks. He once broke bread with the church after being "buried with Christ by baptism."

The brotherly affection he ever manifested towards the many friends who visited him during his long illness, endeared him to us all. His gratitude for the slightest kindness shewn him, was particularly experienced by our pastor Kidner, under whose charge (with homeopathic treatment) he was from first to last. His patient and unrepining spirit was clearly manifested throughout; his only desire seemed to be, that he might hold closer and sweeter communion with his God, and be daily more grateful for the "peace that passeth all understanding," which he had found by relying for justification on the merits of a crucified Redeemer. Towards his end, he repeatedly said that he entertained no fear of death, and that the valley he was entering did not seem so dark to him, because of the "glorious brightness" which he saw beyond it—the "Sun of Righteousness." For the last week (during which he took no food) his sufferings must have been intense, if, indeed, he was not unconscious of pain as he was of all else about him. As we stood around his bed, listening with painful interest to his sighs, and watching the convulsive movements of his body—the last struggles of a strong constitution wrestling with death—when the last sigh escaped his lips, and the final struggle shook his frame, our eyes were dimmed with tears, betraying as much our thankfulness to God for releasing him from further pain, as our regret at losing, for a time, so affectionate, humble, and sincere a Christian brother.

At nine o'clock on Wednesday morning we followed his mortal remains to the St. Kilder Cemetery, where we deposited them, in the "sure and certain hope of his resurrection to life eternal," to be spent with the Saviour in whom he had trusted, and we hope, with the friends whom on earth he loved, and by whom he was loved. At the grave, Pastor Picton read 1 Corinthians xv. whilst Pastor Kidner and Bro. Coles improved the occasion by delivering two impressive addresses to those assembled round.

Of the brethren our brother could say, ere he departed, "It was good for me to have been with them;" and of him each could earnestly pray, "let me die the death of the righteous, and (as regards the prospect of eternity) may my last end be like his."

The church is progressing very favourably, and the truth is making its way, approving itself to many as it is explained to them. We number upwards of fifty, who, with few exceptions, are resident members, and in actual church fellowship.—JAMES W. WEBB.

JUNE, 1860.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL: SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND CHARACTER.

It is now universally conceded that Mr. A. Campbell is no ordinary man; and numerous persons belonging to the different religious parties have expressed themselves astonished that we are unwilling to be called by his name, averring, if they believed as Mr. Campbell believes, they would take a pride and pleasure in being so designated.

We are not willing, however, to be so termed, because the name does not truly belong to us. Mr. Campbell is not the author of our religion. Though we should believe in the main what Mr. C. believes, we do not so believe because his belief is the same, but because the Bible so teaches. True, we have learned much from Mr. C.; this we frankly admit. So the ancient Christians learned much from Paul, and Peter, and Apollos; and because they did so, some of the church in Corinth called themselves Paulites, some Cephasites, and others Apollosites. But Paul reprimanded them severely, yet affectionately, for their stupid, sectarian, unchristian conduct. "Who is Paul, or Cephas, or Apollos, but ministers by whom you believed? Was Paul crucified for you, or were you baptized into his name"—that you should be called Paulites?

Mr. Campbell has taught truths which, until evolved by him, lay concealed and covered up amongst the rubbish of Babylon. Since he has presented them unmixed by human traditions, we are able for ourselves to see they are taught, fully taught, in the Word of God. Hence, we receive and hold them as the teachings of God. Mr. C. is the honored instrument in God's hand to lead us back to the old paths—to primitive Christianity. As such we honor him, and bless God for the gift. One of Mr. Campbell's mottoes has ever been, "You have all one Father, God; and one Master, Jesus." We are all brethren—Mr. C. among the rest. He aspires not to head a party. Too sincerely does he love and reverence his divine Lord and Master, to have any such grovelling ambition.

Based on the rock-foundation of the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible, we, in our congregational capacity, recognize the name, church of God, or church of Christ. As individuals, we acknowledge the names, all the names, and only the names of the followers of Christ primitively acknowledged, and by which they were addressed by the heavenly inspired Apostles of Jesus Christ. The name, the patronymic name, by which they ultimately became universally known and designated, was the name Christian. This name was first given them in Antioch. When Paul pleaded his cause before Agrippa, with such point, and power, and eloquence, the monarch cried out, "Paul, almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian!" Peter says, "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed." This is the name under which all the ancient martyrs suffered. The ten Pagan persecutions were begun and carried on to their bloody termination against the followers of Christ, under the name Christian. They were hunted after and put to death in every way that hatred and cruelty could invent, as Christians, and because they acknowledged themselves such, and would not deny the name. This name was often written upon the instrument of their torture and death. Some were thrown to wild beasts because they were Christians. Jesus said to the church at Pergamos, "Thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith;" and to the church in Philadelphia, "Thou hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."

Had the ancient Christians only adopted the modern policy of calling themselves by some other name, they would most effectually have escaped the persecuting rage of their wicked enemies. But they would not prove recreant to the cause of Christ: they would not deny their divine Master by taking some other name. Rather than thus apostatize from the cause of Christ, they would pine in loathsome dungeons, or hug the martyr's stake, and through fire pass to the crown immortal.

If true to our principles, we will do as did our brethren anciently, even if we should be called to suffer as they suffered. "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this account." Our opponents may call us by a human name—thus reproaching us, and blaspheming that worthy name (Christian) by which we are called. On their part Jesus may be evil spoken of, but let us so live that on our part he will be glorified. Christ has been crucified for us; we have been baptized into his name, and should, therefore, wear it to the exclusion of all others—that of his Harbinger, or any of his servants, either inspired or uninspired.

A lady has been lawfully married to a Mr. Brown. This all her acquaintances know and acknowledge. Yet when speaking of her among themselves and to others, they uniformly call her Mrs. Smith. When speaking to her they address her as Mrs. Smith. She reminds them she has been married, not to Mr. Smith, but to Mr. Brown; that, consequently, she has taken his name, and that she wishes them not to reproach her husband and insult her further by calling her Mrs. Smith. They tell her they know she is a great friend of Mr. Smith, and that Mr. Smith is a friend and admirer of her husband, Mr. Brown. This she admits, but insists that all this does not constitute a reason, nor the shadow of a reason, why she should be called Mrs. Smith. "True, Mr. Smith is a friend of my husband; as such I respect him. He is a great and good man; as such I admire him. Mr. Brown I reverence and love, as my husband; Mr. Smith I respect as a friend, both of my husband and myself. But he is not my husband. I have not been married to him, and consequently do not wear his name, nor do I desire to do so. I trust, therefore, you will no longer degrade my husband and insult me by calling me Mrs. Smith." What would all persons of a just sense of propriety think of those men, should they still persist in calling Mrs. Brown Mrs. Smith? Now, just what you would think of them, we think of those who, knowing our position, still persist in calling us by the name of an eminent brother—thus blaspheming that worthy name (Christian) by which we are called, reproaching our brother, and insulting us, his friends and brethren.

It has been tauntingly asserted that we are ashamed of Mr. C., and that this is the reason we are not willing to be called by his name.

Ashamed of Mr. Campbell? Who is Mr. Campbell? What is he? What has he ever done, or said, or written, that we should be ashamed of him!

Let us take a bird's-eye view of him, physically, intellectually, religiously; in his social walks, and in his public life, and then judge whether we have any cause to be ashamed of him.

Who is Mr. Campbell? An Irishman by birth—a Scotchman by education—an American by choice, by adoption, and by principle. Religiously, he was brought up a Presbyterian of the Psalm-singing school. But the five points of Calvinian Augustinism were too contracted for his expansive mind. His heart was too large to be contented with that horse-mill tread of just five steps around. When quite a young man, he threw off the trammels of that frigid theology, and with mind unfettered seized with avidity and ravished delight, the heart-thrilling and stupendous truths which lie far, far beyond the precincts of Calvinism. Soon his mind and soul became so imbued with the genial influence of Christianity, that he could remain no longer with the old party. He was too conscientious to shut his eyes against the light of God's truth, and too benevolent to withhold the light from others. Strong in faith, he threw himself upon the Bible and the God of the Bible, scarcely knowing whither they would lead him. Repudiating all human creeds and confessions of faith, he still walks in the steady and increasing light of God's truth, following whithersoever it leads him. Strong in the truth, he now stands in colossal greatness, unmoved alike by frowns and flatteries, coveting no honor save that which comes from God. He stands on the Word of God, hard by the floating banner of the cross, gemmed with Bethlehem's lone star. His name will live, and his memory will be cherished by untold millions, with gratitude to God, long centuries after the names of his time-serving opponents and traducers shall have rotted with their bodies and been forgotten.

Physically. Even now in his old age he is a man among men : full six feet high, and well proportioned ; has a large, well formed, and well filled head—with white locks, it is true—but they are venerable ; features and countenance that indicate a man, full grown, of fine appearance ; a large keen blue eye, that pierces as it gazes, though with benevolent look. A fine person, of dignified and commanding appearance.

Intellectually. Here he stands pre-eminent, head and shoulders above other men. Memory, judgment, reason, powers of illustration, language, wonderful ; enunciation distinct—voice manly—manner dignified and attractive. Light flashes upon all subjects which he touches, in the wide range of his discussions. He gives interest to the most common-place topics. He makes plain the most obscure and recondite subject. Mountains of difficulty, which other men would attempt to remove grain by grain, he seizes by the base and scatters into fragments by a single effort. His language is vigorous, well-chosen, plain. A child can understand him, and the giant in intellect feels he is listening to the great man. At times he is eloquent, transcendently eloquent, without an effort. His audience listen in breathless silence to his long discourses without weariness, and wonder if the speaker knows he is eloquent. In his lofty flights he carries his rapt auditors among revolving worlds, wheeling planets, suns and systems, throwing his measuring-line around them as they roll ; calculating their respective distances and revolutions ; showing the order and harmony of the vast parts of the mighty whole of the wonderful machinery and stupendous works of the Grand Architect and Glorious Ruler of the physical empire of the universe ; deducting thence the omnipotence, the infinite wisdom and goodness of God, showing how the heavens declare the glory of God, and the manner in which the starry firmament proclaims his eternal power and Godhead. The first his hearers know of themselves after one of these aerial excursions, is, that they are on the earth again, with wings of fancy spread ready for another flight. But his is not a tinsel eloquence—the eloquence of mere words and a meaningless mingling of rhetorical flowers and flourishes ; but the eloquence of thought—profound, majestic thought—of grand and stupendous ideas. His discourses are characterized by strong, lucid argument, rich flowers of rhetoric, and graphic delineation. He impresses his auditors with his sincerity and piety, and a profound knowledge of his subject.

The social circle. Here Mr. Campbell excels even himself. His powers of conversation are extraordinary. Crowds flock to hear him talk, and they do hear him, for he is nearly always talking. He talks well upon any subject. He has a pleasant smile and a kind word for every one, even the humblest. He loves to be talked to, and is always ready to answer questions. In his society you feel that you are in the presence of a great and good man. Children love him, are delighted to hear him talk, and they can generally understand him.

His private character stands unimpeached and unimpeachable. Closely has he been watched, but no man has found aught to say against him here. He is without reproach.

Mr. Campbell at home. Here he is duly appreciated. He is loved and revered by all. On his return from a tour or even an excursion, wife, children, and domestics all gather around him with smiles of greeting. Each night and morning they meet around the family altar. Here in the seclusion of home, in the bosom of his happy family, shut in from the noise and bustle of the busy world, the patriarch's devotions are unrestrained. He pours out his whole soul in the most devoted thanksgiving, prayer, and praise to the Giver of all good. Here swells the holy hymn, and the wing of devotion poises itself for heaven.

His public life. As a preacher and writer Mr. C. has now been before the public more than forty years; and he has written and published more than that number of volumes. There is scarcely a subject in the wide range of theology or science on which he has not spoken, and spoken to purpose. He has not been a man of one idea. His aim from the first was to restore, not ancient, but primitive Christianity in theory and practice.

The great epochs in the history of the world, when it is labouring under some intolerable burden, or heaving with some new and urgent mission, just ripe for development, find for themselves the men equal to their wants. Unwonted results are always exhibited at such times; powers which had never before revealed their existence are drawn forth, and latent attributes of character start into sudden energy at the bidding of extraordinary emergencies. Individuals, in spite of themselves, are then elevated to celebrity; or the necessities of the times appeals to some mind so resistlessly, that although uninvited, yet secretly conscious of resolution and energy equal to the crisis, the man feels himself compelled to step forth at once into publicity. Mr. C. appeared on the arena at a time when the public mind was agitated by conflicting emotions; when gross formality in religion prevailed side by side with the wildest enthusiasm; when public feeling hung poised, tremulous, excitable, ready to be seized by fierce passion, or to be roused to a more living piety; when the prevailing systems of religion had lost their hold on the human mind, and had become well nigh petrified; when the great American heart was heaving with deep emotion, struggling for liberty from religious fetters, sighing for an increase of light upon the most momentous of all subjects; then it was a voice was heard like a trumpet peal breaking from the hill country of Western Virginia, calling the church from the wilderness state back to apostolic ground. It was an epoch in American religious history. A man was needed who would tread in the steps of the great reformers. When we contemplate the character of Mr. C. in its relative bearings, we cannot fail to discern its fitness for the work he had to accomplish. A reformer was needed; the times required him. Necessity called for him, and Mr. C. came at the bidding. He was every way qualified to be the epoch man. The times required a man of strong, vigorous constitution, educated, bold, conscientious, of strong intellect, ready, willing to risk all for God and the cause of truth.

To some Mr. Campbell's character appears angular and sharp: let it appear so; he has had to rub against sharp points. We would expect his blows would be hard, for he had to strike upon stubborn opposition. Your finical men can do but little in piercing the thick-skinned indifference and selfishness of the world. The Reformer must press his point strongly to arouse attention. It will not do to whine, or plead, or go mincingly. Every sentence must be a volley, and every word a shot. He must not dally with things, but be radical in his work. He must lay the axe at the root of the tree of corruption and error. He must not temporize. His speech must not be vague and general. He must speak to the point, and his words must be fire and hammer. He must strike off every factitious chain, and probe every form of corruption to the bone.

As a writer, Mr. Campbell is unequalled ; point, force, perspicuity, aptness of illustration, loftiness of thought, and simplicity of language, characterize his voluminous writings. They are profound, but clear ; lofty, but lucid. They shew extensive reading, but original thinking, and deep reflection. Unlike the productions of most other men, the writings of Mr. C. may be read with pleasure and profit more than once. The depths of his mighty intellect are too profound to be fathomed by once casting the line of thought into its vast fountains. His productions require to be studied and reflected upon.

His works will live for ages, and tell powerfully on generations yet unborn. He is even now impressing his great intellect on thousands of minds unconscious of the fact, and turning the current of their thoughts into the same channel with his own. Indeed he has already greatly impressed his own mind on the present generation, both in America and on the other side the waters. He is emphatically an epoch man. His writings are even now sought with diligence and studied with avidity by all classes of men. Admirers of the true, the beautiful, and the good, love to drink of the pellucid waters that well up from the deep, pure fountain of his great heart, sparkling with brilliants. I envy not the man who does not feel, whilst reading his works, that he is communing with a great mind. His era will be a turning point in history, on which will hinge, in some degree, the success of God's cause on this great continent.

The force of character and integrity of purpose. His exposure of the errors and prevailing vices of the times, and especially his well-timed attack upon the clergy, aroused the wrath of the priesthood generally. His appeal from human traditions and long cherished superstitions to the Word of God—his reproofs, sometimes severe as they were notoriously well deserved, rendered him obnoxious to all the sects. They hated his teaching, were provoked by his calm and patient spirit, were jealous of his growing influence, and read in his monthly publications their own merited condemnation. He was assaulted on every side. He stood unmoved and unaffected even by the envenomed darts of calumny, or the bitter aspersions of his enemies. Amidst the gathering storm and the prevailing excitement, he was firm, immovable as a rock. Priestly intolerance met in him a force of will not to be overborne ; not to be conquered by frowns and abuse. It is a tremendous power within a man which can brave the fiercest assaults of intolerance ; a power which must have sent its roots deep into the soil, and must have taken hold of his entire nature. The force of character is immense which, when hostility is gathering, and deepening, and widening, preserves a man undaunted, prepared for the assault, determined not to cower.

Mr. Campbell is an original thinker. His language is peculiar to himself. He thinks in lofty, vigorous language, but makes himself understood by the commonest intellect from the use of familiar, striking, apposite illustrations. So that he adapts himself to all classes.

Mr. Campbell has another peculiarity.

He does not exhaust his subject. He provides food for thought, and leaves much to be evolved by his readers or hearers. This peculiarity tells powerfully in his debates. On each recurrence to his positions and proof-texts, he brings out some additional argument for the truth, or sheds additional light on the subject in debate. His peculiar tone, emphasis, and intonations aid him here, and contribute greatly to impress his ideas upon his hearers.

Mr. Campbell's mind is, perhaps, better adapted to generalization than to analysis; not that he is incapable of the latter. When he is disposed to analyze a subject, no one is more successful than he. In the laboratory of his mind a subject is soon reduced to its original elements. But this is not so much his work. His mission is to discover the mine and to dig up the ore. It is the work of others to assay it. Nor is he so successful a pleader of the gospel as many others. He forges the thunder-bolts. Others hurl them with good effect—sometimes red hot, hissing from the furnace.

Mr. Campbell as a controversialist. From his position as an epoch man, and his fearless, manly attacks on the prevailing errors and vices of the times, Mr. C. has necessarily been forced into many controversies, and with numerous opponents. Many positions taken by him in the Christian Baptist (the first periodical edited by him) were so entirely novel and startling to the self-styled orthodox, and, withal, so "absurd," at first sight, they thought them easily refuted. Confident of success, they entered at once upon the defence of their cherished and time-honoured dogmas, and the refutation of Mr. C.'s "new" and "absurd notions." But their defence proved their weakness, and their attack folly. The Dagon of their traditions and superstitions fell before Mr. C.'s batteries, and he carried the Ark of God's truth into the very temples of their cherished idols. One and then another of the outposts of their systems were abandoned, after a feeble defence, and even the citadels of their systems have been deserted—in numerous instances, without a figure. His opponents have been forced greatly to modify their former positions, and frequently to wholly abandon them. None of the religious systems, in the hands of their present advocates, are now what they were when first attacked by Mr. C. and his noble coadjutors. It is now generally admitted that in the main Mr. C. is right—but his opponents say he has changed; they seem not to know the change is in themselves!

A new era has been introduced; but so gradual has been the changes, so silent and imperceptible, that many are scarcely appreciable. All denominations are more or less under the leaven of Mr. C.'s influence. They have, perhaps, without knowing it, adopted his sentiments, his arguments, his very words and style, his illustrations, and at the same time decry the man, and oppose his doctrine! But in so doing they ignore his real sentiments, and direct their artillery against a man of straw, created by their own disordered and depraved fancy.

As a controversialist no man has been so universally successful and triumphant as Mr. Campbell. The reasons are: He has always battled for the Bible, and the God of the Bible. His great and deeply penetrating mind saw at a glance and scanned the subject in debate—he never entered the arena without having his armour on—he is self-possessed, always—his mind is active, ever on the alert—his resources inexhaustible—his powers of endurance unequalled, both physical and mental—he is master both of logic and rhetoric—his language unparalleled—his powers of illustration transcendent. To crown all, he has never debated for the mastery, but alone for the truth, the truth of God. Hence, in none of his debates has he ever resorted to a ruse or finesse.

to low trickery or to logical legerdmain. He is always open, fair, candid. He has always stated his own positions plainly, and defended them manfully. He never misrepresented the positions or arguments of his opponents, but met them fully in all their force. He speaks and writes as one who feels his accountability to God.

The first oral debate Mr. Campbell ever held was with a certain Mr. Walker on the subject and action of baptism. Mr. Walker! MR. WALKER! "I never heard of him before," says one. But you have heard of Mr. Campbell! "Yes, certainly!" Quite a contrast. Well, we will leave him where he was placed by his debate with Mr. C.—in oblivion. Mr. C.'s next opponent was Mr. Macalla, on the same subject. You ask, "What has become of him? Where is he?" Echo answers, Where? His friends, however, considered him a great man, a giant, till he got into the hands of Mr. C. After that he suddenly sunk beneath the horizon of public observation.

Next appeared Robert Owen, the great champion of Infidelity, sending alarm and terror into the camps of the clergy of Europe and America, whom he publicly challenged to single combat on the being of God and the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures. With horror and affright they were frozen into silence. Mr. Campbell accepted the Infidel's invitation, and met him in oral debate. Cincinnati was the battle-field. In the hands of Mr. C. truth, and the truth of God, triumphed. Infidelity hung its head abashed. Shorn of its strength and denuded, it now skulks along the dark places of earth, and wallows in the sewers of moral pollution. After this contest of days, Mr. C. kindled his camp fire on the battle-field, and during several subsequent days the friends of God and the Bible congratulated and rejoiced with him over the victory he had achieved for the truth. Where now is Mr. Owen? He is dead, twice dead. He and his Infidel system lie together in the same sepulchre—the tomb of oblivion. The papers say, however, that Mr. Owen, before his death, relinquished his hold of the ice-cold pillar of universal doubt on which he had so long leaned for support. The name of Owen is seldom heard now. Next upon the arena appeared Mr. Purcell, the Roman Bishop of Cincinnati and champion of Popery. He and Mr. C. met in a seven days' debate. In this discussion the high claims and pompous pretensions of Romanism to Christianity were fairly and fully tested, weighed in the balances, and found wanting. Mr. C. proved it to be, not Christianity, but the grand apostacy—the man of sin and son of perdition. Where now is Bishop Purcell, the champion of Popery? I know not—perhaps he is yet in the Queen City; but his light suddenly went out, and his name is seldom heard. Look at him, if you can find him by gas light; and, compared with Mr. C. what is he?

Last, but not least of Mr. C.'s opponents in oral debates, was Mr. N. L. Rice. (He is called Doctor since his debates.) He suddenly arose, vaporizing, in the prime of life, in the pride of full blown manhood. For seven years, his friends said, he had been preparing himself to debate with Mr. C.—For the period of eighteen days did the venerable reformer contend for the faith of God's elect, against the quibbling, reckless, boasting champion of human traditions. Mr. C. by that debate has been the means of converting hundreds, thousands, from human systems to primitive Christianity. Read the great debate, and then answer me. Do you see any reason why we should be ashamed of Mr. C.?

You ask, Where now is Mr. Rice? What has become of him? These are questions I cannot answer. The first I heard of him after his defeat, he was at "Brimstone Corner," Cincinnati. Thence he went to St. Louis—thence I know not where. Now, only contrast these opponents of Mr. O. with Mr. C. himself; their present position with his. Like the eagle, Mr. O. soars aloft in mid-heaven, the object of universal gaze and admiration. No man living is exerting so healthy, so deep, so widespread an influence as he; whilst his opponents have sunk, or are fast sinking into obscurity. Compare his widespread and increasing fame, as a great and good man, with the ephemeral notoriety which they have obtained, chiefly by the mere circumstance of his condescending to meet them in debate. They obtained an unenviable renown by their presumptuous and reckless attacks upon Mr. O. Herostratus obtained a world-wide notoriety for burning the temple of Diana. But for the sacrilegious act, his name would have perished with his body. There are not a few who seem to aspire after this sort of fame. They would rather make themselves infamous and contemptible, than remain in their native obscurity. Some small birds that chirp, and hop, and live among the chaparral, seem to consider it an honor, their highest honor, to dart suddenly upward after the eagle, that noble bird, as he soars above them on broad wing in his native heaven. But, unaccustomed to such soarings, they soon tire and return to their wormy home among the bushes.

There are some things called men—persons of but one idea, and that a small one—who make it a business to gallop around through the country; men utterly incapable from their standpoint of comprehending one of Mr. C.'s common ideas; they go everywhere perverting the sentiments of Mr. O. and his brethren, ascribing to him and them every absurd and obnoxious sentiment that will make them odious, and flatter themselves the while they are doing God service. There is, however, this apology for their conduct. They know no better. God pity them!

There is another class who are constantly engaged in a guerilla warfare. They will not be drawn into a regular battle. Well, we suppose they know their resources, and are determined to husband them. Let them alone. Some of them are called Doctors too!

Again I ask—What reason have we to be ashamed of Mr. O. as a great and good man—as an eminent minister of Christ—as an epoch man—as the great reformer of the nineteenth century—as God's chosen and honored instrument to restore the ancient gospel and ancient order of things in the church—to break the galling yoke of priestly domination, and strike off the chains from the fettered limbs of Christendom—to assert the freedom of the human will, and the right of every man to search the Scriptures for himself—to believe and act for himself in religion, unfettered by human creeds and the self-created claims of the clergy?

For myself I speak, and I avow it frankly, independently: if I would consent to wear any name other than Christian—if I would so far dishonour Christ and degrade myself as his humble disciple, as to acknowledge myself anything but a Christian—if I would be content to wear any party name—any name of human origin, I would prefer, greatly, the name of this good man to any other. But for us to recognize any sectarian cognomen, and wear it as a denominative name, would be a dishonor to Christ, our Lord and Master. Nay, it would be a virtual renunciation of Christianity. It would be treason against the government of the King of kings. As his loyal subjects, we cannot, we will not prove recreant to his cause and desert his blessed banner. No! rather than do it we will hug the Christian captive's chain, and sing the martyr's song of victory at the burning stake. God help us to be faithful and true to our trust! Did time permit, we would love to speak of Mr. C.'s noble coadjutors in the early dawn of this reformation, especially of the pious, talented, and amiable Walter Scott, whose writings, principally under the signature of Philip, and whose logical, eloquent, powerful preaching, contributed so greatly to bring forward the current reformation. Luther had as coadjutor his Melancthon; John Wesley his Whitfield; and Alexander Campbell his Walter Scott. These men will live in renown and honour, embalmed in the grateful hearts of on-coming generations, centuries after the names of time-serving men, their traducers, shall have been forgotten. Enemies of reform and progress are generally moral dwarfs, intellectual pigmies, who are wholly unable to appreciate the magnanimity and moral grandeur of self-sacrificing men, benefactors of the world, who live not for themselves, but to honour God and elevate the race to which they belong.

There are many other noble spirits who did good service in the early dawn of this Reformation. Some are still living and laboring on, whilst others have gone to their crown of reward. Their labors, sacrifices, and sufferings should be held in grateful remembrance. We trust some competent pen will do justice to these sterling veterans. Let no invidious distinctions be made. Let no prism be applied to the ray to separate the different colours, whose general character is light. For each was an integral part of the great whole, and necessary to the final result. The note of each sounded in unison with the rest, and made a part of that sweet melody which fell upon the ears, and charmed, and won the hearts of so many thousands to God. Let justice be done them.

The writings of Mr. C. contain original conceptions, bold and fearless investigations, and close and accurate reasoning on a great variety of subjects—all, however, bearing either directly or remotely on the present and future well-being of man. His choice of words is unbounded, and his felicity of expression, to the most impalpable shade of discrimination, next to miraculous;—whether playful or serious, lively or sad, always abounding in apt illustration. No subject is so dull or so dry but that he invests it with interest; and none so unimportant but that it acquires dignity and elegance from his pen. Independently, however, of mere style, and apart from the great variety of subjects upon which he has written, one of the distinguishing features of his writings, and that in which he excels all other men, is the deep vein of practical thought which runs through all his voluminous works. The parties of the present day are too much blinded either by prejudice or self-interest, to comprehend or appreciate the mission of Mr. C. On-coming generations alone will understand him and do him justice. They will enrol his name among the great reformers of past ages—men whose moral grandeur towers heaven-high above their dwarf and pigmy contemporaries, time-serving opponents.

Mr. A. Campbell is universally known and acknowledged to be a man of great learning. Nor is his general reading less extensive. His common sense is equal to both. Nor is he less well versed in his profound knowledge of human nature. He is emphatically a practical man. He is no visionary. The great work he has been the means of setting on foot is no Utopian scheme. It is practical and practicable. Its results are not only possible or probable, but certain—positively certain. He has discovered God's method of uniting all the good, pious, and devout, but many yet scattered and fog-lost among the discordant, jarring, and conflicting sects of Babel Christendom. With tongue and pen he has most graphically delineated the thralldom of the church, and with pencil of light marked out the path of the return of all to ancient Christianity.

With all his greatness, he has the humility and teachableness of a child. He is yet a learner in the school of Christ. Though now aged, he is still advancing in knowledge and piety. Though a man, he is a great man, still in advance of other men—of other great men.

B. F. HALL.

REPENTANCE AND CONVERSION.

In this, and probably two or more papers, we desire to express some thoughts on the subject forming the heading. It may be thought that they are well understood, and as far as exposition goes, need not occasion any lengthy disquisition. Of this we are not quite certain. We think that there are some phases in which they are presentable that have peculiar force; and, moreover, they are those aspects which, while most seldom brought to our notice, are those in which they are most frequently presented in the Gospel. It may seem strange to hear us say, that these two things which form the burden of what are called evangelical sermons, are not presented in the manner, or with the application most frequently found in the New Testament, even among the preachers and writers of the Reformation. Whether we are right or no, let what follows shew.

Repentance is generally regarded as that change of mind which results in a sorrow for sins, and which produces a desire for salvation from their consequences. It is supposed to be a mental state not containing action necessarily, if, indeed, at all; action resulting from that state of mind being treated under the head conversion, the converted being those who have carried their repentance to a practical issue. Conversion is thus regarded as the end, or successful issue of repentance. Popular Christianity claims for the direct influence of the Spirit the means by which this converted state is produced. Our brethren generally claim for the proclaimed Gospel, as the sword of the Spirit, this power. These differences we will leave for the present, at least, to see whether they are right in regarding repentance and conversion as so allied as we have described.

Let us take as our starting point Peter's words in Acts iii. 19 — "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." With this passage in our mind, we have often put the question, What is repentance? And have received generally such a reply as made it exceedingly difficult for the replier to give a clear definition of conversion, when asked next what it is, without hopelessly confusing the two. Yet Peter must have had two quite distinct ideas before his mind when he uttered these words. Most of the readers of the Harbinger will be acquainted with the exposition, that repentance refers to a change of mind, and conversion to a change of state; thus apparently maintaining the distinction, though still regarding conversion as the effect or perfecting of repentance.

The idea we entertain of these two words is, that repentance refers to such a change of mind in a man as results in a change of life, morally and spiritually—that it includes these, and in fact embraces all that is popularly classed under conversion. Conversion, we think, refers to the recognition by the individual of the authority of God, to prescribe the manner of approaching him, and gaining acceptance in his sight; that it has reference to the worship and ordinances of God. Both may be put forth as mental conditions, and both may be regarded as perfect only in action. This thoroughly practical view of repentance gains support from the translation adopted by A. Campbell of Acts ii. 38, putting "reform" in the place of "repent." This reformation applies to the whole moral being of man. He must thoroughly change his character; he must regard God as the Judge of all his actions, and must also regard Him as the hater and punisher of vice and moral evil of every description. On the other hand, he must view Him as the rewarder of the virtuous, and the lover of all that is good and true in man. The production of this state of mind, and its consequent result in the endeavor to obey God in all moral and spiritual things, are classed under repentance.

Conversion refers to the worship of God. Men are sunk in idolatry, indulging in will-worship or no worship. They are commanded to turn from these things to serve the living God. A converted man is one who recognizes God as his Teacher, in regard to the manner of approaching him. He is one who yields himself up to him in regard to forms of worship and manners of approach and acceptance. Conversion does not intrude on the province of repentance. When man is called upon to repent, it is enough to require the purification of his life and thought, without requiring the addition of conversion. When he is commanded to convert, (the verb is in the active mood in Acts iii. 16, and not passive, as our version renders it) he is called on to forsake all his idols and their rites, to put no faith in will-worship, and to accept simply the terms of reconciliation and form of worship which God prescribes.

Repentance and conversion are not then to be confounded with each other; neither is the latter to be regarded as the result of the former. As conditions of mind, they both exist at the same time; the one making the man resolve to be God-like in character, the other to follow God in the ordinances or form of worship He may prescribe. Or they may be regarded as convictions operating, the one to produce purity of life, the other to produce conformity to the law of the worship of God. The end of the former is that we may be pure in character; the end of the latter is that we may be saved from the consequences of sins that are passed, and ultimately saved. The command to repent or reform, to change mind and life, is not enough for man. The moral beauty of Jesus, held forth as his example, will not of itself accomplish all that man requires. Neither is the command to convert, or turn, sufficient for man, even though accompanied with a clear command as to the form of worship and ritual of faith.

In this paper we have expressed our convictions, not based on any definite passage of Scripture other than these words of Peter, which we think require some such exposition to harmonize them. We think there is considerable importance in them. Next month, all being well, we will adduce some passages justifying the distinction we have made.

M. KER.

London.

THE NEW TESTAMENT PERIODS.—No. III.

SECOND PERIOD.—CHRIST'S MINISTRY.

WHAT was accomplished in the life of Christ? There is a vastness in this theme which begets an overwhelming sense of incompetency to approximate to its just merits. In the great work of Christ, we are led to consider things seen and unseen. His work combines the human and the divine, the temporal and the eternal, the weak and the all-powerful. Human eye can behold in him a man—a sorrowing, suffering mortal; but faith aspires to a conception of the divine dignity of the all-mightiness associated with his person. Human sense can take knowledge of his tears, his groans, his death, his noble philanthropy, as "he went about doing good," but only faith can take knowledge of the invisible, opposing powers of darkness against which he contended, and whose dominion it was his to curtail, and, finally, to destroy.

The Son of God must be viewed as a warrior, invading, all alone, a world "lying under the Wicked One." Through suffering, tears, and blood he conquered and "despoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them," and cast up a highway of perfect safety through this sin-polluted world, and through death, terminating not till it entered the holiest of all. His visit to earth was to conquer a peace for salvation's heirs. His humiliation, his disrobing himself of the Divine Majesty, for a season, was but the crouching of Almighty power into the domain of sin, in order to rend the kingdom of darkness, and, amid its ruins, establish a kingdom which should have no end.

In the divine wisdom, it was deemed proper that, so soon as he had been made known to a waiting people, and acknowledged by the Father, and before he entered further on the great work of his life, he should be tempted like as we are tempted: for, as a Saviour, he was made perfect through suffering; and in temptation there is suffering. Yea, Paul says, "He suffered, being tempted." He could not, in all things, be made like unto his brethren, as it behoved him, without temptation. Nor could he overcome the Wicked One, and roll back the dark tide of sin, only by meeting the adversary—where alone he could be met—in a world of trial. How often he was tempted, we know not. Doubtless the enemy tried him many times. We have given us but the one specific narration; but, as it is said at the conclusion of this, that "he (Satan) departed from him for a season," it is evident that here is not detailed the last conflict.

In the temptation of Christ is a grand turning point in the history of redemption. Shall he fail in the contest with Satan? It is no more than all flesh had done before him. There had been great and good spirits on earth who had wrought heroic wonders, impelled by the potent principle of faith in God. There were a righteous Noah, a faithful Abraham, and thousands more whose deeds of faith had made them the admired of angels. But none of these, not one, had always stood erect, in native purity, under the assaults of sin. All did sin—all had fallen victims, at some period of their history, to the wiles of the Wicked One. But Jesus presents himself for the ordeal which had proved fatal to all the sons of Adam before him. If he shall fail, more is lost than Adam lost—hope is lost for ever. Nor is there power left which can repel the power of darkness and redeem man. God has no Son but his only begotten, to give.

Jesus meets the adversary ; he conquers. It is not a conflict of flesh and blood—not a measure of physical power : it is a conflict of the divine principle of loyalty to the eternal throne, with the wiles of one who was able to present every inducement to sin which earth could afford, or fiendish cunning could invent. Milton's celebrated poem, "Paradise Lost," presents the fallen and the sinless hosts of angels in "conflict dire," upon the plains of heaven. Here was scope for the imagination, and the world admires the poet's conception. But when he wrote "Paradise Regained," and properly emphasized the trial and victory of Jesus, the matter-of-fact detracted from the poem and the poet's reputation. While man would stretch his imagination heavenward for a theme worthy of his better numbers, angels look down to earth to find the sublimest theme for celestial poesy. They find it not in fierce, embattling immortals—but where the representatives of heaven and hell strive for the victory, making earth the battle-field. They see the approaches of Satan, how he comes as a very friend, with proffers of honor and dominion—the lust of power ; then they hear Jesus, weak in the envelopments of humanity, hungry, wasted by the long fast, meek as a very child, deeply suffering under the torture of temptation—they hear him humbly, but firmly lip in the ears of Satan, "IT IS WRITTEN !" It is written — my Father has superior claims upon me — I am his, not yours. It is written ! Did angels ever hear sweeter words?—have mortals a brighter example ? Ah, the Word, the written Word of God is the sharp two-edged sword of the Spirit by which Christ conquered, and as the richest of heaven's legacies to men, he has left it with us. It is ours to use, and he taught us how to use it. How they blaspheme this word, who call it inefficient or powerless ! Heaven has inscribed upon it "LIVING AND POWERFUL :—" let no mortal attempt a line of erasure. By using the word of the living God, Jesus conquered ; and so must we, if we conquer at all. When tempted like him, weary, sad, and sorrowing, and evil again and again presents itself, remember what is written, Christian, and stay thy hand and thy heart by its power ; then angels shall sing your triumph in the highest heavens.

When the life of Jesus closed upon earth, He stood a conqueror over one great enemy of our race—sin. He stood erect, holy, harmless. The power of sin was broken. How soothingly now can he address the timid flock around him, "Be of good cheer : I have overcome the world"—"As I live, ye shall live also." And Paul, inspired by the great thought, exclaims, "For in that he hath suffered being tempted, he is able also to succour them that are tempted." What were the hopes of weak man, with such mighty, invisible foes—"principalities, powers, and wicked spirits in high places"—had he no friend of superior strength, who was willing and able to assume his cause, and put his foes to flight !

This we deem the great work of the life of Jesus : but not all ; nor can the pen trace it entire. We note in brief that he confirmed his mission by miracles. The wondrous works which he performed were but the credentials, from the court of heaven, which he exhibited to establish his claims. They proved effectual to convince multitudes that his mission was divine, although they yet knew him not as God's Son. He referred to these works to remove any source of doubt as to his claims. "The works that I do in my Father's name testify of me." And Nicodemus but pronounced a prevalent conviction, when he said, "Master, we know that thou art a teacher sent by God, for no man can do the miracles thou doest, except God be with him." John, in speaking of the miracles of Jesus, says, "These (signs) are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Son of God." These miracles were for future reference, as well as for present conviction. Peter offered them as one of the evidences on the day of Pentecost :—"Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know."

Again :—Preparatory to his coming reign, he chooses his apostles—his witnesses and prime ministers—and begins the work of qualifying them. But this work only was begun; for during all his sojourn, down to his death, they do not believe, nor are they prepared to believe, the great facts of the gospel which they were afterwards to preach to the world. They do not know, all this time, that Jesus shall die and that he shall rise again. Still he teaches them more than he does others—to them was given to know mysteries, that it was not to others; and he explained parables to them that he did not to others. They were in advance of the masses who acknowledged him a divine teacher—they believed him to be the Son of God, and confessed it: but others believed him to be Elias, Jeremias, one of the prophets, or John the Baptist, risen from the dead. To qualify the apostles was, indeed, an important work, for they had a most important place to fill—to bind, and loose from sin—to sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel—to stand in Christ's stead, praying the world to be reconciled to God—to be witnesses of Jesus, after he should leave them—to preach the gospel to all the world. For all this they were but very partially qualified at the time when Jesus died.

The Example of Jesus. In order to give us a perfect system, Jesus set us a perfect example—the first ever placed before men. This example is found in his life. He is our religion; or, it is true Christianity to follow him. How oft does he repeat it—“follow me!” It is spoken with authority. He is, indeed, the way, and his steps shine the light of life. In his temptation—in his deeds of God-like benevolence—in his humility—in his patience under suffering—in non-resistance to persecutors—in untiring zeal—in his solitary, fervent praying—in all these the Christian may find, what elsewhere cannot be found, a perfect example; and without this example, a perfect system were impossible.

We may not here dwell at length upon his super-excellent moral precepts, delivered with authority. Of all the gems which adorn the writings of the earth, never was there so much found of beauty, of real wisdom, in all that pertains to ethics, as is found in the “sermon on the mount.” It is recorded, and it stands there, subject to the scrutiny of friends and foes, and it shall stand for ever, pure and faultless. Certainly, “man never spake like this man.”

We have thus briefly glanced at some things in the work of Jesus. We have seen that, preparatory to other work, he has 1, Conquered sin; 2, Confirmed his mission; 3, Chosen and partially qualified his Apostles: 4, Set a perfect example; and 5, Delivered the most excellent of moral precepts.

Now we may briefly state some things which he has not yet done. Heaven is all order, and there is order in all the works of God.

1. Christ has established no church yet—he has not set up the kingdom of which Daniel spake (Dan. ii. 44.) He preached, as John preached, “The kingdom is at hand.” When he sent out the twelve, and afterward the seventy, he bade them preach, “The kingdom of heaven is at hand”—“The kingdom of heaven is come nigh unto you.” And he said to Peter, “On this rock (Christ, the Son of God) I will build (not have built, or am building, but will build) my church, and the gates of hades shall not prevail against it.” Christ's church was to be built upon a rock—a tried stone, tried by sin and by death itself. The time had not yet come for the laying of the foundation stone.

2. He did not preach to the world in general—his mission was to the Jews. “I am not sent,” he said, “but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.”

3. He did not make known the plan of salvation for the world. We cannot learn it from what is recorded in the life of Christ. The Apostles themselves did not understand it till afterwards. The full gospel was not yet preached; nor did the Apostles know what they were to preach.

4. The truths delivered by him, in the main, were veiled in parables, which mean dark sayings. When the kingdom was set up, and the gospel in all its fulness proclaimed, parables were no longer used, but a plain gospel—plain in its facts, in its precepts, in its promises. There is not a parable of Jesus that has not its exposition in the subsequent teaching of the Apostles. The time will come, says the Saviour, when I shall no longer speak to you in parables, but will show you plainly of the Father. That time came when the Second Advocate descended and guided the Apostles into all truth.

The life of Jesus is lovely, sublime. A heavenly beauty envelopes it everywhere. Here the perfections of the great God shine forth from a clay tenement. God upon his throne is too high for mortal conception; but God manifest in the flesh can be seen, heard, known, and loved. Through him God was known to men as they had not known him before. By him we believe in God, and he that hath the Son hath also the Father. In him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead. But his death! How shall we speak of his death!—of his resurrection! With awful reverence let us approach the most eventful period of time—the period of three days.

A. C.—N.

THE WAY TO HEAVEN OPENED.

To one who has felt in his soul the need of pardon and reconciliation, there is no question so important as that which relates to the manner of obtaining the blessing. With his mind in this state of preparation, he will seize the opportunity of relieving himself from the burden of guilt, bearing him down to the earth and crushing out the hope of eternal life, and of escaping the just indignation of Him who rules the affairs of men. The message of salvation will strike his mind as it never did before, and, like the drowning man in mid-ocean, who sees approaching to save him the life-boat, constructed in a manner that the billows cannot overwhelm it, and its oars plied by hardy, stalwart men, eager and willing to rescue, he sees a Saviour provided, possessing every qualification requisite to redeem his perishing soul from death. He finds this Redeemer altogether able and willing to relieve him from distress and danger, by removing the burden of his guilt, and by bestowing new life and strength upon the sinking, helpless spirit.

Jesus is the way, truthful and vital, whereby the sinner may return, as a penitent prodigal, unto his Father, with the fullest assurance of absolute pardon, and a tender, heart-melting welcome. Jesus is the way, and there is none other; for did he not say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me?" All other modes of bringing a wanderer back to God have only led him farther away, to be lost and perish in his sins. He is an effectual way—so plain, that no one need err—so easy, that any may walk therein, though it be with feeble and trembling step; for the Lord is able to support the weak. No traveller need stumble and fall in the way that leads to God—no peril can hinder, or adversary stop him while he pursues his onward course. It is the true way, and will not mislead him—it is a pleasant way, and gives vigour to the pilgrim's feet, so that he shall "run and not weary, and walk and not faint." This way is sure—it cannot fail. It is heaven begun, and leads to heaven completed. No disappointment lies in wait at the close. "He that believeth shall not be confounded." It is an open way—open at all seasons, and open to all who walk therein.

No matter how many the sins which weigh upon the soul, let the "weary and heavy laden" come in sincere sorrow and earnest desire, and he will encounter no bars, nor gates, nor flaming sword, to forbid his entrance. Bright angels guard the way and beckon him on, and the smiling hosts of heaven bid him welcome.

Why, O why, will man reject the means of eternal life? Why will he scorn proffered mercies, and plunge into the follies and dissipations of earth, the reward of which is eternal death? 'Tis hard, I know, in this fallen and erring state of human nature, to keep ourselves unstained by the temptations held out to us by the adversary of men; but we should resist them by all means, and at any cost.

Let God for ever reign in our hearts, and may our mouths speak his goodness, and our actions be witnesses of his power. It is a beautiful sight, and one that makes angels rejoice, to see a brave and rightly feeling heart enlisted in the good work of the Lord, and fighting nobly and perseveringly the battles of his King.

E. M. A.

THE BAPTISTS.

I SHALL devote this letter to what I believe to be a statement of facts respecting the Baptists. First, the name Baptist was given to seven congregations about London in the year 1644, as a distinctive or sectarian name. Previous to that time they were called Anabaptists, re-baptizers; they were called Anti-Paido-baptists, against the Paidoes, or those who rantized children. They were so called in the beginning of 1700, as may be seen by reference to Wall's History of Infant Baptism. They requested their enemies not to call them Anabaptists or Anti-paido-baptists, but Baptists; just as we have requested them again and again not to call us by any other name than Christians, or Disciples of Christ.

The Baptists are very partial to saying, and having it believed, that there have been Baptists since the days of Christ and his Apostles. But there was no denomination of people known by the name of Baptists before the middle of the 17th century. They would have it believed that they have descended in a regular line from John Baptist, as the Common Version ridiculously renders the name of the Saviour's Harbinger. "Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger," or basin (Mat. xiv. 8.) What is the difference between descending from St. Peter, St. Paul, or St. John, and St. John Baptist? Is not descent religiously from one of these saints as good as from St. John Baptist? Are we not forbidden to glory in men, but to glory in the Lord? (1 Cor. i.) Are we not forbidden in that same chapter to call ourselves by the name of any man, whether in the Bible or out of it? Is it not as scriptural to call ourselves Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Quakers, or Shakers, as Baptists? John Baptist was one man, he baptized others; you, and I, and all who immerse others, as he did, are baptizers—Baptists. The persons who are baptized are Christians by profession, not Baptists. The Baptists are the baptizers.

If the New Version should render it John the Immerser, what will become of this regular descent from John Baptist? Will our Baptist friends call themselves Immersionists? It is high time they were looking for another stool to sit on, for the old stool will be pulled from under them, if their patron saint's name should be so rendered.

The second fact which I would name is, the virulence and bitterness of the Baptists against us. Why is this so? What have they to distinguish them from any other sect, except the old hobby, the subjects and mode of baptism? From the day we commenced our operations till now, they have pursued us with a most unrelenting and unprecedented persecution. They will preach, sing, pray, meet and co-operate with Pædobaptists at their Anniversaries, Bible, Tract, and Missionary Societies; but will recoil from us with a holy horror. Is this the cause? One Baptist preacher said to another, Bro. C. these people we call "Disciples," are a very intelligent people in the Scriptures—they preach the Scriptures as plainly and as powerfully as any people in the land—they are a zealous people—they are a pious and good people, and we know it—why then do we persecute them as we do? Bro. C. replied—"If we do not oppose them, they will get the ascendancy or upper-hand of us." Is that the reason? Is it a sufficient reason? Ought a people to be persecuted for such a reason?

Again:—Another fact I will name. You tell the Pædobaptists that they are elected, justified, sanctified, born again, saved, and reconciled; in short, are just fit for heaven, and are in heaven—why, then, do you wish to immerse such persons as they are? Why do you exclude such persons, as you admit they are, from your communion table? Now answer these questions plainly, and do not dodge them. We are as good as the Paidoes, and then have immersion besides—why do you exclude us from your table? Why do you exclude God's elect from God's table; both immersed and unimmersed elect?

The true reason why you exclude Paidoes from your table, cannot be because they are not immersed, as you tell them; for we have been immersed, and by your own men too, and yet you are further from communing with us than with them. You prefer them to us: why is this? Are you honest in telling them you cannot commune with them, because they are unimmersed?

Why, then, do you not unite with us, when we have the very thing, from your own hands too, which you ask of them? Your only answer is, you are sectarians, and wish to make sectarians of the Paidoes and us too. If we unite with them in four religious acts, why not in the fifth? If we can unite with them without immersion, why not with us with immersion? We have as much faith and Christianity, too, as you have, and yet you prefer the unimmersed Paidoes to us.

Again: You charge us with making a saviour of baptism. But when you reject God's elected and regenerated Paidoes, because they have not been immersed, is that not making a saviour of baptism? You allow that God takes them to heaven without immersion; but you will not admit them to your table, nor into your churches, without it. Is this not making a saviour of baptism? Your excluding all the Paidobaptist communities from your churches on account of non-immersion—your separation from the British and Foreign Bible Society, on account of the translation of baptizo into the Eastern dialects, and the formation of the American Bible Society in 1816, and the formation of the American and Foreign Bible Society in 1836, and the formation of the American Bible Union in 1850, looks as if some of you thought a little of immersion as well as we do. But what is right in you is unpardonable in us. Why do you separate from the Paidoes on account of baptizo, and then ape them in your organs, in your churches, in your creeds, in your doctrines, in your names, in your spirit, and in your conformity to this world? You were once as odious to them, as we are now to you and them. J. C.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

IN a recent number the following query was put:—"Among the many things 'hard to be understood' in Scripture is the following: 'Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?' (1 Cor. xv. 29.) Who are meant by the pronoun they in this passage, and by what baptism were they baptized?"

Your answer to the above was very brief, yet you presented some interesting points. Now we have concluded that a fuller reply would be acceptable to your readers, and perhaps to the brother who proposed the query, as it is a subject of much importance. We therefore propose to furnish a more extended answer.

1. We begin with a new translation of the 29th verse:—"Otherwise, what shall they do who are immersed for the resurrection of the dead, if the dead rise not at all? And why are they immersed for the resurrection of the dead?" This, we admit, is a free translation of the text, supplying the ellipsis with "tas anastaseos," which the sense of the whole passage seems to require.

You will observe that the Greek phrase in this verse, "uper ton nekron," is in the plural number, and can hardly be understood as applying to Christ in the singular. It must then be understood as applying to the glorious future resurrection of the saints. And this is certainly consistent with the whole tenor of the Apostle's argument, whether we regard it as only argumentum ad hominem or ad rem.

But what baptism does the Apostle refer to? We answer, unhesitatingly, THE IMMERSION OF BELIEVERS IN WATER. All the Christians at Corinth, in every other congregation, had been immersed in hope of the glorious resurrection from the dead, and by this act not only declared their faith in the burial and resurrection of Christ, but also set forth their faith in their own burial in the grave and resurrection to eternal life in heaven. And by this act, publicly declared themselves to be Christians, and placed their "lives in jeopardy every hour."

Believer's immersion is a monumental institution, like the Lord's Supper. The Supper commemorates the death of Christ, and the immersion his burial and resurrection from the dead. Thus, all who were "buried with him by immersion into death," and were raised up from the watery grave "in the likeness of his resurrection," by so doing, gave evidence of their faith in the burial and resurrection of Christ from the dead.

and of their hope of a glorious resurrection from their graves in the morning of eternity.

2. We are now prepared to take a general view of the passage. Notwithstanding all the Corinthians who were members of the church had been immersed into Jesus Christ, believing that he arose from the dead the third day, as Paul preached; yet some of them had embraced the Sadducean heresy, that there would be no resurrection of the dead saints. In this chapter the Apostle attempts to settle this question with them, by argument and testimony. He begins by referring them to the gospel preached to them at first, which they had cordially embraced, and which they had obeyed, and by which they would be saved, if they kept it in memory. He says: "For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received first, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures," &c.

He then gives the witnesses of the resurrection, from the 5th to the 11th verse. At the 12th verse, he commences an argument based on the facts already established, and which they all admitted. If these things are so, and you admit them, he asks, "how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" And from the 12th to the 20th verse he argues the case with them, and shows that in saying that "there is no resurrection of the dead," they virtually denied the resurrection of Christ, and abandoned their faith and hope. He also shows that Christ's resurrection stands to ours, in the relation of cause to effect, and that as he rose from the dead, so all his faithful followers will rise also.

At the 20th verse he re-affirms the fact that Christ rose from the dead, and became the "first fruits of them that slept." First fruits imply that there will be second fruits — a second crop from the dead. He then compares Adam and Christ, the first as bringing death upon all, and Christ as effecting the resurrection to life again. "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead." At the 24th verse he brings us to the end of Christ's suffering reign, or gospel dispensation, when all enemies being subdued under his feet, he will give up the kingdom to his Father. And at the 26th verse he declares, that "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." The last enemy will be destroyed by the resurrection, and this will be done at the time of the end, and just before the kingdom is resigned to the Father. And from the 26th to the 28th verse he shows the condition of things after the last enemy is destroyed, and the kingdom given up to the Father.

At the 29th verse he exclaims, "Otherwise, what shall they do who are immersed for the resurrection of the dead, if the dead rise not at all? and why are they immersed for the resurrection of the dead?"

3. Now, from this general view of the whole subject, we think the meaning of the text is obvious. Some of the Corinthians had given up the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, while they yet claimed to be Christians; he shows them the utter folly of this by proving, that by so doing they have surrendered all hope in Christ beyond the present life. What folly, then, to be immersed into Christ, to set forth their faith in the resurrection of the dead, and by this act, put their lives in jeopardy or danger, every hour, from the hands of their persecutors, if, indeed, there is no resurrection!

Upon the basis of the Apostle's preaching, we can see a propriety in their immersion. They simply declared in the action of immersion what they believed in their hearts, and had confessed with their mouths, that Jesus died, was buried, and rose again. This is the doctrine of Christ, and immersion is the form of the doctrine. Those who thus obey the form of the doctrine declare that they have hope in Christ beyond the present life. And if they do place their lives in danger every hour by so doing, and should even suffer martyrdom in the conflict, they confidently expect eternal life at the resurrection, and therefore can afford to suffer it.

4. At the 31st and 32nd verses, he speaks of his own trials and sufferings for the hope of the resurrection of the dead, and asks, "What advantage is all this to me, if the dead rise not?" Why, certainly, none at all; and Paul was very simple to suffer so much, if there is no resurrection, for he adds, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Well, this would be the only sensible course, upon the Sadducean hypothesis, that there is no resurrection of the dead. Enjoy the present short life as it passes, in the very best manner we can, knowing that to-morrow we die, and that death will put an eternal quietus upon our being. In such a case it would be nonsense in the extreme to be "immersed for the resurrection of the dead," and then become the objects of abuse, persecution, and affliction, without any advantage to us whatever.

5. From the 35th to the 50th verses he argues the possibility, and the certainty of the resurrection of the dead. At the 51st verse he declares the secret, that "we shall not sleep," but he adds, "we shall all be changed." Some Christians will be living on the earth when the Saviour shall come to raise the dead, and they will be changed at the same moment, from mortal to immortality. And then shall be heard the song of victory, "O death! where is now thy sting? O grave! where is now thy victory?" All of which is submitted in brotherly love.

J. M. M.

REMARKS ON HUMAN CREEDS.

IN REPLY TO DR. R. J. BRECKENRIDGE.

DR. B. thinks we ought not to be surprised that they refuse to recognize our baptism, on the grounds, first, of our "refusal to make known in some formal and obligatory manner, the articles of [our] their faith;" and, second, on account of our "constant denunciation of the faith, order, and practice of the Presbyterian church" (p. 4.) In our review of the Dr.'s report, both these grounds have been thoroughly explored, and found to be utterly untenable. But, for the sake of those friends of the Doctor who think his "minute" unanswerable, I remark, in passing, first, that I think it very surprising, that a man of Dr. B.'s great reading and superior talents, should refuse to recognize us as a Christian people, and our ordinances as Christian and valid, on the ground that we have not, and will not have, a human creed as a test of Christian fellowship among our churches.

Don't you perceive, Doctor, that if this dread sentence unchurch us and nullify our ordinances, then it unchurches all the churches of God, for more than three centuries after Christ, and nullifies all their ordinances? For who will dare to say, in the face of all history, that the churches ever adopted a human creed before the fourth century. Dr. Wilson, a very staunch and talented Old School Presbyterian, says, we must look to the Bible alone to ascertain what doctrines the church held, up to the fourth century. (See the trial of Dr. Beecher, page 86.) This is the voice of all church history. You must see, then, that so far as this ground of attack is concerned, we are wholly invulnerable. We stand in the shadow of the cross, and upon the foundation of Apostles and Prophets, Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; and standing here, the gates of hell cannot prevail against us, much less your arm. Do you not see the fearful predicament in which you have placed yourself, in your zeal do destroy us, whom you call after an eminent brother: that in the attack you have made upon us, without perceiving it, you have "rushed upon the thick bosses of Jehovah's buckler!"—that the blows you have aimed at us, to reach its mark, must destroy the church of God for the first three centuries! For certainly, if we are no Christian people, and have no Christian ordinances, because we have no creed, then, as the church of Christ for the first three hundred years had no such creed, she was no church of Christ, and had no Christian ordinances! Here, then, Doctor, we leave you, self-placed between the horns of this dilemma. If you say we are not Christians because we have no human creed, then, for the same reason, the first Christians were no Christians! But if you say they were, though they had no human creed, then we may be. Doctor, there's no help for you—you must be badly gored, whichever horn of this dilemma you take. We remark again—

2. That the Doctor very complacently, and, we think, very strangely assumes that there can be no Christian church without a human creed. This is the very gist of the controversy between us and the sects evangelical. This is the very point which, above all others, it behoves you to prove. You affirm there can be no true church without a human creed. And if you fail to make good this affirmation, you have not one inch of ground to stand upon in your distinct and more or less antagonistic organizations. With great strength of conviction, we deny your ability to make good your affirmation, and your right, until you do, to make any deduction from it. You may write or speak with great plausibility or show of reason, in favour of human creeds; but this, with us, weighs nothing. We walk by faith—not by reason. Having satisfied ourselves that the Bible is of God, with the simplicity of children we are bound to accept its teachings, assured, as we are, that the highest reason in the universe why we should believe this or that is, that the infinitely wise, good, and all perfect Jehovah, our heavenly Father, has revealed it for our belief: God is the standard of all reason, wisdom, truth, righteousness — all moral and mental excellence. His revelations, therefore, challenge our belief, whether we can see the fitness of them or not. We therefore, Doctor, demand the proof of your affirmation from the New Testament. Nothing else will satisfy us. You make a human creed necessary to the very existence of a church of Christ; and your creed says, that whatever is necessary to salvation is so clearly propounded in Scripture, that even the unlearned may understand it. Surely, then, one so learned as you can point us to the chapter and verse, proving this necessity so clearly, that even we, though unlearned, may see it. But, Doctor, we predict you will never attempt, and if you do, you will certainly fail. The proof is not.

3. Even if you could prove that you had a divine right, by the aid of the English Parliament, to draw up your Confession of Faith and Larger and Shorter Catechisms, and make these the test of fellowship in your communion, then you have demonstrated that the same right to draw up and adopt a human creed for themselves belongs equally to the Methodists, and all other parties disposed to use it; unless, indeed, you will undertake to show that to you Presbyterians has been delegated the right to make a creed for the entire religious world. To this, however, you do not pretend. Your position, then, requires you to admit that God authorizes the making of antagonistic creeds, and all the antagonistic parties based upon them. (Hence your "evangelical churches," which hold the truth "more or less clearly.") You are forced to concede that the Methodists had a divine right to make a creed, which Calvin, the father of "Presbyterianism," says, makes those who hold it "a great deal worse than Papists." And, to use his own strong language, he calls all such "dogs that bark at God's holy election, and swine that root it up." And, of course, you maintain that you had a right to form your creed, which the celebrated and evangelical John Wesley says, "makes God worse than the Devil." These, Doctor, shine forth most gloriously in harmony with your position, from the heads of the two great Protestant families, the beauties and excellencies of "evangelical" consistency and union!

4. Every human creed is essentially Popish in its assumptions. What are the assumptions of Papists? 1st, That the written word is not sufficient as a rule of faith. 2nd, That tradition, or the unwritten word, or "divine tradition," is necessary to explain or understand the written word. In "Davis' Moral Theology," in writing against the "heretics" of his time, he puts what he calls "divine tradition" above the written word, or "Sacred Scripture." He says: "Hence observe, there is more need of divine tradition than of Sacred Scripture, as Scripture cannot be known without tradition." The assumptions of the defenders of human creeds are essentially the same. Papists say the church cannot be thoroughly furnished without divine tradition, to explain and perfect the written word. Dr. B. and Protestants of the category say we must have a human creed, to explain the written word, to be thoroughly furnished as a true church. The Papists say a society founded on the written word alone, and rejecting what they call "divine tradition," is no church of Christ. Dr. B. and all with him maintain that, because we refuse to follow the schismatic practice of the sects, of publishing a human creed, we are no church of Christ. To be sure, Paul says that with Sacred Scripture alone, the man of God is thoroughly furnished to all good works, and thus most pointedly and positively contradicts both the Pope and the Protestant Doctor. But what of that! Paul was neither a pope nor a doctor.

Here, then, Doctor, much as you dislike Popery, you have placed yourself in close proximity with the Pope. He says, we can have no true church without divine tradition; you say, we can have no true church without a human creed. He says, we must have tradition to know and understand scripture; you say we must have a creed, a human creed, to explain scripture. He says, we must understand scripture according to divine tradition and the unanimous consent of the Fathers; you say, we must understand it according to the Westminster Creed and Catechisms, and the consent of the Westminster Fathers, who lived some two hundred years ago. He teaches that, in many instances, the common people must not read the Word of God in their mother tongue at all; you teach that they may read it, but must explain it according to the unanimous consent of the Westminster Fathers, as set forth in the Creed and Catechisms. We repeat, therefore, that every human creed is Popish in its assumptions. We mean not to say a word to disparage the great Reformation of the sixteenth century, or to question the infinite advantages that have resulted, and are still resulting to society, civil and religious, from that glorious movement. We are not insensible to the great benefits that have resulted to the world from the labours of such men as Luther, Calvin, and their compeers; nor are we blind to the great good done by the reformers of the seventeenth century, and the great practical benefits which accrued to English and American society, from the immense labours of John and Charles Wesley, and their fellows. Still, our admiration of these great men has not blinded us to their errors. It required centuries to bring on the dark ages: it may not be expected, therefore, that we have rid ourselves of all the errors of Popery even yet. I therefore confidently maintain that upon the creed question, Dr. B. and those with him occupy, in the points stated, essentially Popish ground.

Allow me to close this paper by a quotation from Bishop Hoadley's Dedication to the Pope, illustrating this position. The Bishop was the unflinching friend of civil and religious liberty, and by way of exposing the tyranny and corruptions of the Church of England, he thus addressed the Pope:—"I write to your holiness to show you how nearly we, of the Church of England, have attained to the glorious liberties of the Church of Rome. Indeed," adds the Bishop, "the only difference which the most sharp-sighted among us can see between you and us is, that you are infallible, and we are always in the right; or, in other words, that you cannot err, and we never do. And now," said the Bishop, "we cannot but think that the advantage is greatly on our side; for we have all the benefits of infallibility without the absurdity of pretending to it, or the more difficult task of proving a proposition so shocking to the human understanding." J. R.

LOVE

MOST readers of the New Testament are familiar with a short conversation recorded by the Apostle John, in the latter part of his History, containing, amongst other matter, the same question repeated three times, and each time receiving a similar reply. But perhaps many professing Christians do not see that the question is applicable to themselves. I allude, of course, to the one asked Peter by the Great Redeemer after his resurrection, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" It is very evident this question was asked under peculiar circumstances, Peter having denied his Lord and Master; and when asked the third time, it caused him to give a most emphatic answer, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." It is true, none of us have denied our Lord in the same manner as Peter did; it may be because we have never been placed in the same circumstances, for Peter expected punishment, if not death itself, should he confess any degree of acquaintance with him who at that time was led as a malefactor before the seat of judgment.

Still, I think it would be well for each individual calling himself a Christian, to reflect how he would feel if placed in the visible presence of the Saviour, and were asked the same question. Should we be enabled to make the same reply, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee?" We have never yet seen the Redeemer of the world, but we must recollect that he is ever present with us, taking cognizance of all our actions, and even our very thoughts; consequently, is it not desirable that we should take a strict review of our conduct, and decide in our own minds how far it accords with the solemn declarations of Jesus and his Apostles, such as, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me"—"This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you"—"Hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments"—"Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God." To be minute on these important points, let us begin with the first day of the week. How do we proceed on the morning of that day, as regards manifesting our love to Jesus and our brethren? Do we arise from our beds so soon as we have had sufficient repose to enable us to enjoy the privileges of the day on which the Redeemer arose triumphant from the grave; and after partaking of refreshment, and enjoying the opportunity of private communion with our God, and associated with our family for the same purpose with order and decorum, do we repair in good time to the place of meeting with our brethren, that none may feel annoyed or disturbed by our entering late, and so shewing but little consideration for the feelings of others? Do we not thereby manifest coolness, if not great deficiency in love towards our brethren, and consequently towards our Redeemer also? "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" And after our arrival at the usual place of meeting, do we exhibit a truly Christian spirit of meekness? Are we forward in pressing our opinions and remarks upon the attention of the brethren, or only ready to offer those remarks, and a few words of exhortation, when we can with propriety and advantage do so? Or, on the other hand, do we sit in apparent apathy, evincing but little interest in the proceedings; and although perhaps possessed of good talents, we have not exercised them, and are not, therefore, prepared to say a word by way of encouragement or exhortation? When the proper time arrives for contributing towards the necessities of the saints, do we reflect how "God hath prospered" us during the past week, and act accordingly? On partaking of those emblems which represent the body and blood of our Lord, do we truly desire to do so "in remembrance" of Him whose love prompted him to endure "such contradiction of sinners against himself," and the excruciating death of the cross, and especially the agony of that moment when he exclaimed, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Do we desire reflection on the life, death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus to exert its influence on our conduct during the whole of the week upon which we have entered? And when again engaged amid the busy scenes of life, do we recollect the precept, "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord?" According to these three divisions, do we endeavour not only to provide for our "own house," but also to contribute towards the support of such as may be in necessitous circumstances, or engaged in proclaiming the truths of Christianity? Are we especially anxious to have impressed on our memory the declaration of the Saviour, "Whosoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them?" Are we ready at all times to confess Him before men? Or do we by our actions, if not by our words, rather deny him before men; or, at least, feel ashamed of him or of his words, commands, and precepts? Are we ever ready to show that they are the rule of our conduct, and equally ready to show under every circumstance our connection with his followers, although they may be found among what are termed the "lower orders" of society? Thus shall we testify that we love the brethren, and are not ashamed to be associated with those individuals who through faith and obedience are connected with him who, when on earth, was "meek and lowly in heart?" Do our reflections on the love which Christ has manifested for us, prompt us to be ready to make those sacrifices which are but our "reasonable service?" Are we "conformed to this world," or are we so transformed by the renewing of our mind, that we are desirous of bringing our thoughts and actions into conformity with the teaching of the Apostles and Evangelists of our Lord and Master, even should it lead to the necessity of giving up some favorite indulgence, or exercising vigilance, energy and activity in the cause of the Great Redeemer? And of what nature are our reflections relative to the day "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?" Do we "love his appearing," or anticipate it with delight, feeling assured that "we have fought a good fight?" Christians must remember that they have much to contend with, and that it is only "he that overcometh" and remains "faithful unto death, that shall receive the crown of life."

W. S. S.

THE INVOCATION OF THE NAME OF THE LORD.

1. The invocation of the name of the Lord is a formula of the New Testament. It finds its first mention, like other Messianic verities, in the Scriptures of the Prophets; but it is when we come to the Acts and Letters of the Apostles, and scan in them the unfolding of the great mystery of godliness, that we find the true application and use of the words of ancient promise, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It is on Pentecost and in Acts ii. 21, that we discover the true reference of the predictive words of Joel ii. 32. From that ever illustrious day the promise, "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," finds a clear, full, and practical import; and therefore do we find the phrase in frequent and interesting occurrence thereafter.

2. It recognizes the Lord Jesus as the Sovereign Saviour. This may be said to be its import or design. Invocation is prayer; but that only of a special character. All invocation is prayer, but all prayer is not invocation. There may be much prayer to God, where there is no invocation of the name of the Lord. It is the purpose of this provision of the economy of grace to identify Jesus of Nazareth as the Jehovah, or Yahveh, the promised Deliverer of the Ancient Scriptures, on whose salvation the saints of old waited in longing expectancy. It is accurately expressed as the calling upon "the name"—it is the expressed recognition of that which is true concerning the person, character, and office of the august Personage whose name is invoked. It is this commonly on the person's own behalf who invokes:

hence the verb is everywhere in the middle voice. In a word, it is the person's own appeal in his own cause to the person whom he recognizes in the character of deliverer. Hence its exquisitely exact application to him who is emphatically the Jesus—the Saviour of the sinner. Such is the name of him to whom the appeal is made. And thus no sooner had Peter quoted these significant, though hitherto unapprehended words from Joel, than he immediately proceeded with the identification of the Lord, exclaiming, "Men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man attested by God among you—whom ye apprehended, crucified, and slew—Him hath God raised up: therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus both Lord and Christ." Thus was the crucified signaled forth as the Lord Jesus—the Sovereign Saviour, exalted, empowered, and enthroned for the salvation of all who should so receive him. Therefore,

3. This invocation bears the promise of salvation to the suppliant. Says Rom. x. 12, 13, "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same (the self-same, the very same) Lord over all is rich unto all who call upon him; for whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Mistaking this special, this very, this most special description of petition for prayer as commonly understood, the people of these days are taught by their religious guides (when asking what they must do to be saved) to go to God in prayer. But who that knows aught of the Gospel in its true propriety, does not perceive the mischief which is thus committed? The poor ignorant, earnest, anxious enquirer stays not to ask the meaning of the hope-inspiring words, by seeming warrant of which he is instructed to go and pray to God for faith to believe, or for the Spirit to convert him, or for something else, equally far remote from the Apostle's meaning; and thus misdirected, he prays until his feelings overcome him, and he concludes from some mere imagination, that he has got salvation, or, alas! that there is none for him. We have before our mind at this moment a man who told us that he thus prayed to God for fourteen years to save him, who of course remained unsaved until he perceived and received the truth in the love of it. How otherwise could it be when there remains the faithful, unchangeable word of promise, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved?"

4. The invocation was uttered in extremity. Given, so to speak, as the watchword of deliverance—connecting, as it does, the appellant with him in whose name alone there is salvation—being the word on which the God of salvation has caused us to hope—nothing can be more appropriate than that, in the hour of darkness, danger, and despair, the calling upon the ever potent name of him who said, "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth," should bring the needed deliverance. Thus, on Pentecost, when Peter had demonstrated the Messiahship of the Nazarene, and the cry of anguish escaped the lips of the listening myriads, his response to their "What shall we do?" did not consist in an order to go and pray to God; but to "repent and be baptized, upon the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." That this involved the invocation of the Saviour's name, we shall yet make sufficiently plain; but enough in the meantime it is to notice that this reply is the connection of the quotation of Joel, pledging salvation to the invoker of the name, and proving, therefore, that these baptized were those who called upon the name of the Lord. But in the last, equally as in nature's first extremity, the promise was laid hold of, and hence we find the proto-martyr for the testimony of Jesus thus evincing his faith in the last hour of life; for in Acts vii. 59, we read, "They stoned Stephen invoking and saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit." Our translators have interpolated the word "God," showing that on this point they did not understand the Scriptures. The Evangelist expressly tells us that the dying martyr invoked, and that his invocation consisted in the words, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

5. The invocation stands associated with faith and confession. When a sinner is led to believe, he is required to confess his faith; and when he confesses his faith in the Lord, he is to make his confession to the Lord himself. What more fitting? To whom is the homage to be rendered, if not to the Lord? Shall we speak of the Sovereign Jesus as our Lord, and not speak to him as such? To whom but himself should our appeal for deliverance, and our expression of homage, be made? Hence, in Romans x. 9-13, each verse is connected with its successor by the particle "for." This connection noted, the point we now insist on is gained. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." "For the Scripture saith, whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all who call upon him." "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Where lies the point, sense, or truth of this argumentation, if the convert did not invoke the Saviour's name? Therefore,

6. The invocation was commanded with baptism. Saul had reviled, denied, and blasphemed the name of Jesus, as claimant of the Messiahship. But Jesus appears to him as he goes on his way to drag to prison all who invoked his sovereign name. The astounded persecutor sues for information as to what he now must do. The reply is sent by Ananias, who entering says, "Brother Saul, why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Comment here seems needless. None can fail to see that the utterance that called for baptism called also for the invocation of the name of the Sovereign Saviour. Indeed, the form of the address is such as clearly to specify that the convert was to be baptized invoking the name. He was not to be baptized without the invocation. Nothing can be plainer. Why then should we separate what God has joined together? Why contend for baptism without invocation, when as much is affirmed of the one as the other? As well might we argue for invocation without immersion, as for immersion without invocation.

The only question we can suppose to remain is the one, How is the name of the Lord to be invoked? Does not the verb being always in the middle voice carry the idea of assuming, or taking the name upon oneself? And if so, is it at all needful to express it with the voice? Is the name not assumed simply by the immersion into it? That we find the verb epi kaleomai, in the various acceptations of surnaming, appealing, calling by, to, and upon, is undeniable. Acts x. 18, "Simon, surnamed Peter;" xxv. 11, "I appeal unto Cæsar." xv. 17, "On whom my name is called;" ix. 14, "All who called on this name;" Heb. xi. 16, "called their God." That the idea of assuming relationship to, or of surnaming oneself by, the Lord whose name is invoked in baptism, we admit to be involved, and would most decidedly object to any one calling upon the name of the Lord, who did not understand himself as thereby assuming relationship to the Saviour as vassal to a superior. That those in the first age who called upon the name of the Lord came to be known, and that notoriously, simply as invokers of the name of Jesus, the commission held by Saul from the Sanhedrim to apprehend all who called upon the name of the Nazarene, is ample proof. This being so, it is manifest that they used a living voice invocation. And the question therefore recurs, How did they invoke? That they had no prescribed uniform ritual of invocation is plain, for we have different examples of invoking. There is that of Stephen, already noted; and there is Thomas' famous acknowledgment, "My Lord, and my God." And it is also apparent that they invoked the Lord on behalf of others as well as on their own cause, as it evidenced by the fact, that Stephen followed his selfward invocation by that for his murderers, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." We conclude, therefore, in favor of a vocal invocation of the name of the Lord Jesus, either by the party himself submitting to the Saviour in baptism, or by one of the faithful in his behalf. If we are to "pray one for another," may we not invoke the name of the Lord for each other? Who will challenge the brother who baptizes, or one who stands by, for invoking and saying, "Lord Jesus, Saviour of men, receive and save this thy willing convert?" Who that goes believingly forth to the baptismal waters, would not make such invocation his own by his most heartfelt Amen! Edinburgh. T. H. M.

INVOKING THE NAME OF JESUS.

THE invoking of the name of the Lord Jesus is set forth in the New Testament as a term of salvation, an accompaniment of immersion, and a characteristic of the disciples of Jesus. Unhappily, it has been greatly lost sight of and disused; so much so, that repeated efforts seem requisite to secure for it its due prominence.

That it should not be readily and clearly understood when brought into notice, is a cause for unmitigated astonishment. Are not the references to it in the Christian Oracles most perspicuous? Let us see by collecting them.

1. "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved" (Acts ii. 21.)

2. "And they stoned Stephen calling upon (invoking) and saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit" (Acts vii. 59.)

3. "Then Ananias answered, Lord * * * and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name" (Acts ix. 14.)

4. And straightway he preached Christ* in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem? &c. (ix. 20-21.)

5. "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord" (Acts xxii. 16.)

* Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, find here Jesus.

6. "The same Lord over all, is rich unto all that call upon him. For 'who-soever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.' How, then, shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" &c. (Rom. x. 12-14.)

7. "Unto the church of God which is in Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours" (1 Cor. i. 2.)

8. "Flee, also, youthful lusts; but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart" (2 Tim. ii. 22.)

We presume that no one can look over the above references, and remain in doubt as to the question—Who is the Lord here mentioned? The least definite of them could admit of but one interpretation in the face of such fundamental New Testament discriminations as the following: "To us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we for him" and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him" (1 Cor. viii. 6); and "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all" (Eph. iv. 5-6.) But when compared with each other, and with their respective contexts, how demonstrably these passages refer to the Lord Jesus Christ. For example, No. 1 is the starting point of Peter's triumphant demonstration, that God had made the "man" of "Nazareth," whom the Jews had crucified, both LORD and Christ; No. 2 presents us with the very words of Stephen's invocation; No. 3 exhibits Ananias in converse with the Lord Jesus; No. 4 expressly makes "this name" invoked, the name of "Jesus, the Son of God;" No. 6 most distinctly teaches by its context, that the Lord who should be the object of invocation, is he who is the object of faith, and the subject of gospel proclamation; and No. 7 particularizes the Lord invoked, as "Jesus Christ our Lord." To this we may add as a separate, because critical, remark, that No. 5, according to the unanimous verdict of the critical editors, Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, should be read, "calling upon HIS name;" thus making it a matter of grammatical necessity that as "his mouth" (v. 14) is Jesus' mouth, "his witness," (v. 15) Jesus' witness, so "his name" (v. 16.) must be Jesus' name.

We can attribute it to nothing else than sheer inattention, that some beloved brethren continue, to this day, to treat these invocatory passages as if they referred in a general way to prayer addressed to the heavenly Father through the Son of his love. That they don't desire a pure speech—that they are afraid of using New Testament discriminations—that they shrink from rendering too much honour to the Lord Messiah: these, of course, are ineligible suppositions.

But granting most fully and cordially that the Lord, whose name these passages speak of as being, or to be, invoked, is "our Lord Jesus Christ," all sorts of constructions have been attempted on the "calling" itself. The "calling" has been taken by some to signify SURNAMING; by others to denote AUTHORIZATION; and by others even ASKING OF MAN!

Surnaming has been advocated on the ground that the Greek verb used (epikaleomai) is sometimes employed in that sense—as if the grammatical construction were not in every case of surnaming wholly different!

Authorization has been regarded as the thing taught in these passages—as if calling on the name of the Lord, signified simply doing something in his name, or by his authority!

Asking man to do something in the name of the Lord, as the meaning of the phrase "calling upon the name of the Lord," is so ineffably absurd that it needs not a single comment.

"Calling upon oneself the name of the Lord," it may be added, is an emendation proposed by some on the strength of the fact that the original verb is used in the middle voice. Now, there are two reasons to be urged against this. First, the middle voice does not require the actor to be the formal object of his own action: it is perfectly sufficient if he be, not only the doer of the action, but the recipient of its effect or advantage. This general reason is sustained and illustrated by another of a more popular kind. We urge, then, secondly, that the most authoritative Greek usage completely forbids any departure from invocation—an immediate, prayerful call upon the Lord's name for his help and blessing—as the meaning of the passages under our consideration. We appeal to the usage of the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament. This is, without controversy, the most authoritative usage which could be adduced in a case of this kind. Omitting every other consideration in favour of illustrating the Greek (original) of the New Testament by the Greek (translation) of the Old Testament, the following is absolutely conclusive: The first time "calling upon the name of the Lord" (No. 1) is mentioned in the New Testament, the whole sentence is taken word for word from the Septuagint rendering of Joel ii. 32. If, therefore, the same words, so far as now under consideration, occur repeatedly in that version, in different passages, so as to settle their meaning there in the most satisfactory manner, we are compelled to attribute to the same words, construed in precisely the same manner, the same meaning in the New Testament as in the Old, unless some manifest absurdity or impossibility forbid.

Now, be it observed, that all the above passages (1-8) contain the verb epikaleomai in the middle verse, and all those in which "name" occurs (1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7) exhibit to onoma, in the accusative, governed by the verb, as its only object. Then, further, that in the following group, from the Septuagint, the same construction is employed—the verb in the middle voice, and the noun in the accusative, as the only object of the verb! These points being noted once for all, our demonstration can proceed smoothly, without any further quoting of Greek; and while sufficiently particular for the scholar, will be sufficiently simple to be judged of by every reader.

1. "And he (Abram) went on his journeys from the South even to Bethel, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Bethel and Hai, unto the place of the altar which he had made there at the first: and there Abram called on the name of the LORD" (Gen. xiii. 4.) Does either surnaming, or authorization, or asking man for anything find any support here? Is anything else than appealing to the Lord, calling on him for help and blessing, expressed? Clearly not.

2. "And (Abraham) planted a grove in Beer-sheba, and called on the name of the Lord, the everlasting God" (Gen. xxi. 33.) Here is no room given for the introduction of anything else than invocation.

3. "And he (Isaac) builded an altar there, and called upon the name of the Lord" (Gen. xxvi. 25.) As before, invocation at the altar, accompanied by sacrifice.

4. "Quicken us, and we will call upon thy name" (Pa. lxxx. 18.) What else than invocation can be thought of here!

5. "Exalt ye the LORD our God, and worship at his footstool; he is holy. Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name; they called upon the LORD and he answered them" (Pa. xcix. 5-6.) Here those who called upon his "name," called upon "him" in the way of worship, so called to him for his help that he answered them. Worshipful petition—invocation—is the only idea!

6. "O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name; make known his deeds among the peoples" (Pa. cv. 1.) Thankful invocation is the thought in this passage, followed by proclamation of his deeds. The exact parallelism of the next verse sustains this remark.

7. "Then called I upon the name of the LORD: O LORD, I beseech thee deliver my soul" (Pa. cxvi. 4.) This is ocular demonstration. The invocation itself is before our eyes!

8. "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord" (v. 13.) Surnaming has no chance here; authorization would have required, "I will take the cup of salvation in the name of the Lord."

9. "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name" (Jer. x. 25.) Prayerless families are here meant.

10. "I called upon thy name, O LORD, out of the low dungeon. Thou hast heard my voice; hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry" (Sam. iii. 55-56.) Was this any other than the lifting up of the voice—the breathing—the cry to the LORD?

11. "For then will I turn to the peoples a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one consent" (Zeph. iii. 9.) Hence purity of speech, and the union of believers, are intimately bound up with invoking the name of the Lord.

12. "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord (is) my God" (Zech. xiii. 9.) Calling upon the Lord's name is calling to him that he may hear!

13. "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the LORD shall be delivered." (Joel ii. 32.) This is the closing passage of the series, and that which is transferred entire to the New Testament, furnishing the keynote to the subject of "calling on the name of the Lord," as developed in the previously quoted group of passages. Now, as there is nothing in this passage which militates against the idea of invocation, our present argument stands thus: We have twelve passages to settle the meaning of the thirteenth. Not one of the twelve refuses the sense of invocation, as commonly understood and before defined: the majority of them demand that sense; the whole of them can be readily and consistently understood with it. On what pretence can a new meaning be coined for the thirteenth? The imposition of any new sense would flagrantly violate the first law of interpretation. Hence invocation—direct, worshipful appeal to him who bears the name—is the meaning of "calling upon the name" in Joel ii. 32, Acts ii. 21, and the whole series first adduced.

Thus, then, we are furnished with a conclusive historical argument that the middle voice does not require, and cannot, in these passages, have the sense of "calling on oneself the name of the Lord," i. e. surnaming oneself by the name of the Lord. The convert is FOR HIMSELF (audibly or inaudibly, alone or with others, by personal utterance or an appropriating "Amen,"—these are secondary questions) to appeal to the Lord, at whose bidding, and into whose death and resurrection he is about to be immersed. We say "about to be," because of Acts xxii. 16, "Arise, and be immersed, and wash away thy sins, (literally) HAVING CALLED on his name." And oh! what an unspeakably fine accompaniment of immersion. How grandly it calls forth the incipient faith of the convert, just previously confessed.

He does indeed believe Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of the living God—so believes it as to be assured that he now hears his applicant's fervent cry—hears from heaven, his dwelling-place—hears so as to be willing to accept him as a disciple, and throw over him the robe of his salvation! In this faith the invoker yields himself up to be buried in the baptismal grave, and is raised to walk with his thus embraced Lord in newness of life!

But what of the "sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints?" What is it which binds on them the badge of (not, 'having called,' but) being those who in every place "call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ?" Is it their having, individually, and once for all, called on the Lord's name at their baptism? We suppose not. (Compare passages No. 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, in the New Testament group above.) Besides extraordinary occasions, (2) should not every church-gathering be constituted by a brief calling on the name of the Lord, in whose name every word and deed of worship and service is about being said and done? Would not this be a fine mode of realizing that by him we have introduction to the Father? Nay! does not the Lord himself refer to some special act of this nature, in saying, "For where two or three are gathered together into (eis) my name, there am I in the midst of them?"—These hints require following up.

Meanwhile, beloved brethren, let us practice and inculcate what we know. Let us put "the saving invocation" in its right place. Let no fear, or pride, or unbelief keep us from this. Incorporating the calling on the name of the Lord Jesus in our proclamations of the Gospel, and in our administrations of baptism, will serve to silence prejudice and win all hearts. The greater compass of our faith—the higher honor done our glorious Lord—the greater beauty and expressiveness of the ordinance of immersion will be seen and known of all men! J. B. R.

Dysart, May 8th.

HALF-HOUR LECTURES, BY A. CAMPBELL.

REPORTED BY MR. SEGAR AND REVISED BY THE LECTURER.

GENTLEMEN: We have for consideration this morning the most splendid victory that was ever gained in the world. It is a human and divine triumph, but it is here presented as a human victory.

We have two Adams—Adam first, in paradise, and Adam second, of the Christian era, so called by the inspired penmen of this book. The second stands to man under the dispensation of a new covenant, and, as Adam of Eden represented his posterity of the Patriarchal age, so does our Saviour, Jesus Christ, represent us, His posterity. Now, the second Adam is presented to us, in the opening scenes of his life, as being tempted of the Devil — as passing through a temptation incomparably superior to that which our first father Adam was subjected to in paradise. It is one of the most sublime conquests ever presented to the eye of cultivated reason.

Before we speak particularly of the different parts of this great contest, as here reported, let us notice the principal sinning points in human nature. There are three great lusts of mankind, to wit: the lusts of the eye, the lusts of the flesh, and the lusts of, what is courteously called among us, the pride of life. All these lusts are within the area of the perceptions and appropriations, so far as human nature is concerned, and the capital lusts of all these are the lusts of the pride of life. Hence, it is the most remarkable wonder and admirable fact, that our Saviour should have been justified in these three great points. After He had fasted for a time far beyond the power of man to endure — after He had been nearly exhausted, and being sustained only by supernatural aid, He entered the field with no advantage whatever on His side, and laid Himself open to the assault; hence, the great antagonist, who is ever prowling about like a roaring lion, thought he could make an easy prey of Christ. The temptation was conceived in the most wonderful subtlety, and was a deep, almost unfathomable scheme of cunning and iniquity. We now call your attention to the first point of this grand history.

Christ was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the Devil. This was a most singular position and circumstance, as it no doubt seems to many persons, and probably it is hard for them to see what special object induced Him, as a man, to go there. There is nothing unaccountable about this or any other fact of Holy Writ, though it may be very difficult for some people to understand at first. But every one must bear in mind that there is a mutual concurrence between the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and every act, both of creation and the corporation, is thus consummated. Hence, it is easy to understand that the Spirit of God led Christ to the solitude of the wilderness to fast for forty days and forty nights, that He might be tried by the great adversary. There was to be a suspension of all the animal powers for that period of time; hence, at the expiration of that time, the appetite — the great essential of life — must necessarily have had an enormous power. We cannot imagine a person fasting so long without being supernaturally sustained: therefore, when the required time had elapsed — when the infinite power that sustained the Saviour, and held in suspense His appetite — when it was withdrawn, the craving for animal food revived in a moment, and, of course, no keener appetite could be imagined than these circumstances must have produced. No wonder "He was afterward an hungered." Thus, through infinite wisdom and power, the great adversary had all the chances imaginable, and was granted every opportunity that could be desired to victimize the Saviour.

It is always to be conceded that Christ is the Son of God, but by the manner in which the Devil addressed the Saviour, we are disposed to conclude that he entertained conditional opinions in regard to the fact. He appears to say, "Grant that you are the Son of God. If so, command these stones to be made loaves." What a cunning, powerful temptation was this. We have a great many appetites of the flesh, but none of them are to be compared to that for food; therefore, it is natural to say, if a man would do anything to save his life, it would be under circumstances that were surrounding the Saviour. "Command these stones to be loaves," said the Devil. The Son of God is now to defend Himself. How is this temptation met? Christ unsheathes the sword of the Spirit, and repels his enemy with the Word of God, saying, "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Thus, He brought up the testimony of God, and that is the only way man can foil his adversary at the present hour.

Gentlemen, we find here a great compliment to the Word of God, which may be considered in various and significant points of view. We have the bread of life, in what may be considered the gross conception of the term. This forms a part of the food of man, but he has a life far above the mere animal life; therefore, he is to live upon "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Of course, any man who is a spiritually true man, has no desire for bread and water, in the gross conception of our animal nature, any further than is necessary to sustain the animal system; but he has an appetite for a spiritual bread and water of life, and that is the Word of God, which is transcendently more invigorating than any other food.

Again, the Word of God is the envelope of life, just as our words are the envelopes of our ideas. The Word is pictured to the eye and sounded to the ear, or shadowed to the eye and oracled to the ear. Hence, there is something in a language that is intimately related to the spirit of man.

The Word is also the sublimest emblem of power. God has always worked by words, and the Word has always been the scabbard of life and the sword of the Spirit. He created the universe by speech; and here, again, the Saviour triumphs over the temptations of the great arch-enemy of man, through the potency of the Word. Therefore, well might the apostle say, "For the Word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing, even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

But let us look once more to the principal subject of these remarks. The Devil ceased after he had failed, and made no reply. His mouth was stopped. He had opened his mouth in the oracles of God, but now he is silenced. The Devil knew when he was silenced too. There are many men, even in our day and generation, who do not know when they are silenced; but in this battle the adversary felt himself defeated, and, changing grounds presented a new subject, but at another time. We say another time, for we do not conceive these remarkable events to have happened just in the order that their presentation in the sequence would indicate. No one can imagine it to be so; therefore, we say at another time the Devil was induced, by some means, to place the Saviour upon a pinnacle of the temple, and then, in his insinuating and contemptuous manner, said to Christ, "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." But how was this insult foiled? Was it not by the same sword? It is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God, i. e. thou shalt not put thyself in danger to try and see whether the Lord will protect thee or not. Thou shalt not tempt Him."

Let every one observe that the Devil quotes Scripture, and quotes it verbatim too. But we are not always to hearken to the quotations from Scripture. We must first understand something of the intent and purpose of the person who presents them, before we place any value upon the quotation. It is true that Christ and the Devil both quote Scripture, but in every instance the Devil quotes wickedly, illogically, and perverts it; but true Scripture, in its legitimate import and the precise intent and meaning of the oracle, is as Jesus quotes it.

Thus, two lusts of human nature have been tried, and there is no power in the flesh now remaining to appeal to but the pride of life, and to this the adversary directs his last temptation. The pride of life is now on trial.

"Again, the Devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." Be it remembered here that the tempter, at this time, is made by the Creator lord of all the earth, and all that appertains to it. He has all power and possession for the time being, and but for which there could be no real temptation. Under these circumstances, while upon the mount, he took a survey of the beautiful city of Jerusalem, the grand and richly decorated country around; and all the world, indeed, was then and there presented before the gaze as a magnificent moving panorama, which caused all the grandeur of the world to pass, in all its charms and beauties, before the eye of man. At this point he says to the Saviour, "All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." In other words, if you will just recognize my right—if you will do me this honour and glory, all things shall be thine. What next? How does the Saviour receive this powerful temptation? He resents this insult with more keenness than any other of the former temptations. He says, "Get thee behind me adversary"—for the word Satan signifies neither more nor less than adversary—"for it is written." The sword of the Spirit is again presented: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. No other God shalt thou worship." Now, the last lust of the flesh, the pride of life—had been tried, and, like the others, with no avail on the part of the Devil. There was no other temptation. The Devil had not, in all his possessions, another single temptation that could be presented to man, as a man, in any conceivable condition whatever. Therefore, it was a fair fought battle, and the most important ever reported in the pages of time.

Gentlemen, the whole moral of this triumph is, implicit confidence in and submission to the word—in obeying Him and his precepts, whether we can see the bearing of them or not. We need not comprehend, in their height and depth, the teachings of the Bible, but knowing the Lord has said so and so is sufficient; and whether we can measure it or not, our honor, our safety, and our glory consist in conforming to the dictates of God's Word. No lesson was ever taught in the annals of time, that can be compared with the moral of this summary account of all the powers of Satan warring against man.

The historian tells us that after Christ's great battle with the adversary, He was exhausted. It is not mere muscular employment that exhausts the fountain of life. There is exhaustion in thinking, and when a man's soul is earnestly called into severe and continuous labor, it has a very great effect upon the machinery of the body. Hence, I do not wonder that the Saviour was perfectly exhausted, both in body and in mind, after fasting forty days and forty nights, and then fighting such a tremendous battle. His functions of life were a long time without the proper and regular nourishment necessary to sustain the human system in its health and vigor; hence, the Devil being vanquished in his terrific and appalling assault, he departed, left the Saviour, "And behold, angels came and ministered unto Him."

REQUIREMENTS OF THE CHURCHES.—No. VI

CHARITY. (CONCLUDED.)

A GLADSOME guest is love. Happiness itself, it makes its possessor happy. A heart void of love cannot rejoice. Blessedness comes with love, stays with it, goes with it. Who ever saw a happy churl? Who knows a gladsome grumbler? But heaven-born love is not a fool, nor a knave, to rejoice in all that is found in this sinful, sorrowing world. It rejoices, but not in sin; it rejoices, but only in the true. "Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Think you its pleasures are not select? Conclude you its society is not choice? It were not the love of God were it otherwise than sin-avoiding and truth-communing. All its fellowships and sympathies are with the truth. It is the true love, and cannot, therefore, find rejoicing but in the truth. There is a love—a miserable, degraded, and degrading thing, which haunts the homes of infamy, and makes them boisterous with the mirth of sin. But oh! how unlike to that calm rejoicing with the truth, whose present is happiness, whose future is heaven.

Love is a burden bearer. There is nothing too heavy for its willing feet, ready hands, broad shoulders, and panting heart. It would always be lifting and carrying. "It beareth all things. It will uplift any sort of load that oppresses poor humanity; and indeed, the heavier the burden, and the sorer the oppression, with all the more alacrity does true charity come to the rescue. Having no weight to oppress itself, its business is to bear the load of others. It shrinks from nothing within the limits of the possible. It has borne already, in the person of its Great Author and Exemplar, the direst of loads—the sin of a world. “Thereby perceive we the love, because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.” In Jesus we perceive the love—for in him we see the sin-bearer. He bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and will we not bear each other's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ?

Love is no cynic. It is not a carping critic. It finds nothing congenial in the cold shades of Scepticism. In God it is the producer of our faith; in us it is the product of our faith. God loves—we believe, and believing, love. Our faith is that faith which energizes by love. It credits all that God has spoken. It cannot doubt its Father's word. The day of promise may be long of dawning—the night of waiting may be dark and starless; but this heavenly visitant of the soul is “always confident.” Did we love more we should have stronger, greater faith. It is no loving heart which would always find occasion of doubt in God or man. For want of love in man we cannot always believe him; were his love like God's, all things were believeable with him, as they doubtless are with God. Still, fallen as man is, charity will believe rather than doubt. Nothing is more painful to the loving spirit than to be compelled to doubt a once well-trusted friend.

And even when evidence amounts to proof, and faith is no longer able to hold its place, hope will come and take it; for where true love cannot believe, it will hope. It “hopeth all things” possible to hope, as it “believeth all things” possible to faith. When it finds the character of the fondly loved-one gone—gone beyond the possibility of doubt—it still will hope the best. How many a loving heart has uttered these words—and what heart that loves would not? Doubt is as much opposed to hope as it is to faith, so that if love believes, it must also fondly anticipate. When all is gone for the present, it thus finds a treasure and a solace in the future. Like man himself, it lives not in the past, nor in the present only; but in the future. It beats true to the best aspirations of our nature, when, all being dark around, it points the finger to the first indications of the longed for day-dawn. “He,” therefore, “that feareth, is not made perfect in love, for perfect love casteth out fear.” Gloomy apprehensions are not begotten by the love of God.

Hope gives tenacity to purpose; it enables even the weakest to endure. As a characteristic of love, it necessarily supplies great fortitude of character to the man or woman who loves. Though the tenderest of emotions, it is yet the hardest. It “endureth all things.” The toil and ill-usage it outlives could not have been believed had they not been seen. What love can do, what it is capable of enduring, what it is able to suffer, could not have been known had history not given the manifold demonstration. An all but broken-hearted wife or mother may well say, she “did not think she could have outlived so much.” Much more may we say, in view of the long-suffering of God, and the enduring of the sinner-loving exponent of his love to man, exclaim, “Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us!” Love, the most potent of principles, will hold on its way on the midst of a wilderness of discouragements, at the bare prospect of which all other motives to action would sink and die outright. There is nothing too hard for love. After the conversion of such sinners as the gospel of the grace of God has saved—anything. Brethren, test your love by your power of endurance.

If you fail, it marks your deficiency in that charity which “never faileth.” How like its author, who fainteth not, neither is weary! What a consolation, that come what may, love shall never cease. How cheering, that amid all the changes of time, and all the vicissitudes of life, there is this love to gladden the heart of lover and loved. How well it is that, amid the utmost poverty of gift, this queen of graces remains to cheer the otherwise desolate church, and through her to bless and save the world. Forget it not, brethren, that this is the “more excellent way.” It is not alone by the most exact order—not by the setting in order of all else that is wanting in the churches, that we can succeed in our efforts for the ancient faith. There must abide also faith, hope, love—these three; but the greatest of these is love. By all means covet earnestly the best gifts, contend fearlessly for the one faith, but in so doing, let us not at any time forget to “follow after charity.”

Edinburgh.

T. H. M.

OPEN COUNCIL.

"THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST."

It will be perceived that I do not use the term at the head of this article as one of mine own, but as the fabrication of men. How far men are justified in employing such a term, or by what authority of Scripture they obtain license to make it, must be left to those who search the Scriptures, in order to discover whether such an expression or term, in strictly definite words, is ever found in them. If found, it may be used; if not, it is unscriptural, and therefore must not be used. It has not pleased God, the Father of all Christians, the Creator of all men by Jesus Christ, the Saviour of all men, the King and Head of all Christians through His Spirit, as shewn to us in the inspired records of his Prophets and Apostles, to employ such a term as "the divinity of Christ;" consequently I may not use it, but rather look upon it as upon one of those ingenious devices of the Adversary to lead men from the path of rectitude.

I presume that the majority of our readers are brethren in the one faith, and that to them the version of King James' Bible is the most available. I would, therefore, before proceeding farther, enter two objections against the translation of two passages found in it; in fact, they cannot properly be said to be mistranslations, as the one passage is not to be found in the original, and the other is, or has been, altered from its original import.

The first objection is against the 7th verse of the 1 John v. — "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one"—which should not be at all in the chapter. From notes gathered from various sources, I place the following observations before the reader, as affecting the above verse. Greek authors not quoting the text—Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Dionysius Alexandrinus, Athanasius, Epiphanius, Basil, Gregory Nyssen, Nazianzen, Chrysostome, Council of Nice, Hypolytus, Oecumenius, and others. Latin authors—Noratian Hilary, Jerome, Augustine, Ambrose, Faustinus, Leo Magnus, Bede, Gregory, Eusebius (Pope) and others.

It was not inserted by Erasmus in his 1st edition of the New Testament in Greek in 1516, nor in the second edition in 1519. Having promised to insert it if it could be found in any Greek MS, he was informed there was one in England which contained it; consequently, the 3rd edition in 1522 contained it. This Greek MS. was found some 200 years after in Trinity College library, Dublin; but the great probability is, that it was either translated or corrected from the Latin Vulgate. Another MS. was found at Berlin, which was discovered to have been transcribed from the printed Biblia Complutensia, published 1522. In Latin MS, written in the 13th century, now in the British Museum, it is not found. No Greek MS. written earlier than the 15th century contains it; no Latin MS. earlier than the 9th century. Omitted as spurious in the several editions of the Old or New Testament by Zwinglius, Griesbach, and Luther, and in the Old English Bibles of Henry VIII., Edward VI. and Elizabeth, it was printed in small types, or included in brackets. Lastly, those of our readers who possess Campbell's edition of the New Testament, will see that it is not included in the chapter. I trust that the above testimony, as to the spurious nature of the verse, will convince the unbiased reader that we are right in not receiving the verse as genuine; therefore, it cannot be admitted in any argument.

The second objection is against the translation of 1 Tim. iii. 16. I cannot do better than give the substance of the remarks of Sir Isaac Newton on this passage. He states that what the Latins have done to 1 John v. 7, the Greeks have to the above named passage. By changing o into h, the abbreviation of (Theos) deos, they now read, "Great is the mystery of godliness: God manifested in the flesh." Whereas all the churches for the first four or five hundred years, and the authors of all the ancient versions, Jerome as well as the rest, read, "Great is the mystery of godliness which was manifested in the flesh." Newton gives a list of authors who, he says, wrote all of them in the fourth and fifth centuries, for the Deity of the Son and incarnation of God; and yet he could not find that they ever allege this text to prove it, except Gregory Nyssen once argues it if the passage did not creep in out of some marginal annotation.) During the continuance of the Arian controversy, it never was used; though now considered as over, those who read "God made manifest in the flesh," as Sir Isaac Newton observes, think it "one of the most obvious and pertinent texts for the business." Let those who have Campbell's edition refer to this passage, and they will find it translated, "Great is the secret of godliness; he who was manifested in the flesh." It is plain, then, that the translation of King James' Version is incorrect. However, if we read this passage as "Great is the mystery of godliness which was manifested in the flesh," or as "he who was manifested in the flesh," it matters not. because look at it how you may, it can but refer to Christ who was manifested in the flesh, and to none else. These objections have been made simply for the purpose of removing obstructions from the path of the writer, and for the purpose of aiding those who also may be caused to stumble through their occurrence.

I earnestly desire and hope, that what remarks I may make may not be accepted, if they do not bear upon their foreheads, so to speak, the stamp of truth; and trust that if I should appear to err, or do err, that any observations made on them will be made in the same true Christian spirit of love and brotherly affection in which I make them. Let the Book of the Inspired Records be taken in hand, and carefully, without bias, in a truth-searching mind, the writer asks his readers to follow him, in the passages which he may name and bring before their notice.

1. Let us first look at Psalm cx. 1, "The Lord said unto my Lord," and its parallel passages in Mat. xxii. 41 to 46, Mark xii. 35, Luke xx. 39 to 44. The principal truth here I wish to be noticed is, the distinction between the Lord and my Lord. Now let us turn to Mal. iii. 1, and we shall have the same truth made apparent, "the Lord of hosts" and "the Lord." See also Jer. xxiii. 5-6.

2. I will now give a large number of references to be found in the records of the Evangelists, the Acts, and the Letters of the Apostles. Mat. xvi. 16—Mark viii. 29, i. 1, ix. 7—Luke xix. 20, xxiv. 49—John vi. 69, xv. 26, xvi. 7, xx. 31, v. 17, 21, viii. 19, 38, xii. 44 to 50, the whole of chapter 17—Acts iii. 33—1 John v. 5, i. 1, 2, 3, v. 19, 20, i. 3, ii. 22-24—2 John iii.—Rom. ix. 5, i. 7—Titus ii. 13, i. 4—Rev. xxi. 22, xxii. 1, i. 1, 5, 6—Philip. ii. 11, i. 2—1 Cor. 1, 3—2 Cor. i. 2, 3—Eph. i. 2—Col. i. 2, 3, 10, 12 to 15—1 Thes. i. 3—2 Thes. i. 2—1 Tim. i. 2—2 Tim. i. 2—Titus i. 4—Philemon, 3—Heb. i. 1, 2—James i. 1—1 Pet. i. 3—2 Pet. i. 1, 2—Jude 1 to 4—and numerous others. If we carefully read these, we shall be compelled to come to the conclusion, that the Lord is spoken of as the Father; the Lord, as the Son, or Word, or Lamb, or Saviour: or, stating it in other terms, we see God spoken of under different names, and the Son of God also with various names. Nothing more or less.

3. Isa. ix. 6 contrasted with Heb. i. 8. In the one passage the name of the child is "the mighty God, the everlasting Father," but it is the Lord who so designates the child. In the other, the Son is called God, but it is God who so names him.

4. Acts xx. 28 in unison with the 35th verse. It is stated that the elders were directed "to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." It is an indisputable fact, that Christ was the Son of God, and that his blood was shed for the redemption of men; that men who accepted of such redemption are strictly called by name, as the church of Christ, but they may also be termed just as strictly the church of God; for was not Christ the Son of God, and sent especially by the Father to redeem men? As sent from and by God, as Christ was His Son, it can truthfully be said, that the church of God was purchased by his blood. In the same manner, when we read Titus i. 3, 4, we comprehend how it is that God can be designated our Saviour and also Jesus Christ.

5. 2nd Cor. v. 18, 19, 20. We see plainly brought to our view in this passage, the fact that God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself, and that the ambassadors for Christ were the Apostles.

6. John xx. 38, the exclamation of Thomas, "My Lord and my God." I can conceive Thomas beholding in Christ his Lord and his God, in the same manner as when Paul, in Colos. i. 19, says, "For it pleased (the Father) that in him should all fulness dwell;" and again in Col. ii. 9, "For in him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

7. John x. 22 to 42, more especially the 30th verse, "I and (my) Father are one." Remember, that He who uttered these words possessed the Spirit beyond measure; therefore, I can accept the statement that He and his Father were one, for the fulness of the Godhead was in him.

8. Compare Mark xiii. 32 and Acts i. 6. I agree with the opinion of another brother who has made remarks on this subject, that it cannot, nor does it necessarily follow, that though the Father reserves certain things to himself, the Son could not know, or did not know, times or seasons. The Son, receiving power and authority from the Father to make known secrets which had been hidden for ages, would stop from obedience, and not make known other things which he might know; and so, in the above statements, confine men within the limits of that which was already declared. Turn it which way you please, you cannot destroy the relation between Father and Son, nor the assertion of the Apostle, "that in him was the fulness of the Godhead."

9. John i. 1, 2, 14, 18. "In the beginning was the Word." I understand by this term, that at the commencement of time, the Word existed. We find the phrase, "In the beginning," in i. 1, where it is stated, that it was in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Now, I know of no beginning which can have reference to man, save the one mentioned in Genesis.

It cannot be applied to eternity, for that has no beginning; therefore it can only apply to time, which did not commence till the creation of heaven and earth. Consequently, we come to the conclusion, as stated previously. It will be said, Am I to understand, that the Word did not exist till that time had commenced? No, for "by him (the Word, or the Son) all things were created; all things were created by him and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist" (1 Col. i. 16, 17.) I trust this will be sufficient proof as to the Word not being limited to the beginning, for the "same was in the beginning with God; and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Concerning this same Word, we have stated in the 14th verse, that "the Word was made flesh—that we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father;" and further on, in the 18th verse, that "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." I submit, that in this phrase we have, first, a full confirmation of the statement of the Apostle, as to the fulness of the Godhead being in Christ, or the Word, bodily, for "the Word was God." Secondly, that the relation of Father and Son is clearly made apparent, for "he was with God." And thirdly, that the Son of God, or the Word, in the form of man, was the only being who made known God, from seeing him, on the earth.

I have concluded quoting passages for the purpose of commenting upon them, and ask attention to the few succeeding observations. In reading any or all of the passages given, whether written by the writers of the so-named Old or New Testaments, or whether the utterances of the Saviour or his followers, we must not forget that the Holy Spirit was present with the writer or speaker: consequently, that in all cases, we have presented to our view, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

As the Holy Spirit has not seen fit to enlighten us farther on the nature of the relation between the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, and has not chosen such terms as divinity, trinity, substance, &c. as designative of such relationship, I, as a Christian, decline to use them. I can rest satisfied with saying, with the inspired Apostle Paul, that "WITHOUT CONTROVERSY, great is the mystery of godliness: He, who was manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of messengers, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."

In conclusion, I submit, that Christians would do well in "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." In acknowledging "one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

I can only say, as an esteemed brother has said, that what I have written is obtained from no book having any relation to the subject. To me, the inspired records are not so many pages of verbose or double meaning words, on which or with which we may upraise so many abstract and metaphysical theories, but they are truths enunciated by the Holy Spirit of God; and as such I cannot comprehend how expressions ascribed to inspired men can be irreconcilable with each other. What my finite mind cannot understand of the words of the Spirit, I implicitly believe. I hope that what I have written on this matter will be tested by the Scriptures, and should I seem to err, nothing would give me greater pleasure than being set right, but the Scriptures alone must be the impartial referee.

HENRY BRITAIN.

"PASTORATE OF THE AMERICAN CHURCHES."

In the March number of the British Millennial Harbinger which arrived this evening, I observed a critical article on the "Pastorate of the American Churches," as the writer apprehended the subject from my letters and previous other sources. The good brother writes as any other brother would write who is not an American citizen; but not as an American brother would write: yea, I can hardly think of one in this country that would write such an article as that sent by our brother from Australia. I do not contend that his views are unscriptural, for the Scriptures afford him the concurrence of apostolic example, while they are silent on the subject of locating and sustaining a brother to preach. Hence, no condemnation is passed on the practice of our American congregations. The character of the cause of Christ in this country is, in this particular of the "Pastorate," quite diverse from that which it presents in Britain or Australia. Here our congregations include their hundreds—while beyond the Atlantic they are computed by units and by tens. Here we have congregations that are large, wealthy, and generous, and most appropriately and effectually taught, that He who has blest them with the riches of earth is the best Banker in whose treasury they can possibly invest. Thus they build capacious and attractive houses for the habitation of God. Thus they willingly support a learned and talented brother, "to build them up in the faith," and to prepare the world for the advent of the Messiah's universal reign. In Britain and her colonies, where the "truth has made some of God's creatures free," our congregations are comparatively small and poor; and, perhaps, the principal reason for this difference is, that as soon as our brethren in this country build a meeting-house, they engage the most efficient brother attainable, to devote himself entirely to the interests of that particular congregation. Last Lord's-day we visited a church recently established, in a dispersed village, some eighteen miles distant from this city. The house was built by a sister, whose wealth enables her to be "rich in good works," and was opened by our Bro. D P. Henderson, pastor of the congregation in Louisville. On the following day, the members numbering about 20, and many living eight miles distant, subscribed 800 dollars per year, or about £200, for their preacher's support. Will our British brethren note this instance of appropriating that which is the Lord's for the support of His cause? And this is by no means a rare case. As the storehouse of the Almighty cannot be impoverished by the plentitude of his bestowments, so is it the experience of our American brethren, that as they contribute to give to the thirsting souls the water, of which if a man drink, he shall never thirst again, their own cup ceaseth not to run over. Our brother is in error when he exclaims, in reference to the Pastorale in the American churches, "Why! this is worse than Methodism;" for though our British congregations do not individually sustain a brother to preach for them, yet, in America, every pastor is expected to devote himself entirely to the church. If he does not conduct three conventions of the brotherhood on the Lord's-day, and engage himself either among the members, or by holding meetings elsewhere, he will find that the church is too enlightened to support an "hireling." The brethren who are sustained by the congregations here, must of necessity be "working men," for the wants of such large congregations demand from them nearly every moment of their time; and it would edify our foreign brethren to become acquainted with their great labours in the Master's vineyard. In Britain, the few brethren who are recognized as the sustained preachers of the churches cannot be presumed to be prompted by carnal considerations, in retaining the "evangelistic office," for it is pre-eminently one of labour—mental and physical labour. In America, although our brethren are paid from 800 to 2500 dollars a year, their service is equally laborious, and, perchance, it exceeds in labour. They are men who "are not their own," but who have engraven upon their brow and heart, the word "devoted." And though they are sustained by individual churches to an extent which places them beyond the deleterious associations of the ignorant, and the contumely and disregard of those in the "higher walks of life;" yet they are, nevertheless, faithful oracles of heaven's will to the church and to the world. In this country, it is indispensable to the interests of Christ's cause, that a brother be provided for in the capacity of the church's servant. Until I became informed of its true character in this country, I maintained, "that he was an officer unauthorized by the New Covenant, and an institution averse to the welfare and purity of the church." But I am now convinced that he is an absolute essentiality to its efficiency and prosperity. With regard to our brother's critique on a paragraph extracted from my letter on the Allegheny church, which alluded to the entire absorption of speaking opportunity in the public meetings, I will remark—and the application of the remark will embrace the church in New York, and every other in this country, so far as I am informed—that the pastor or paid servant is the only preacher in the church; not that the elders are not permitted to preach: but that from some cause (perchance, that of having a paid preacher) there are not more than two per cent. of our American elders that can preach. I have never seen a church, since leaving New York, where the elders even presided at the "Lord's table," in a church where a preacher was sustained. In New York, I was in a measure reconciled to the American practice of the "one man system," by seeing the elders occupying the representative position of Him who instituted the commemorative feast, while the preacher mingled with the congregation. But a few months afterwards, that very feature of similarity to the practice of the British churches, was the source of disagreement between the preacher, elders, and deacons, and ultimately the church was divided. In referring to the number of young speakers in the New York church, I did not design for any brother to understand that those young speakers ever occupied the pulpit; but that they availed themselves of the Wednesday evening meetings, to exhort their brethren and sisters. Our American brethren very prudently require education to be associated with the position of their preacher, and those congregations which are remiss in affording the requisite accomplishments to any brother, whose prospective usefulness exceeds his ability to procure them for himself, are very few. There are many of our brethren and sisters who have, as individuals, sent needy and deserving young brethren to the colleges connected with our cause, that they may be thoroughly equipped for every sphere of "Christ's minister;" and many are the churches that, having in their midst, one of promising endowments and devotion, have done likewise. And again, it is granted by the faculties, if not provided by the constitutions of our colleges, that any brother desirous of attaining an education for the ministry, shall be duly instructed without any charge, excepting personal necessities. Such a provision is made at Bethany; Harrodsburg, Ky.; Indianapolis, Ind.; and, perhaps, other places. So that where talent is evinced, there are hearts to encourage, and institutes to develop it. Our brother quotes the names of several brethren whom he presumes are not sustained as preachers. We will briefly remark: 1st, That in Bethany, the eldership is occupied by the professors of the college—Brethren A. Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, C. L. Loos, and T. D. Pickett, who are not only learned men, but efficient speakers. Hence they have no necessity for another officer. 2nd, Bro. Franklin is supported by his paper, (American Christian Review) and though he is always travelling for the purpose of extending its circulation and preaching, he maintains, "that as the labourer is worthy of his hire," so he should be paid by the churches which engage him. 3rd, Our Bro. Fanning is President of Franklin College, and is therefore not a sustained preacher. 4th, Our Bro. James Henshall is sustained by the congregation in Shelbyville, Ky. as their preacher. Thus our brother's assumption is not American, but truly British, and I may add, scriptural. Had he included the venerated name of Bro. P. S. Fall, of Nashville, Tennessee, in his list, he would have been right in at least one instance; for that Bro. (born in Brighton, England) has been preaching for more than forty years without fee or pecuniary reward. For many years he was pastor of the church in Frankfort, Ky. and supported himself by teaching. And though scarcely excelled in this, or any other country, for profundity and originality of thought, combined with the highest classical attainments and unspotted devotional character, he was not appreciated as a preacher, nor successful in securing a remunerative audience; and I am assured by a brother who knew him intimately, that the only reason was, that "he would not receive the laborer's wages." Nearly two years ago, a graduate from Bethany succeeded him, with a salary from the church of about 1500 dollars. And though this young preacher would be profited by sitting at the feet of Bro. Fall, and does not wear but an inferior order of his proficiency and genius, yet he is surpassingly successful, yea, popular. From these premises we conclude that, for a preacher to be successful, he must receive his means of support from the congregation. I do not perceive that any principle of our religion is violated by our American brethren terming their elders bishops. On comparison, I find that it is much more current in Britain than in America; but where it is employed to denote the brethren holding that office here, our brethren have not that reserve which I have noticed our British brethren manifest. In conclusion, popularity, in import and application, is not a synonyme of spirituality. Our American congregations are popular, while our Baptist congregations are preeminently spiritual. It is sad! that as the borders of the church are extended, the world by its duplicity and illusion assumes the name and profession of Christ, contaminating the atmosphere, and drawing clouds and eruptions into that sacred condition.

THOMAS BUTLER.

Louisville, Ky. March 20, 1860.

LETTER FROM AMERICA.

Harrodsburg, Ky. April 7th, 1860.

Dear Brother Wallis, — I am happy to hear that your health has so much improved since your severe attack in 1858, and I trust you may long be spared to prosecute the good work in which you have been so diligently and successfully engaged. I regard the British Millennial Harbinger as one of our most valuable periodicals, and I am sure it contributes much to promote a correct knowledge of our views among the people, and to encourage and strengthen the brethren by the articles it contains, and the good news it brings of the progress of truth abroad.

I am delighted to find that the cause of primitive Christianity has now so many able defenders in Great Britain. In this country the truth is rapidly gaining ground, though we have here and there professed advocates of the cause, who teach things which they ought not. This was the case, however, even in apostolic times, and is no proper ground of discouragement at any time, but rather a reason that they who know the truth should exert themselves more to defend and diffuse it. There have been a few lately among us who seem disposed to re-establish some matters which have been long since discarded by us as a people. These teachers seem desirous of introducing an order of clergy again amongst us. One proposes, and even uses, the title "Rev." Another talks about "his pulpit," and claims the privilege of exchanging it with sectarian ministers at his pleasure. But what surprises me more than all, is, to hear churches and prominent brethren talking about "our pastor," and to see how easily churches can slide back again into the error from which they have been so recently delivered.

There is no doubt that the churches greatly need to be properly organized with bishops and deacons, and the error into which some have fallen in giving themselves up to the direction of some preaching brother, called "a pastor," has probably originated in a consciousness of the deficiency referred to, and in a desire to supply it at least in part. But I regard the tendency of such a practice as highly dangerous, and the practice itself as wholly unscriptural. Oh! let us see to it, that we have all things according to the pattern shown in the New Testament! If anything be plainly revealed there, it is, that the church herself is the pillar and support of the truth, that there should be no "lords over God's heritage," but that he who would be greatest must be servant of all. The apostles served—the prophets, the pastors, the teachers—all were ministers of the word—all serving for the edification of the church, the body of Christ—the bride which Christ loved, and for whom he gave himself to die. In the Scripture, the church is ever placed first and highest—the object of all ministries—the central idea in every Christian enterprise and effort. Christ himself is given to be "the head over all things to the church which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all," Eph. i. 22, 23. Hence the apostles addressed their letters to churches, and Paul puts an oath upon the individuals—doubtless the elders—who received his first letter to the Thessalonians, charging them that it be read to all the holy brethren. It was not to be kept by any "pastor" and doled out in scraps on Sundays by "his reverence," to suit his own purposes. Oh! how much depends upon the church's maintaining her true position! How necessary it is that the brethren should be on their guard, lest through slothfulness and sluggishness they should suffer ambitious men to usurp authority in the house of God, and to dishonour the cause of Christ, and degrade the flock which he has purchased with his own blood! The church was even higher than the apostles, as worldly ideas of elevation go. "We preach not ourselves," says Paul, 2 Cor. iv. "but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants, for Jesus' sake." The church could even try those who called themselves apostles, and is commended for doing so in Christ's letter to the Ephesians, Rev. ii. 2. Oh! how simple and plain all these things are in Holy Scripture, and how important that they should be ever kept in view! I am happy to believe that any errors in regard to these matters in this country among the churches are confined to a few localities, and, I trust, they will be but transient in their duration. Meanwhile, the brotherhood in general are moving onward, and, I trust, upward in their course, and the truths we preach are extending their influence far and wide over this vast country.

It would have given us all great pleasure to have had a visit from you on this side of the Atlantic, and I trust it may even yet be possible for you to accomplish your design of doing so. For my part, I feel strong attachment to the land of my ancestors, and have often longed to visit England; but my duties, and the cares of a large family, have rendered it impossible. I rejoice to see an increasing degree of respect and good feeling prevailing between Great Britain and this country, and that the Lion and the Eagle are getting upon a friendly footing, as it is perhaps reasonable to expect in the case of animals so predaceous. Meanwhile, I trust that the lambs of Christ's flock, on both sides of the water, will show that they possess a different nature, and realize that there is but one fold, and one true Shepherd. It is, indeed, to be expected that some pugnacious rams amongst the flock will occasionally knock their heads together to test the thickness of each other's skulls; but it is to be hoped that they will know and listen to the voice of the Good Shepherd, and will follow with the rest, into "the green pastures" and beside "the still waters."

I have heard recently from Bethany that Bro. Campbell continues to enjoy good health. During the last year, he has travelled thousands of miles, and undergone a vast deal of labour. I learn that he thinks of visiting the British provinces in North America, during the coming Summer. I trust that his health and life may be long preserved. Bro. Milligan desires his kind regards presented to you. May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to you, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Yours in the hope of the gospel,
R. RICHARDSON.

LETTER FROM VICTORIA.

Erin Cottage, Brighton-road, St. Kilda, near Melbourne, Victoria, Mar. 16, 1860.

Dear Brother,— Since I last wrote you we have had a visit from Bros. Magarey and Santo, from Adelaide; and I am happy to inform you that their presence has been the means of stirring us up, and causing us to make fresh efforts in the cause of Jesus. A tea meeting was held in Melbourne, and none but disciples were present. Some good hearty appeals were made, as to the necessity of increased exertion and taking a more prominent position as a community of believers than we have hitherto done. The result has been that, principally through the exertions of Bro. Coles, a room capable of seating fifty persons has been erected at Brighton. It was opened last Lord's day, when upwards of twenty brethren, from various districts, broke the loaf, in commemoration of the Lord's death, in the morning. Bro. Service and myself addressed the meeting in the afternoon, and Bros. Walker and Coles in the evening. The Prahran church has had three meetings, for the purpose of considering the propriety of erecting a chapel in the locality, and last evening completed the business by the brethren subscribing enough to pay the first instalment of the money, £100, which we are to give for the land. The purchase will be made this day. Our present place of meeting at the Mechanics' Institute is held at an uncertain tenure, the Committee having forbidden us to continue the Sunday School, asserting as a reason that they did not let the room for a school; and we have reason to fear that the rent will be considerably raised, or that we shall be ultimately turned out.

We number about fifty members, and nearly the whole of the £100 has already been subscribed. I cannot help saying that the brethren have, considering their limited circumstances, done nobly. The building about to be erected it is contemplated to have of brick, to seat 200 to 250 persons. The situation is central, and in the main street. We are, I think, too prone to get into back streets and courts, as though we feared the public eye. We reckon that the place will cost from £350 to £400. The land is freehold, and the title perfect.

I now on behalf of the brethren appeal to our friends at home to raise a fund to help us. Nearly all our members are working men, depending upon their labor for a living, and many are females in service, so that we have nearly exhausted their means in donations; and weekly subscriptions only will be the means through which to realize the object. A large field of usefulness now opens to us, and in the name of Him, "who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor," I most earnestly appeal to his followers at home to aid with their prayers and donations his cause in this land of gold and sin.

For their encouragement I will just state that our Bros. Service, Picton, and Burt have for some time past preached the gospel in the open air on Emerald-hill, which lies about half-way between Prahran and Melbourne. The Independent minister there has fallen out with his people, because they cannot afford to give him more pay. He is only 24 years of age, and receives £5 a week, which, he says, he cannot make do. The result is, he has left them, and taken a room in the Mechanics' Institute, started a new cause, carrying with him 12 members out of the 30 that composed his church.

The deacons applied to the Prahran church for help, and Bro. Picton and myself have engaged to "supply the pulpit" every Lord's-day evening, and they endeavour to edify each other in the morning. I "entered upon my labours"—excuse the clerical phraseology—as a commencement last Lord's-day, and took for my subject, Heb. viii. 5, "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." You must understand that the engagement was undertaken only upon condition that we were at liberty to speak "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." I endeavoured to show that "order was heaven's first law," that God had been very minute in giving directions to Moses how to build the tabernacle, together with the order of the internal arrangements, even to the fixing of rings, curtains, bands, &c. followed by the order of worship instituted by him; and that being only "the shadow of good things to come," how much more requisite for us, under this dispensation, in which we have the good things themselves, to learn, and carry out the order given by Jesus and his Apostles, as developed in the New Testament; for, if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how much more important that we give the more earnest heed to the things spoken by His Son from heaven, "lest at any time we should let them slip." One of the deacons, an old missionary, said he was much gratified with the information he had received, and that he had obtained more knowledge of true Christianity, and more food for thought, than he had ever received before. Bro. Picton takes his turn next Lord's day, when he will speak on the declaration of Paul to the elders of the church at Ephesus, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" [Acts xx. 27.]

And now I ask, will the brethren help us? We have appealed to Adelaide, Hindmarsh, and Melbourne, and shall have some help from each place. Oh! that the spirit of the Lord's people was as zealous as in the days of old, when it was necessary to restrain them from bringing any more treasure with which to build the Lord's house, for they had already more than enough.

No fear of that happening here! for, I trust, we shall see one erected in Melbourne before very long, and if any overplus remains, the brethren there will make good use of it.—With Christian love, I remain, yours in the truth,

S. KIDDER.

CORRESPONDENCE, NOTES, REVIEWS ON PASSING EVENTS, &amp;c.

INFANT BAPTISM A DIVINE OBLIGATION: by Rev. W. Thorn. Second Notice.

LAST month we gave (entire) the laudatory review of Mr. Thorn's book from the Nonconformist. His 600 closely printed pages, now upon our table, carry us beyond the author's avowed theme—"The subjects of baptism." They insist that immersion is not baptism. But, as this is merely affirmed, without proof, and does not fairly belong to the book, we shall only smile and pass on.

Repetition is the prominent feature of the book. Its author seems to aim at producing conviction by bold and unproven affirmation, repeated as though untruth became truth by reiteration.

Mr. Thorn labours hard, and often with success, to array Baptist writers against each other, and to select and overturn weak arguments.

If this sustains his propositions, then we could easily disprove the established verities of our faith, for, on both sides of every great controversy there are weak arguments urged and defenders to be found who admit, and plead, what others on the same side deny.

Let it not, however, be thought that Mr. Thorn has overturned all he has attacked. In many instances, that which he assails not only lives, but will live when his book has been long forgotten.

In view of its design, the volume is worthless. If it make converts, they will be of the family of Old Littlethought—with whom, affirmation, strong and oft repeated, carries the day. But there is a direction in which it may do good. Naughty people are sometimes the better for whipping. Now, many of our Baptist neighbours are exceedingly naughty, and still worse, they don't know how naughty they really are. They count themselves the deadly foes of infant baptism and the consistent defenders of the baptism instituted by the Lord. Mr. Thorn has, however, taken them down, or shewn them up, (as you prefer to express it) by shewing that the baptism of the Baptists cannot be maintained against the Pædobaptists, who measure it by the Scriptures of truth. Baptist baptism is the immersion of a Christian. Mr. T. finds no instance of such baptism in the New Testament, and therefore he rantizes babies, believing that he thus complies with the command of the Lord. But stay, dear friends, you are both in the wrong! It does not follow that if Christians are not the proper subjects, that, therefore, babies are. That conclusion no more follows than that babies are proper subjects for marriage because wives are not. "Fair play is a jewel" and we willingly grant what Mr. Thorn is entitled to. He has proved that Baptists, for the most part, do not, so far as design and subjects are concerned, hold the baptism instituted by the Saviour.

Mr. T. prefers the annexed charges, and who can gainsay them?

"Having replied to the objections against infant baptism, it may not be improper to turn the tables upon our opponents, and to show them that their believer's baptism is not the believer's baptism of the New Testament. Our Lord and his apostles placed baptism at the commencement of the Christian life; while our opposing brethren do not administer it till the candidate has made considerable progress in Christianity. I will enumerate several particulars—

"1. The Apostles never delayed baptism after a person believed in the divine mission of our Lord. If our brethren followed their example, they would baptize children of three or four years of age, because, at that period, they believe in Christ; and then the controversy might be ended; for it would not be worth while to contend for an earlier administration.

"2. John the Baptist and the apostles baptized unto repentance. That cannot be done by those who require repentance unto life, as a necessary preliminary.

"3. Paul and the three thousand on the day of Pentecost, were baptized 'for the remission of sins.' Our brethren contend for justifying faith as a qualification; and they grant that justifying faith includes forgiveness; they cannot, therefore, baptize for the remission of sins.

"4. The apostles exhorted people to be baptized, that they might receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Our brethren look for proofs of the reception of the Holy Ghost before they give the ordinance.

"5. Our Lord and his apostles administered the rite before they taught the peculiarities of the Christian religion. Our brethren require a knowledge of these peculiarities as a qualification for it.

"6. The primitive Christians 'were baptized into Christ.' Our brethren insist upon our being in Christ preparatory to the ordinance.

"7. The apostles placed baptism before the putting on of Christ. Gal. iii. 27. Our brethren the contrary.

"8. Baptism stands before justification, 1 Cor. vi. 11. And is the appointed means of producing it. Eph. v. 26. Our brethren reverse the order.

"9. The apostle says, 'Baptism does save us.' And the apostle Paul, to the same purpose says, 'He saved us by the washing of regeneration,' &c. Our brethren require us to be in a state of salvation prior to baptism; and, therefore, according to them, there is no sense in which we can be said to be saved by baptism.

"I cannot find any other ends of the ordinance mentioned in the New Testament, than what are contained in the above particulars. Now, as none of these ends are answered by the adult washings of our brethren, I am quite at a loss to know what utility they possess."

But it follows not because Baptists in these points are wrong, that baby-baptism is right; and therefore, all Mr. Thorn's labour to expose the Baptists amounts not even to one small step in the journey he proposes for us—he has yet to begin the work he undertakes.

Only one instance of infant baptism Mr. Thorn adduces, and that not under the Christian dispensation, but before the giving of the Law—the baptism of "the fathers" and their little ones unto Moses, in the cloud and in the sea. The baptism on the day of Pentecost is not a guide for us, but that in the Red Sea is—and by it Mr. T. proves everything—on this one circumstance he rests his argument, and builds his castle in the air. To the Red Sea we propose to follow him, and, if we know anything of our strength, we shall take everything upon which he depends fairly out of his possession. This, however, must remain till another month.

PREDESTINATION. WEBB, Dublin.

THE author, (whose name does not appear) if we mistake not, was, till lately, a Presbyterian minister. Having discarded Calvinistic predestination, he desires that others should do the same, and to this end publishes the pages under notice. He traces the rise and progress of the controversy.

"In the Christian church the controversy concerning predestination first made its appearance about the beginning of the fifth century, in consequence of the opinions advanced by Pelagius and Celestinus, who maintained, 'that Adam was by nature mortal, and whether he had sinned or not would certainly have died—that the consequences of Adam's sin were confined to his own person—that new-born infants are in the same situation that Adam was before the fall—that the law qualified man for the kingdom of heaven, and was founded upon equal promises with the gospel—that the general resurrection of the dead does not follow in virtue of our Saviour's resurrection—that the grace of God is given according to our merits—that this grace is not granted for the performance of every moral act; the liberty of the will and information in points of duty being sufficient.'

"These doctrines were zealously opposed by Augustine, bishop of Hippo, who first asserted the leading tenets of the predestinarians. The dispute was carried on with great zeal. Zosimus, bishop of Rome, decided at first in favour of Pelagius, but afterwards altered his opinion. The council of Ephesus approved of Augustine's doctrine, and condemned that of his opponents. These opinions soon assumed various modifications. One party carried Augustine's doctrine farther than he had done, and said that God had decreed the sins as well as the punishment of the wicked. Another party moderated Pelagius's doctrine, and were called Semi-Pelagians. But the doctrine of Augustine, who wrote several treatises on the subject, became general. He was the oracle of the schoolmen. They only disputed about the true sense of his writings."

The predestination of the Presbyterians, of the Westminster Confessions, and of all who rightly call themselves Calvinists, he states from acknowledged standards—

"The substance of this doctrine was introduced into the Confession of Faith compiled by the assembly of divines at Westminster in 1643, which every clergyman of the Church of Scotland subscribed previous to his admission. It runs thus:—'God from all eternity did, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass; yet so as thereby neither is God the author of sin, nor is violence offered to the will of the creatures, nor is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established. Although God knows whatsoever may or can come to pass upon all supposed conditions; yet hath he not decreed anything because he foresaw it as future, or that which would come to pass upon such conditions. By the decree of God, for the manifestations of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others are foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished. Those of mankind that are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret council and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting glory, out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight of faith, good works, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions or causes moving him thereunto; and all to the praise and glorious grace. As God hath appointed the elect to glory, so hath he, by the eternal and most free purpose of his will, foreordained all the means thereunto. Wherefore they who are elected, being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ, are effectually called unto faith in Christ by his spirit working in due season; are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only. The rest of mankind God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonour and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice."

Two things are stated; one of which gives us pleasure, and the other pain. We can vouch for their truth.

"The rigid predestinarians have been gradually declining in number in the Church of England, although they still subscribe the Thirty-nine Articles. The celebrated Scottish reformer, John Knox, having been educated at Geneva, established in his own country the doctrine of predestination in its strictist form; and it has probably been adhered to more strictly in Scotland than in any other part of Europe.

"Of late years, however, the dispute concerning predestination has assumed a form considerably different from that which it formerly possessed. Instead of being considered as a point to be determined almost entirely by the Sacred Scriptures, it has, in the hands of a number of able writers, in a great measure resolved itself into a question of natural religion, under the head of the philosophical liberty or necessity of the will. Milton, when he wishes to exhibit the fallen angels perplexed by questions above their comprehension, sets them to dispute about predestination:—

'They reasoned high, of knowledge, will, and fate, Fix'd fate, free will, fore-knowledge absolute;
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.'

The rigid predestinarians are declining, not only in the Church of England, but everywhere. That the disputants have not sought to test their doctrines by the Sacred Scriptures, as the only standard, is the regretted truth. Even our author keeps not close enough thereto, but gives too much weight to the opposing tenets of Arminians. It may be useful to some readers to have the "five points" of that school.

"The distinguishing tenets of the Arminians may be comprised in the five following articles relative to predestination, universal redemption, the corruption of man, conversion, and perseverance, viz. :—

"1. That God from all eternity determined to bestow salvation on those who he foresaw would persevere unto the end; and to inflict everlasting punishments on those who should continue in their unbelief, and resist his divine succours; so that election was conditional, and reprobation in like manner the result of foreseen Infidelity and persevering wickedness.

"2. That Jesus Christ, by his sufferings and death, made atonement for the sins of all mankind in general, and of every individual in particular; that, however, none but those who believe in him can be partakers of divine benefits.

"3. That the true faith cannot proceed from the exercise of our natural faculties and powers, nor from the force and operation of free-will, since man, in consequence of his natural corruption, is incapable of thinking or doing any good thing; and that therefore it is necessary, in order to his conversion and salvation, that he be regenerated and renewed by the operation of the Holy Ghost, which is the gift of God through Jesus Christ.

"4. That this divine grace or energy of the Holy Ghost begins and perfects everything that can be called good in man, and consequently all good works are to be attributed to God alone; that, nevertheless, this grace is offered to all, and does not force men to act against their inclinations, but may be resisted and rendered ineffectual by the perverse will of the impenitent sinner. Some modern Arminians interpreted this and the last article with greater latitude.

"5. That God gives to the truly faithful who are regenerated by his grace the means of preserving them in this state. The first Arminians, indeed, had some doubts with respect to the closing part of this article, but their followers uniformly maintain, "that the regenerate may lose true justifying faith, fall from the state of grace, and die in their sins."

Substitute for the above, the words of the Apostles of Jesus, and adhere to them, and soon Calvinism will decline with far greater rapidity. Our author next brings into view the perversion of texts, upon which the repudiated doctrine is based.

"Having thus exhibited the views of the Calvinist, and also the more moderate and reasonable ones of the Arminian, we shall next proceed to bring both to the Scripture standard, which should be the guide in all matters of religious controversy, but this guide must be approached with an unprejudiced mind.

"The portions of Scripture principally relied upon by the advocates of predestination when taken in its extreme sense are the following, viz.:—Matt. xxv. 34; Rom. viii. 29, 30; Eph. i. 3, 6, 11; 2 Tim. i. 9; 2 Thes. ii. 13; 1 Peter i. 1-2; John vi. 37; Rev. xiii. 8, xvii. 8; Dan. iv. 35; 1 Thes. v. 19; Matt. xi. 26; Exod. iv. 21; Prov. xvi. 4; Acts xiii. 48; John xvii. 2 to 24."

His comment upon the above Scriptures we shall not give, because, though he has taken them from the Calvinists, his own interpretations, in several instances, are not in view of the context, and, therefore, not what the writers had in mind. His concluding page shall conclude our notice.

"Before closing this essay we may shortly sum up the matter thus:—We believe that God hath given to every man a day or time of visitation, wherein it was possible for him to be saved. That there is such a day or time appears from the regrets and complaints which the Spirit of God throughout the whole Scriptures makes, even of those that did perish; reproving them for not accepting his visitation and offer of mercy. The Lord thus expresses himself to Cain, 'Why art thou wroth, and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? If thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door' (Gen. iv. 6-7.)

"This was the language of the Supreme Judge to Cain before he slew his brother

Abel. When evil thoughts first began to enter his mind, God gave this warning to him in time, and in the day of his visitation. If he had not given Cain sufficient strength to overcome his evil intentions, he would not have proposed the doing of good as a condition. Thus a day of visitation was also given to the old world. 'And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man' (Gen. vi. 3.) Barclay says it ought to be translated is man; but we are quite satisfied with the expression as we find it in the Authorized Version.

"This day of visitation that God hath given to every one is that in which he is said to 'wait to be gracious' (Isa. xxx. 18.) And to be 'long-suffering' (Exod. xxxiv. 6; Num. xiv. 18; Psalms lxxxvi. 15; Jer. xv. 15.) The Apostle Peter expressly says that the 'long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah,' for those of the old world, 1 Pet. iii. 20, which agrees with Gen. vi. 3, before mentioned. And to leave no room for doubt that this 'long-suffering and striving of the Lord' was in order to save them, the same Apostle declares that it is to be accounted salvation, even as (he said) his beloved brother Paul hath also written, 2 Peter iii. 15-16. And with this 'long-suffering,' a little before, in the 9th verse, he couples, that God is 'not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.' Thus the Scriptures prove that the Lord is long-suffering, and that such is an offer of salvation to us.

"Peter further refers to the Epistles of Paul, declaring this to have been the universal doctrine. However, he adds, that in the writings of the latter there 'are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also other Scriptures, unto their own destruction.'

"In the number of these things hard to be understood, we may include the 9th chapter of Romans, from which some have denied the truth of God's long-suffering towards all. However, there is another portion of Paul's writings which Peter seems here most particularly to refer to, and which goes to elucidate the matter. 'Despise thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and long-suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth to repentance?' [Rom. ii. 4.] Paul speaks here to the unregenerate and wicked, who, in the following verse, he saith, 'Treasured up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath;' and to such he recommends the riches of the forbearance and long-suffering of God; shewing that it is held out as an invitation to them to repent. How, then, could it be called riches or goodness to them, if there was not a time wherein they might repent, and come to be sharers of those riches and of this goodness?

"Paul concludes by declaring that God 'will render to every man according to his deeds;' to the good, 'immortality,' &c.; to the wicked 'tribulation and anguish' (Rom. ii. 6, 7, 8.)

"If therefore God pleads with the wicked—if his Spirit strives with them for a season in order to save them—if he waits to be gracious to them—if he be long-suffering towards them, and if this long-suffering be for their salvation while it endureth—then of a truth it is the gracious design of our Heavenly Father that all should return, repent, and live."

THE BIBLE READER'S JOURNAL —1 PETER 3-20 AND THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

A COMMENT upon 1 Peter iii. 20, in the Bible Reader's Journal, a reply by R. D. and a letter from the Editor, demand a few words.

"We were saved by water" (1 Pet. iii. 20.) 'Eight souls were saved by water' (ὀκτώψυχους.) How saved by water? Not by means of water—impossible—but through water. If the 'eight souls' were saved by means of water, in any sense, why were the rest not saved, for there was water enough to save all, if such were the case? Similar is, 'we must through much tribulation (διὰ πολλῶν φλίσσεων) enter into the kingdom of God' (Acts xiv. 22.) Not by means of tribulation, surely. Also, 'saved so as by fire' (ὡς ὑπὸ πυρός) (1 Cor. iii. 15.) Not as by means of fire, but escaping as through fire. Noah was saved by means of the ark, and by nothing else but the grace of God, through the midst of the water. Water was death to all outside the ark, and Noah was saved because he was inside the ark, which there typified Christ (not the church as some fondly assert), his resurrection from the dead, and the elect church in Him. A further reference will make it still plainer. "Bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;" "whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished" (2 Peter ii. 5, and iii. 6). So that the waters of the flood were not a means of salvation at all, but of destruction, and Noah would have 'perished' with the rest, only in obedience to the commands of God, "he had prepared an ark to the saving of his house." (Heb. xi. 7.)

"We are now somewhat prepared to consider the type and the antitype, and also the type or symbol of the antitype, for this is contained in it as will be seen, and is the most essential point. It is declared that baptism is "the like figure," the antitype of the flood. If, then, baptism be the antitype, the flood must be the type; and as the waters of the flood were destructive, not saving, I repeat, in any sense; so the water of baptism must mean the same, for it is not possible for the antitype to mean the very contrary of the type. Then the question arises, What does baptism typify or symbolize? I unhesitatingly assert that water in baptism symbolizes death, and baptism itself death and resurrection. Just as Noah was saved by the rising of the ark above the deadly and destructive waters of the flood, so 'baptism doth save,' by faith in its symbolic teaching, 'by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.'

"There is, too, a perfect analogy between the teaching of St. Peter and St. Paul in this matter. Just as Peter connects baptism and the resurrection of Christ with the deluge, so does Paul connect the same with death and the grave, using precisely the same word 'perished' in reference to death which Peter does to the world destroyed by water: 'If Christ be not raised.... then they which are fallen asleep (dead) are perished;' 'but now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept;' 'else what shall they do which are baptised for the dead (for dead ones) if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptised for the dead (for dead ones)' (1 Cor. xv. 18, 20, 29). With Peter, the ark and its rising above the waters save from death; with Paul, Christ and his resurrection from the dead save all believers in Him. This is strikingly plain when compared with what Paul says elsewhere. 'Know ye not,' he says, 'that so many as were baptised into Jesus Christ, were baptised into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death;' 'if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death (that is, by baptism into his death) we shall be also of his resurrection' (Rom. vi. 3-5). See also Col. ii. 12, 'Buried with Him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with Him.' The Psalmist, too, in strong symbolic language, drawn from the deluge, prophetically describes the sufferings and death of Christ; words which, I cannot doubt, Christ himself uttered when on earth, 'Save me, O God, for the waters are come in unto my soul. .... I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.' 'Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters. Let not the waterfloods overflow me' (Ps. lxi. 1, 2, 14, 15). Out of all Christ rose triumphant, to the joy, triumph, and salvation of all believers.

"The sum of the matter, then, is this:— the destructive waters of the deluge are a type of baptism, and water in baptism therefore symbolizes death; and baptism itself typifies death and resurrection."

J. WORTHINGTON.

REPLY.

Eight souls saved by water.—How saved? By means of water,—otherwise the significant type would be reduced in its application. If another meaning were intended (through instead of by water), surely the pen of inspiration would have so recorded; and had the Holy Spirit intended to convey a thought similar to that contained in 1 Cor. iii. 15, namely, so as instead of by, it would have been thus written. Such a guard here was unnecessary, therefore it is wisely omitted. The old corrupt world was destroyed by the flood—by the very water by which eight persons were saved. The water was the savour of death to the old man, and the savour of life to the new; the divine means of destroying the wicked and separating the just. It brought judgment to the one and deliverance to the other, by placing the saved on a resurrection footing in the new world; the like figure (or antitype) whereunto baptism doth also now save us. The analogy is seen in that, while the water of baptism is that in which we bury the old man, it also brings forth the new man to a position in which, by the grace of God, he can walk in the newness of life. Paul says, (Col. ii 12, 13,) "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him." I therefore differ from the statement of J. W., that the waters of the flood were not a means of salvation at all, but only of destruction. This is surely a bold assertion in the face of a positive affirmation, that eight souls were saved by water.

Bath.

ROBERT DILLON.

THE EDITOR'S LETTER.

My dear brother,—It is with much reluctance that I have objected to insert your paper in the Bible Reader's Journal; and at all events, I have determined on not doing so without writing to let you know fully my reasons.

It professes to be an attack on Mr. Worthington's paper (p. 366), and herein quite fails, for the ground you take is that the Spirit has made use of the word "by" instead of "through;" whereas the Spirit has used neither one nor the other, but the Greek preposition διὰ (dia) which is sometimes rendered by our translators by, sometimes through. If you look at the Englishman's Greek Concordance, a very valuable help to the study of the New Testament, even for those unacquainted with Greek, you will find that dia with a genitive, as in this case, occurs almost as often in the sense of through, as by. Indeed, in many cases it would be manifestly improper to render it by. For example (Heb. xiv. 22): "We must through (διὰ dia) much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." How dangerous it would be to assert that tribulation was the means or cause of our entry, instead of the channel. (1 Cor. x. 1) "All passed through (διὰ dia) the sea:"—a very parallel text. (2 Cor. xi. 33) "Through (διὰ dia) a window;" and shortly afterwards occurs by the wall, where by is (διὰ dia) too, and where it clearly means not by means of the wall, but through the wall. These and many other such like examples shew us that διὰ dia with a genitive does not always describe the cause of an action, but also the course of an action.

When, then, we find the expression used of Noah and the seven with him, saved by the ark through water, it is only dealing fairly with the passage to give the preposition διὰ dia that meaning which elsewhere it has so often, and which here seems necessary; for as Mr. Worthington has well observed,—it was not the water that saved Noah, but rather that from which he was saved. The ark was (under God) the means of his salvation; the water was the element of destruction from which he was saved.

You, however, argue that we ought to render it by, because the antitype baptism demands it. But here I must express, dear brother, my total disapprobation of such a doctrine; namely, that souls now are saved by water. Such a view might fitly come from a tractarian, or upholder of the soul-destroying error of baptismal regeneration; but I know that you detest such lies as much as I do; but I know, too, that you have joined (conscientiously, I am sure) a party with whose views I cannot agree. I have read about your step in "Looking for the Daylight."

Do not mistake me,—I do not undervalue "Believer's Baptism." I have lately on this account left the ministry of the Church of England; and having been immersed myself, you could not object to own me in full communion. But I greatly object to casting out from the Lord's table those whom the Lord has received, and whom the Lord has baptized (see 1 Cor. xii. 13.)

The command is plain—"Receive one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God." It seems to me that the root of this error (pardon me for speaking as I think) is, supposing that all the passages of the New Testament—the Epistles especially—where baptism is spoken of, refer to the ordinance—rather than to the great reality which the ordinance typifies, and to the believer's signs and seals.

The very language of the 17th of Romans is to my mind most clear. Remembering that in those days no difficulty was ever felt about baptism; all who believed were baptized with water as a matter of course. Yet even writing to a community of baptized believers, the Apostle says, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized (not into water) but into Christ Jesus, were baptized into his death?"

Can man baptize into the death of Christ? I trow not. This is, and must be, God's work. All had been baptized into water, but he says, so many of us as have been—into Christ's death.

"Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death"—mark, not baptism into water.

So I understand Col. ii. 12. The co-burial and co-resurrection there are spiritual realities—prefigured in baptism, and therein sealed to the believer. And here it strikes me, is the scriptural view of the ordinance. It is a privilege as well as a command. Our dear brethren who do not see it, rob themselves of a most precious seal, (God's own appointment) to them as believers—and our part (when our eyes are opened to the iniquity of infant baptism) is, I think, to urge this upon them so far as we can—that, perchance, their eyes may be opened as ours have been.

But I cannot lord it over my brother's conscience—I cannot force truth, however precious, upon him. Am I then to disown him, and exclude him from that which is the Lord's table—not mine?

I do hope, dear brother, that you will not long be held in such bondage, to what I cannot but think, a perverted view of some texts. I admire your faithfulness, and your following conscience, so far as you see truth—but that does not prevent my thinking the position of those dear brethren who, cut off from them all whose eyes have not been opened on the subject of an ordinance—a most un-Christian one.

Pray pardon my writing as I have done—and believe me, in the bonds of the Gospel, which, I believe, comprehend "all who in every place call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, both theirs and ours."

—Yours very faithfully and affectionately,

THE EDITOR OF THE BIBLE READER'S JOURNAL.

That R. D. failed to grasp the point depended upon by J. W. is clear, and that he therefore failed to refute his conclusion, may be admitted, yet, that his communication is a fairer expression of the truth than the above by J. W. and the Editor may be safely affirmed.

J. W. argues that the eight souls could not have been saved by water "in any sense," because the rest were not saved, there being "water enough to save all." But all the water in the universe will never save one soul without that which the eight had, and the rest had not—FAITH. Again, J. W. writes—"Noah was saved by the ark, and by nothing else but the grace of God." Noah was saved by faith, and that is something else; and as salvation by faith does not set aside the grace of God, so neither does salvation by faith, repentance, and baptism. But the Editor urges that, in this case, dia with a genitive denotes through and not by. Let us then read saved through water, and examine all the instances in Peter's Epistle.

I Pet. i. 3—"Begotten us again to a lively hope dia the resurrection of Jesus Christ." The resurrection is the means or cause.

—i. 5, "Kept dia faith unto salvation." That is, by faith as the means.

—i. 7, "Though it be tried with (dia) fire." By means of fire.

—i. 12, "Reported unto you dia them which preached the gospel." By means of them—through their instrumentality.

—i. 21, "Who dia him believe." Jesus, as the cause of our faith.

—i. 22, "Obeying the truth dia the Spirit." Is not the Spirit the cause of obedience?

—i. 22, "Begotten again.....dia the Word of God." The Word is the means of our regeneration.

—ii. 5, "Acceptable to God dia Jesus Christ." Is he not the cause of our acceptance?

—ii. 14, "Unto governors, as unto them that are sent dia him." He is the cause of their being sent.

—iii. 1, "Won dia the conversation of their wives." The good conversation is causative of the conversion."

—iii. 20, "Eight souls were saved dia water. Why not the same in this instance as in all the others?

—iii. 21, "Dia the resurrection of Jesus Christ." If not causative in the verses preceding, why should it be in this? Surely the good conscience is a result of the Lord's resurrection.

—iv. 2, "That God may be glorified dia Jesus Christ." Is not this by means of Jesus Christ?

—v. 12, "By (dia) Silvanus, a faithful brother." Paul had written—that is, sent a letter by Silvanus: he was the means by which it reached them.

2 Pet. i. 3, "Dia the knowledge of him." The knowledge of Jesus is a cause of all our spiritual blessings.

— i. 4, "Where dia are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises." Is he not the cause of them all?

— i. 4, "That dia these we might be partakers of the divine nature." That is, by means of these promises.

— iii. 5, "The earth ek of water and dia water." Dr. Macknight has on this clause—"It subsists by water, for water is necessary to unite its parts, to render it fruitful," &c.

— iii. 6, "Whereby (dia) the world that then was perished." Friend Worthington should be consistent, and tell us that the world did not perish by means of water.

Unless there be an unintentional omission, the above are all the occurrences of dia with a genitive in Peter's Epistles. Each instance brings into view either a cause or instrumentality by which a given result is produced. What could have induced our Journal friends to seek for one exception in the writings of Peter, and that one in connection with baptism? They have a theory which can only be sustained by perverting Scripture.

But the Editor urges that, "There are many cases in which it would be manifestly improper to render it by." He gives examples, but fails to supply an instance in which causation and instrumentality are both excluded.

Acts xiv. 22, "We must through (dia) much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God."

On this text he says—"How dangerous to assert that tribulation was the cause or means of our entry, instead of the channel." Truly—if you mean the only cause or means, or the main and meritorious cause, then it would be very sad. But what is a channel? The course through which we go to a person, place, or thing; or through which persons, things, or blessings come to us. To say we are saved by baptism is, then, to set forth baptism as a channel through which salvation comes. Of that salvation the love of God is the moving cause, the death of Christ the meritorious cause, faith the qualifying cause, and baptism the channel by which the blessing is placed in our possession.

Of tribulation surely it may be said, that if the Lord make it part of the roadway over which a soul must journey, or remain out of the kingdom, then walking in that path becomes part of the process by which he enters. Not that he is thereby fitted for, or made to merit the blessing, yet while he rejects the painful way he cannot enter.

Again—"Our fathers all passed dia the sea," and our Editor says, "A very parallel text." Certainly! The sea was a channel by means of which they passed into Moses—a channel, too, by which they were saved, and by which their enemies were destroyed. Mr. Worthington might say, "How saved by water? Not by means of water—impossible—but through water. If the eight souls [substitute Israelites] were saved by means of water, in any sense, why not the rest, [substitute the Egyptians] for there was water enough to save all." Yes, but the one party was believing and obedient, and the other unbelieving and disobedient. The children of Israel were saved from the water, and by the water. But for the water rising up to their help, they would have perished on its banks by the sword of Pharaoh. So with the Flood—the water came, but it could only save those who had faith. The water alone did not save, neither was it faith alone that saved Noah.

Our friends of the Journal admit that "the waters of the deluge are a type of baptism—that just as Noah was saved by the rising of the ark above the waters of the Flood, so baptism doth save." They add—"It was not the water which saved the eight, but rather that from which they were saved." So then dia in this instance denotes not cause, means, nor channel, but deliverance from!! The simple truth is—they were saved from a judicial death by the very water which would have been the instrument by which the sentence would have been carried into effect, had they not believed and obeyed God.

"Baptism doth now save us." Mr. Worthington says, the waters of the Flood are the type, and baptism the antitype, and he adds, "It is not possible for the antitype to mean the very opposite of the type." So we say—

Baptism doth now save us — therefore, in the type, eight souls were saved by water.

But will the Journal answer this enquiry? If the salvation of the eight is a type, and baptism its antitype, in what respect did that salvation typify baptism? Baptism is immersion. Were the eight immersed? Certainly not. It was not baptism as an action that was in the type. Baptism is not only immersional, but transitional. Immersion is the ACT, transition the END. Immersion in water, when the subject is a believer, is into Christ's name and kingdom. In its transitional aspect only was the salvation of Noah by water a type of salvation by baptism. There are the old world and the new—the world before the Flood and the world after—(Peter calls the world before the Flood, the world that then was) —the waters carried Noah out of the one world into the other—they were the means of his transition, not of his immersion. And so with the Red Sea and the Israelites — it was a baptism into Moses. Up to that time they were under Pharaoh—on the other side of the sea Moses, under God, was their ruler. It was transitional—so is baptism. But our friends say, Noah was saved by the ark. Yes, so are baptized believers saved by Christ. Noah was saved by faith, and so are they. Christ, faith, and baptism save — not Christ in part and baptism in part, but Christ wholly. He gives to us, without money and without price, the blessed results of his one offering for our sins—faith does not merit this gift, but without faith we cannot have it, and therefore we are saved by grace through faith. The Lord commands that, counting oneself worthy of death, we shall be buried in water, there to receive what Christ merits and faith prepares us for.

The Editor's arguments upon excluding from the Lord's table, have been answered in recent numbers. See Open Communion and Plymouth Brethrenism. He repeats the common error—Paul wrote to baptized believers, saying, "Receive ye one another, as Christ also received you;" therefore, receive those who are unbaptized. This substitutes liberty-taking for logic. The root of our error, according to our friend is, "Supposing that the passages in the New Testament where baptism is spoken of refer to the ordinance" — that is, that they refer to what they speak of. As a sample he says, "Know you not that so many of us as were baptized (not into water, but) into Christ Jesus, were baptized into his death." — "Can any man baptize into Christ's death? I trow not." But why not? If baptism is transitional, and changes our relation to Christ and his church — brings us into a new relation to his death—what is more fit than to term it baptism into his death? Will the Editor, in his pages or ours, or both, answer these questions?

1. Was the baptism which the Lord commanded his Apostles to administer water baptism? (Mat. xxvii.)

2. As that baptism was into (eis) the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, (denoting change thereby of relation to his name) must it not introduce into a new relation to his death?

3. As Paul taught that there remains one (only one) baptism, as there is one Lord, one faith, one God, one body, one Spirit, and one hope, why do our friends practice immersion, if that be not the one baptism?

4. If the immersion of believers is the one baptism, on what ground should we refuse to apply the passages in which Paul speaks of baptism "to the ordinance," when he expressly states that there is one baptism only? D. K.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

THE Report of the Annual Meeting of the Baptist Union held late in April sets forth—

"That in the number of churches reporting to the Union, namely, 980, the reported clear increase had been 10,005, yielding an average in the year of ten members per church—the largest increase since 1850, and the largest but one since 1834."

The speakers gave several intimations of a somewhat improved understanding of the wants of the age and of the primitive method.

"The Hon. and Rev. B. NOWL addressed the meeting in a long and practical speech on revivals, and strongly recommending lay preaching. It was not enough that ministers should preach. God had been signally teaching the church that other men were fully as able to preach. Mr.

North and Mr. Radcliffe had preached before they were recognized as evangelists."

"The Rev. Mr. HANDS, of Luton, was afraid that if the idea went abroad that they required a more efficient organization, and that the efforts of the Baptists must be made chiefly among the working classes, this meeting would do more harm than good. Properly worked, the present organization was sufficient. The church did not admit the truth that it is the duty of every man to receive the gospel—but this must be admitted before great good would be done, and that salvation was free to every man. Then further, people must not wait for each other, but set to work at once. He had been very successful in open-air preaching last year, and he did not preach especially to the working classes, because the people in his town who wanted the gospel most were the 'respectable' people. They knew least about it, and were the persons who purchased the special copies of Bell's Life, sent down by express, containing an account of that brutal fight to which Mr. Noel had alluded. A good work, in a quiet way, had been going on in connection with several of the Luton churches, without any noise."

"The Rev. Dr. ANGUS said it was a source of much comfort to him that, as a denomination, they were in a most favourable position to carry on the work of God, holding, as they did, that the progress of the gospel consisted exclusively in the conversion of individual men and women. He did not mean to deny that their Independent brethren also insisted upon individual conversion; but the Baptists had this further advantage, that they called upon converted people to avow themselves on the Lord's side by an open profession of their faith. Baptists believed in conversion and in the duty of the public avowal of faith. None ought, therefore, to be before them in this great work of seeking to evangelize the country. There were peculiar difficulties, however, in the way. Baptist ministers were pastors as well as evangelists, and most of their sermons were of necessity preached to mixed congregations, and the unconverted portions of the hearers were in the habit of hearing much of precepts which were not, in the first instance, binding upon them. The consequence was, that there were multitudes who did not feel called upon to do anything that the preachers bid them, even when they were spoken to as unconverted men. It was not the first duty of unconverted men to obey precepts addressed to Christians; hence, they left the chapel, doubting whether the preacher meant them at all."

"The Rev. Dr. BURNS expressed his hope that Mr. Noel's suggestion respecting the evangelization of the country would be acted on. He believed that the world would never be converted by the mere preaching of ministers. All the talent of the church should be enlisted in the work. The Baptists had hitherto failed in calling forth the talents of the church. If this were brought out, the increase would not be ten per church, but fifty or a hundred."

To the above may be added a few words from The Dial upon the May Meetings.

"The May meetings, as is well known, begin in April. Already the white cravat is frequent in the streets of London. The following from the Backwoods Churchman, if it appears to some to have a coarseness, and to display an ignorance of polite religion, which are natural results of remoteness from the great centres of civilization, may yet seem to others to have a ring of honest faithfulness:—'I wish that, with all our American societies, there were one for the liberation of religion from silliness and froth. * * * The agents should be in every State of the Union, setting forth in plain, common words—not in the jargon of the sects—the doctrine of the New Testament, and illustrating the same by manly Christian living. * * * At the anniversaries, the reports should keep back no thing, but give a full account of expenditure, and a faithful narrative of failures as well as successes, of difficulties as well as encouragements (the italics are ours.) * * The speeches should be short and vigorous, * * * and above all, not the speeches of men who can only talk, but of well-known workers. I value more the stammerings of a real worker than the fluency of — * * * Let there be no joking, no palavering, and no fancy-work among the women. Let prayers at the beginning give a tone of earnest sobriety, as if we felt the height of our calling, which is to fill the world with * * * evangel of righteousness, peace, and love; first, between God and man, then, between man and man, * * * and for all mankind and their offspring with them.'"

Upon the whole, then, some good things are here said—"Not enough that ministers should preach"—"Before great good can be effected, it must be admitted that salvation is free to every man"—"Baptist ministers were pastors as well as evangelists," and the consequent evils—"The Baptists have hitherto failed in calling forth the talent of the churches," &c.

D. K.

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN CHURCH (WHITEHAVEN.)

(From the Whitehaven News.)

DURING the past week special services have been held in Whitehaven, in connection with the Primitive Christian Church meeting in Fox-lane. Mr. Sanders Chew, of Bond-street chapel, Birmingham, conducted the services. Mr. Chew recently seceded from the Baptist church. The church meeting in Bond-street chapel, Birmingham, has disavowed all human creeds, and declared for the Bible alone. Mr. Chew disclaims the use of the title "Reverend," and is in all respects too plainly outspoken to suit the generality of church and chapel worshippers. The striking character of the man will be seen from a perusal of the following report. Mr. Chew preached on Sunday morning and evening in the Temperance-hall, and addressed a numerous assembly in the same place on Monday evening. He also delivered an address to an open-air meeting on Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Chew's subject on Monday evening was, "The Churches Revived: how is it to be done?" The following is a brief outline of the discourse.

We have heard much of late concerning the revival in America and in Ireland. All admit that a revival is needed by and in the churches; that additions from those without will be of comparatively little benefit unless the churches themselves be revived. When one denounces the theories of men, he is suspected as though he were speaking profanely, and against the Bible. I have great veneration for the Bible; I have no veneration for many of the notions and systems which men think they get out of the Bible. I shall speak freely of these. In the 17th chapter of John we have the prayer which the Saviour presented on behalf of his people. He prayed that they all might be one, that the world might believe. Nowadays, however, some say that divisions are good, and that through sects and parties truth is best promoted. These are wiser than was the Saviour; wiser far than Paul, for Paul exhorted the Christians at Corinth that there be no divisions among them. I hold that there must be Christian union if the churches are to be revived, and sinners converted. How are we to get this union? Not by Evangelical Alliances meeting once a year to make a display of union; not by Union Revival Prayer-meetings, where the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Clergyman would begin to fall out, if that were to come to pass which they there pray for, if one were to come and ask, "Men and brethren, what must I do to be saved?" The only hope I can indulge of a Christian union is this, the hope of awakening our churches to take this solemn pledge, that they will believe and practice whatever Christ and his Apostles command, that they will follow truth, as that is revealed in the Scriptures of truth, and that let come whatever consequences may, they will hold this, the Word of God, and no surrender. But if this stand be taken, and if this be adopted as the true basis of union, and also of revival, there must be a thorough shaking of the religious systems of the day. The good in them would be preserved, but the bad must be thrown away. The one-man system must be shaken. See how it is in the churches around. I will quote from a tract I have written on this subject as follows:—

All the necessary wisdom for all and every end is to reside in this "Reverend" gentleman. He must preach all the sermons—he must visit all the members—he must comfort all the mourners—he must direct all the anxious—all that is done to convert the sinners or to edify the saints, he must do. He must be praised, or blamed. If "the cause doesn't prosper," or if the sittings don't let, or if somebody "can't profit under him"—it's all his fault. If he holds his head upright, then he's too distant—if he visit only the influential, then he's too partial—if he treat rich and poor alike, then he doesn't "keep himself respectable." When he is a "Son of Thunder," then he's too noisy—when he's gentle in manner and in voice, then he "has no energy." If he preaches to sinners, then there's nothing for the saints—if he preaches to the saints, then nobody wonders there are so few conversions. Half a dozen people want half a dozen different sorts of sermon. A wants a rousing sermon—B wants a comforting one—C thinks there's too little enforcement of right doing—D thinks morality preaching unevangelical—E likes something simple, and can't manage "dictionary words"—F, aiming at the profound, relishes best what he hasn't mind enough to understand. There these half a dozen sit to hear the sermon. A most marvellous man is this reverend if he can please them all. He is the one-man, and this is the one-man system. How different were the ancient methods from the modern, is capable of easy illustrations. Side by side, let us range directions apostolic, as given to the churches, and those directions made to suit the present fashion.

DIRECTIONS APOSTOLIC. MADE TO SUIT.

Ye are a royal priesthood.	Let your ministers be
—1 Peter ii. 9.	your royal priesthood.
As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same to one another.—1 Peter iv. 10.	As every minister hath received the gift, even so let him impart it, one to all.
Ye may all prophesy one to another, that all may	Ye must all listen to the minister, and must not learn and all may be comforted.—1 Cor. xiv. 31.

If the whole church be come together into one place, let your women keep silence, for it is not permitted unto them to speak.—1 Cor. xiv. 23, 34.

Desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. Covet to prophesy.—1 Cor. xiv. 1, 39.

When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again, which be the first principles of the oracles of God.—Heb. v. 12. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another.—Col. iii. 16.

If all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all; and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so, falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth.—1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25.

set up your judgment against him. And be content if some learn, and if some be comforted.

If the whole church be come together into one place, let your women and your men too, keep silence, for it is only permitted to the minister and the clerk to speak.

Desire that retiring disposition which will settle down in perpetual silence. Covet not to teach, lest you be thought too forward.

Since ye ought not to be teachers of one another, ye have need that one man be hired by you, and that henceforth you be taught of him only.

Let the distinctive principles of the denominations to which you belong, dwell in you richly; and do not venture to admonish one another, seeing that thereby some might be offended.

If all teach, the congregation will fall off, and it will be said, "there's no sermon there." And if there come in one that believeth not, he will feel his worldliness rebuked by all, and so he will not contribute of his money to the cause. He will report too that you are eccentric, and do not act as other churches do.

quarrel," but, "See how these Christians love."

One has sometimes thought of making a proposal to ministers of different denominations, that for one morning in every week they meet together to search God's Word about those very things on which they differ; that Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Independent, should each pledge himself to a sincere desire to find out what really is God's will, and pledge himself too, without qualification or reserve, to do that will when it is found out. There would be an Evangelical Alliance indeed. But if this were done, and if the pledge were kept, it might go to overturn those human systems which many of the preachers now support, and by which they are supported. The Bible is not that mysterious book which some would make it out to be. What the Great Teacher said is true; "if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." But if the many read it through the variously coloured spectacles of sectarianism, no wonder that they come to such strange conclusions. Rica, having been to visit the library of a French convent, writes thus to his friend concerning what had passed. "Father," said I to the Librarian, "what are those huge volumes which fill the whole side of the library?" "These (said he) are the interpreters of the scriptures." "There is a prodigious number of them," replied I; "the Scriptures must have been very dark formerly, and be very clear at present. Do there remain still any doubts? Are there now any points contested?" "Are there?" answered he with surprise, "are there! There are almost as many as there are lines." "You astonish me, (said I) what then have all these authors been doing?" "These authors (returned he) have searched the Scriptures for what ought to be believed, but for what they did believe themselves. They did not consider them as a book wherein was contained the doctrines which they ought to receive, but as a work which might be made to authorize their own ideas.

If any of you disagree with these hints as to the advancement of union; and if you think me wrong in interpreting the Saviour's prayer as I have done; if you think that divisions are good and not evil; that they are not obstructive of the conversion of men, now an opportunity will be given you for saying so. We seek the truth; and if any of you can show us a more excellent way, we shall be glad to hear him.

Questions were then presented by the audience, and replied to by the lecturer, and the proceedings terminated about ten o'clock.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM AND LEICESTER.

The last Lord's day in April Bro. Chew preached in Bond-street, Birmingham, and after the proclamation immersed two females. The next day he left on a visit to churches in the North, taking in his way Mollington, Whitehaven, and Carlisle. His stay in Scotland is expected to extend into June. In Leicester, on the same day and on the Monday and Wednesday following, I had good meetings, and much pleasing conversation with enquirers. On Tuesday evening I immersed one, the wife of a brother, into the name of all names most precious. On Thursday I returned to Birmingham. Since then a brother writes—"The Lord's day after you left, Bro. Munby delivered two highly acceptable addresses. Before the evening meeting Bro.

J. L. addressed about 200 in the Haymarket. On the last Lord's day we were cheered by the help of Bro. J. Wallis. We have had further conversation with friends you spent some time with, and expect some of them to be immersed next Lord's day." A subsequent letter informs me that this expectation became a fact—that four were on that day baptized. In Birmingham during this month we have had good and increasing meetings in the chapel, and several brethren have proclaimed the gospel in the open air. Each Lord's day after the evening meeting I have gone down into the water—on the first I immersed four, on the second two, and last Lord's day seven. On the return of Bro. Chew I expect to visit Leicester and Swansea.

The following is from the Birmingham Daily Post of May 14, and refers to Bond-street chapel:—

The trustees of the chapel (Messrs. Butler, Handley, and Duke) have now served what may be termed a notice to quit upon the Rev. S. J. Chew, Mr. D. King, and the congregation. The reason assigned for this step is, that as the congregation assembling at this chapel do not belong to the society of Dissenters called Particular Baptists, for whose benefit the building was placed in trust, the trustees are of opinion that such congregation is not entitled to the occupation of the property, and they therefore request that arrangements may be made for the delivery of the possession of the chapel to them at the earliest convenience, in order that they may perform their duty. This document (legally drawn up) is dated the 18th instant, and is signed by the trustees.

When this announcement appeared in the paper, no such notice had been received. Subsequently Mr. Duke presented it. The gentlemen named are not "the trustees," but only three of five now living. They will receive an answer in due time. We shall not follow their example, by printing it first and sending it afterward.

May 22.

D. KING.

Birmingham, May 22nd, 1860.

Dear Brother Wallis,—I had the pleasure of spending last Lord's day with the church which now meets in Bond-street chapel. In the morning between two and three hundred met in the all prevailing name, to attend to the commandment of the Lord, and to partake of those emblems which are commemorative of the body and the blood. Our good brother, David King, presided, and the teachings and exhortations of the brethren were short and very effective. The spirit of harmony and concord was present, and all appeared to recognize the power and presence of God. How simple, beautiful, and ennobling is the Christian faith! How complete are the ordinances—how instructive are their teachings, and how perfect are the provisions which are made in the church. We were, however, slightly reminded that the church here is in a transitive state, but we felt at the same time, in view of the difficulties which necessarily attend such an amalgamation, that very great progress had been made, which enabled us to rejoice in the house of the Lord. In the evening we had the pleasure of proclaiming the truth to about 700 persons, and we hope much good was done. After the service there were seven immersed. David King spoke at the head of the water, shewing the nature and design of baptism, referring more especially to the language of Peter, who, after speaking of the eight souls which were saved by water, says—The like figure whereunto even baptism doth now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. From all parts of the congregation a deep and solemn interest appeared to pervade every mind. May the beloved ones who have been thus buried with Jesus in baptism, have the unspeakable joy of rising into the fulness of the resurrection unto eternal life. It was to me a happy day, and I trust the means used may prove to be a great blessing to others. Yours in the truth, JABEZ INWARDS.

CARLISLE.

I sent a communication last month, reporting our progress as a church, and felt rather surprised when we received the Harbinger, that you had not given it a place. We have great pleasure in again informing the brethren, that during the past month three persons have confessed Christ, and given themselves to him in his own appointed way; making six additions in two months. We had a visit from our beloved Brother and Sister Chew. He delivered two lectures to very attentive audiences, and we hope that much good may result from his labours, not only here, but in all the districts he may visit. As a church, we have great reason to thank our Heavenly Father for present success and future prospects. W. BROWN.

MARYPORT.

We again rejoice to inform you, that a young man has been added to us, thus increasing the number of the saved. May our young brother prove faithful unto death, that he may possess the crown of life.—Our worthy Bro. Chew has been amongst us, edifying and cheering us greatly. May our gracious Father greatly bless him and his labors, so that he may turn many to righteousness. JOHN FERGUSON.

MOLLINGTON.

Since you were with us we have had the pleasure of baptizing two believers into our Saviour's death. Amidst great general indifference, there are some who discern the kingdom of God, and determine at all hazards to enter. With them we rejoice.

P. STEPHEN.

SWANSEA.

We have had seven additions this month, including candidates for baptism. I think the church now numbers 31 members. The good Lord has increased us far beyond my expectation. E. EVANS.

WIGAN.

Since our last report, eight have been added to the Lord by immersion, and one restored to fellowship. I may mention that there has been a work going on here for a short time which might have been noticed earlier, but for a feeling of delicacy on the part of those engaged. We now think it only right to tell our brethren of the good the Lord has done for us, in order that it may help to inspire those who sow to do so in hope, and those who may be reaping to raise a louder strain in their song to the Lord of the harvest. We have now two places of worship in Wigan, the particulars as to the origin of the second, and the labors in connection therewith, we hope to give in our next.

J. COLLIN.

GREAT BRIGHTON, VICTORIA.

Nearly five months ago, I came from Prahran to reside here, and lost no time in endeavoring to procure a place of meeting for the few disciples then in this place. It is right to state, that before doing so, I had two interviews with the Baptist minister, to ascertain if there were a probability of that congregation here adopting certain wholesome reforms, such as weekly communion and mutual edification. I was informed that the former was probable, but the latter not: the minister admitted the theory to be good, but said it did not work well. Being convinced that mutual edification, properly conducted, works considerably better than the pulpit system, I applied for and obtained the old Independent chapel, and on Lord's day, Nov. 20, 1859, our small church—the first of the kind ever established in this locality—numbering only three members, met for the first time, when brethren from various parts were present, and in the evening proclamation was made. The next day we were pleased to receive amongst us Bro. Belton, formerly a member of a church of disciples in Nottingham, who has been resident here for some years; and on Feb. 27 the wife of Bro. B. was immersed on a confession of faith. We decided on erecting a small edifice for ourselves, which, with the assistance of brethren in other places, we accomplished; and on Lord's day, March 11, the chapel was opened, when a period of most agreeable spiritual happiness was spent. In the afternoon Bros. Service and Kidner delivered addresses, and in the evening Bro. Walker and myself. The little chapel was closely filled on both occasions. We have had proclamations here every Wednesday evening.

March 16, 1860. S. HALSTAFF COLES.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. SUSAN PATON.—Death has recently removed from among us an aged, worthy, and beloved disciple of the Messiah. Mrs. Susan Paton, a widow of fourscore years, was called away from this earthly scene on the 22nd of last month. Half a century ago she left the Presbyterian church, and under the circumstances referred to in the obituary of her brother, John Dron, as narrated in the Harbinger of August, 1858, was led by a careful study of the Scriptures, to make confession of her faith, and be baptized into Jesus Christ. Throughout her long life she acted worthily of the profession thus made. The Christian character was manifested in all her actions; prudent, amiable, and pious in her deportment, and with an ever cheerful countenance indicating the peace and joy that reigned within, she commended the truth, and won the respect and esteem of all who knew her. The Book of God was her peculiar treasure, the daily comfort and delight of her heart, and much of it was imprinted on her mind, so that she could repeat large portions of it from memory. As a Christian she lived—as became a Christian she died. Her illness was of short duration. On Monday preceding her dissolution she was in her usual health—next morning she awoke unwell, and although she appeared but slightly indisposed, yet her now feeble frame was unable to withstand the attacks of the last enemy any longer. No murmur escaped her lips, nor fears troubled her; confidence and joy in the goodness and mercy of the Lord possessed her soul. All was calm, solemn, and peaceful, while she was permitted to tarry a few days on the brink of Jordan before crossing it. A halo of heavenly radiance seemed to pervade her countenance, as if she had obtained a glimpse of the heavenly country on which she was about to enter. As morning dawned on the first day of the week, she repeated with much feeling and animation the hymn beginning,

"This is the day the Lord has made," and shortly after her voice was silent and her eyes closed in death; but He who has the keys of the unseen world and the grave can reanimate and open them, the one to sing the praises of the Lamb that was slain, and the other to witness the innumerable company of the redeemed, assembled

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbath's never end." A. P.

Glasgow, May 23, 1860.

JOHN CROOK.—This aged brother has fallen asleep in Jesus. He was of good report among those without, and seemed without guile, being just and true in all things. His faith in Christ he held with simplicity and firmness to the end. To those who watched by his bed during the last struggle he said, "I am indeed very ill, and would like to recover; I do not feel anxious to go, but am not at all afraid to die. God is my heavenly Father, and Jesus is my elder brother; I have great satisfaction in the Lord and in his salvation."

"The memory of the just is blessed."

Wigan, May 22.

J. C.

JULY, 1860.

THE BIBLE IN COLLEGES.

"CHRISTIAN people have never doubted that the Bible might be made a text-book in our colleges; but the question has been asked, whether there were not practical difficulties, which might interfere with so desirable a result. The recent catalogue of Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y. indicates how the Bible may be introduced into a collegiate course, without interfering with the already established studies.

"The suggestion made by President Fisher, in his Inaugural Address, has been shown to be practicable. A systematic arrangement of the various portions of the Bible has been made, adapted to the various classes, so that in his college course, the student cannot fail to acquire a thorough Biblical knowledge.

"This study of the Bible is not voluntary, but forms a part of the required studies of the course, and the student's proficiency in it enters into the estimate of his standing as a scholar. It has been found by the experience of the past year in Hamilton College, that students, so far from regarding such a study as irksome, are enthusiastic in its pursuit.

"We think the Christian public ought to know that there is at least one college where the Bible is made 'the twelve tables' of a Christian education, and that with complete success.

"And in this connection we are pleased to record the commendable liberality of the Messrs. B. S. and Wm. D. Walcott, father and son, of New York Mills, the former of whom has subscribed fifteen thousand dollars, and the latter five thousand, for the endowment for the Walcott Professorship of the Evidences of Christianity in Hamilton College. Rev. Dr. Fisher, the excellent President of the College, is the present incumbent.

"We learn further from the Utica Herald that sixty thousand dollars have been secured to the College by its agent, Rev. Dr. Goertner, most of it in Oneida county, during the twelve or thirteen months he has acted as commissioner, and his efficiency and skill are the guaranty of as much more during the coming year."—Methodist Protestant.

Bethany College is the first college known to us, in the old world or in the new, founded upon two Bibles—the Theocratic and the Christocratic. In the Theocratic Bible, including the Patriarchal and Jewish dispensations of religion, or of a remedial system, the one only living and true God was the central idea—the all-attractive, the all-radiating centre of affection, association, and co-operation.

It is all-important to the student of the Bible that he should have a perfect and complete conception of the area, or general contents of the whole volume, before he presume to dogmatize upon a single paragraph of its contents. God's Book proper is now called the Bible, or "the Old Testament;" Christ's Book proper is now called "the New Testament." "Testament, with us, is indicative of a solemn authentic instrument in writing, by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate, usually called a will."—Webster.

"In reference to the canonical books—Old Testament and New, the name is equivalent to the term covenant," says the same lexicographer. But with us Christians, this, though canonical, is not Scriptural. We have two words in the Greek language representative of two distinct documents—a Suntheekes and a Diatheekes. The former indicates an agreement between two parties equal to each other in rank and dignity—each of them stipulating or restipulating terms or conditions of agreement in any matter.

The latter, diatheekes, also indicates an agreement between two parties, but unequal in rank or dignity—one of which stipulates terms or conditions of agreement or co-operation in reference to some specific object, to which the other consents. The Romans called it a consensus—a foedus, a league equally binding on both parties. The conqueror, or the hero of the day, propounded the terms; the conquered submissively assented to them. Each party ever after, during the period contemplated in the covenant, was to fulfil his obligations in their full import, letter, and spirit.

Now we have, in the Greek Scriptures of the Christian religion, the word diatheke thirty-three times—and suntheke not once. The absolute governments of earth legislate, adjudicate, and execute their own laws. If every absolute monarch was immutably good and righteous, omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotent, we and all others would say, "Let him, during life, occupy the throne and wield the sceptre." But this is out of the area of human philosophy and human experience. We have three distinct divine institutions in that Book of books, the Bible. We have, indeed, two Bibles of divine institution—the Jewish and the Christian. The first is a theocracy, the second a christocracy. Preceding these there was necessarily a patriarchy—extending from Adam to Moses. The Adamic and the Noachic preceded the Mosaic. The two former were necessarily family institutions. Each of them, indeed, had its own prophet, its own priest, and its own king. These three for a time were merely family institutions, in its most literal acceptation; and hence, every father was the prophet, the priest, and the king of his whole family or household.

The expansion or extension of any society does not change the nature of it. A single family, perfect and complete, is a miniature world. The father is the prophet, priest, and king of his whole family circle; and to him the queen of the household herself, is, by a divine ordinance, to be subject, in all respects, excepting the legitimate area of her own conscience.

But our main object in noticing the article above quoted—under the startling and exciting annunciation, "The Bible in Colleges"—What! The Bible in a college! as though a phenomenon of vast proportions and indications had spontaneously sprung up amongst us. Having for eighteen years had the Bible in Bethany College—indeed, from its first enrolment of its first class of students—we have had some experience, of much encouragement to those who are about to make the experiment. There is but one plausible objection in all my reading or hearing presented or propounded by any writer or orator upon this theme. We shall pay our compliments to it. It is "the danger, the alleged imminent danger to which our sons and wards are exposed in a college, or in a school, where the Bible is read without an orthodox catechism, or some cautious, sound, orthodox teacher, who will induct them into the true doctrines of our own church."

"Your own church!" Yes, your own church! But tell me, did you ever meet with the name of your own church in Bible or Testament? We read of Christ's church in the Christian Scriptures, but never met with your own church from Moses to John. It is not once named from Genesis to the Apocalypse!

"Your church," your "sound doctrines," are uncanonical. They are not once named from Moses to John—unless in the apocalyptic views of the apostacy! Did any man ever see the name of your church in Holy Writ! The Papal church, the Episcopal church, the Presbyterian church, the Congregational church, the Methodist church, the Baptist church, the Burgher church, the Anti-Burgher church, the Universalist church, the Particular Baptist church, the General Baptist church, the Mennonite church, the Dutch Reformed church, &c. "Divide and conquer," has been the Devil's motto for more than eighteen hundred years. There is but one divine church on earth, and it is frequently unhappily called, "the invisible church!" But this vocabulary of church institutions is inadequate to the fearful realities of the still existent Papal apostacy.

Opinions, theories, speculations, philosophies, orthodoxies, heterodoxies, creeds and catechisms, so far as reliable evidence intimates, never saved Jew or Greek, Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free.

We are all in this age greatly addicted to doctrines. Hence, our doctrinal and speculative theories have supplanted the Oracles of God, and made the gospel, the doctrine according to godliness, of little or no effect. These idols of the age are as gross and outlandish as the doctrines of the Epicureans and the Stoics of ancient date. They are, to speak in a figurative style, wholly outlandish—foreign or barbarous innovations, that gender strife, without one redeeming quality.

The Bible in every school, from the primary to the college, and the Bible therein read and studied—not in its "doctrines," as interpreted by the prosy Rabbis of the "five points," or of the "thirty-three sections," or of the "thirty-nine articles," which never saved man, woman, or child, since Noah landed on the Mountain of Ararat, in Armenia, near the superficial centre of our earth. The Bible in the school and in the college—not in the library on the shelf, but in the hands of teacher and taught; not in its alleged doctrines, but in its great, and grand, and magnificent facts, precepts, and promises. These are the pabulum vite, the congenial nutriment of an immortal being—the bread and the water of life to every one who feeds and feasts upon them. Jeremiah said, "I found thy word and I did eat it" (Jeremiah xv. 16.) "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever" (Psalm cxix. 3.) "I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies as in all riches"—"I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed"—"Thine ordinances have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage"—"I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation"—"Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart; I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold"—"Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them"—"My soul hath kept thy testimonies, and I lovethem exceedingly"—"I have longed for thy salvation, O, Lord, and thy law is my delight"—"O, how I love thy law, it is my meditation all the day"—"Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path"—"Make thy face to shine upon thy servant, and teach me thine ordinances"—"The righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting"—"Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments"—"I have longed for thy salvation, O, Jehovah, and thy law is my delight."*

What a commentary are these inspired breathings of the sweet Bard of Israel upon the cold formalisms, the apathetic ceremonials of the would-be esteemed and worshipful devotees, of the sublimated and rectified orthodoxies of by-gone Puritanism, in each and every form of pure abstract traditions.

But most unhappily, for the living generation, we are continually agonizing in the conflicts of "doctrines," "sound doctrines"—sound ecclesiastic politics and the falsely called philosophies of Christianity.

Could we leave these doctrines on the shelf, or cast them to the moles, or to the bats, and adopt for them the oracles of the Living God, what a change! What a transition from darkness to light, and from servility to the flesh to that liberty with which the Lord enfranchises all the true citizens of his spiritual and everlasting kingdom.

* Bernard's Bible on my shelf, published, Philadelphia. Lippincott's, 1842. It is a decided improvement of the James' Version.

Doctrines and philosophies are the prolific source of envy, strife, vain glory, and evil surmisings. But the Word of God, sharper than any two-edged sword, pierces the heart — separating between the soul and the spirit, and is a critic, a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart of every man that receives it with a candid and a discriminating mind.

The Devil is a profound critic and often quotes Scripture, as many of our Doctrines of Divinity do, I was about to say the doctors of devilry, which Webster well defines. The Devil had the impudence to quote Holy Writ in the presence of the Lord himself.

"Get thee behind me adversary, thou art an offence to me; for thou favorest not the things of God, but those of men,"† was the rebuke of the Lord Messiah, administered to Satan at Cæsarea Philippi, when and where he first revealed the basis of his kingdom.

Messiah's kingdom had not then been established. It had not, indeed, then commenced. Its founder was the Prophet, the High Priest, and the King of kings, after the rank and order of Melchisedeck—to whom Levi, when in the person of Abraham, paid tithes.

All official honours and glories culminate in him; and now in his kingdom radiate from him in superlative grandeur and splendor throughout the whole area of creation. So that on the annunciation of his coronation a new era, a new empire commenced, which is predestined to culminate in his glorious and final triumph over sin, and death, and Satan, and every rebel, of whatever form or character, within the circle of Jehovah's everlasting realm. Redemption is, therefore, the most glorious demonstration of the inconceivable, and consequently, the unutterable grandeur and glory of the infinite and everlasting head and founder of the universe. Truly we may say that eye has never seen, ear has never heard, nor heart of man ever conceived the glorious realities which our Father and our God has provided and prepared for them that love him and keep his commandments.

† So translates the revised edition by David Bernard, a work of very considerable merit. Favorest was more apposite than savorest at that crisis.

What a meagre and imperfect conception of Messiah's realm have these sectaries that build churches on doctrines and commandments of men! or on the petty snarling metaphysics of scholasticisms—the feverish dreams of Bachelors and Doctors of multiform spectres, the hobgoblins and frightful apparitions of sickly novices, who know not what they say — or what to say in behalf of their fainting dreams and hideous apparitions! The gesticulations and genuflexions of carnal spiritualists, are but a few of the off-shoots from the bitter roots of that hydra-schismatic demonology, of the ever barking dogs of heterodoxy of which the Apostle to the Gentiles bade his contemporaries to beware.

The Bible in schools, in all schools, is indispensable to the rational, moral, and religious education and development of humanity in its triune nature of body, soul, and spirit. The present schools of literature and science are much in advance of those which existed when the present century commenced its career. But still, even to this hour, with a comparatively few exceptions, they are not in strict conformity with the cravings and demands of humanity, as, in the aggregate, we contemplate it.

The Bible is God's library, and it is the richest and best library in the universe known to man. It is a library of sixty-six volumes, embracing in its area some 4000 years—that is, from the birth of time to the close of the first century of the Christian Institution. There were employed in the production of it as writers, no less than some thirty persons. These were but the amanuenses of the dictating, guiding, and inspiring Holy Spirit; for "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." Some forty, or perhaps more, amanuenses of the Holy Spirit were employed in writing the two volumes called the Jewish and the Christian Scriptures. The New Testament is the work of eight writers. Paul, amongst these, occupied the largest space. He preached and wrote more than any other Christian ambassador. He occupied the largest field of labor of any man in the whole Christian ministry. Moses in the Old Testament, and Paul in the New, occupy the largest area of any of the amanuenses of the Holy Spirit. But one and the self-same Spirit inspired them all. They all spoke and wrote under his influence and guidance.

None of them ever wrote an essay that has survived their day, so far as the annals of the world attest. Not one essay on the rolls of time can claim an apostolic origin or authority. They spake and wrote, in all their ministrations, as they were moved, prompted, and guided by the Holy Spirit. In hearing and in heeding them we, therefore, hear and heed the Lord who sent them, and the Spirit that inspired them. They teach no theory, no philosophy, no orthodoxy whatever. They attest what God and Christ did, and said what they promised and what they threatened.

Didachee, doctrine, appears thirty times only in the Christian Scriptures, and is always found in the singular number, and with one exception is represented by the word doctrine. That single exception is Titus i. 9, "that which has been taught."

Didaskalia is found twenty-one times in the New Testament, and is represented in the Common Version by doc- trine, teaching, learning, in the singular number; but when used in the plural number, it is always with respect to, and is translated by—"doctrines, and commandments of men;" "doctrines of demons." Never found in the plural when associated with Christ's teachings and that of the Apostles. These are monumental and significant facts, that demand attention and special regard.

The Doctrine of God, of Christ, of the Apostles is unique, and, therefore, is always singular. The doctrines of men and demons are as diverse as their pedigrees and genealogies—and are properly found in the plural number.

The Bible in all schools and colleges, and seminaries of learning, should most assuredly be daily read and studied. But no theory, speculation, creed, or commentary should ever be interposed between the Bible and the eyes and ears of the student or pupil. The persons, the facts, the characters, and the actions of Bible men and women should be read, and may be commented on to the advantage and profit of every student. We have the biographies of men, good and bad, in Holy Writ, made monumental, and, therefore, they stand as beacons and warnings, to guide, and guard, and comfort, and cheer us in the pilgrimage of life.

Such examples, monuments, and lessons, from such a source, are profitable and advantageous to the young pilgrim in the commencement of his earthly pilgrimage. But theories, speculations, doctrines, and opinions are unwarranted and unwarrantable in Holy Writ, and ought never to be obtruded upon the young pilgrim about to commence the pilgrimage of life.

It is worthy of emphatic utterance, that there is not a speculative argument, or what is usually called a theory, propounded from Genesis to the Apocalypse. The first sentence in Holy Writ asserts a positive fact, and the last sentences of the Christian Scriptures exhibit the all important and most transcendent facts or events culminating in the second coming of the Hero of redemption. History and prophecy are the materials of both Testaments, and both have facts, either past or future, in their eye, in their heart, in their hand, and on their tongue.

All their schisms and alienations, in what is called Christendom, have in their origin and in their end, theories, speculations, and abstractions which never converted a sinner, nor confirmed a saint.

Why not, then, learn from the records of the past to eschew what is evil and to pursue what is good—the things that make for peace, the themes “by which we may edify one another!” May we not conclude in the words of King Solomon:—“Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter,” on this subject. “Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole happiness of man.”* The reason annexed is, “for God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether good or evil.” He throws down the gauntlet, cavalier like; and asks, what can the man do that cometh after the King?—“Even that which has already been done.”

But whither are we wandering from our theme?

The Bible in the school is not the Bible in the pulpit. It is not the doctrine of the Bible. It is not the commentary upon the Bible. It is not the theory of the Bible. It is the Bible itself. It is its own facts and documents, as stated by the holy men who spake and wrote under the direction and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. The Bible deals not in theories, in speculations, in philosophies, or in abstractions.

It is not a theodicy, a theogony, a theocracy, or a theology. It is an encyclopædia of Divinity and humanity. It is a revelation of God in man, and of man in God. It is a revelation of the mysteries of the universe, so far as relates to the mystery of godliness, and of the past, the present, and the future man. It is, to us, the library of God, and the library of man as he was, as he is, and as he will hereafter be.

It spans the arch of time, leaning upon an eternity past, and upon an eternity to come, as respects both Divinity and humanity, in all their attitudes, past, present, and future. It is THE BOOK of books, the book of life everlasting, to a ruined world.

What a treasure in itself! What a gift to man! It is self-interpretive, and has done for man what all the libraries on earth, without it, could never have done. Come, then, expressive silence, muse its praise. A. C.

NO RITUAL IN THE NEW COVENANT.

THE New Testament contains no liturgy, no congregational service, as did the Old Testament. In the writings of the great Jewish apostle, Moses, there is a ritual, a liturgy, a tabernacle or temple service laid down; but no such thing is found in the apostolic epistles. This point seems not to have been so clearly apprehended by some of the churches as was necessary to their consistency and comfort. Finding all the public, religious, and social services of * King James' translators have chosen another version of this oracle. They have it:—“For this is the whole duty of man.” This is perfectly gratuitous and inapposite to the topic which he proposed in his book of Ecclesiastes. The question before him was not a question of duty, but a question of happiness—or the summum bonum—the chief, the paramount happiness of man. He thus propounds the question:—“I sought to see what is that good for the sons of men, which they should do”—or pursue, “under the heaven all the days of their life.”

the Jews so clearly and emphatically laid down] in the Jewish Scriptures, many have expected and looked in vain to find similar regulations in the Christian Scriptures. And yet could such a ritual be found, or a liturgy made out for Christian congregations, it would be a discrepancy not to be reconciled with the genius of the book. Does any one ask, How this can be? I will attempt an answer: 1st, It was necessary, while the age of symbols lasted, that a worship, symbolic in its nature, and intended to adumbrate, or foreshadow, with prophetic accuracy, a new order of things, should be most minutely stated, and most explicitly propounded by that infinite mind to which the things that be not are as real and present as the things which are, or do now exist; in order that the desired ends might be gained—that the salvation of the gospel might be thus introduced and fully confirmed. This alone rendered a liturgy or a divine service in the sanctuary necessary. But, in the second place, the Jewish age was the minority of the religious world. During that period there was not a full grown man. The patriarchal was the infancy, or childhood; the Jewish, the youth; and the Christian age, the manhood of the religious world. Let none think that this is an arbitrary disposition of the ages or epochs in the religious world. There is the religious as well as the natural world, and both have their childhood, youth, and manhood. We have the authority of the Holy Spirit for considering the saints, during the Jewish age, in the same predicament as minors. In this state they were kept under a ritual or prescribed form of worship. A remark or two on Gal. iv. may be sufficient for our present purpose. "Now, I say," says Paul, "as long as the heir is a minor, he differs nothing from a bondman, although he be Lord of all. For he is under tutors and stewards until the time before appointed by his Father. So also we, whilst we are minors, were in bondage under the elements of the world. But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because you are sons, God has sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father."

Here the apostle asserts: 1st, That he and his brethren were, while under the law, in the state of minors. 2nd, While in that state they were in the condition of bondmen; kept under tutors and stewards, at whose command they must move obsequious. That the time appointed by the Father, in his will and testament, when this state of things should cease, had actually arrived; and now they were raised from the rank of servants to the standing of sons.

So soon as a person has terminated his nonage, or minority, and becomes a full-grown man, he is no longer treated as a child or servant. He is allowed to have a judgment of his own, and to exercise it. This similitude the apostle uses to represent the difference between the people of God under the old economy, and the people of God under the new. Under the latter they are permitted to exercise their reason, and to act from the principles infused into their minds from the development of divine philanthropy. Hence, the New Testament, after stating the ordinances and statutes of the kingdom of Jesus, prescribes no ritual or liturgy, but leaves the worshippers to act by that Holy Spirit which the gospel inspires.

A. C.

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thy increase.

Hatred stirreth up strifes; but love covereth all things.

MESSIAH'S GOVERNMENT.

THE entire field of human thought embraces but two departments—the department of matter, and the department of mind; these two make up the entire universe of God. Man possesses these two elements, to a limited extent, in his own person: he is himself composed of matter and mind. There are two kinds of power adapted to these two departments: namely, physical or mechanical power, and moral or motive power. God and man have both employed these two kinds of power; differing widely in degree, but the same in kind. God has revealed Himself as a great physical and moral ruler. By physical power, He rules the physical universe; by moral power, the moral universe. The various terms we apply to power, are only subdivisions of these two general kinds. Divine power and human power, are not two kinds of power. If God slay a man by electricity, and one man slay another by gunpowder, the kind of power in both cases is the same; namely, physical. So, if God persuade a man, or an angel persuade a man, the power in kind is the same; namely, moral. Moral power consists in the strength of the ideas, usually expressed in words or their equivalents; hence, the Word of God is said to be “quick and powerful.”

Words are the representatives of ideas; and hence, they are used for ideas themselves; as malicious words, insulting words, comforting words, &c.; but it is the idea that is held “malicious,” “insulting,” or “comforting;” and not the abstract words. In this sense, “the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth” (Rom. i. 16.) It is a universal truth, that men act from motive, in all their accountable actions. I believe this is held true by all our courts, and by all men of common sense. Then it seems manifest, that if men are brought to perform any actions or deeds by a power beyond the power of motive, they are not accountable for such deeds; but are mere machines: so far, at least, as they are made the subjects of such influence. Conversion, in the Bible, is therefore, attributed to the law, to the word, to the truth, &c. David says, “The LAW of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul” (Ps. xix. 7.) Jesus says, “And ye shall know the truth, and TRUTH shall make you free” (John viii. 32.) The angel from on high said, “Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and thy house shall be saved” (Acts xi. 14.) The Disciples are the only people, known to me, who suffer the disgrace of believing the last three texts. Do the sects believe that the law of the Lord converts the soul? No, indeed, they believe and teach that the special operation of the Holy Spirit converts the soul. Do they believe the truth makes men free? By no means: to use the words of Dr. Jeter, they believe it is done by an influence “distinct from, and above truth.” Do they believe Cornelius and his family were saved by the words which Peter spoke? Certainly not: they believe they were saved by the copious outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

In a system of rewards and punishments like that of the Messiah, four things seem indispensable to a moral government:—1, Faith must come from testimony. 2, The subject must act from motive. 3, He must form his character by his own works. 4, He must be judged, and rewarded or punished, according to his deeds. Most men will formally confess these four propositions; still the popular theory of “spiritual influence” in conversion, actually denies them all. But we will enquire what the Bible says on these points:—

1. Faith comes from testimony.

“God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should HEAR THE WORD of the gospel and BELIEVE” (Acts xv. 7.) “And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians HEARING, BELIEVED, and were baptized” (Acts xviii. 8.) “So then, faith COMETH BY HEARING, and hearing by the WORD of GOD” (Rom. x. 17.) I regret that our opponents do not believe with Paul, that “faith comes by hearing.” They believe, “faith comes by feeling;” or, rather, that faith comes by the “operation of the Holy Spirit;” hence the practice of praying down the Holy Spirit on unbelievers to give them faith.

If faith is put into an unbeliever in that way, he is no more accountable for his faith than he is for his hangs; or for anything else that God has created within him. That doctrine destroys man's accountability, and saps the foundation of God's moral government over him.

2. The subject must act from motive.

"By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house" (Heb. xi. 7.) Faith in some sense, may, perhaps, be said to be the principle of action; but it strikes me, that which "moves" to action, must be properly, the "principle of action;" and Paul said, "Noah, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." Motive, then, is the principle of action; and by faith we obtained the motive. Moses also acted from motive: "For he had respect to the recompense of reward" (Heb. xi. 26.) They who obeyed the gospel on Pentecost, had a motive, namely: "remission of sins" (Acts ii. 38.) The great motives of Christian warfare are "glory, honour, and immortality." This Bible truth, although in harmony with common sense, is utterly at war with the modern theory of conversion. That theory does not allow that man acts from motive in regeneration; for it does not admit that he acts at all; but is passive. There is scarcely any point in which the Calvinistic churches are better agreed, than in the dogma that man is passive in regeneration—even Arminians only claim that the sinner is "willing" God should perform the act on him—and yet they suspend future rewards and punishments on an act in which man has no agency! The sects contend that God re-creates the man by the same power by which he created him at first—and, of course, man did not act from motive in being created at first—nor is he more accountable (on their plan) for the second creation than the first.

3. He must form his own character by his own works.

"But in every nation, he that feareth him and WORKETH RIGHTEOUSNESS, is accepted with him" (Acts x. 35.) "Know ye not, that to whom YE YIELD YOURSELVES servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom YE OBEY; whether of sin unto death, or obedience unto righteousness? God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but YE HAVE OBEYED from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being THEN made free from sin, ye BECAME the servants of righteousness" (Rom. vi. 16, 17, 18.) "Seeing YE HAVE PURIFIED YOUR SOULS in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently" (1 Peter i. 22.)

If these Scriptures do not teach, that men form their character by their deeds, it is difficult to conceive how that proposition can be stated in human language. These texts teach: 1, That a man must work righteousness in order to be accepted with God; but the sects teach, that he is accepted by faith alone, before he can work righteousness at all. These texts teach: 2, That we become the servants of God by obeying him; but the sects teach, that we are made the servants of God by the special operation of the Holy Spirit, before we CAN obey him acceptably. These texts teach: 3, That we purify our souls by obeying the truth; but the sects teach, that God purifies our souls by the direct agency of his Spirit, before we ever WILL obey the truth. And yet in the same breath they tell sinners they are "forming characters for eternity!" According to orthodoxy, man is born into the world with a sinful nature:—Adam forms his wicked character for him, and the Holy Spirit forms his good character; so that he has no more to do, in reality, in forming his own character, than the potter's vessel has to do in forming itself; and he is therefore just as accountable as the potter's vessel.

4. Every man will be judged, and rewarded or punished according to his works.

"Was not Abraham our father justified BY WORKS, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Ye see, then, how that BY WORKS a man is justified, and not by faith only" (James ii. 21-24.) "And shall come forth, they that have DONE GOOD, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have DONE EVIL, unto the resurrection of condemnation" (John v. 29.) "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to THEIR WORKS. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it ; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them ; and they were judged, every man according to THEIR WORKS" (Rev. xx. 12-13.) "For we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ ; that every one may receive the things DONE in the body, according to that HE HATH DONE, whether it be good or bad" (2 Cor. v. 10.)

It is certainly one of the greatest wonders in human depravity, how a pretended believer in the Bible can look these and other like Scriptures in the face, and then say, a man is justified of God without works of any kind ! The doctrine that makes man's salvation to turn, not on his own deeds, but on God's deed, performed on him by the Spirit, sets aside God's clearly revealed rule of judgment. The question in that court will not be, "What has the Judge done ?" But, "What has the prisoner at the bar done ?"

The disciples teach that THE HOLY SPIRIT CONVERTS SINNERS ; but, they understand, He does it, as the Scriptures say, by the "Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth ;" and not by physical power.

J. I. LOWELL.

DOUBTFUL DISPUTATIONS.

THE Religious Reformation in which we are engaged, was commenced in a spirit of liberality and Christian forbearance. Its primary object was, to put an end to the unhappy divisions which exist in the religious world, and to unite together, in one communion, all the followers of Christ. In order to accomplish this, it was proposed to take the Bible as the basis of union, and the only authoritative standard of faith and practice. In regard to all important matters of faith and duty, it was believed that the Bible would be found to be so clear and explicit as to be readily comprehended, and that in regard to the more remote and difficult questions appertaining to the mysteries of redemption, while much might be learned by a diligent and prayerful study of the Scriptures, a proper degree of forbearance was to be exercised in respect to those who were deficient in this knowledge. Furthermore, in regard to all questions not directly treated of in the Scriptures, these were to be regarded as mere matters of opinion, respecting which, any one was free to entertain, but not to urge upon others his particular views. It was hoped that, by this method, all ground of religious dissension and division would be removed, and that the scandalous strifes and controversies of Protestants might be brought to a close, so as to secure the fulfilment of the apostolic exhortation : "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you."

In the progress of the effort thus to reform religious society, it cannot be denied that great good has been accomplished. Whatever may be urged from the fact that sects and parties still exist, or that errorists and bigots may now and then have been found in the ranks of the Reformers, certain it is, that the principles of this religious movement have been triumphantly established—that the all-sufficiency of the Scriptures as a basis of Christian union, and as the standard of divine truth has been nobly vindicated, and experimentally demonstrated—that an amount of truth has been presented to the minds of men such as has never heretofore been exhibited since the days of the Apostles, and which has resulted in restoring to the world the gospel of Christ in its primitive simplicity and purity—and that, for the time, much more has really been accomplished by this religious movement than its most sanguine friends anticipated. Such has been its power, that it has compelled even those sects which have bitterly opposed it to modify their teaching and their practice ; to abandon various unscriptural usages, and to accommodate themselves, in many important respects, to the increased biblical knowledge of those communities in which the principles of the Reformation have been faithfully exhibited. Its presentations of Scripture truths have, in fact, "girdled" (to use the woodman's phrase) several of the existing parties, which have evidently commenced their period of decline.

In contemplating these results, the advocates of the Reformation have much reason for encouragement, as well as for devout thankfulness; and certainly, the successful establishment of the truths we teach, in spite of talented, ingenious, and educated opposers, and before the most intelligent communities, ought to confirm every one in the belief of them, and be an effectual preventive of any departure from them. Such, nevertheless, is the waywardness and self-sufficiency of some individuals, and the instability of others, that they will occasionally repudiate the most obvious Scripture truths which they had previously accepted, or suffer themselves to be carried away by some specious novelty, and proceed to create discord and confusion by their efforts to build again what had been justly overthrown, or to give plausibility to some original conceit. Such aberrations, it is true, detract not in the least from the value and importance of the truth, but they are, nevertheless, to be regretted as hindrances to its progress, and as divisions in favour of the enemy, effective, of course, in proportion to the influence, conspicuity, or ability of the persons concerned in them. Such things, indeed, occurred at the establishment of the Christian church in apostolic times, and Paul expressly predicts to the elders of the church at Ephesus, that from amongst themselves men would arise, "speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them."

Changes of religious sentiment may be expected to occur frequently amongst those who are governed by men's opinions. But an exchange of one set of errors for another, is a matter of small importance; nor are such trials of partyism to be regretted, as they tend to show the stability of the foundations which men have substituted for the rock on which Christ has built his church. The case is different, however, with regard to those who profess to have adopted the Bible as a sufficient rule of faith and practice, and as a plain and infallible teacher of the things of eternal life. When such persons, after having publicly adopted certain truths as clearly taught in the Bible, are afterwards led to renounce them, and to become advocates of old errors, or of new conceits, based upon whimsical constructions, and misinterpretations of Scripture, their changes have a direct tendency to discredit the fundamental principle of this Reformation, viz: that the Bible is a sufficient and infallible rule; for opponents will not be slow to impute to our principles the fallibility which of right belongs to such opinionative and changeable individuals.

Among the subjects which have justly been regarded as fairly and fully settled in this Reformation, has been that of "conversion." No one question has been so much discussed, owing to the fact that the views of the parties on this matter have had a direct tendency to render the preaching of the gospel nugatory, and have thus come into direct conflict with this religious movement. Within the last fifty years, conversion by a special operation of the Spirit, has become a favourite doctrine with the Protestant world. It is astonishing what a hold this erroneous view has obtained upon religious society at large, and how deeply it has insinuated itself into the very substance of its faith and of its practice. It has become a sort of shibboleth, and an infallible test of orthodoxy, to which all other points of disagreement must yield; and agreement here, being quite sufficient to hide a multitude of differences both in policy and in tenets.

Its truth is taken for granted always, and must not be questioned, and it has accordingly been the great offence of this reformatory effort, that it has ventured to doubt, and to demand Scripture proof in regard to it. The greatest amount of prejudice has been produced in this way, and the most unjust and false accusations have been brought against us on this account; as for instance, that we deny the presence and influence of the Holy Spirit altogether, and are nothing but mere ritualists or formalists in religion.

For my part, I am far from thinking that this particular controversy has been judiciously managed on the part of the Reformation, or that it has always been kept on the ground to which the principles of this movement properly confine it. Some have introduced speculative theories in regard to it, based on philosophical views of human nature, which are just as objectionable as those propounded on the opposite side. Nearly all seem to have overlooked the fact, that it is a mere question of opinion, which neither required nor deserved such elaborate efforts at confutation ; all that was necessary, on our own principles, being, to show simply that it was a matter of opinion, and that, as such, it ought not to be suffered to engross the attention, or to disturb the peace of Christians. In making it a matter of special and protracted controversy, and giving to it an undue importance, our disputants have only confirmed their opponents in the belief that it is a cardinal doctrine—an essential portion of “the faith once delivered to the saints,” for which they are bound in conscience earnestly to contend.

I am by no means disposed to underestimate the evil effects of this opinion. Its direct tendency and result are, to induce men to disparage and to resist the gospel, while waiting for those “spiritual operations” in which they are taught to believe. But its power to produce such an effect resides in this, that it is supposed to be a part of faith, and is not recognized in its true character, as a human opinion or theory.

Some of the best men and most sincere Christians who have ever lived, have entertained the view that there is, in every case of valid “conversion,” a direct influence exerted upon the heart by the Holy Spirit. To my certain knowledge, some of the most devoted labourers in the present Reformation whose memory is entitled to peculiar reverence, held this view during the entire period of their ministry. But this did not detract in the least from their usefulness, nor did it interfere in any respect, in their cases, either with Christian union and fraternity, or with a full and correct presentation of the gospel, and a direct and successful appeal to sinners to obey it. And this for the simple reason, that they had too much good sense, and too much regard for the principles of the Reformation, to insist upon it, or to obtrude it upon others. The fact is, that, as a matter of opinion, it is absolutely harmless, and the evil attending it has proceeded, not from the opinion itself, but from the manner in which it has been urged upon the minds of men, and the undue authority it has acquired by being erroneously placed among the things of faith. Let me say, emphatically, that, as reformers, we have nothing at all to do with theories of “conversion” on either side. The opposite philosophy of “motives,”

“words,” and “arguments,” which some would make part and parcel of this Reformation, is just as great an error on the opposite side ; and to urge it, as great a departure from our principles as it would be to urge the theory of the sects. The object of this religious movement is to call men away from all such speculations, and to confine their attention to what is written in the Book. We have no right to mix up our opinions or our philosophy with the gospel of Christ. Our duty plainly is to teach and preach the things divinely revealed, as all-sufficient for human salvation, and to allow every one to entertain such opinions as may be agreeable to him in regard to matters not distinctly or directly presented in the Sacred Writings.

That “the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth”—that “faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen”—that “faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God,” are plain scriptural propositions, which are neither to be gainsayed nor explained away, and which do not stand in need of any human philosophy for their elucidation. It ought to be sufficient for all to know this, and to receive these and all other declarations of Scripture with reverence and with implicit confidence. The spirit that inquires : “How can these things be ?” is far oftener that of a cavilling scepticism, a self-conceited rationalism, or a no less dogmatic and visionary mysticism, than that of an humble Christian faith and piety.

It is not, however, because of any practical value that appertains to the various theories which are advanced on each side of the question of “conversion,” that their propounders urge them so earnestly upon religious society, but simply because they are human and not divine. These men love their own things more than the things of God, and would much rather gratify their pride of opinion, their love for originality, or their own intellectual taste, than receive, with humility and meekness “the engrafted word,” or obey the commandments of Jesus. There are no heretics in humanity—there are no heresiarchs in piety. It is in regard to the “how” and the “why” of matters not revealed — (and thus not revealed because they are of no practical or present utility) that men quarrel with each other, and not as to why they are to "visit the fatherless and the widow," or how a man is to "keep himself unspotted from the world." It must be admitted, nevertheless, that with most, if not with all of those who accept human opinions and theories at second hand, these are mistaken for matters of faith. Such persons are simply imposed upon, because they neglect to examine the Scriptures for themselves, or to make the proper distinction between faith and opinion. This, as I have before stated, is the very error which has given so wide-spread popularity, and so great authority to the notion, that to render "conversion" valid, it must be effected by some sensible demonstration of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

In order, then, to correct these aberrations, the present reformation proposes a return to the Divine testimony; to the gospel of Christ as originally preached by the Apostles, with all its institutions, promises, and blessings; constituting the "faith formally delivered to the saints," and the primitive practice in its uncorrupted simplicity and purity. It takes the ground, that it is "Christ crucified" that is to be preached to sinners, and not theories of conversion; and that trust in him accompanied by obedience to His commands, is the only true and manifest evidence of discipleship. The world has been oppressed long enough by an opinionative, theoretical, dogmatical, and disputatious bigotry, under the name of Christianity. It is time that the church should return to its first faith and to its first love. It is to accomplish this most desirable object that we, as a people, are, under the Divine guidance, professedly engaged. Let us, then, adhere steadfastly to the principles we have adopted, and which have hitherto proved so impregnable and so efficient, and let us increase our efforts in this good cause, ever remembering, that notwithstanding all that has been done, there remains yet much to be accomplished, and that we shall be justly regarded as "Reformers," or friends of the Reformation, less from the influence, which, in our hands, the Reformation may exert over others, than from that which it shall exercise over ourselves.

R. R.

WHAT IS HERESY?

FRIENDS,—What is heresy? Who are the heretics? Of course you will reply—"Heresy is false doctrine; and heretics are its holders and propagators. We, at any rate, are not heretics; our doctrine is sound and orthodox. We regard those as heterodox and heretical who differ from us." A very comfortable, but very uncharitable, and not less false notion, certainly. Don't be astonished when we tell you that all the sects of Christendom and beyond it are heresies, and all their adherents are heretics. A heresy is not a doctrine, but a sect or party; a heretic is not a holder of some notion in particular, but a leader or an adherent of some particular denomination or faction. All the denominations are heresies, and all their members are heretics; so the words import, as every scholar knows, and such is their use in Scripture. The sect, party, or heresy, may be good, bad, or indifferent; the word itself says nothing of its character. The sectary, partizan, or heretic, may be a true or false man; the word itself does not inform us which. The noun hairesis comes from a verb which signifies to choose, and denotes a chosen way of life. In the Acts and Epistles, we have it sometimes translated sect, "The sect of the Sadducees," "of the Pharisees," "of the Nazarenes," and sometimes transferred heresy—"The way which they call heresy." So far as the word is concerned, it conveys no reproach, though it may be used reproachfully, like other words, and is, of course, susceptible of being qualified by other words in a good or bad sense — e. g. "the strictest sect of our religion" "shall bring in damnable heresies." The Jewish sectaries naturally objected to the followers of Jesus, as forming a new and opposing party to themselves, as they felt the Christians to be. The disciples of the Messiah formed his party. They were recognized as the sect of the Nazarenes. While this was their reproach, it was also their glory. They gloried, justly, in being reproached for the name of Christ. The faithful would have no other; they could form no other party than simply that of the Lord. To form another was to prove unfaithful to him. Sects in the Christian church were impossible, except in connection with "strifes and seditions." It was in view of the apostacy, that Peter predicted the rise of "condemnable heresies." He who would form or join a party from the one party of the Lord, is to be rejected by the faithful after the first and second admonition. If the professors of the Christian faith in these days understood what they profess, they would no more think of separating and ranking themselves as parties, sects, or denominations, than of calling themselves sons of Belial. They would no more insult the Mediatoral Throne with the mention of "Christians of every name," and of "all denominations," than they would pay religious homage to Beelzebub. But they don't understand. Their religious doctors have frightened them with ghost stories about some terrible myth of multiform mien, called heresy, in fear of which they hold themselves under the bonds of that which they dread, and refuse to be, and regard themselves not as the partizans of men, but as only the party of the Lord. Readers, be you wiser. T. H. M.

Edinburgh.

SCHISM.

SCHISM may exist where there is the most perfect agreement in faith, in doctrine, in all religious tenets. Undue attachment to certain persons, to the disparagement of others, partial regards because of personal preferences, are the true elements of schism or division as it appeared in Corinth, and as the word is used in the New Testament. But few persons can, now-a-days, correctly appreciate the force of the word schism in the apostolic age, because but a very few experimentally know the intimacies, the oneness of heart and soul, that obtained and prevailed in the Christian profession, while all was genuine and uncorrupt. A union formed on Christian principles — a union with Christ and with his people, in views, in feelings, aims, and pursuits—a real co-partnery for eternity, almost annihilated individuality itself, and inseparably cemented into one spirit all the genuine members of Christ's body.

While endeavouring to abolish the old sects, let us be cautious that we form not a new one. This may be done by either adding to, or subtracting from, the apostolic constitution a single item.

Factionists, or opinionists, or those who seek to attach men to themselves, because of their opinions or talents, or personal accidents, whatever they may be, are to be regarded as the very roots of bitterness in the Christian church—as seeking their own interests, honors, and profits, and not the things of Jesus Christ. By such spirits as these the ancient schisms and sects began; and by kindred spirits, of which every generation can furnish its ratios, they are kept alive. All such persons have not the power of effecting much; but now and then one arises and succeeds in drawing away disciples after him.—Christian System.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE

CHRISTIAN experience, like matrimonial, parental, or filial experience, is immutably the concomitant and the product of the relation indicated by the word to which it is affixed. None but those, in any state or relation, can possess or enjoy the experience peculiar to that state or relation. None but a parent can have or enjoy parental feelings or emotions. None but those in the conjugal relation can possess or enjoy conjugal affections. The experience of a patriarch, a parent, a husband, a wife, a son, or a daughter, can only be realized and enjoyed by those actually living in those relations. A subject of Queen Victoria cannot have the experience of a citizen of New York, Virginia, or Kentucky. Neither could a citizen of the last have the experience of the first. No more can any one who is an Infidel, a Sceptic, a mere Jew, or a Gentile, possess, realize, or enjoy the experience of a Christian.

Are not these positions so palpably evident to every one who understands the language in which they are expressed, as to demand no other evidence or proof of their truthfulness than the simple statement or assertion of them? We, therefore, on these conceded facts, are compelled to affirm that none but a Christian can have a Christian's experience.

Whatever, then, constitutes a Christian, must be previously possessed by any and every one before he can be truthfully, and in fact, denominated a Christian. He may, indeed, be a Methodist, a Calvinist, a Lutheran, a Congregationalist, a Presbyterian, an Episcopalian, a Romanist, or a Dissenter; but a Christian he cannot be without a Christian faith, a Christian love, a Christian hope, or in other words, a Christian experience.

A Jew necessarily has a Jew's experience, so far as his religion is concerned. A Pagan has, in like manner, a Pagan's experience. A Mahometan has a Mahometan's experience; so has a Christian a Christian's experience. But be it again emphatically stated that the state, the condition, and the relations must precede any experience whatever.

These almost, if not altogether self-evident positions, when calmly considered, and weighed in the balances of pure reason, constitute an unanswerable objection to the Baptist institution of demanding something else, or something more than a declaration of faith in the person, mission, and work of the Lord Jesus Christ, in order to immersion—indeed of demanding a Christian experience as a basis of, or as a preliminary measure to, a confession of faith in order to baptism, into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit!

What Christian experience had the three thousand Pentecostan converts to relate, who, on hearing Peter declare the facts of Christ's life, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, and glorification, demanded the will of Christ; and on hearing which, resigned themselves into the hands of the Apostles?

On hearing the imperative oracle uttered by Peter, seconded by one hundred and twenty disciples present, were they not immersed for the remission of their sins? Did they not receive the Holy Spirit as the Holy Guest in Christ's own household of faith?

The simple statement of these premises and conclusions is, we think, all sufficient to obtain the assent and the consent of every one who can understand the import of the words in which they are expressed. This being conceded, we ask, have we not then ascertained the one only rational, moral, and Christian basis of Christian faith, hope, and love; of Christian union, communion, and co-operation? And if so, is it not the duty, the privilege, the honour, and the happiness of all that appreciate it to repudiate every theory, philosophy, and form of doctrine substituted for that one and only basis presented, commanded, and approved by the Lord Jesus Christ himself in person at Cæsarea Philippi, reported by Matthew xvi. 16-18; and again authenticated and commanded by Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 16, promised and foretold by Isaiah the Evangelical Prophet, xxviii. 16—emphatically expressed in these words:—"Thus saith the Lord God, behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a rock, a tried rock, a precious corner rock, a sure foundation"—on which he that buildeth shall not be confounded, world without end?

Can any one imagine a more rational, a more sublime, or a more authoritative oracle than this? Or can any one present a foundation more simple, more intelligible, more attractive, more enduring, more in harmony with all the past, the present, and the future conditions of humanity, than this promised in Isaiah xxviii. 16—commended by Paul, (1 Cor. iii. 11) and adopted too by the Lord Jesus, and commanded too, by himself (Mat. xvi. 16-18)?

Read the fortunes of Lutheranism, Calvinism, Arminianism—trace the ramifications of the Episcopacies, the Prelacies, the Presbyteries, the Independencies, the Methodisms—general, special, and mixed; take the past and the present for the future; enquire where shall we find, and where shall we see, or where and when shall we hope to see anything better in the future of the present century, than we have already experienced in the first half of it? We shall most gratefully acknowledge our indebtedness to the person or persons who shall give us any rational, well documented foundation of hope for anything better in the future of distracted and bewildered Christendom, than we have experienced in the first half of the present century, as the legitimate fruit of any one party, or partisan creed, now consecrated in the affections of any people, based on any orthodoxy or heterodoxy properly so called.

But whither have we wended our way from "Christian experience," as a preparatory to Christian baptism, and not only, or merely, the possession of it, but the indispensable need and propriety of detailing or relating it antecedent to Christian baptism?

In old times the Apostles taught—"If you believe that Jesus is the Christ you may be baptized." This is the sum of the Apostolic requisition, but more orthodox than either Peter or Paul, the good old-fashioned "regular Baptists" of Virginia, and her beloved daughter, Kentucky, commanded the candidate as a sine qua non, or an absolutely necessary preliminary, to rehearse or narrate his Christian experience, and distinctly state what the Lord had specially done for his soul before the good "regular orthodox Baptist minister, elder, evangelist, or missionary, would presume to immerse him in the name of the Trinity."

But our Pædobaptist brotherhood, for whom we still cherish as much respect and benevolence as they will allow us, converting baptism into a spiritual circumcision, would have boys and girls, indeed babes and sucklings, spiritually circumcised on their faces with five drops of water from their five fingers, and do this in the name of the Theotæes, found but once in the Christian Scriptures (Rom. i. 20.)

Now be it noted and believed, that we profoundly regret any allusion to this theme, of which myriads of Baptists are ashamed, but the licentious abuse of a few leading spirits in the Valley of the Mississippi, who are incessantly abusing, slandering, and falsifying our position, our true position, our real and long cherished views and pleadings, makes it obligatory on us, as we reverence the Bible teachings, and would be faithful to our Lord and Redeemer, to advert to the frequent, indeed incessant falsifications, misrepresentations, and wilful perversions of our real views and positions so fully set forth in our debates and discussions with Dr. Rice, Robert Owen, Bishop Purcell, &c. We know all the living forms of orthodoxy and heterodoxy at home and abroad, and fear no opposition from any quarter; but while life lasts we have vowed to contend earnestly for the faith formerly delivered to the saints, and with the help and guidance of the Lord, we shall live and die with our armour on.

A. C.

TRUE WISDOM.

From G. R. Noyes' Translation of "Job."

WHERE shall true wisdom be found?
And where is the place of understanding?
Man knoweth not the price thereof;
Nor can it be found in the land of the living.
The deep saith, It is not in me;
And the sea saith, It is not with me.
It cannot be gotten for gold,
Nor shall silver be weighed out as the price thereof.
It cannot be purchased with the gold of Ophir,
With the precious onyx, or the sapphire.
Gold and crystal are not to be compared with it;
Nor can it be purchased with jewels of fine gold.
No mention shall be made of coral, or of crystal,
For wisdom is more precious than pearls.
The topaz of Ethiopia cannot equal it,
Nor can it be purchased with the purest gold.

Whence, then, cometh wisdom?
And where is the place of understanding?
Since it is hidden from the eyes of all the living,
And kept close from the fowls of the air.
The realms of death say,
We have heard only a rumor of it with our ears.
God alone knoweth the way to it;
He alone knoweth its dwelling-place.
For He seeth to the ends of the earth,
And surveyeth all things under the whole heaven.
When He gave the winds their weight,
And adjusted the waters by measure—
When He prescribed the laws to the rain,
And a path to the glittering thunderbolt—
Then did He see it, and make it known;
He established it, and searched it out;
But He said unto man,
Behold! the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom;
And to depart from evil, that is understanding.

CROMWELL REFUSING THE CROWN.

PICTURES are life-like utterances. They are beautiful symbols and representations of past events. They please the senses and captivate the soul. The artist is an important teacher. His book is all frontispiece, but the lessons he imparts are lasting and enduring. Nursery pictures are among the pleasant treasures of the past; and those with which in youth and more matured age we have become most familiar, speak to us in varied and impressive tones. They are household lecturers. Raphael, Martin, and others, have exercised the wonderful powers of their minds in detailing, upon canvases some of the most simple, as well as some of the most sublime, unfoldings of the wonderful Book.

When at Birmingham a few weeks ago, we went with our brother and sister King, to view a large and splendid painting, the subject of which refers to one of the most important epochs in the history of our country. The name of Cromwell is associated with conflicting reminiscences — calmness and terror, right and wrong, liberty and tyranny, praises and shrieks, prayers and powder, sighs and spears, songs and swords, creeds and cannons, faith and fate, fear and firmness, order and confusion, life and death. All these stand in connection with the man who was the great fact of his age — the terror of wickedness in high places, and the hope of those who yearned for liberty and right. In looking at the picture we felt drawn to it by a power which we cannot describe. The interest of the subject, and the genius of the artist, excited our admiration, and by the aid of history and civilization, our minds reverted to the time when the gloom of darkness overshadowed the land, and tyranny and ignorance prevailed. If we possessed the power, it would be quite out of place here to venture a criticism upon the picture. Without, however, speaking of any little defects, or of its many chaste, exquisite, striking and beautiful points, one thing is certain, that it possesses the power greatly to captivate and deeply to impress the human mind. The soul glows with admiration while beholding the manly dignity and stern faithfulness of him whom the artist has so cleverly presented. That there was much in the illustrious hero of the picture to love and admire, we think no one will doubt; and considering the dark and rude times in which he lived, he was a marvellous and wonderful man. Then England was convulsed from her centre to her circumference. Her men of might trembled, and her sons and daughters were filled with apprehension and fear. While gazing upon the picture we were impressed with a few thoughts which we hope may prove acceptable and profitable to the readers of the Harbinger, and we will give them as consecutively as possible.

1. At that time England had no King. Not so with the church of Christ. We have a King, who is crowned with glory and honor. Many of the Kings of England had perpetrated deeds of darkness and cruelty, and their lives had been associated with tyranny and wrong. Not so with the King whom we obey. When in this world he was full of kindness and love. "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his lips." He spoke in the language of sympathy, and unfolded to us the rich treasures of the kingdom. When England had no King she had a Protector. Not so with us: if we were to lose our King, our hopes and glory would fade away. Our King is our life. Were his government to cease, the church could not exist. Hail, holy King of Zion! We are thy subjects, bought with the water and the blood, and while here we are looking forward in the hope that we shall one day live and reign with Thee for ever.

2. We saw no expression of joy in that group. The men of state and might were there. The Chancellor and Speaker were grave and dignified. Upon the countenance of one were written the signs of jealousy. The soldier, with his firm but sorrowful countenance was there. The beautiful and jewelled crown was there, and the Bible was being searched by one to prove the divine right of Kings. And Milton, our highly-honored, and much-loved, and almost seraphic poet, was there, with a countenance serious, thoughtful, and grave, and not one lineament was illumined by the light and fervour of that majestic and eloquent idealization which constituted alike the brightness of his character and the glory of his renown. What a contrast between these men of might, and the humble but hopeful followers of the celestial Prince, when the soul is awakened to a sense of pardoning love. I could not but contrast the scenes. How bright and animate are the countenances of the pilgrims to Zion! How full of joy! How the faith which worketh by love gleams from the eye, ever coming up from the heart with a holy, impulsive, and irresistible power! In that picture even the soul of Milton seems to be bowed down to the chest. Not so with the members of Zion. The light of the Sun of Righteousness shines upon every soul, and the prospect of those who are assembled together is far brighter than the things which now appear. They are travelling to a city beautiful for habitation, which shall become the joy of the whole earth. It is the precious faith alone which can kindle the lion heart of a Cromwell to the hope which is full of immortality; and the solemn calmness of Milton's face requires the infusion of the heavenly hope before it can catch the gleams which quicken the spirit and welcome the soul to the mansions of glory.

3. We saw the crown refused. And strange to say, that when Cromwell refused the crown he grasped the power. He was not dazzled with the offer. He knew its worth, and rejected it. He knew something of the solemn responsibility of the coronation oath, and he also knew that many a head which had worn a crown had been racked with trouble and fear. He occupied a majestic position by refusing that which is considered so essential to majesty. Here the great man stands alone. In the annals of our country his position is without a parallel. The crown is offered, and Cromwell refuses it. For this conduct he has been both censured and eulogized. We offer no opinion. We could not refrain, however, from thinking of the folly and madness of those who have at the hands of a loving God and gracious Saviour the crown of righteousness offered to them, and which they refuse to accept. The church has no crown to give, but it has a crown to accept, and to every poor rebellious sinner the crown of glory is offered, with the blessed promise of the life which is eternal. God waits to be gracious, and the Spirit and the Bride say, Come. A crown which shall never fade away is offered, and strange to say, it is refused. It is a crown offered by the King of kings and Lord of lords. It is offered, too, in connection with a pure white robe, which has been washed in the blood of the Lamb. It is offered, too, in connection with a heavenly mansion. It is offered without money and without price, to make poor, guilty, dark, and hopeless sinners kings and priests unto God. It might have been noble in Cromwell to refuse an earthly crown, but it is ignoble and wicked to refuse the crown which stands in connection with eternal life.

4. We saw the Bible in the picture. What were good and ennobling in Cromwell were connected with the precepts and teachings of the Book. It was the truth of the living God which inspired his soul with confidence; and though he believed many things, and consequently did many things for which he had no scriptural authority, it cannot be doubted but that he had carefully studied the Word of God, and that his firm, strong spirit was often bowed in lowly reverence and humble dependence before the Eternal Throne. The mind of the nation had not emerged from a state of political and theological darkness, and such an aspect of things greatly influenced the mind of Cromwell. We are not surprised that his principles were tinged with the complexion of the errors which prevailed at that time. The truth of God was sometimes almost totally eclipsed, and the darkness was so great that the teachings of the Word were not understood. In the Christian Scriptures the command is given, "Put up thy sword;" and the song of peace is the chorus of welcome which was given by the angels to the holy child. That Cromwell did not practically study the precepts and teachings of the New Testament, is made clear, we think, from the acts and deeds of his life. That the dark and raven wings of a gloomy fatality shrouded his mind, and to a great extent influenced him through life, is evident from the facts which are inseparable from his name. His mind was often beclouded in darkness, and in his best moments he could not free himself from the influence of human creeds and dogmas. The teachings of the Bible would hush all the tumults of war—would put up every blood-stained sword —would turn every warrior into a man of peace—would clear every arsenal—would explode every powder magazine, and would enlist every human being into the service of King Jesus, in whose battles against the world, the flesh, and the devil, they should, with the weapons which are not carnal, fight the good fight of faith, in order that they might wear the crown.

5. We saw through a glass the face of Cromwell magnified. All the lines were brought out in bold relief, and the lecturer called our attention to the lion-like appearance of his striking countenance. There was a combination of force and majesty. It was so. Cromwell is dead. He is no longer terrible to his enemies, nor hopeful to his friends. We fear not his wrath. But to the impenitent we say, what think you of this terrible fact, that the weak and lowly Jesus, who has died for you, and has loved you with an eternal love, who now offers you the crown of life—if you refuse that crown, and die in your sins—He will, amidst the terrors of the judgment day, assume towards you the character of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and he will tear you in pieces when there shall be none to deliver you?—What has not been done for crowns! The foolish children of earth have anxiously toiled for them. Armies have met in deadly conflict, and millions have been slain; and when ambitious souls have possessed themselves of these earthly baubles, they have had days of sorrow and nights of distress. Let the din of national conflict be heard—let the Emperors and men of might tremble with fear—let all the glory and the crowns of this world be presented to us, and if we are faithful and true, we should tread them as rubbish and dust, when compared with the excellency of the gospel of Christ. Though time shall cease, and the great day of judgment come—though an eternal separation take place, and the heavens pass away—we know that henceforth there is laid up for us a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give us in that day; and not to us only, but unto all them that love His appearing. And Peter tells us that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. In the sacred name of Him who in His humiliation refused not the crown of thorns, let us be careful that another may not take our crown—that in His name we may always rejoice, and then, though the earth pass away and the heavens be no more, we shall mingle with the angels, sing the everlasting song, wear the robe of righteousness, and in our own hands shall be the palms of victory, and on our heads the unfading and imperishable crown. J. I.

London.

THE NEW TESTAMENT PERIODS.—No. IV.

THIRD PERIOD—THE THREE DAYS.

How long we poor mortals strive to accomplish little, while under the rulings of the Almighty, a day, an hour may effect renovations too wonderful for thought. Beginning with the ministry of John and advancing four years—but four short years—and what a change! What wondrous deeds have been wrought—what burdened pages of prophecy, long inquired into, have been fulfilled! John did his work in a few short months—the Saviour his in three and a half years; and yet here is found infinitely more affecting the inhabitants of earth, for time and for eternity, than four thousand years beside. We may bid other scenes retire, read no other events, shut ourselves out from all other thoughts, and here is the wisdom of God and the power of God. Our all for eternity is suspended upon receiving, confiding in, and observing what is spoken, exemplified, promised, and commanded within a period of four years.

“Beauty in tears” has been a cherished theme of poets, but the Christian’s dearest and loftiest melodies are chosen from the tale of God-like innocence enduring voluntary and deepest suffering for vile, guilty beings.

“He had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief” (Is. v. 3-9.) The nails, the stripes, the jeers of enemies, all were cruel; but, is it not true, that more causes of overwhelming suffering were present when Jesus died? Did he say, in Gethsemane, "my soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death," in the prospect of mere bodily suffering? Is there not a deep meaning in the language, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Does not the Apostle express more than we can comprehend when he says, "He bore our sins in his own body on the tree?" Ah! there is a meaning here! A holy soul is shrouded in darkness and in suffering. The Father withdraws—every angel withdraws—the disciples smite their breasts and retire, to give vent to hopeless grief. All heaven sympathizes, but stood aloof: earth, in convulsions, gave sighs of sympathy: a pall is spread over the fair face of day—in the day was darkness: but not such darkness as Luna often cheers with milder beams; for she, as behind clouds of smoke, appeared as blood. Joel had said, that the great day of the outpouring of the Spirit should not come, until the Sun should be turned into darkness and the Moon into blood. But, thanks be to heaven, short was the agony; for soon Jesus cries, "It is finished!" and he suffers no more; nor shall he suffer again for ever. Amen.

What did the death of Christ accomplish? It is true that he did set us an example of suffering and patience—it is true that he did manifest the love of God to us—it is true that he did make an end of all former sin-offerings, as Daniel had prophesied—it is true that he did nail the former institutions to the cross—but the great truth is, "He died for our sins." Here is the emphatic design of his death. Without remission there were no eternal salvation—without shedding of blood there were no remission, and the blood of other victims could not take away sins; therefore, to effect man's eternal salvation, "His blood was shed for many, for the remission of sins." Hear the testimony of the Word: About 740 years before this event, the inspired Isaiah sang—"Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray: we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all" (liii.) He suffered the just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God, says Paul. His blood cleanses from all sins, says John. The blood of Christ purges the conscience from dead works, to serve the living God. The redeemed shall sing, "unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

There is no call here for the inquiry, how much did Christ suffer? It is of no avail to talk about "vicarious sufferings" or "vicarious atonement," or for us to call to our age any human phraseology to express what the Saviour did in his death. It is enough to believe these Scriptures with all the heart. And do they not reveal enough? What more do we want? Where are we more efficiently taught that we are needy, helpless, and that God has provided for us a sole remedy in the precious blood of Jesus? O, the precious truth—Christ died for sinners! Let this be our strength and solace through weary life, and it shall be our joy and glory through the ages of eternity.

And yet, was there another design in his death? He, as our "forerunner" into the heavens, must needs journey thither through the tomb—He was buried that he might rise again. In a state of unsuffering pleasure, the first Adam sinned and died, and death is the inheritance left his children. In a state of deepest suffering, the second Adam remains sinless and pure. Sin took us to the tomb in the first Adam—sinless perfection alone, in the second Adam, can call us forth again. His conquest over sin is the basis of his triumph over death. When Christ went to the regions of the dead, the inhabitants of Hades saw, for the first time, a spirit tried and ever sinless: the grave held the first body which, under temptation, knew no defilement. The sinlessness of Jesus armed him with power omnipotent, to take his life again. He arose: but not till he had despoiled the monster of the strong keys of Death and Hades, which he had held for four thousand years. He arose! Death is conquered—Satan is despoiled of his power—the conflict is over—Jesus is victorious. What majesty in his words, pronounced to John more than sixty years after this event—"I am he which liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, amen ; and have the keys of hades and of death !”

Rejoice ye saints — ye who dwell in his courts ; it is his good pleasure to tell you that the gates of hades shall never prevail against you. To the tomb you must go. In hades you may repose for a season ; but a Friend, not an enemy, holds the keys. In his own good time he shall throw wide open your appointed place of tarrying, and bid you come up higher !

We never do know how to estimate the warfare of Jesus. There were hours in his history gloomy to his disciples. The period of his death was to them a despairing season. Hope had fled. And oft did sorrow weigh down his soul. The hour of his condemnation was the hour of his enemies and the power of darkness. Satan seemed to have rallied all his forces then. Jesus spoke of it before — “The prince of this world cometh ;” but here was the assurance — “he shall find nothing in me.” Defeat and overthrow were to follow a temporary triumph. And he “judged” the prince of this world, condemned him, and he was “cast out” of the power which he had long held.

In his own person Jesus has subdued all foes : sin and death are conquered — Satan is cast out. How fitting the language at meeting with his disciples on the mountain of Galilee — “All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me !” Worthy, ever worthy, O thou conquering Son of God, to receive “power, and riches, and wisdom, and glory, and blessing ;” for by thee and for thee were all things created, and in thine own strength hast thou condemned sin and taken the keys of death ! All power in earth is thine, and into thy hand are all things given. Thou art the King of all kings and the Lord of all lords. Angels, principalities, and powers are made subject unto thee ; and thou hast a name above every name. The decree has gone forth — the Heavens are thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth are thy possession. Sway thy sceptre of peace and mercy over our earth, and let the glad tidings of salvation wrought out extend to the uttermost boundaries of earth, wherever sin has reigned and ruined ! O, for wills to obey, tongues to praise, and hearts to love the Captain of our salvation !

Do we again ask, what was accomplished in the death and resurrection of Jesus ? Let the heart, familiar with the tale of Calvary, in its long and silent musings, answer. The pen is feeble, the tongue is dumb to express all that the Lion of Judah’s tribe hath wrought for us here. At the foot of the cross where John and the mother stood, at the tomb which Mary hastened to visit, are the chosen spots where the Christian’s faith lingers, and from whence it soars to the unsuffering realms of immortality. At the cross and at the tomb Hope has her birth, and Love (celestial visitant !) chords the heart-strings to the symphonies of the upper spheres. Here suffering man and the unsuffering Deity meet and are made one—at the cross, in Christ, in his death. The monumental institutions of the church point here :—The Lord’s-day, the Supper, Baptism—which but show how the events of this period are emphasized, as the great work of God in behalf of man.

As we pause at the resurrection morn, let us not in too eager haste suppose that all is done, which should be done, to usher in the better day—the reign of favor. Let us tarry to examine yet two brief and interesting periods.

A. C.—x.

CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD.

I HAVE read the answers of T. H. M. and J. B. R. to the query which I addressed to you, namely—“Is there any authority from the Scriptures, for the person who baptizes to present a prayer to the Saviour, in the name of the person baptized, in order by this means to call upon himself the name of the Lord ?” My great objection to these answers is, that they both assume “calling upon oneself the name of the Lord,” as itself a specific action, rather than as a result flowing from other specific actions, such as repentance and baptism in the name of the Lord. J. B. R. admits that all the cases where the phrase, “Calling upon the name of the Lord,” occur, the words, to onoma, the name, are always found in the accusative. I ask him on what ground he would, in this instance, substitute a genitive or a dative for an accusative, and thus depart from the universal rule? In Acts ii. 21, where the phrase first occurs, Peter quotes from Joel, and founds his address upon the last sentence, "Whosoever shall call upon himself the name of the Lord, shall save himself." He first demonstrates, by quotations from the Psalms, that the Messiah was to be buried and rise again, without seeing corruption, and afterwards to sit down on the right hand of God; and that this Jesus God had indeed raised from the dead, whereof they (the Apostles) were witnesses: "and being at the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Spirit, he had shed forth this which ye both see and hear." These words of Peter convinced his hearers of the truth. "They were pricked to the heart, and they cried out, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" At this stage they were simply callers in agony, from conviction of sin; and here are the very words they uttered. But the manner in which they should call upon themselves the name of the Lord, was not yet revealed. Peter's reply, however, supplies the deficiency. They must repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins, and they would receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." "In the name" is in the dative, and proves that the principle which gives authority to baptism, is the name of the Lord, which is the symbol of His authority. But "remission of sins" and "the gift of the Holy Spirit" being in the accusative, proves these privileges to be inseparable from having called upon oneself the name of the Lord. In this passage there is no command to present a prayer to the Saviour for this end; it is attained by faith in the apostolic testimony, and immersion in the name of the Lord. Acts xxii. 16 confirms this view, and is just as definite. Here remission of sins is placed in the genitive, and corresponds with the phrase, (Acts x. 43) "Through his name whosoever believeth on him, shall receive remission of sins." Now all admit that the name is the channel through which remission is conveyed. If so, baptism, or washing away sin, is the medium through which Paul called upon himself the name of the Lord.

Besides, here are two participles, arising and calling upon, and two imperatives, baptize and wash away. Now if there be such a relation between participles and imperatives, as that the one explains the other, it follows that Paul was commanded to arise in order to be baptized and wash away his sins, and both in order to call upon himself the name of the Lord, which is precisely the doctrine of Acts ii.

J. B. R. says the true translation is "having called." The same remark applies to the imperatives, for the whole words are in the first tense, and therefore does not affect the question. Gal. iii. 28 is decisive. "As many of you as were baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Not only is Christ in the accusative, but the preposition en is attached to the verb signifying "put on." Hence the Christian has not only put on the Lord Jesus, but he has put him on by baptism. J. B. R.'s quotations from the Old Testament divide themselves into three classes—1, saints such as Abraham, Jacob, and David. When these are said to have called upon the name of the Lord, we understand that they attended to those things which that name required, such as building an altar and offering sacrifice; also, enjoying those privileges which that name bestowed, such as prayer to, and fellowship with God, which were inseparable from that name. Corresponding to this expression in the Old, is the phrase in the New, "Where two or three are gathered together into (eis) my name," evidently referring to those privileges and duties which Christians enjoy when assembled together in the name of the Lord. 2, The quotation from Zephaniah iii. 9 is clearly a prediction of the times of the Messiah. All must admit that before Israel can enjoy a pure language, they must confess and submit to the authority of the Lord Jesus, or call upon themselves the name of the Lord. The words of Jesus to Nicodemus are decisive proof, "Except ye are born of water and spirit, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God." 3, "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen, and upon the families that call not upon thy name," (Jer. x. 25) evidently refers to all the Gentiles, the enemies of Israel, of whom Isaiah says, "Thou never bear-est rule over them; they were never called by thy name" (lxxiii. 19.)

Having given these illustrations concerning the remarks of T. H. M. and J. B. R. you will be disposed to ask, what I understand by the phrase, "Calling upon oneself the name of the Lord?" I answer, we have not an expression in our language which denotes the full idea, but a compound expression does—Assume the name of the Lord at the call of the Lord. This expression comprehends the whole gospel plan—it comprehends the gospel call, faith, repentance, and baptism in the name of Jesus; and then the result—salvation, which is the privilege of all whosoever may have called upon themselves His name.

Bro. T. H. M. contends that prayer to the Lord Jesus is an acknowledgment of His authority. The question presents itself, what was the position that authority occupied in the proclamation of the Apostles? The answer is, they proclaimed His authority, and commanded the confession that he was "the Lord" (Phil. ii. 11.) And they baptized in that name. Let us go and do likewise. Up, then, and conquer, brethren—the world is before you.

VERITAS.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.—No. I.

THE BIBLE.

As the physical world was designed for man's physical development, so the Bible was given to expand and strengthen the faculties of the soul—the one relating to time, the other bridging the Jordan of death, linking man's spiritual nature to everlasting realities. The Bible is the most ancient as well as wonderful book published to the world. Its facts are of a stupendous character, miraculous and strange, exhibiting in bold relief the matchless love of God for fallen man, once bearing the image of his Creator, now polluted, sinful, lost.

The Bible is divided into two grand divisions; the Old and New Testaments, containing sixty-six different treatises, by forty different authors. Eight wrote the New Testament, six apostles and two evangelists. Fifteen hundred years of the world's history passed away before the final completion of this wonderful Book of God. Its authors were kings, shepherds, husbandmen, and fishermen. It was written under a variety of circumstances, yet it contains a glorious unity of thought and execution. The authors of the Old Testament manifest all the peculiarities of dialect of the respective ages when the books claim to have been written, and the ancient Hebrew became a dead language, too, about the time of the Babylonish captivity. Books are never forged in dead languages. The production of a book under such circumstances is not only wonderful, but miraculous. No more strange and unaccountable would be the construction of a magnificent edifice upon natural principles, parts of the same being constructed in different places, by a variety of workmen, in different ages, yet when brought together everything fits completely, and a mighty and impregnable temple appears, sheltering the homeless wanderer from tempest and tornado.

As a book of learning, religion, and politics, the Bible occupies an enviable superiority. Learning has three departments—history, poetry, and philosophy. As a book of history, it is more ancient than any other production, and contains facts the most remarkable and vital, making known man's origin, duty, and eternal destiny. The Word of God declares plainly that man came into being by supernatural physical power, termed creation; and although scepticism has cavilled at this important intelligence, yet the fact is capable of demonstration, and the declarations of David Hume, that a miracle is a physical impossibility, is falsified by the discoveries of geologic science. There are only four ways supposable relating to man's origin—a fifth comes not within the limits of the imagination—either by chance, vegetation, infinite progression, or creation. The history of our race falsifies the first three; ergo the Bible affirmation must be true, and this important enunciation is a peculiarity of the Bible.

Without the Bible, the history of the world for 3500 years would be lost in darkness, excepting the glimmering lights from geologic discoveries. Herodotus, the first authentic profane historian, commences where Malachi closes up.

God does not do for man in nature or in grace what he is able to do for himself. The Prophet Daniel, one of the major writers of prophetic history, presents in embryo the history of the four universal empires of the earth, and although the outlines were drawn hundreds of years before the events transpired, yet the delineation is accurate and complete.

The Bible, as a book of philosophy, is unexceptionable, directing the mind of man to its legitimate object of worship, exhibiting clearly man's relation to God and his fellow men, and the duties resulting from the relationship.

Its poetry is the most sublime and majestic, and the imagery of the same grand and peculiar. Homer lived almost cotemporary with the sweet singer of Israel—the Hebrew bard; yet how tame and unmeaning are his delineations of the Pagan mythology, in comparison with the matchless lyrics of the Bible.

The art of printing was consecrated to religion and truth, since the first book put in print, the Bible, was the first published upon the shores of our native country.

The Bible contains the only true and reliable system of religion. Mahomedanism had not the propagation of a system of faith as its leading design, but conquest; and its credentials were the sword and carnage. Judaism was a mere type—a foreshadowing of something better. Paganism crumbles beneath its own weight. Christianity alone is adapted to the wants of man, purifying the heart, containing a power in the death of a divine Redeemer by which a world may be saved from sin. May we therefore study the Bible, meditate upon its sacred teachings, and may its divine communications feast the soul, and as we drink in these rich oracles of God, we shall become spiritually strong, able to resist evil, and delight in doing good. W. T. H.

CONVERSION OF SINNERS.

DURING the sojourn of our Lord on the earth he declared, "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." This remains true yet of many things esteemed among men, which are not patterned after the Lord's teaching. Of this class are all human arrangements which make void the commandments of the Lord, for such will not serve the Lord's purpose, nor tend to honour his name. Though many things now joined by men with the preaching of the gospel were originally designed to do good, yet not having the sanction of inspiration, they cannot be acceptable to the Lord, for they derogate from his wisdom and goodness. When the gospel was first preached by inspired persons, all hearing could easily understand its requirements; but now the additional requirements of man's devising have so confused its primitive simplicity, that there is no beauty nor adaptation to the end to be discovered by the sinner, who expects to find everything just suited to his condition and wants. The modern, or man's way of presenting the gospel, as now revised to suit the wisdom of the age, carries the convert through several states. 1, They are led into conviction, or a desire to obtain what is erroneously called religion, by arousing in them fear of punishment by presenting the denunciations of the gospel against sin. 2, The seeking or sorrowing place then follows, because not happy on account of not enjoying any evidence of pardon or acceptance by the Lord. This is to many one of the most painfully distressing conditions in which they could be placed. Having been greatly excited, and their minds aroused to activity and a desire to obtain pardon—that is, get what is called religion—and failing therein, or not obtaining it immediately, thoughts the most gloomy and alarming arise in their minds. In this state of mind numbers are sometimes led to doubt God's promises, and even the reality of religion altogether, or conclude they have sinned so long and grievously that no mercy remains for them, and then relapse into careless indifference and wilful rebellion, from which it is hard to move them. But if more successful in obtaining that which they desire, though generally greatly tried, they pass from this anxious state into a happy or joyous condition of mind, and then believe they are pardoned; they rejoice immoderately for some time, relying on their feelings as evidence of pardon. 3, The happiness enjoyed in too many cases, does not arise from faith in the promises of God, nor reliance on the Saviour's atonement, but on some impulse of mind, and is frequently of short duration. Instead of happiness, a gloom then pervades the mind, and doubts of their sincerity arise, dissatisfaction with themselves or condition being felt; and then they fall into a state or condition which, to many, is of long duration, but not a necessary result of obeying the truth intelligently. 4, The last state into which the convert is brought by the modern system of preaching to sinners, is as unsatisfactory as any of the preceding. As excitement subsides, the activity of their mind ceases, and they no longer enjoy that happiness which arose through excitement; thus, after a little calm reflection on what they have passed through, disappointment arises in the mind. Doubting and fearing, hoping and rejoicing, with happiness and perplexity, all strangely commingled, make up the experience of afterlife; or, in many cases falling away they live without the "fear of God before their eyes."

Though sincerity is of great worth in all acts of faith and labours of love, yet it will not defend the convert from disappointment, because he has been astray from the beginning. How much better, then, to follow the divine plan, and present Jesus as the only Saviour of sinners, and the great object of faith? How much better to leave systems, theories, and speculations, with special texts and party leanings, and present Jesus as dying, as buried, as rising triumphantly "according to the Scriptures," for sinners—as being exalted, a "Prince and Saviour to grant repentance"—as now placed at the Father's right hand, to intercede for all those who humbly bow to his authority, by an intelligent, submissive surrender of themselves, and by putting him on in his own appointed way! Why not prevent all the doubts, perplexities, fears, and final disappointment of the convert, by showing him that with the heart he must "believe to justification, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." A humble mind possessed, a correct course and continued obedience, and then the divine approval may be looked for and rejoicing enjoyed.

J. B.

PERSONAL AND FAMILY DEVOTION.

"They that are after the flesh, do mind the things of the flesh; they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit" (Rom. viii. 5.) "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord" (Josh. xxiv. 15.)

It is truly distressing, to the pious mind, to contemplate the manifest carnality of Christian society—so called. We can hear and see everything attended too but Christianity. If, therefore, out of the abundance of the heart we speak and act, our stock of heart religion—of spiritual sentiment and devout affection, must, indeed, be very small. We can scarcely hear a word of it in any family. I speak of professors in general. It is true, we may sometimes hear sectarian controversies, and what is called the religious news of the day—a sort of religious politics. But what Christianity is in these things? What spiritual edification? The four grand cardinal points, which concentrate the entire intentional effect of Christianity, are personal holiness, family education, church edification, and public reformation—the latter the combined extrinsic effect of the former three (Mat. v. 16.) Whatever, then, does not directly and properly tend to promote these, is foreign to the benevolent and blissful design of our holy religion.

Now, certainly, nothing can have a direct and proper tendency to promote personal holiness, which is but another name for supreme love to God, than what goes to promote the knowledge, belief, and retention of the Holy Scriptures. And what means, in our power, are calculated to do this, but reading, thinking, and conversing about their divine contents, (as directed, for this very purpose) accompanied with prayer to God? And, as personal holiness is essential and fundamental to the three following comprehensive and blissful effects of our holy religion, that being duly secured, all is secured that is necessary to our present saving utility, and also our future happiness: "For without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Consequently, every one possessing this, shall enjoy his presence.

These things being demonstrably so, how disgusting and mortifying to hear and see in professing families, almost nothing but the concerns of this world—the paltry affairs of a present life! They have no time to make an educational and edifying use of the Scriptures in their families, by reading them connectively and attentively, with suitable interrogations, observations, and exhortations, for the edification of all concerned, according to their respective abilities; but, if read at all, they close the book without a single remark, and leave it as ignorant and unaffected as before they opened it; and so pass on to something else. Besides, they never think of reading it regularly, in its proper connection, as they do other books they want to understand; or of assisting one another by conversing with each other familiarly and interestingly about it. Many of these undevout triflers are not ashamed to tell you that they have no time—that they cannot afford to make such a sacrifice of their precious hours; thus to waste their time in reading, and praying, and conversing about the sacred contents of the Book of life!

Are not such professors confessedly carnalists; minders "of things of the flesh—earthly things?" But the things of the Spirit are all Bible things. They are nowhere else to be found but in the good Book; no, not one of them. In so far, then, as we neglect the Bible, we despise and neglect spiritual and heavenly things. But not so the good and happy man—the blessed man—"for his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Wherefore, "whatsoever he doeth shall prosper;" but "the ungodly are not so" (Psalms i. 1-4.) Yea, says another good man, "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food" (Job xiii. 12.) And another, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." No wonder, then, that the godly Daniel and David, and other such lovers of the divine Word, should be as careful to enjoy it as they were to enjoy their necessary food, even three times a day: see Psalms lv. 17, with Dan. vi. 10. Nay, the latter did it at the risk of his life.

And all those were but Old Testament saints, whose Scriptures were as far inferior to ours, as moonlight is to sunbeams; yet they were to make them their constant theme: "they were to talk of them when they sat in their house, when they walked by the way, when they lay down, and when they rose up—teaching them diligently to their children—that their days might be as the days of heaven upon earth" (see Deut. xi. 18-21.) Alas! then, of what a heaven upon earth do we deprive ourselves and our children, by neglecting, as we do, our vastly superior privileges! And we have not time to take our three spiritual meals per day, as Joshua, and those other Old Testament worthies did, who, like him, were determined, that let others do as they pleased, as for them, and their families, they would serve the Lord. And why not, brethren? Can we possibly make a better choice? Can we possibly spend our time to better purpose? Certainly not. But some will perhaps say, "We feel at a loss how to proceed, for we have never seen such a practice." This excuse, though not sufficient, it must be confessed, is lamentably true. Still, however, we have the Book, and in it the proper directions for using it. We are to read it, to study it, to get it by heart, to make it the subject matter of our conversation, of our exhortation, of our meditation, of our prayer, and of our praise, day and night. Thus are we directed to use it. Now, what remains, but that we use it accordingly, every one according to his peculiar circumstances, as he does his daily food—some at one hour, some at another—yet all generally three times a day—those that have families, also thus providing for the nourishment of their families—thus training them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord—that so they may be seminaries of God—nurseries for heaven. And this, it is humbly suggested, for the most part, be conveniently and happily effected in the following manner:—As the demands of our sensitive nature generally bring us together thrice a day for bodily refreshment, let us avail ourselves of those opportunities for our spiritual refreshment also. For this purpose, let every Christian family keep two tables; the one furnished with Bibles for feeding their souls, and the other for the products of the earth, for their bodily food. Thus provided, when they meet for breakfast, let them first take their spiritual meal, thus socially beginning the day with God—by reading a select portion of His Word, with suitable questions, remarks, and exhortations, for this purpose; thus rightly dividing the word of truth, that each may get his proper portion.

This may be conveniently done by asking the following pertinent questions, according to the respective capacities of the guests, viz.—1, Who is the writer or speaker of the portion read, or any particular part of it? 2, To whom is it written or spoken? 3, What historic facts are contained in it? 4, What commands are contained in it? 5, What doctrinal declarations? 6, What invitations? 7, What promises? 8, What threatenings? Lastly, the why, when, and where those things were spoken or written, still remain to be considered, and are circumstances sometimes worthy of particular attention, in order to a correct understanding of particular passages. These things duly attended to according to the ability and discretion of the heads of families, and the capacity of the respective members, with pertinent observations and exhortations, accompanied with appropriate prayers and praises, could not fail to make the Scriptures forthcoming for the edification and instruction of every capable subject. These blissful exercises repeated thrice a day, viz.—before breakfast, after dinner, and after supper, we would begin, continue, and end the day to God as a family; that is, in our social capacity. And these exercises continued, the Word of Christ would dwell in us richly, so that we should be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and thus we should never fall. "For so an entrance should be ministered to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (1 Peter i. 5, 11.) For this is the highway of personal holiness, from which all good and happiness proceed. And which, of course, being carried out in the church by its duly qualified elders, those heads of families who had thus successfully taught and ruled their own families well, the church would soon resume its proper character, the school of Christ, with his one Book, Christian disciples, a family of families, taught and ruled by a selection of its own proper elders, instead of scientific college-taught clergy; every member furnished with his own proper book—the Book of life; which, being duly read and studied as above, would make every believing student "wise to salvation, thoroughly furnished for all good works." May the good Lord hasten that happy time! Amen. THOMAS CAMPBELL.

WORDS FROM THE WORK-TABLE.—No. IV.

"The Lord searcheth all hearts." Is it so—is every thought, every motive, exposed to the all-seeing eye of Him who rules the universe? Do the Scriptures make this statement? Surely this is not generally understood. If it were, purity, disinterestedness, and love for God and man would more largely prevail. Let us look for this sentence, and so make sure that we are not mistaken. David tells this solemn truth to his Son, and entreats him to serve God with a perfect heart and a willing mind, "for the LORD searcheth ALL hearts, and understandeth ALL the imaginations of the thoughts" (1 Chron. xxviii. 9.) And unto Samuel the LORD himself declared, that "He saw not as man seeth; for he looketh upon the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh upon the heart" (1 Sam. xvi. 7.) Again, by Jeremiah, the Almighty declares, that he searches the heart, "even to give every man according to his ways; according to the fruit of his doing" (Jer. xvii. 10.) What! are the false statements that are made by us, or concerning us, known to Him who is "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and who can't not look on iniquity?" And does He so take cognizance that the slandered and the slanderer may receive "according to their ways?" Safely, then, may the injured trust their reputations in the hands of such a Searcher!

Were this truth kept ever in remembrance, bickerings, jealousies, untruthfulness, selfishness, would find no place in our hearts. O, that we knew and felt that a pure and loving God was searching them, and searching them to render unto us "according to our ways!"

Some may say, we know that it is so—we have always known it. Yes, we know that we must some day die, but do we not act as though all were mortal but ourselves? What we need is daily and hourly to realize the solemn truth, and heartily and truly to exclaim, "I thank God that He is a searcher of hearts!" I have heard this exclamation joyfully uttered—it thrilled through every nerve, and led me seriously to ask, whether I had attained to such purity of purpose and life, as to reiterate the thanksgiving.

Would that I possessed the power graphically to pourtray a scene that is imprinted deeply on my mind. It was a lovely spring day—all nature was rejoicing in sunshine—the earth seemed flooded with beauty—loved ones walked beside us—we were visiting a few of God's humble ones—we had rejoiced with some who had been raised from beds of suffering—we had sympathised with others who still languished in pain and distress. From a close, stifling chamber, where our sympathies had been deeply called forth, we stepped across a small yard into a room delightfully cool; the window was shaded by flowering plants—those sweet messengers of love to man, whose presence alone would have spoken to us of purity and peace. On the bed reposed an aged woman, her clothing of spotless white; her close fitting cap encircled a countenance on which content was depicted in its strongest characters: yet was she deeply tried—wounded in her heart's best affections—deserted by the one who should have been her earthly stay—bedridden for many years, dependent upon the benevolent for her support, she doubted not—she knew in whom she had trusted. From that bed of pain went many an eloquent sermon. She hesitated not to point sinners to Christ, and to uplift the banner of the cross. It was from her lips that the heartfelt exclamation fell—"I thank God that he is a searcher of hearts."

I trust that I shall never forget that utterance, and I would that I had a pen powerful enough to impress it upon my readers, that it might lead us to keep close to the cross—to look constantly to Jesus, from whom alone we can deem the strength necessary for such daily progress in purity as shall enable us to join in the thanksgiving, and to be ready to enter the city described by John in such glowing terms, and of which he says—"I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."

May reader, and writer, be amongst those who shall find their names written therein!

LOUISE.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE CHURCHES.—No. VII FIDELITY.

FAR higher expectations may justly be entertained respecting those who, understanding scripturally what it is to put on Christ in baptism, have so done, than of those who know little or nothing of the doctrine of that most sacred ordinance. It is of the soldier who has sworn allegiance unto death, that we expect such devoted fidelity as shews a constant readiness to sacrifice everything in the service of the Sovereign. So is it of those who, making the good confession, have sworn eternal fealty to the Prince Messiah, that we ought to expect a fidelity to which no others may well pretend.

But who will say that this soldier-like fidelity is exhibited as it ought to be? Who will take knowledge of us, that throughout all the ramifications of our reasonable service, we give proof of that careful and exact regard to the orders of the Captain of our salvation which, as his loyal followers, may rightly be expected of us?

In instituting these inquiries we do not make ourselves of the number who, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise. We seek rather to bring up the comparison to the proper standard—the expressed will and example of Christ. To compare ourselves with others, and settle accounts by a Dr. and Cr. I fail here, and you fail there, is as unwise and contemptible as it is unscriptural. We have no right to seek to justify our own deficiencies by the shortcomings of others. It is required of us as stewards of the manifold grace of God, that we be faithful. And it is certain, that to be so as we ought, we must take anxious note of every jot and tittle of the will of Christ respecting us. We will not, if thus faithful, rest satisfied with a strict conformity in some things, rendering only the more glaring our deficiencies in other matters.

For example: It is out of all character that we should insist, as we rightly do, on the most exact submission to the terms of entrance into the heavenly kingdom, and yet violate some of its plainest laws once we have entered. If we call for a due regard to the law of forgiveness on entrance, why should we carelessly violate that law now that we have by grace come voluntary under its sanction? This were preposterous inconsistency. Yet who does not know that much sin is suffered upon brethren, and much more is committed afresh, simply by want of faithfulness in this particular. Bro. A. trespasses against Bro. B. Bro. B. is required to go and tell him his fault between themselves alone (Matt. xviii. 15.) But Bro. B. does the very reverse. With a lack of fidelity alike astonishing and disastrous, he sets off and reports his grievance to Bro. C. But Bro. C. is as little exercised in this item of "all good fidelity" as his visitor, and instead of at once firmly and faithfully reminding him of the law, and inquiring whether he has taken the first step prescribed, listens to the whole story, and, as likely as not, makes himself a partaker of Bro. B's sin, going off forthwith to retail, with no little zest, his own and his brethren's disgrace. We say disgrace, for so it is, (be the question in dispute what it may) for any man recognizing himself as under law to Christ, thus to violate a command so plain.

Suppose the case to turn differently. After considerable stir and difficulty Bro. A. and B. with others now involved, are got face to face at last. It is discovered, as generally it is in such fracas, that much has been exaggerated, and more misunderstood. A little explanation and frank brotherly confession and forgiveness, might even yet put all to right again. But one of the offenders stands on his supposed dignity. Forgetting that he who exalts himself shall be abased, he will make no concession, however plain it is to the brethren around him, that he is not without sin. At last the law of forgiveness, as affecting the disciples of the Saviour, is read. The great Lawgiver's words are repeated, "My heavenly Father shall not forgive you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one, his brother, their trespasses." And to this the apostolic appeal is added, "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you." Still the result is unsatisfactory: the law is not denied in words, but it is defied in fact. A reluctant, ungenerous, heartless concession is made. Hands are shaken, but hearts are not united, and if it be not said, it is manifestly felt by the gloomy, un-Christ-like offender, "I may forgive, but I will never forget." Poor grace-defying culprit, what if God were so to feel towards thee? What of thy poor sin-blighted soul, if God were to measure to thee such a dole of grace? What, if he were to tell thee, he would never forget thy sin? Couldst thou feel forgiven? Would the blessedness of the man whose sin is covered be thine? Impossible. And we apprehend it is a legitimate subject of inquiry: What right we have to regard that man as God-forgiven who, in defiance of the Saviour's law, forgives not from his heart every trespass that any brother may have committed against him.

We apprehend there is a needs-be for quite as much plain reading, plain speaking, and plain writing on the law of forgiveness to saints, as we have had on the law of forgiveness to sinners.

Our fidelity to the Redeemer, to ourselves, and to each other, is involved in both. We cannot be faithful to him, if we be not respectful to all his laws. We cannot be faithful to him, if we be unfaithful to each other. Seeing, then, that there are by virtue of the royal law of our divine Master, so many duties devolving upon us with respect to each other — duties of warning, exhortation, rebuke, counsel, help, and forgiveness — let us each for himself give heed alike earnest, constant, and practical, so that we may be “found faithful,” and “accounted worthy,” and receive at last the Master’s “Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.”

But still we must not suppose that the fidelity to which we are pledged is confined to our ecclesiastical relationships. It has its bearings, no less important in their place, to “those without.” All our relationships in life, be they those of master or servant, parent or child, brother, friend, acquaintance, or neighbour, form together, with those already glanced at, the proper theatre for the exercise of that faithfulness to which the Lord has promised the crown of life. Our fidelity as Christians should make itself felt, and should make us “marked men” wherever we go or dwell. It ought to shew itself in the care we have for the interests and property of others entrusted to us, whether the trust be great or small, given of God or given of man. It is a painful inconsistency for a man to give shew of great faithfulness with the true riches, while he is not over-careful in accounting for the gold that perishes. We have not much hope of the homily preached by the servant who appropriates the threads and tapes of her mistress. Nor much less painful is it to find, as we often do, a most praiseworthy fidelity in these little matters, while no faithful word of warning is given to master, mistress, or fellow-servant respecting the great concerns of the soul. To exhibit fidelity—good fidelity—all good fidelity—it is needful that we be faithful at all times, under all circumstances, in all relationships, to all persons, and to all trusts. Be this our aim, brethren.

Edinburgh.

T. H. M.

FAITH, DOUBT, AND TRADITION.

It has been observed by a contemporary writer, that the present is an age “destitute of faith, yet dreading scepticism;” and if by faith be meant a well-founded and rational belief, and by scepticism the outward avowal of disbelief, then there is doubtless much truth in the remark. We may certainly discover the manifestations of such characteristics, (the one, in fact, a not unnatural consequence of the other) in much of the prevalent language and tone of sentiment on religious and theological subjects; especially in reference to those questions so much agitated at the present time, relative to what is termed “Christian Antiquity.”

While, at the present day, an offensive obtrusion of avowed disbelief has almost wholly disappeared, at least among the better educated classes of society, and the more respectable order of writers; yet in some discussions, presenting exterior features and claims to notice of a widely different kind, we cannot but trace indications of modes of thought which seem nearly allied to the speculations of Scepticism; and especially under a seeming devotion to ecclesiastical antiquity, and the maintenance of certain forms and dogmas, a closer examination may often discover the influence of principles involving the security of the foundations of religion.

In a religion claiming to be true, professing to trace its origin in historical events, and connecting itself with tangible facts, as it must be supposed that the grounds of these claims would be of a kind prominently distinguishable, and unambiguous in their character; so it might be expected that they would always be held forth by the disciples and advocates of the faith, and that the study of them would be the first object of attention, as well with consistent believers as with candid enquirers of every class. Yet the profession of Christianity in the world, especially at the present day, commonly presents an instance of a very opposite kind. The distinctive grounds on which the alleged revelation is accepted, and the precise nature of its claims, are among the points least generally attended to. And while the many adopt, without a thought or inquiry, the prevalent creed, those who feel the deepest interest in such subjects, and insist most strongly on high and mysterious points of doctrine, are too ready to overlook or despise the study of the grounds on which all belief must rest.

Among the most favourite habits of viewing religious subjects, and one most extensively cherished and professed at the present day, is that of investing everything in the shroud of mystery—a plea, in fact, absorbing and superseding all other arguments, and, perhaps, the most generally acceptable, as addressing itself with peculiar force to the ignorance, the indolence, the religious infirmities of the great majority—grounding its claim upon the alleged incomprehensibility of all religious truth, and the essential contrariety in nature between reason and faith. Thus, the advocates of such views are perpetually insisting upon an entire submission of the judgment, and demanding a subjugation of the understanding—a principle which in itself tends to discard all substantial conviction; while they would substitute a species of passive assent, which, from its utterly vague character, its undefined and undefinable tenor and extent, is, to say the least, wholly unfavourable to all consideration of the question of TRUTH.

This sort of mystical principle, of “faith preceding knowledge,” is formally set up as claiming an alliance with the grounds of all true philosophy; and is, in fact, little else than the very rule of the mysticism of the middle ages.

Whenever matters of fact are in question, reason can be only the judge. If we refer to mythic legends, or theological mysticism, then, indeed, another faculty or feeling is called into play. But a religion built on such a basis, professedly grounded solely on the claims of an infallible authority—or the creature only of feeling, emotion, and impulse—or upheld on the mere plea of utility, and enforced by compulsory enactments—or appealing only to the veneration for antiquity—or dependent on the general voice of the many—any such systems manifestly involve no question of TRUTH; they have no connection with evidence, and consistently discard all appeal to reason.

But a system which claims to be built on facts, necessarily implies the question of truth and falsehood; and must refer to evidence of some kind, as well as to reason, to judge of that evidence. To reject reason and evidence, is to render faith no better than fiction; Christianity a fable; its history a legend—of no better authority than the chimæras of Paganism.

When we hear some parties distinctly professing “faith without evidence,” we cannot but ask, in what do they believe? Facts may become the foundations of feelings, but not feelings of facts.

IS BAPTISM NECESSARY TO SALVATION?*

THIS question is often asked in these ends of the earth, and it has often been clearly and definitely answered. But these remarks may catch the eye of some who have not seen answers which have already been given. Suffer me, then, reader, to ask you a few questions, in order to answer yours—the caption of this article. Is being saved necessary to salvation? Is being “a new creature in Christ” necessary to salvation? Is the remission of sins necessary to salvation? Is being born again necessary to salvation?

Now if it be true that baptism is, by divine appointment, made necessary to the securing and enjoying of these blessings, then is the question answered.

* From the Evangelist.

1. Is being saved necessary to salvation? Jesus said, “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved” (Mark xvi. 16.) Peter said, “The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us; not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God” (1 Pet. iii. 21.)

2. Is being a new creature necessary to salvation? Paul says, (1 Cor. v. 17) “If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things have passed away—behold all things have become new.”

Again, (Rom. vi. 3) "Do you not know that so many of us as have been baptized into Christ, have been baptized into his death?" Hear him again, (Gal. iii. 27) "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."

3. Is remission of sins necessary to salvation? "John came preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Luke iii. 3, Mark i. 4.) Peter commanded the Pentecostians — "Repent and be baptized for (in order to) the remission of sins." Paul was commanded to arise and be baptized, and wash away his sins, (Acts xxii. 16.)

4. Is being born again necessary to salvation? Jesus said, (John iii. 5) "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Paul says, (Titus iii. 15) "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to

His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit."

Baptism of itself never has, nor never will, save any person (not even infants); but we have been endeavouring to show that it is one of the means by which we are constituted new creatures in Christ, by which we obtain remission of sins, by which we are regenerated, and by which we are saved. It is evident that, prior to the new birth, we are begotten by the Word of God; our hearts are changed by faith, and our condition is changed by repentance; but by this act of obedience to the law of the Lord, we become heirs of God and joint-heirs with our Lord Jesus Christ. Being then made free from sin, we become the servants of righteousness; our fruit is unto holiness, and the end everlasting life (Paul.)

H. C. D.

LORD'S-DAY REFLECTIONS.

How pure and holy should our thoughts be to-day—this blessed Lord's-day morning, all bright and beautiful as it is—this day of rest, the brightest of the seven—a day set apart for the worship of the Father and the Son—a worship that must be "in spirit and in truth." And while I stand at my little low window, thinking how merciful the Lord has been with me from childhood up to the present, the church bells are chiming, slowly and mournfully—half-past ten in the morning; people are going and coming in all directions, who walk not by "the same rule," nor "mind the same things," as commanded; but follow the traditions of men; thereby showing to the world that they have forgotten that there is but one body, one Lord, one faith, and one baptism.

Why is it that men and women do not learn God's will from the Scriptures of truth, from the teachings of Christ and his apostles, and not vainly follow the creeds and commandments of men? Professing to know Christ, in works they deny him. In my Bible there is but one road to heaven marked out. And this road is so plain, that the way-faring man, though a simpleton, may walk therein. Christ says, though you prophecy in my name, cast out demons, and do many wonderful works, yet if you keep not my commandments, ye are none of mine. An apostle says, "God is the author of peace, and not of confusion"—"Many are called, but few are chosen."

Let us, who have chosen the pure Word as our guide, strive to be among the happy number that shall be bidden to sit down at the great supper at the Lamb's marriage! Let us endeavour to keep in the straight and narrow path that leads to life everlasting; for without are dogs, sorcerers, fornicators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie!

S. K. C.

HAPPINESS.—Now let me tell you a secret—a secret worth knowing. This looking forward for enjoyment don't pay. I would as soon chase butterflies for a living. The only true way to be happy, is to take the drops of happiness as God gives them to us every day of our lives.

UNSCRIPTURAL TERMS.—An intelligent editor, a Baptist, justly says:—The terms Baptist, Congregationalist, Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian, and the like, are not Bible names for the followers of Christ; but are the outgrowth of a divided and corrupted church.

OPEN COUNCIL

"INVOKING THE NAME OF JESUS."

KINDLY indulge me with space in the Harbinger for an answer to the following queries, respecting my article, in this month's issue, on "Invoking the Name of Jesus;" offered by our beloved Bro. W. D. H. of London. Alluding to the above piece, in connection with a previous one in the Harbinger for May, 1858, p. 233, Bro. H. says:—

"At length I feel tolerably satisfied, that what you mean by invocation is prayer. If I am in error, please correct me, and favour me with a reply to the following enquiries:—

"1st. Is any one authorized to pray before presenting himself for baptism?

"2nd. If one applies for baptism to-day, and I cannot baptize him till to-morrow, or next week, may he not pray till he comes to the water?

"3rd. Are Christians to ask the Lord (Jesus) for any, or all those things, for which they are taught to ask the Father in His name?

"4th. Do you include the idea of surnaming in the Invocation?

"I ask these questions for my own private use, but if you think well to place a reply to them in The British Millennial Harbinger, I doubt not that many will be interested therein. It is a matter which ought to be clearly understood."

Bro. H. is quite correct in understanding me to mean prayer by invocation. I have all along used the word invocation, in its current acceptance, which includes the idea of prayer; and have, besides, again and again offered definitions of the word, taking care to keep this phrase of invocation in full view.

Prayer, however, is the genus, and invocation the species. Invocation, Confession, Thanksgiving, Intercession, &c. are alike prayer. Hence, while all invocation is prayer, all prayer is not invocation. Whether prayer in general is the privilege of the unbaptized, is a question I have not discussed: that it is the duty and privilege of the returning sinner to invoke the name of the Lord Jesus, and in that sense to pray, prior to his baptism, yet in connection with that ordinance, is what I have affirmed, with all assurance, to be the explicit teaching of the living oracles.

1st. The question—"Is any one authorized to pray before presenting himself for baptism?" does not appear to me either an evangelical, or a practical question. Persons may, like Cornelius, pray with acceptance, before presenting themselves for baptism; but it is none of our business, as persons understanding and publishing the Gospel, to authorize men to pray before submitting to the Lord Jesus. We have something better to do.

2nd. But—"If one applies for baptism to-day, and I cannot baptize him till to-morrow, or next week, may he not pray till he comes to the water?" Without supposing it so intended, this query must be pronounced casuistical. The world might be filled with such, and no one become any wiser. The following are all undisciplined questions: "Supposing one to die, having learned the Messiahship and Sonship of Jesus, and not his death and resurrection, what is his future condition? Or that of him who dies between faith and baptism, or between change of mind and restitution?" And more especially this: "If one desires immersion to-day, but cannot receive it till to-morrow, or next week, may he not make the good confession till he comes to the water?" Who can say he may not in this case, or in that supposed by Bro. H.?

3rd. The next question is of a more useful kind. "Are Christians to ask the Lord (Jesus) for any or all those things, for which they are taught to ask the Father, in His name?" I am of opinion that the New Testament will not sustain any formal distinction between the things for which we should invoke the name of the Lord Jesus, and the things which we are taught to ask the Father in his name. The when, rather than the what, should be enquired after! Hence the propriety of our dear Bro. T. H. M.'s remark—"The invocation was uttered in extremity." If my hints this month, respecting the interpretation of Matt. xviii. 20, should be found in the right direction, we should require to add—"The invocation was uttered in inauguration." Indeed, the sinner's conversion is both an extremity and an inauguration! Not less the martyrdom of Stephen!

4th. Finally—"Do you include the idea of surnaming in the invocation?" I do not. Surnaming is included in baptism, not in invocation. Invocation "involves" (rather, is connected with) surnaming only in this way. Epikaleomai, it is true, has the two meanings—invoking and surnaming. But it has not both meanings at once! In the one class of passages, invocation alone is meant; in the other, surnaming alone. "How, then, may the two classes be discriminated?" Easily enough. Though the verb is one and the same, its construction in the one class of passages is quite different from that in the other. Undoubtedly there is one simple idea at the root of the two meanings of the word. That idea is naming (calling out a name, and applying it to a given person.) We name when we surname; and we name when we invoke. In the former case, we once for all appropriate a select name to a given individual, that he may henceforth be known, spoken to (and invoked!) by it—thus, Simon was surnamed Peter by Jesus. In the latter, we address a person, by calling out a name by which he is already known (by which he has been surnamed) — thus Stephen invoked Jesus by means of the name "Lord," which Jesus had long borne. Stephen did not surname Jesus "Lord"—the Heavenly Father had already done that—but he invoked him as "Lord," and thus called upon the name of the Lord.

Now, here are two distinct and distinguishable ideas. In Greek they could be expressed by one verb—used, however, in two voices, and two or more forms of syntax. In English, they cannot be expressed by one verb, we must employ two; and if we do not keep them distinct, we shall make ourselves appear ridiculous. For surely it were ridiculous to speak of our surnaming the Lord! Insist on combining the ideas of invoking and surnaming in the same passages, and I will pledge myself to prove you are landed in that unenviable position. No! we invoke the Lord, and the Lord surnames us. We invoke him in prayer, and he surnames us in baptism. We receive a new name: he is addressed by a glorious name to Him no longer new.

Perth, June 12th, 1860. J. B. R.

JEWISH CALCULATION OF TIME.

BRO. CHew's piteous lamentations over his want of "power to find out," move me to forward for his assistance the following extracts from an article in the Bible Reader's Journal for this month, on the Day of the Crucifixion. Should they prompt to fuller exercise, and so strengthen the feeble "organs," I shall feel amply repaid for my trouble.

J. B. R.

May 10, 1860.

"We learn from St. Matthew xvi. 21, xvii. 23, xx. 19; St. Mark ix. 31, x. 34; St. Luke ix. 22, xviii. 33, xxiv. 7, 46; Acts x. 40; 1 Cor. xv. 4; that the resurrection was on the third day (τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ) after the crucifixion.

"But according to St. Mat. xxvii. 63 and St. Mark viii. 31, the resurrection in reference to the crucifixion was after three days (μετὰ τριῶν ἡμερᾶς)

"I should first notice that as both of those expressions, τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ (on the third day) and μετὰ τριῶν ἡμερᾶς (after three days) are used both by St. Matthew and St. Mark, in reference to the same events, they must be held to be equivalent expressions, and the one which is well defined must be held to be the guide as to the meaning of the other; and we have already seen that the resurrection on the third day is quite consistent with the statements from which we learn that the crucifixion was on a Friday.

"I may also mention that the preposition μετὰ is used in the same sense both by the LXX version of the Scriptures, and also by Jews of the times of the Apostles.

"In Deut. xiv. 28, it is said, 'After three years (μετὰ τρία ἔτη) thou shalt bring out all the tithes of thy fruits.'

"But in Deut. xxvi. 12 it is said, 'And when thou shalt have completed all the tithings of thy fruits in the third year, (ἐν τῷ ἐτει τῷ τρίτῳ) thou shalt give the second-tenth to the Levite.'

"Further: in Gen. xl. 13, 20, Joseph says of Pharaoh's cup-bearer, 'Yet three days and Pharaoh shall remember thy office;' and it came to pass on the third day (ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ) that it was Pharaoh's birth-day, &c. and he remembered the office of the cup-bearer.'

"But Philo-Judeus (De Josepho p. 54) says, 'The three stems of the vine represent three days, after which (μεθ' ὧν) the king will remember thee,' &c.; p. 55, 'And when the three days were come, (διελθόντων) the king's birth-day came, and on it (ἐν τῇ) all throughout the country rejoiced, &c. and the king remembered the eunuchs in prison.'

"Further: Josephus (Ant. i. 10, 5) says, that the circumcision of the Jews should be performed on the eighth day (ὀγδόῃ ἡμέρᾳ) after they were born. But in Ant. i. 12, 2, Josephus says, 'They circumcised Isaac immediately after the eighth day, (μετ' ὀγδοῇ ἡμέρᾳ) and from that time the Jews continue the custom of circumcising their sons after that number of days (μετὰ ὀκτὰς ἡμέρας.) But as for the Arabians, they circumcise after the thirteenth year, (μετὰ ἑτὸς τρισκαίδεκατον) because Ishmael, the founder of their nation, who was born to Abraham of the concubine, was circumcised at that time.'

"According to Gen. xvii. 25, Ishmael was circumcised when he was thirteen years old, (ἑτὸν δεκατρίων) and the meaning of this is well known from verse 12, where it is said, that he that is eight days old (ὀκτὴ ἡμέρᾳ) shall be circumcised. Thus Ishmael must have been circumcised in his thirteenth year.

"Further: in Ant. vii. 11, 6, Josephus states that 'David commanded Amasa to collect forces and come to him after three days (μεθ' ἡμέρας τρεῖς) and that when he delayed coming, the king, on the third day, (τῇ τρίτῃ τῶν ἡμερῶν) sent to Joab, &c.

"Further: in Ant. xiv. 13, 3, Josephus states that Pacorus took possession of Syria in the second year, (δεύτερον ἔτει) but in Wars i. 13, 1, Josephus states that Pacorus took possession of Syria after two years (μετὰ ἑτῆ δυο.)

"Further: in Ant. xiv. 16, 4, Josephus states that Jerusalem was taken by Herod when Marcus Agrippa and Caninius Gallus were Consuls of Rome, twenty-seven years after (μετὰ ἑτῆ εἰκοσι καὶ ἑπτά) it had been taken by Pompey; and in Ant. xiv. 4, 3, Josephus states that it was taken by Pompey when Caius Antonius and Marcus Tullius Cicero were Consuls; and we learn from Dio Cassius, and also from Cassiodorus, that the consulship of M. Agrippa and C. Gallus was the twenty-seventh from the consulship of C. Antonius and M. T. Cicero (both consulships included.)

"To produce more appropriate illustrations of our position is impossible.

"But in St. Mat. xii. 40 it is said, 'For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights (τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας) in the heart of the earth.' But what is the meaning of τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας?

"We have no further evidence as to how long Jonas was in the whale's belly; but if the time that Jesus was in the heart of the earth was the exact time that Jonas was in the whale's belly, it is evident that the τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας can only be equivalent to a part of the first day, the whole of the second day, and a part of the third day; and in perfect accordance with this, we learn from Esther v. 1, that on the third day, (ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ) when she had ceased praying, she appeared before the king; but according to chapter iv. 16, she had said, 'Go and assemble the Jews that are in Susa, fast ye for me, and eat not, and drink not, for three days, day and night, (ἐν τρεῖς ἡμέρας τρεῖς καὶ νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν) and I also and my maidens will fast, and I will go in to the king.'

"Further: according to St. Matthew xxvii. 63, the Jews said to Pilate, 'Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, after three days (μετὰ τρεῖς ἡμέρας) I will rise again;' and their request to Pilate was, 'Command, therefore, that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day.' This seems most plainly to imply, that Jesus had led the Jews to expect his resurrection not later than the third day, or we should have had them requesting Pilate to have the sepulchre made sure beyond the third day."

QUERY ON JOHN XX. 19-26.

THE style of speech which describes the recurrence of the same day of the week by such phraseology as "after eight days," is not peculiarly Jewish, unless we in Scotland are so, for we say indifferently, "this day week," or "this day eight days;" albeit, we know that seven days, not eight, make the week. It depends on whether the first day named be included; for Sunday to Sunday inclusive is eight days. I left Edinburgh on Friday evening, and now it is Lord's-day morning: How many days have I been absent? How do we count? Friday one, Saturday two, Sunday three. No, says Bro. S. J. C. not three days, but two; from Friday to Saturday one, and from Saturday to Sunday two. Not even two days is my reply, for it is but one day and thirteen hours since I left Edinburgh.

T. H. MILLER.

Glasgow, May 13, 1860.

"THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST."

IN consequence of some miscomprehension on the part of some of the brethren, I shall be obliged, by the insertion of the following remarks on the article of mine, published in the Harbinger for June.

I consider the term, "The Divinity of Christ," as a fabrication of men, in the same light as I consider the terms "Doctor of Divinity," "Students of Divinity," and so on.

I consider the scriptural phrase, "the Word was God," "God with us," and others similar to them, more clear and less liable to misunderstanding, than the term "The Divinity of Christ."

As regards the 1 Tim. iii. 16, by means of farther evidence brought before me, I am enabled to perceive that the testimony in favour of retaining it, as "God manifest in the flesh," is equal to the testimony in favour of its being rendered as "He who was manifested in the flesh."

As regards my farther remarks, I trust that it will be perceived, that the comments on the various passages of Scripture, have been made in order to lead to the conclusion, as stated in the closing portion of the article, that in all of them, expressed or implied, we can see the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

HENRY BRITAIN.

Birmingham, June 11, 1860.

CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD.

IT appears to me that one or two of your correspondents would have us to understand, that calling on the name of the Lord means prayer or supplication to the Lord Jesus Christ. I, for one, cannot think so. It is true, we have Stephen in his last moments saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit;" and many saints, in the hour of their departure, have done the same. Saul also, afterwards called Paul, when spoken to from heaven by the Saviour himself, exclaimed, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do!" The Apostles, too, when about to put forth miraculous power, as the ambassadors of Christ, called on the name of the Lord; desirous, no doubt, that those who witnessed the miracle should be made to understand, that it was through the express communication of the exalted Lord whom they despised, that the diseased were made whole. Jesus, in the first lesson which he gave to his disciples on prayer, said to them, "When ye pray, say, Our Father," &c.; and in his own memorable prayer, which we have in John xvii. and in the Garden, how many times does he use the term Father. I cannot find that Jesus ever commanded his disciples to pray directly to him for anything. In John xvi. we learn that Jesus, when informing his disciples that he will soon be taken from them, adds another lesson on prayer. "In that day (during my absence) ye shall ask me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever you ask the Father in my name, (or by my authority—Ed.) He will do it. Hitherto you have asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." This ought to settle the matter for ever. "It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is ever at the right hand of God, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us."

A. H.

Morley Hays, June 12, 1860.

LETTER FROM SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Grote-street, Adelaide, April 24, 1860.

THE brethren here, in common with disciples of the Lord Jesus in other parts of the world, are desirous that the glorious gospel of the blessed God should run, have free course, and be glorified. To this end many of our brethren have been diligently engaged proclaiming the truth for some years; and they have not labored in vain, for many precious souls, through their feeble instrumentality, have been directed to Jesus, the only Saviour of sinners, and in him have found peace to their souls. And others have been taught the way of the Lord more perfectly, who are now rejoicing in the truth by which they have been freed from the error and superstition in which they were once held. While we rejoice in what has been accomplished, we are not satisfied that everything is done that could be done by us. With this conviction, the brethren in Adelaide have requested me to write to each of our sister churches in this colony, desiring them to coöperate with us in calling out and sustaining a brother to do the work of an evangelist. We have no doubt of the readiness of our sister churches to take part with us in this work of faith. The only difficulty that presents itself to our mind at present is, where shall we find a brother who will do the work of an evangelist among us? Does our good Bro. Wallis think that we have any hope in looking to England for an evangelist? Could one of our many gifted brethren in England be spared for a few years to labor in Australia? Our brethren in Victoria with whom I have been spending a few weeks lately, in company with Bro. Magarey, are very anxious to co-operate with the churches in South Australia, in this truly great and Christian work; and it is not too much to say, that South Australia and Victoria offer to an evangelist a field for labor, with prospects of success, unsurpassed by any other in the world. Hoping that this subject will have your best consideration, and that we shall be favoured with your advice, which I know all the brethren will respect, I remain, yours in Christ Jesus,

PHILIP SANTO.

[A few lines from Bro. Santo, or from any of the brethren in Australia, are always acceptable and cheering to those who are left behind in the dear old mother country. Before this response reaches the colony, we hope to attend the Annual Meeting of the brethren, when the subject of evangelization, in connection with the churches of the United Kingdom, will engage the attention of those present. Whether any provision can then be made to meet the requirements of the churches in Australia, seems to be very doubtful. The harvest is great, and the fields in many districts are already white, but the laborers are indeed few. "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, to send forth more laborers into the field." The brethren in Australia, though not sent out as missionaries by any body of men, have done well in the cause of Jesus their Saviour. It is doubtless a source of great satisfaction to them, and to all of us, to be able to reflect, at the close of every day, and especially every first-day, that the Lord's will has been sought to be accomplished, and not the traditions of men. We exhort them to renewed perseverance in the good work, and to walk by the same rule: so shall they reap, if they faint not.—J. W.]

REVIEWS, NOTES ON PASSING EVENTS, CORRESPONDENCE, &amp;c.

THE SCRIPTURE ANSWER-BOOK

—A Catechism of 525 Questions Answered by Scripture Quotations. By T. H. MILNER. London: Houlston and Wright; and of the Author.

THERE are chapters upon God, the Lord Jesus, the Holy Spirit, the Scriptures, the Gospel, the Kingdom, the New Covenant, the Law, the Grace, Salvation, Sin, Justification, Atonement, Redemption, Pardon, Conversion, Regeneration, Faith, Repentance, Confession, Baptism, the Church, the Ordinances, Worship, and as many more equally interesting topics.

The chapter headed "Election and Reprobation," is a fair sample of the book.

ELECTION AND REPROBATION.

Q. 204. Is it those who have given themselves to Jesus and are said to be 'in Christ' who are the elect or chosen of God? A. It is; for of such Eph i. 4, says, 'According as God hath chosen us in Christ, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love.'

Q. 205. Does God choose sinners to salvation through the belief of the truth and the sanctification of the Spirit? A. Expressly; for Paul in 2 Thess. ii. 13, addresses the believers saying, 'God hath, from the beginning, chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and the belief of the truth.'

Q. 206. Is it by the Gospel God calls men into this election? A. It is; for the next verse says, 'Whereunto he called you by our gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.'

Q. 207. Is this mode of election in accordance with God's foreknowledge? A. It is; for 1 Peter i. 2, describes the chosen as 'elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ.'

Q. 208. Are sinners thus chosen, that they may exhibit the perfections of godliness? A. They are; for 1 Peter ii. 9, says to the elect, 'Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out darkness into his marvellous light.'

Q. 209. Were the elect always God's choice people? A. No; for Peter immediately adds, 'Who in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God; who had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.'

Q. 210. Has it always been God's purpose that the faithful be his elect people? A. It has; for in Rom. xi. 4, 5, he says, 'I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to Baal; even so, then, at the present, time, also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace.'

211. Are Christians addressed in Scripture as aware of their being God's elect? A. They are; for Paul in 1 Thess. i. 4, says, 'knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God.'

Q. 212. Are they exhorted to act in character as God's choice ones? A. They are; for Col. iii. 12, says, 'Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering.'

Q. 213. Are they required to give heed that they may make their calling and election sure? A. They are; for 2 Peter i. 10, says, 'Wherefore, the rather brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall.'

Q. 214. Do those who fall away from the Gospel continue elect persons? A. No; for Heb. vi. 4-6, says, 'It is impossible for those who were once enlightened and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.'

Q. 215. Does reprobation mean the rejection of those who, after trial, are found to be unworthy? A. It does; for Heb. vi. 7, 8, says, 'For the earth which drinketh in the rain which cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs, meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God; but that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned.'

Q. 216. Was it so with the Jews who revolted from their allegiance to God? A. It was; for Jer. vi. 30, says, 'Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them.'

Q. 217. Is self-examination enjoined upon professed Christians, that they might know that they are not disapproved? A. It is; for 2 Cor. xiii. 5, says, 'Examine yourselves whether you be in the faith. Prove your own selves; know ye not your own selves how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates.'

Q. 218. Did the Apostle keep his natural passions in subjection, lest he should become a disapproved or reprobate person? A. He did; for in 1 Cor. ix. 27, he says, 'I keep under my body and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away.'

Q. 219. Are the mere professors of the gospel approved persons? A. No; for Titus i. 16, says, 'They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.'

Q. 220. Are there any other kinds of election spoken of in the Scriptures besides that of believers to salvation? A. Yes; for Matt. xii. 18, says, respecting the Lord Jesus, 'Behold my servant whom I have chosen, by beloved in whom I am well pleased.'

Q. 221. Is there any other election to office spoken of besides that of Jesus to the Messiahship? A. Yes; for Luke vi. 13, says that 'Jesus called unto him his disciples, and of them he chose twelve, whom he named Apostles.'

Q. 222. Was Judas Iscariot among those thus chosen? A. He was; for John vi. 70, reports that Jesus said, 'Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a demon?'

Q. 223. Does the Saviour more than once refer to this election to apostleship? A. Yes; for in John xv. 16, addressing the Apostles he says, 'Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain.'

Q. 224. Did Judas by transgression fall, though thus chosen? A. He did; for Acts i. 24-25 says, the disciples prayed and said, 'Thou Lord who knowest the hearts of all, shew whether of these two men thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas, by transgression, fell.'

THE DEFECTS OF THE REFORMATION.

We have spoken of them before, and it may be the reader is ready to say, "Oh, 'tis only the old story." But if the story be old, there may be, just now, a new charm about it, owing to the persons who tell it. A week or so back the day sitting of the United Presbyterian Church was devoted to addresses in celebration of the tri-centenary of the Reformation in Scotland. The meeting took place in the Music-hall, Edinburgh. The Rev. Dr. Anderson, of Glasgow, spoke on the defects of the Reformation, and said—

"First, it is my opinion that our Reformers brought away with them from Rome, and imported into the Reformation, not a little of the priesthood of the apostasy. Secondly, our reforming ancestors imported from Rome into the Reformation not a little doctrine of the mysterious, mystical power of the sacraments, as administered by the forenamed authorized priesthood. Thirdly, our reforming ancestors multiplied the articles to be confessed, in order to ministerial and Christian communion and fellowship, a most exorbitant length. That individually, or even unitedly, men should issue testimonies of great extent and minuteness may, in certain circumstances, be not only proper, but absolutely necessary. But that they should proceed to impose these extended testimonies as terms of church fellowship, is as unwise as it is unauthorized. It has been of the most disastrous consequence in destroying the consciences of the honest—deluging the church with hypocrisy and formalism; and instead of promoting uniformity, producing discord, divisions, and separations; and let me add, in not a few instances furnishing the envious and worthless with weapons for the persecution of the worthy. The articles of that creed, in respect of faith unto salvation, should be made the fewest possible, and equally the fewest possible in respect of regulating mutual co-operation. * * * I know not that there was ever a man more self-abased, more self-abnegatory towards God than Martin Luther; but equally, with one exception, I know not that there was ever a man more opinionatively proud, insolent, contemptuous, impatient of contradiction or dissent, towards his brethren. The exception is John Calvin. With what imperious insolence he ruled in the giant strength of his mind over both magistrates and ministers—compelling all to subjection to the minutæ of his dogmas. We all profit at this day by John Knox having sat at the feet of this Gamaliel to learn the gospel; but we suffer not a little by the manner in which his natural opinionativeness was cherished and fostered by the domineering example of his master. This pride of opinion, insisting on a minute conformity with it in all its views—strong as the pride of birth, strong as the pride of wealth, strong as the lust of power, to which it is as german as the besetting sin of our intellectual nature. You may suspect me when I utter these sentiments, but I will mention one whom no one here or elsewhere dare suspect. Once and again, and a third time in the course of his lectures on theology, does Dr. Dick protest against the confessions and testimonies of dead men being imposed on the faith of the church, and calls for the testimony of living men by a frequent review of the standards. (Cheers.)

Dr. Anderson also remarked upon the allowance of the principle of Church Establishments as one of the defects of the Reformers:—

“What (he said) is the Scriptural authority the Westminster divines quote for this dogma? Not one word of the New Testament, except at that point where they assign to the civil magistrate the power to call synods in the way of taking order for this heaven-commissioned spiritual work, they quote these words, ‘And when Herod had gathered all the chief priests and scribes together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. (Laughter and applause.) Was there ever—I do not mean subjectively, as if there had been malice in their own hearts, but objectively as an idea—was there ever a more perverse blaspheming of God’s Word? That the conduct of this tyrant, bent on the strangling of the infant Redeemer, should be instanced as an inspired authority for church supervision by the civil power. (Loud applause.) It is indescribably horrible. I denounce the doctrine and system of our reforming ancestors on the subject of the civil magistrate’s power in religion, as being not only unscriptural, but violently antisciptural—as violating the kingly prerogative of Christ—as violating the liberties of his church—as violating the natural rights of conscience—as perpetrating abuses in the church, instead of rectifying them—as impeding the progress of the church, instead of aiding it—as inundating the church with worldliness and quenching its spirituality—as cherishing the Diotrephan class of men who treat with their hauteurs brethren who are immeasurably oftentimes more worthy than themselves by every measure, whether of morality, piety, or well-doing—as a principle which is the grand obstructive of Christian harmony; which, in our own country, was once tyrannical and cruel, and which, as now modified by advanced civilization, is mean and mercenary—which is the grand cause of the present distraction and perplexity of our commonwealth—and which, abroad throughout Europe, after having for many weary centuries of turmoil and oppression, of imprisonment in cells of inquisitors, of martyrdom at the stake, of bloody wars, of expelling the gospel from countries into which it had entered, is now perplexing the whole of the civilized world, and threatening us with a universal catapasm of humanity. (Applause.) All this I charge on the principle of our reforming ancestors on the subject of the magistrate’s power, and on those who either practically or theoretically (laughter) adopt it. The principle is Pagan, it is Popish, it is Infidel, it is inhuman—(laughter and cheers)—though I do not impute these attributes to the men whose circumstances are so unhappy as to call them to profess it. (Laughter.) We are the only Presbyterian body in the land who can afford to give a testimony against the grand defect of the Reformation. (Cheers.) The Established Church, of course, cannot; the Reformed Presbyterians cannot; the Free Church cannot. They must all observe silence on the subject of one of the greatest of anti-Christian enormities—(hear, hear)—or plead in its defence. The question, therefore, now is, have we taken due advantage of our position? (Hear, hear, and applause.) We have not. (Cheers.) We have been traitors to the cause.”

No common statement, this. Surely Dr. Anderson does not intend to rest, until these gigantic evils, which the Reformers brought with them from Rome, are excluded from Protestant churches! Thanks to our Father in heaven, the sun will shine—the truth will lighten the dark places.

BOND-STREET CHAPEL, THE TRUSTEES, & THE CHURCH.

THE subjoined notice and reply will no doubt be considered, by most readers, of sufficient importance to claim a place in our pages.

“Birmingham, 12th May, 1860.

“The undersigned Trustees of the Baptist meeting-house in Bond-street, Birmingham, hereby state that they have taken into consideration the public announcements that have recently appeared, to the effect that alterations have taken place in the constitution of the church assembling there.

“These alterations inevitably point to the conclusion, that the congregation now meeting in Bond-street does not belong to the Society of Protestant Dissenters, commonly called Particular Baptists, for whose benefit the chapel was placed in trust; and the trustees are therefore of opinion, that such congregation is not entitled to the occupation of the property in accordance with the Trust Deed. Under these circumstances, the Trustees feel that it has become their duty to request, that arrangements may be made for the delivery of the possession of the premises to them, at the earliest convenient date, in order that they may perform their trust in relation thereto. And they respectfully submit this statement and request to Mr. Chew, Mr. King, and the members of the congregation generally, in the hope that they will favor the Trustees with an early reply.

E. A. BUTLER.

J. HADLEY.

WM. DUKE.

To Mr. David King.
To Mr. S. J. Chew."

"Bond-street chapel, Birmingham,
June 12, 1860.

Gentlemen,—Your communication, dated May 12th, was delivered by Mr. Duke, but not until after it had been published in the Daily Post, and therein declared to have been delivered.

We learn therefrom that three of the Trustees are of opinion that the church meeting in Bond-street chapel is not entitled to possession. You are aware, however, that these three constitute the smallest possible majority of Trustees.

This opinion is said to be based upon certain public announcements which have recently appeared: from which you infer, that the congregation 'does not belong to the Society of Dissenters, commonly called Particular Baptists,' for whose benefit the chapel was placed in trust. Before stating somewhat at large our convictions on the question you have thus raised, it may be well to say, that your intimation, that Bond-street chapel was put in trust for the 'Society of Protestant Dissenters, commonly called Particular Baptists,' is contrary to fact: as the trust-deed clearly states that the chapel was put in trust for a society (or church) in and around Birmingham, and therefore not for a denomination. It is, then, apparent, that the ground of your application is entirely taken away, as the church is not required to form part of a society of churches, nor to coöperate with other congregations.

Here the case might be dismissed; but, as you may take other grounds, and found your plea upon alleged change in doctrine, order, or name, we shall set forth some of the reasons upon which we base a conclusion the opposite of that communicated by you.

First, then, concerning

DOCTRINE.

That the deed specifies that the property is in trust for the use of persons holding certain doctrines, and that the terms used are generally understood to express ultra-Calvinistic ideas, is fully admitted; and also, that many of the present congregation repudiate those ideas, and prefer to speak of Bible things by Bible words. But then, it is also well known that the church—years before Mr. Chew's connection with it, and during the time the chapel was used by those who were active in its erection—considerably modified its doctrinal views: also, that during the pastorate of Mr. Morgan and since, views opposed to the more common interpretation of the terms of the deed were preached, sanctioned by the church, the Trustees entering no protest.

In this respect the Bond-street church is not peculiar. The Particular Baptist Churches in and around Birmingham are alike discordant with their deeds, if tried by any one standard of interpretation, and also with each other.

Nor was it otherwise in times long since gone by. In the Norwich Case, recently tried in the Rolls Court, it was shewn that the earliest confessions subscribed by Particular Baptists had the sanction of Spilbury and Richardson, who were co-pastors in the same congregation; and Paul Hobson, whose writings are still extant. Spilbury held that our Lord Jesus Christ died for THE ELECT ONLY; whilst Richardson and Hobson taught that he died for EVERY MAN, and that the application of his atonement by the grace of God constituted the particularity of the redemption. And among those who signed the Confession of Assembly in 1677 and 1689 were Hanserd Knollys, William Collins, and Hercules Collins, who held the same doctrine.

ORDER.

But we have changed the order of the church. True, changes have recently taken place, consisting in a return to primitive and apostolic usage, and bringing us much nearer to the order of the Baptist churches of a century or two ago. We have changed

1st. From monthly to weekly breaking of the bread.

2nd. From preaching a sermon on the Lord's-day morning to mutual teaching.

3rd. From divers collections to the weekly offering.

4th. From being content with one pastor, to the recognition of the necessity for several.

It is freely admitted, that in these particulars we differ from those who put the chapel in trust, and from, to use your own words, 'the Society of Dissenters commonly called Particular Baptists.' But then the deed does not require conformity in church order—the builders expressed no intention to tie themselves or others, in this respect, and the Baptist Confessions leave each church to determine for itself.

The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment upon the Norwich Case, said, 'Not only no one congregation, but not even any assembly of congregations, considered itself at liberty to dictate to any other church or congregation which might dissent from it. On the contrary, a fundamental doctrine of the Particular Baptists seems to have been, that each separate congregation constituted a distinct church in itself. It was part of the constitution and essence of each church or congregation of Particular Baptists, THAT THEY MIGHT REGULATE THEIR PRACTICE AS THEY THOUGHT FIT.

THE NAME.

The church in Bond-street has not taken, and does not own to, any name which those who put the chapel in trust did not acknowledge. It calls itself 'Christian,' and answers only to that name. It is, however, asserted, that the chapel is in trust for a church known as 'Baptist.' True, but it is not required that the people shall CALL THEMSELVES BAPTISTS; and in the early records of Bond-street church it styles itself 'A Church of Christ,' and not a Particular Baptist Church.

If, then, the church is, in all that relates to baptism, all that the word Baptist was used to designate, is it not, so far as name is concerned, entitled to possession?

The word Baptist, in its New Testament acceptance, is not rejected by the church in Bond street. It is applied to John: he was John the Baptist. Paul, Philip, and others were Baptists. Our preachers, Sanders J. Chew and David King, are Baptists, avow themselves Baptists, and baptize many. Yet they say not, 'We belong to the Baptist denomination,' but 'We are of the church of Christ—'

'Let names, and sects, and parties fall,
And Jesus Christ be all in all.'

Formerly churches of immersed believers designated themselves baptized churches: the term Baptist church was used and intended to denote the same thing. In this sense, then, also, the church in Bond-street is now, as it has been, a Baptist church. It proclaims and administers the 'one baptism' instituted by Christ, and receives to its fellowship only those who, upon confession of faith, have been immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus

It recognizes as Christian churches only those congregations which consist of immersed believers—yet it calls itself by, and glories only in the higher name, 'Christian': seeing no more cause to call itself after one Christian ordinance because some sprinkle babies, than to call itself after another ordinance because the Society of Friends reject the Lord's Day and Lord's Supper.

It must be also remembered that the trust deed gives to a majority of the church the right to appoint preachers, and to decide as to their soundness in doctrine—and that not only do over three hundred members now declare themselves content, but that at all times since Mr. Chew commenced his ministry, a large majority have declared in his favor, again and again recalling him after he had resigned.

With these facts in view, we declare and maintain the conviction, that we have a clearly established right.

By order of the church of Christ meeting in Bond-street chapel.

(Signed)

SANDERS J. CHEW,
DAVID KING, } Evangelists.

HENRY COTTERELL,
JAMES EGGINTON,
WILLIAM EGGINTON,
JAMES ESKELL,
JOHN JOHNSTONE,
JOHN S. LEMPRIERE,
EDWIN TOMKINSON, } Deacons.

To Mr. G. A. Butler.
Mr. J. Hadley.
Mr. W. Duke."

PLYMOUTH-BRETHRENISM.

NO. V.

WHAT is its mission? It claims to have been raised up of God for a special purpose. Is it so? And if it is, does it understand that purpose? One of its prominent ministers, Mr. Alexander Stewart, has recently written—

"And this brings me to consider the nature of the testimony of 'the brethren.' I use the title in its conventional sense. I do believe that God has raised up in our days a testimony in His Church, in itself as characteristic and distinct as that which marks the era of the Protestant Reformation. The one does not supersede, but only confirms, whilst it advances on the other. The characteristic principle of the Reformation was justification on the principle of faith. But this was expressive of individuality rather than incorporation—of individual union to Christ—not of corporate unity. But the Holy Ghost is a living person and incorporating power. This principle of faith was antagonistic to Rome in her doctrine of 'works.' But the principle of the 'unity of the Spirit' in the body of Christ, is antagonistic to Rome in her theory of unity—that is, the unity of Christ is directly opposed to the unity of the church, at least, to what Rome calls such. Now, I believe, that to proclaim and manifest this unity of the Spirit—this unity of the Christ—is the distinct and blessed mission which our Lord has committed unto us, in presence of the church, and of the world. I do not say that there are not other important, and kindred truths also opened to us in His blessed Word, and connected with this testimony, but of this I feel persuaded in common with yourselves, that this is the great leading truth which is in principle characteristic of our testimony. This is the mission with which His people were entrusted in these latter days, viz.: to 'gather together in one the children of God which are scattered abroad,' (John xi.) and that the prayer of our Lord may receive its accomplishment, by a manifested unity through the power of the Holy Ghost, 'that the world may believe,' as preparatory to, and in order that they may know, when made manifest in glory, the unutterable love of the Father to those whom He has given to the Son (John xvii. 21 with 23, Col. iii. 4.)

"I trust that I shall not offend the people of the Lord, who in this point may not see eye to eye with us, when I say that there is a testimony raised up of God through the instrumentality of 'the brethren,' or as they used formerly, though erroneously, to be called, 'the Plymouth Brethren.' That testimony I believe to be to the unity of the body of Christ, in virtue of the unity of the Spirit, whose indwelling makes that body one. This great truth was prominent in, and, indeed, is characteristic of, the testimony with which we stand associated, and for the maintenance of which God holds us responsible."

According to the above, the mission of Plymouth Brethrenism is to "gather together in one the children of God which are scattered abroad," by manifesting certain lost truth concerning the Holy Spirit—that "the Holy Ghost is a living person and incorporating power." By this we understand Mr. S. to mean more than is held by the denominations generally, otherwise he would not write—"I do not say that there are not other important and kindred truths also opened to us, and connected with this testimony." It is not, then, the "personality of the Holy Ghost," nor merely the Spirit's "indwelling in the believer," that has been communicated or revealed to these latter-day prophets, but an operation of the Spirit in the assembly by which the Scriptures are "opened," and brethren moved to teach and fill the various offices in the body. To testify this as a great central truth around which all believers should gather, is the special work of Plymouth Brethren. On the "corporate actings" of the Spirit another noted scribe writes—"I assume two points which, I suppose, are unquestioned:—1st, That there is an operation of the Holy Spirit in the body, in contradistinction, or rather in addition, to His operation in an individual.—2dly, That this corporate operation is in the visible, not the mystical body." As it was in the beginning, so it is now. These brethren call upon believers to "come out of system"—leave the system of the Pope, of the Church of England, of Wesley, and any other, and turn to their system—which is only another road to bondage.

But has God raised up and commissioned this people thus to testify? We answer, No! Let their claim be tested by their history. Let it be remembered that whenever God has been pleased to raise up a person or a people to avow and exemplify a principle, He has taken care that His chosen instrument has answered the purpose. Now what purpose have the Plymouth Brethren answered? The "corporate operation" of the Holy Spirit would of course secure uniformity of testimony on all great truths; but their teachers, by voice and pen, are as discordant as were the builders of Babel. The "corporate operation" of the Spirit would certainly secure unity, or at least so make manifest the carnal, who break the bond of peace, that they may be cast out, and known by those for whose benefit this people have been raised up to testify. But no—everywhere there is division. Mr. Stewart, who still numbers with them, and whose claim on their behalf we have cited, will be a most proper person to describe the working of this modern development of mysticism. He says—

"And now, beloved brethren, if this be so, will you permit me to ask this question, How have we fulfilled this mission, or stood in the power and fellowship of this wondrous grace? Alas! what a melancholy retrospect has tracked our history as the bearers of this testimony for God before the world, for the last sixteen years. Does our actual condition bear witness to unity or division, which? Is it not a fact which cannot be denied, that division stains the banner of the brethren, both at home and abroad? Look at our condition as the witnesses of unity. Have we not become the by-word and the badge of Schism? Look at England, Ireland, Scotland, the Channel Islands, France, Switzerland, and now Italy—East, West, North, and South, where has not our testimony to unity become a denial of it, and now a practical falsehood? Where envy and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. And should not the evidence of these facts force us solemnly to ponder whether the table around which we meet may not, after all our boasted light and knowledge, become the rallying point of a faction, and the symbol of a Schism?"

So much for their special mission and testimony. Their position furnishes undeniable evidence that their testimony is false!

But uniform, truthful, and strong have been the teachings of these brethren against clericalism—the degradation of the, so called, laity, they have everywhere protested against, and proclaimed the universality of the Christian priesthood. But where are they now? Still testifying this truth with the lip, but walking in the high-road to priestly assumption, the few exercising lordship, and the many degraded by bondage only surpassed by that of Rome. Strong language—but let us hear Mr. Stewart:

"I have been familiar with ecclesiastical courts, the intrigues of councils, and the tact of party, but I do not believe that any religious body could be found—unless it be the Mormons—where such a wanton outrage could be offered with impunity to truthfulness and honour. From the persecutions of the Roman priests, you may appeal to the civil magistrates; but, among the brethren there is no redress. Hence the common adage, 'you need never look for justice from the brethren.' But it is not the saints, it is the system which is to blame. Were the question proposed to these brethren, individually, Do you sanction those two letters on the 4th January? there is scarcely one who would not, with a blush exclaim, 'What! is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?'"

But what can this mean? You walk into that well but neatly-furnished meeting-room—you ask the man at the door, Who the people meeting there are? He tells you, "The Brethren." How unpretending this designation, and how appropriate the surroundings—seats all alike—a table on the level floor, bearing its white cloth, loaf, and cup—no official chairs—all appear as brethren, and nothing more. After waiting some time, one in the midst of the congregation asks, "Shall we sing from page 120; or, Shall we pray?" After further waiting, another, with much seeming diffidence, reads a portion of Scripture, adding a few remarks, slowly, and as he might do were he waiting the promptings of the Spirit.

In due time one advances to the table and breaks the loaf—his manner seems to say, "I am specially moved to do this." After the meeting you ask, "Who are your preachers or teachers?" and the answer is, "The Holy Spirit, by whomsoever he will." Or, "Who are your elders?" or, "Who is your president?" when the reply may be, "The Holy Spirit, acting through whom He pleases." Surely there can be no despotism here! Quite a mistake! Mark that man who acts on his own conviction of fitness, and who has mistaken the promptings of large self-esteem for the Holy Spirit's indication that he should lead, and whose leading has never in any way received the sanction of the gathering, but yet is submitted to by all—see him with others like himself, as they sit in another assembly, and settle what "the gatherings" shall do or not do, and remember that here also each man has come because he feels he is the man to be there, and not because his brethren send him. Let Mr. Stewart tell us something of the working of this self-called synod. Concerning what is known as the "Jersey case," he says:

"No pen can describe how for fourteen years the poor saints of God have been worried and perplexed in Jersey. For many years there were three tables, each the expression of a distinct principle, and now there is a fourth. So that in retrospect the testimony there has been little less than confusion.

"Now, with the setting up of the second table I had nothing to do, at the time of the separation from Mr. Naylor. It was an accomplished fact before I arrived, and much of the agency and manœuvre then employed I highly disapproved, and in effect put down. There was then the same running from house to house, and 'compassing sea and land to make one proselyte,' as is working in that faction now. The same attempt to act upon the poor by personal influence, allurements, and intimidation; and it is just the same piece acted over again, in this recent division, which had its origin in the spirit of faction, dissimulation, and intrigue. The movement, six years ago, was in many of its features just the same. If there existed no other proof on earth of the baneful fruits which this root of bitterness—schism—has borne, the history of the various divisions in Jersey, for so many years, would be quite enough."

Turning from this to the "London case" he adds—

"First slander entered on her secret and epistolary mission, and poured her tales of defamation into empty ears, and between the ear and tongue there is a natural canal. 'The tongue is full of deadly poison,' and drugs, like the snake, the victim with its slime it destines to devour. And this is man. 'Who taketh not up an evil report against his neighbours,' seems to have been forgotten in our 'creed,' for at length you must know the brethren have 'produced a creed—their code of principles!' Whither are we bound? Up to this time we used to be contented with the Bible. Now we are gravely schooled, by not the highest authority amongst us either, that, we have been all in this quite wrong, and henceforth your ways are to be governed by what these erudite theologians call 'our principles'—substituted for the Scriptures, unintentionally it is to be hoped. But so it is. Now, beloved, let me ask you how long are we to tolerate such assumption, such invasion of the authority of Christ? If we do not take heed, we shall soon have to surrender either our consciences to the dogmas and decretals of the priory, or bite our chains. Take heed!

"But what is it all about—these doings in Jersey? Well, I do solemnly believe that it is a bare-faced piece of hypocrisy. The people are deceived. In general, the dear brethren in London, seem in their warmest moments to have been quite sincere. They have been fighting for the truth, and hewing down this formidable man of straw, whom imagination had modelled as a monster. But, unfortunately, they knew not for whom or against what they fought. It reminds me of the Irish peasant, who, having seized a pike, in 1798, was breathlessly rushing to the fray, when a friend quietly asked him—'What are you fighting for, my fine fellow?' 'For general emancipation,' was Pat's reply. 'And what is that,' again was demanded. 'Some great General or other, your honour.' I speak not in lightness. There is almost as much reason in the one case as in the other. It is not the dear brethren that I blame, but their misleaders who had their cue, and understood their cards."

Then he shews that excommunication takes place in the name of the brotherhood, without trial, proof, or scriptural meeting, and without appeal to them. Another of these brethren, Mr. J. Culverhouse, writing of Mr. Stewart and the meeting of the self-elected rulers, says:

"2. The next and only other subject on which I shall address you, is the London Bridge Meeting. How long this meeting has existed is not known to me, but, I believe, for several years. As a meeting for brotherly conference, it would be a valuable adjunct to the church, and keep the elders and teachers in useful communication with each other. You, however, know that it is far more than this, and that, in fact, the functions of the London churches are practically usurped by the reception and excommunication of members. Upon this subject I wrote to Mr. Darby before he left England, and pressed it upon his attention, but no answer—not even the usual courteous acknowledgment—was received. I have also written to Dr. Cronin, Mr. Lean, and yourself, on the subject; and in addressing Dr. Cronin, addressed the London Bridge Conference; but I am even without an acknowledgment. If I am correctly informed, the letter has not been read at the meeting, and such, dear brother, is the state of the gatherings at this present time.

"Now I expect that brethren will dispute the facts, as I have stated them, and will deny, as one of the brethren did lately to me, that the Conference either receives or puts away members. If the Conference does not do it, will you tell me, dear brother, who does? You may, perhaps, say the gatherings themselves. If you say so, let me ask you when they do it, and at what meetings? Are any meetings held for this purpose? If so, I am ignorant of them, and I have not been able to get any satisfactory explanation on the subject. The announcement, for instance, at the Priory, where I usually attend, is only 'Received,' 'Proposed,' 'Put away'—but the Table is only made the place of announcement. Now is this right? Is there anything in Scripture to justify this? I don't cite Scripture to shew what the right course is, since I assume this to be unnecessary, and I put the matter before you as one of principle.

"Assuming I am correct in the circumstances, as to the London Bridge Meeting, its dangers are too obvious to require being pointed out, and it is to be feared that many brethren have been 'put away' upon charges which would have failed before the church. Indeed, if the conference have this power, I, myself, may at any time be 'put away.' The use and exercise of such a power will not bear discussion, the members of the church having less protection than in 'Congregationalism,' or in 'Popery.'"

Our conclusion from all this, and more than could be said, is, that if the Lord has given these brethren a special mission, it is that of shewing to the world the folly of their own views—that there is more than one road to despotism—that there are high-priests who do not wear robes, and that the good old way of the primitive church is what we need and must have. D. K.

THE WEEKLY OFFERING.

I. They continued steadfastly in the Apostle's doctrine, and the fellowship" (Acts ii. 42.) *

These pages are addressed to those who have seen the evil of pew-letting—that sad and sinful practice, by which the poor, the rich, the richer, and the most rich are distinguished in the house of worship as at the concert and theatre—and who have abandoned the hundred petty arts by which churches seek to draw support from the world. But a serious question presents itself. Have we, in this matter, not only ceased to do evil, but learned to do well—have we fairly embraced the divine plan? Some will answer—"Certainly! The first Christians continued steadfastly in the fellowship—Johnson, Walker, and others define fellowship so as to include revenue, in which the members share—and koinonia is translated fellowship, contribution, and distribution (Acts ii. 42, Rom. xv. 26, 1 Cor. ix. 13.) Further, we understand, from 1 Cor. xvi. that the collection is to be made on the first day of the week, and therefore, when assembled to break bread, we steadfastly attend to the Apostles' doctrine and the fellowship." Very good! But this, after all, may be only a body without soul—a skeleton without life—and no more acceptable to God than the things above condemned.

II. "By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is the first fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. But to do good, and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Heb. xiv. 16.)

The Apostle had just said, "We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle." Jesus is our meat-offering and true shew-bread—the bread of life which came down from heaven. As royal priests we approach the table of the Lord, not merely to partake of bread and wine, but to eat his flesh and drink his blood.

* The Common Version reads "in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship," but the Greek has the article—the fellowship.

We are there as priests—our song of praise is a sacrifice, and our contribution a thank-offering.

The word translated "communicate," in the text above cited, is, in other places, rendered fellowship and contribution. One may say—"Well, if God looks upon our contribution as a thank-offering, and we attend to it every first day, then, of course, all is right." But it is not every contribution—not a contribution made any how—that God can receive as an acceptable offering, as it is not merely singing which constitutes "the sacrifice of praise to God." We may sound the lofty utterance of adoration merely because others do, to practice music, or to exhibit vocal power, and then we offer, not sacrifice, but mockery. We may contribute, to be seen of men, or because something is wanted to meet expenses—just as we do after a lecture at the Literary Institute—or we may present such a miserable pittance, compared with what is expended in self-gratification, that it would have been quite as well to have yielded to our covetousness by not giving at all. How can he dream that his body is presented "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God," who will not offer his substance as the Lord demands?

III. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him" (1 Cor. xvi. 1.)

Not only has the Lord required an offering, but he has given the law of that offering. Dr. Macknight translates the above text—"On the first day of EVERY week let each of you lay somewhat by itself, according as he may have prospered, putting it into the treasury." Had the Common Version been, "Let every one of you lay by in store," without the word "him," we might not have referred to Dr. Macknight. But let us look at the law of this text.

"ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK." As kata polin signifies every city, kata mēna every month, kata ekklesian in every church, so kata mian sabbatōn signifies, the first day of the week. Not yearly, not monthly, not by impulse, as moved by a fine sermon, but every first day of the week. On the return of that day which commemorates the sacrifice and resurrection of him who died for us, we are to appropriate a portion of the bounty God has bestowed. How rich his grace—so largely to give, and then to accept from our hands a little of his own! How miserably mean the man who sings of love and neglects this offering!

2. "LET EVERY ONE OF YOU." Not some only! Every one of you! There can be but one reason for omitting it—the Lord has given us nothing to offer. It may be that we cannot reach the assembly, and therefore cannot cast into the church treasury, but the law is, "lay by in store." The offering should be placed apart, as sanctified to the Lord. Our next visit, or the hand of a faithful brother, will place it in the treasury. Thus, the church is never to suffer in its funds from the absence of members.

3. "AS GOD HATH PROSPERED HIM." To give every first day is not all. The gift must, to the best of the offerer's judgment, represent his prosperity. Nothing short of a careful and prayerful self-assessment will meet the requirement. God might have demanded a tenth, as he did of the Jews, and some consider the tenth of perpetual standing—we think otherwise. In certain cases it would be too much, in many others far too little. It is to be a free-will offering, and therefore left to ourselves; but it must be in proportion to prosperity, or it is not acceptable. God is unchangeable. He never yet accepted an unwilling offering, and never one willingly given, when much more ought to have been presented. To Moses he said, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they bring me an offering—of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart, ye shall take my offering."

IV. "Honour the Lord with thy substance" (Proverbs iii. 9.)

Every first day of the week we may willingly offer in accordance with a previously determined assessment, and yet altogether disregard this command. This raises the question of proportion, hard to write upon, but not difficult for the Christ-loving soul to determine, and, under every dispensation, left to the individual. True, the Jew was required to present a tithe, but then there were other offerings, in regard to which no amount was specified, because then, as now, a tenth from men in some circumstances would be more in proportion than a fifth from others. Leaving each Christian to determine what may be acceptably offered to the Lord, it may be urged that undue self-love is quite likely to fix the offering far too low, and it may be contended that while the offerings under former dispensations, and those of the first Christians, are not cited as binding us to the same proportion, they are certainly recorded as examples of what the Lord will accept, and intended to influence us.

Abraham "gave tithe of all" (Gen. xiv. 20.) Jacob vowed to devote a tenth of his substance (Gen. xxviii. 22.) Under the Law a tenth was demanded for the support of the Priests and Levites, in addition to which there were tithes allotted to the poor, for whom also there was a corner left in every field, which it was not lawful to reap. Then all the first-fruits, both of fruit and animals, were consecrated to God; and the first fruits of corn, oil, wine, and sheep's wool were offered for the Levites (Ex. xxii. 29, Deut. xviii. 12.) Taking all into view, it appears that the pious Jew offered not less than a fourth of his entire income. And were the first Christians less ready to communicate? Love shed abroad in the heart manifested itself. What the Lord's people needed was supplied, even though some sold their possessions. When Paul referred to the churches in Macedonia, he thanked God for their abounding liberality, at the very time that themselves suffered from poverty. He says, "Beyond their power they were willing of themselves—praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift." It was not the needy, begging to receive, but the poor entreating to be permitted to bestow.

While upon the question of proportion, a few cases certified may be cited.

1. One which recently came under our own observation—an aged widow, income seven shillings per week, out of which she pays one shilling for lodging. Her weekly offering is known to have averaged one shilling—and that not by constraint, but freely, and from conviction that the Lord's cause needed it. 2. A working man with three children, wages one pound per week, average weekly offering over one shilling and fourpence. 3. A small tradesman, one child, annual income £100—weekly offering, over three shillings and sixpence.

4. A tradesman with £230 annual income—weekly offering over fifteen shillings. This selection might be considerably increased, but space will not permit, while on the other hand it would be still more easy to point to a class of cases in which the following might be placed:—E. B. earns from 20 to 30 shillings weekly, spends from sixpence to one shilling in tobacco, and weekly offering is a three-penny piece. Nay, we have met with churches of middle-class and labouring members, whose joint contribution gives an average of not more than threepence weekly for each member. When it is called to mind that all contributions for the poor, the preaching of the gospel, meeting-house accommodation, &c. are merged in this one offering, what can such churches expect—but that which will surely overtake them, unless they reform—what! but, that the Lord will remove their candlestick out of its place?

Not only should the love of Christ constrain us to liberality—move us to the expression of gratitude to him by the measure of our gift—but it should be remembered, that the Lord commits to the church the proclamation of his gospel and the extension of his kingdom, and that to the accomplishment of this great work, money is indispensable. Are there poor brethren needing help? Is the Lord in his providence setting open doors before us for the conversion of sinners and sectaries? Then money is needed. Can He enrich the treasury of His church, and how? The members are the channels through which it is replenished, and as the Lord does not send us to ask contributions from the world, it depends upon them whether the supply shall come or not. Are they "ready to communicate?"—faithful in offering a due proportion. Then He has but to increase their prosperity—to send this one more trade, that one better employment, to remove a burden from another, and the next first-day the church rejoices in increased means. But if they are not faithful—if increased prosperity would not result in proportionably increased offering, then the Lord withholdeth the increase, the individual suffers, and the church treasury is un replenished. We verily believe that many suffer in this world's goods because of their carelessness and unwillingness in rendering to the Lord that which He can accept, and requires. He that is faithful in little things shall be made ruler over much—is a divine promise by no means set aside by the fact that God does not in every instance punish the unfaithful by immediate deprivation. Does not the Apostle justify us in this conclusion? "But this I say, He who soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he who soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you: that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work: (as it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remains for ever. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, doth minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness)" 2 Cor. vi. 9. And this he enforces by the great consideration that—"Though Jesus was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich." The word declares that, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." The Jew was accounted a robber of God when he withheld the tithe. Can less be said of the Christian when he commits a similar offence? Let such an one look to his expenditure and accumulations, and if he think that his store is greater, or his enjoyment larger, than it would have been had he presented his weekly offering with due liberality, let him bear in mind that he must yet give an account of his stewardship to Him who will tear off the flimsy covering which conceals the true state of the case from mortal eyes. Let him remember that "the liberal man deviseth liberal things, and that by liberal things shall he stand." We have declared against all human expedients for supplying the church funds, and if we are not faithful in the proportion offered, we not only shut up the church, so that it cannot do what the Lord sets before it, but we supply seeming proof that the Divine plan will not answer, and thus cause many to reject the faith and order for which we contend.

May, then, this service not only supply the wants of the churches, but be abundant also, and largely productive of thanksgiving to God. D. K.

COMPOUND INTEREST.

"BEN ADHEM had a golden coin one day,
Which he put out at interest with a Jew,
Year after year awaiting him it lay,
Until the doubled coin two pieces grew,
And these two four—so on, till people said,
'How rich Ben Adhem is!' and bowed the servile head.

"BEN SELIM had a golden coin that day,
Which to a stranger asking alms he gave,
Who went rejoicing on his unknown way.
Ben Selim died too poor to own a grave,
But when his soul reached heaven, angels joyed
To show the wealth to which his coin had multiplied!"

FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE.

"And now abideth faith, hope, love;
these three: but the greatest of these is love" (1 Cor. xiii.)

FAITH! What is faith? The certainty
Of things that are not seen—
That now exist—have yet to be—
Or, that have ever been.
And faith in God, from God's word grows,
Humbly receiv'd by man:
While, wanting faith, mankind oppose
Redemption's wond'rous plan.
If faith in God be strong—unfeign'd,
All things it will o'ercome;
Divine approval will be gain'd,
And Heaven will be our home.
It was in pow'r of faith arrayed,
The saints of old such conquests made.
'Faith works by love,' and ever works,
The stronger where most danger lurks.
Steadfast in faith let us abide,
We shall, by faith, be justified.

HOPE! What is hope? A longing faith!
It holds by things unseen;
By good things which the future hath,
And not by what have been.
Like faith, hope stands on evidence,
Though fix'd to smaller range:
Faith knows the 'why,' the 'where,' the 'whence'—

Hope waits for promised change.
Nor faith nor hope, to self alone,
Directs the trustful eye;

Hope views the Saviour on his throne,
Faith sees the Sufferer die.
In his joy, hope will realize
Its own, though long deferred!
For 'yet a little while,' hope sighs,
And Christ's voice will be heard.
Thus meekly hope pursues its aims,
God's promise grasps, his blessing claims.
Hope springs from faith—a helpmate true,
Supporting, but supported too.
Let us through life blend hope with faith,
And we shall triumph over death!

LOVE! What is love? The progeny
Of faith and hope—blest pair!
Faith, hope, and love, a trinity
Of heavenly graces are!
Love fills the heav'ns!—will fill the earth,
When Satan's course is run;
When all's destroyed that owes its birth
To aught beneath the sun.
'Love suffers long,' for love is kind!
It envies not nor vaunts!
'Is not puff'd up!'—is never blind
To saints' or sinners' wants!
'No evil thinks!' Its joy outsprings,
Where'er it meets the truth!
It bears, believes, and hopes all things,
And owns immortal youth!
Love makes a home in ev'ry breast,
Where God's word is a cherish'd guest.
Love yearns o'er sinners, mourns for sin,
Seeks erring souls to Christ to win!
Love conquer'd death for all mankind!
In us be faith, hope, love combin'd.

T. W. SYMONDS.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.—Thousands of men breathe, move, or live, pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? They do not partake of good in the world, and none were blessed by them; none could point to them as the means of their redemption: not a line they write, not a word they spoke, could be recalled; and so they perished—their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, oh man? — Dr. Chalmers.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest, is generally the greatest fool.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

BIRMINGHAM.

Since our notice last month we have been called upon each Lord's day, with one exception, to immerse into the death of Christ—ten have thus been added to the church. On the other hand several have been recorded as separated; they are persons who have for some time been absent from the Lord's table, and have no liking for the order of the Lord's house. Bro. Chew has returned to Birmingham, having visited and encouraged the brethren in Mollington, Whitehaven, Carlisle, Dundee, Perth, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Wigan, Bolton, &c. In most, if not in every instance, having good meetings, and reason to hope that the visit will be productive of good results. D. K.

BOLTON.

Lecture on "Christianity as it was, and as it is."—A meeting was held in the Market-place on Thursday evening last, at which Mr. Sanders J. Chew (Birmingham) delivered an address on the influence of Revivalism. A meeting was afterwards held in the Temperance Hall, where there was a moderate audience, the chair being occupied by Mr. James Young. The chairman, in a brief address, introduced Mr. Sanders J. Chew to the meeting, who said that he had no doubt that in what he had to say he should touch some of their prejudices, but his concern was to speak the truth so far as it was known to him. It was a common thing for it to be said upon Protestant platforms, that on the Bible, and the Bible alone was founded the Protestant religion; but it was not a common thing for them to act upon that. There were a number of human theories and customs, and those together with the Bible formed the Protestant religion; but he stood there to say, that in all matters of faith and practice, as a Christian, he took the Bible, and the Bible alone, as his authority; and it was no use any man speaking to him on such subjects unless he could say, "thus saith the Lord." They had heard much about Revivalism, and the world needed Revivals at the present time, for it was in a shocking state; and he hoped the time would soon come when they should have a true and genuine Revival. The first Revival was on the day of Pentecost, when there was an awakening and outpouring of the Holy Spirit; but it was very different from what Revivals were now. They all knew how a Revival was got up. At first there was a union prayer-meeting, at which all the ministers of the various denominations prayed on a common platform, that the Lord would be pleased to pour out His Holy Spirit upon the unconverted, that they might be brought to see the error of their ways and be saved. Where did they find anything like that done by the Apostles? Peter had said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." But if a man was to ask at one of the Revival meetings how he should be baptized, the ministers on the platform would not be able to agree, and he might be lost. On the present plan, too, feeling was made the substitute for obedience. He wished to see a true and real awakening or Revival, according to the Word of God. After some discussion, and the usual votes of thanks, the meeting separated.—Bolton Guardian, June 7.

LEICESTER.

This month Bro. Inwards spent a Lord's day in Leicester, having good attendance morning and evening. Last Lord's day and on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, I had good meetings in Leicester. Since our communication last month seven have been immersed, and we expect that in a few days several others will add to their faith this appointed surrender to Jesus. Next Lord's day and part of next week I expect to proclaim the Gospel in Leicester, after which Bro. Chew will visit them for a few days.

D. KING.

MARLBPOOL.

Since our last item of news we have added four to our number by immersion into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. We feel grateful to the Father of all mercies, and still desire to seek His guidance and blessing, in order that His gospel may be more understood and obeyed. We have had clouds as well as sunshine, as might be expected: happily, so far, they have been dispelled, and the brethren are walking in love. On Whit-Monday, about 5.45 a.m. (May 28) in the very severe gale of wind, our new chapel being partly built, was blown down to the foundation. The brethren in the vicinity assembled, and soon cleared away the bricks, broken timber, &c.; and by this time we are enabled to inform the brethren, that the building is progressing favorably, and is expected to be ready for opening some time in July.

R. MUMBY.

NOTTINGHAM.

We have had the pleasure of a visit from Bro. D. King, who delivered two lectures in Barker-gate chapel, on the evenings of Thursday and Friday, June 21 and 22. The subject of his first lecture was, "Christianity as it was, the Want of the Age." He observed that Christianity as revealed in the Scriptures, and the Christianity commonly understood and practiced by professors of our day, are not the same; that the Christianity taught by Christ and his Apostles was exactly suited to the moral, intellectual, and spiritual nature of man; whereas the present order and teaching were not only at variance with the New Testament, but had signally failed to accomplish the design which the Great Head of the Church contemplated in his arrangement. He exhorted his hearers to a careful study of the Divine Word, with a view to bring the statements made by him to the test of truth; urged upon the members of Christ's body to secure to themselves the privileges and immunities which belonged to them; and concluded by recommending to his audience the system of Christianity revealed in the New Testament, which would fully meet the wants of the age.—The second lecture was on "Christian Law and Liberty," in considering which he laid down the bases of this law as supplied in the New Testament, illustrating his positions by reference to the enactments of society; and then shewed that Christian liberty did not consist in setting aside the fundamental law-principles of Christ's kingdom, but in the manner and order of their faithful observance. Several questions were put and replied to.

SHERWSBURY.

We have great pleasure in informing you, that last Lord's day we were cheered by the addition of three to the little band of disciples in this town; one sister, by immersion, another from a distant church, and also a young man recently immersed by the Baptists. We hope that they will be long spared to adorn the doctrine of Christ our Saviour.

S. HULME.

June 7, 1860.

WIGAN.

In our last number we communicated the gratifying information, that there are now two places open in Wigan, where, at stated and regular periods, the brethren meet for worship and to proclaim the gospel, one at Rodney-street and the other at Wigan-lane. Of the latter we now purpose to give a brief sketch.

About seven months ago, a lady belonging to the Baptist Church—known to Bro. McDougall, whom she knew and esteemed for his work's sake—intimated to him that her house in Wigan-lane should be at his service, if he would come and hold meetings for the proclamation of the gospel. He gladly, and at once, availed himself of the offer, and arranged for commencing on the following Monday night; his friend meanwhile going round the district and inviting the people to the meeting. Her love and benevolence—as love and benevolence ever will—had already gained her considerable influence over the hearts of her neighbours, and she succeeded in getting a few together to hear the news. Our dear brother entered on the work with a prayerful desire of bringing souls to Christ, and his labours have been acknowledged and blest by the Lord, to whom be all the praise and all the glory.

From the first the audience was composed of men and women of the lowest class—men whose labour was expended in the bowels of the earth, with minds as dark as the coal mine in which they worked, and lives as begrimed with sin as were their persons with the filth consequent on their occupation. The majority of the women were the wives of these men. Altogether a group of poor sinners stepped aside out of their ordinary course into a position somewhat new to them—for seldom did their ears listen to sounds such as were breathed upon them by the preacher; yet even in their ignorance and deep degradation, God had not left himself without a witness: for in the depths of their being lay—it may be dormant, yet no less real—a principle of life that only needed the touch of kindred flame—life to life—to make it burst into activity. And so it was, that as the preacher in earnest solicitude addressed himself as "a dying man to dying men"—as he told of the love of Him who gave his beloved Son, and the love of Him who died, that indifference gave place to curiosity, curiosity to lively interest, until all eyes were riveted, and all ears intent. The meetings were continued, and the next Monday evening found the people again in a listening posture; and the next, and the next; the number of the audience increasing weekly, until the feeling aroused in the neighbourhood became very manifest by a room filled to excess. Besides preaching in the room, our brother sought opportunities of conversing with them at their homes, and found, without exception, a hearty welcome. This was a valuable auxiliary, inasmuch as it made him thoroughly acquainted with the characters, and consequently, with the wants of those with whom he had to do; and very soon he found that the seed sown was beginning to germinate, at least in the hearts of some of the hearers—their faces seemed "Zionward." This suggested the desirability of another meeting, devoted to enquirers; it was accordingly intimated that Friday evening would be spent in this way. When the night and the hour had arrived, there were about ten persons in waiting, whose earnest enquiry after truth could not be doubted. The plan adopted was, after opening the meeting, to announce it perfectly free to any who had an enquiry, or a difficulty, or any matter on their mind in which they felt need of help; and the honest souls were not slow to take advantage of the privilege; for some who could read, had been led to examine the Scriptures at home, and noted their difficulties, in order to present them for solution. This meeting has proved very useful, and altogether successful, as may be judged by the fact, that from ten it has increased to an average attendance of thirty persons, who feel and exercise the greatest liberty in their search after the meaning of Scripture. The result of all this has been, that a number of the most careless, and some of the most vile of sinners, have been led to confess the name of Christ, become united to him in baptism, and are living in the enjoyment of him, not being ashamed to own his name where they once blasphemed it.

The meetings had not been continued long, when the friend, at whose house they are held, began to feel, that to be a Baptist is not to be altogether such as the Lord desires; her peace of mind was destroyed, and she began looking for a remedy: she made an appeal through a brother professing to be like-minded, for a return to the primitive ordinances, but in vain; the customs of her church could not so easily be abolished, and after great conflict of mind, she determined to separate herself from the ties she had held dear for 44 years—from the congregation that had been shepherded by her own husband before the days of her widowhood—and to follow none but Christ; this she did, and her soul has been blessed!

For some time there has been inconvenience from the accommodation being too small; but now our dear sister has sought to remove this, by having an upper room constructed, and adding to it another room, which, together, will hold 80 or 90 persons. The place was opened by a meeting for prayer at seven o'clock on the morning of Lord's-day, April 21st, and a precious meeting we had. On the day following about eighty met and took tea, after which we had another good meeting. Addresses were given by Bros. Coop, McDougall, and several others, among whom were some of the recent converts. The prayer-meeting in the morning has been continued, and proves a profitable season; the attendance at this early hour reaches over 30. We humbly commend such meetings to our brethren; there is strength and life in them, and power with the Highest. "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much."

J. COLLIN.

BETHANY, U.S.

We have enjoyed the pleasure of a delightful meeting, continued for one week in Bethany, by our zealous and laborious Bro. Franklin, editor of the Christian Review. Before coming out to Bethany, Bro. Franklin held a protracted meeting of two weeks in Wheeling, where, we learn, he succeeded in securing a fine hearing, and in adding to the church fourteen members. His labors there, we feel assured, will still further result in great and permanent good to the cause. His preaching in Bethany was attended by large and deeply interested audiences. His earnest and instructive treatment of the great questions which are perpetually raised wherever and whenever the primitive gospel is proclaimed in its original simplicity and authority, excited a lively interest in the minds of his hearers—and a goodly number were persuaded to turn to the Lord. Forty souls have been added to the congregation of the saved, of whom twenty-two were students of Bethany College. Besides the permanent increase of numbers and strength accruing to our congregation from the conversion of so many of our esteemed fellow-citizens, we particularly rejoice because of the wide-spread influence that must be exerted through the twenty-two young men, who, in the prime of life, have thus enlisted, heart and soul, in the service of the Messiah. Two of them are from Mexico, and the other twenty represent ten different states of the American Union! Of noble nature, fine talents, and thorough education, what may they not do, under the sustaining hand of the Lord, to spread the triumphs of the cross? Seventy-two of the students of Bethany College are now members of the church, and it makes our hearts rejoice to know that a nobler and truer band of young disciples, than this, we have never known. During the progress of this refreshing meeting, all hearts seemed engaged in prayer and exhortation, public and private, for the salvation of souls. The worth of the immortal souls, and the grandeur of eternal life, never seemed more really and practically felt and exhibited than in these earnest labors for the salvation of their fellow students. Indeed the piety and influence of the Adelpian Society have never been more signally felt than during the present session. Their example and prayers have not been in vain. This great ingathering through the earnest and able efforts of Bro. Franklin has awoken the voice of gratitude and praise in many a distant home, and made the yearning hearts of not a few solicitous parents glad with exceeding joy. On into the future these triumphs will roll their influence, and not until we sit down together, in the heavenly Canaan, under that rest that yet remains for the people of God, will we be able to measure or to mark its progress or power. We rejoice and hope.

April, 1860. W. K. P.

OBITUARIES.

MARY ANN WALLIS.

We have the painful duty of announcing the decease of our sister, Mary Ann Wallis, daughter of Brother and Sister Thomas Wallis, of Nottingham, who was removed from us on the 25th of May, 1860, aged 31 years. She was a member of Christ's church seventeen years, and now rests with Him whom in much weakness and affliction she served on earth.

MRS. MARGARET FOX.

After twenty years of trial and suffering from bodily affliction, this patient sister has been called to her home, to realize that happiness which is promised to all who are faithful unto death. It was a great pleasure to hear her exclaim with the Apostle Paul, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also who love his appearing." Although so extremely weak in body, eight years ago she was immersed, and has continued anxiously looking for Him who has in His own time answered her prayer, and taken her to himself.

S. HULME.

Shrewsbury, June 12, 1860.

FRANCIS KEMP.

This brother was born at Belton, Rutlandshire, England. He was afflicted with severe headache five years ago, when he left England for Australia; and, except one year in the colony, he has been afflicted with the same. For a considerable portion of time he was so dreadfully afflicted that it was thought a growth, of some kind, must be pressing on the brain. For more than half a year he has suffered from gradual palsy, and sank under the mighty load on the 7th current. He was strong in the faith, giving glory to God. He was baptized by the late Dr. Cox when an apprentice, and became an active Sunday School teacher; he was afterwards superintendent of a district Sunday School in London, where he was highly approved. He was "a living epistle of Christ." His ardour in the cause of the Redeemer will be long remembered by his bereft brethren. His mind was serene—his faith clear without a cloud. As an index of the state of his mind, the mere fact of his having requested two hymns to be sung at his funeral, beginning "Not all the blood of beasts," and "Friend after friend departs," is conclusive. He fell asleep in Jesus. His death drew forth suitable addresses to the church and to the world. May we all profit by it. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." He has left to the care of our Heavenly Father a widowed sister in Christ, a daughter, and three sons. May the children follow the bright example of the departed. He was in his 46th year.

ALEXANDER STEVENSON, who was one of our deacons, passed through the valley and shadow of death on Wednesday last, 18th current. He was born in the vicinity of Bannockburn, Scotland, and was seriously impressed when a Sunday scholar at an early age; afterwards becoming a member of the Relief Presbyterian congregation at 15. He was an active Sunday School teacher. At an early age he became an English Baptist at Stirling. He came out in The Ticonderago, in which the most terrible mortality prevailed that probably ever befel any ship to Australia. Fever cut off on the passage and quarantine ground here about 150 persons, his pious wife falling a victim to the pestilence, and he had very narrow escape for his life, but he was much benefitted by his sister, who came out with him. He became a member of a free communion Baptist congregation here, but frequenting our place, he decided to unite himself to us, which he did in October, 1855. The congregation he left is now under the pastoral care of Mr. Isaac New, whose successor in Birmingham has joined the Reformation. It was rare indeed for Bro. Stevenson to be absent from morning and evening services whilst residing in Melbourne; and on removing to St. Kilda he was regular in his attendance in the morning. About three months ago he was attacked by acute inflammation, producing rapid consumption. During his illness he appeared calm and happy, requesting, on one occasion, that the hymn might be sung, " 'Tis religion that can give." Last Lord's day morning the event was improved by Bro. Thomson, sen. in a pathetic address from Heb. ii. 14, 15; and in the evening a discourse was given based on Ps. xxxvii. 37. Our two brethren have proved in the prospect of dissolution, that it is no vain thing to serve the Lord. Bro. Stevenson has also left a sister-widow and three daughters on the care of Him who is the widow's stay and the orphan's help. May we all be faithful, and so join our departed brethren in the realm of eternal bliss.

R. SEAVICZ.

Melbourne, Victoria, April 24, 1860.

August, 1860.

DISCOURSE ON ELECTION.*

BY E. GOODWIN.

"Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ : grace unto you, and peace be multiplied" (1 Peter, i. 1, 2.)

FROM many expressions found in this epistle, it seems to have been written at a time of great persecution. On account of their attachment to Christ and his holy religion, Christians were driven from their homes, and scattered abroad through the various parts of the countries named in the commencement of this epistle. And now, lest they should be overcome by sufferings and poverty, and thus be led to abandon the cause of Christ, Peter writes this letter for the purpose of comforting them in their deep distress. Hence, he says to them in the 4th chapter, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you ; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

Among the many things which he brings to their remembrance as sources of consolation, is the fact that they are the elect of God—elected according to his foreknowledge. And I ask, what was better calculated to comfort them, in the midst of the sufferings and deaths to which they were constantly exposed, than the fact that they were God's elect, or chosen people? They could well say, in view of this fact, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

From this scripture, as well as many others which might be quoted, you see that the doctrine of election is a Bible doctrine. I take the ground, that the Scriptures teach the doctrine of election by grace.

But in regard to this Bible doctrine, there are two general views entertained. Some present the subject in the following light :—

Long before time began, there was a secret covenant entered into between the Father and the Son, by virtue of which a certain number of the human family was given to Christ. These, Christ agreed with the Father, to save, and therefore he will save them. These are the elect, and their salvation was thus unconditionally secured from all eternity. This is called eternal election, and the number thus elected is said to be so definite, that it cannot be increased or diminished. [I have always wondered, if this electing covenant was a secret covenant, how the preachers found it out.] It is further held, that those who are not embraced in that eternal covenant, are passed by in the councils of redemption, so that there is no salvation for them — they must perish, and that for ever. It was once taught that these were reprobated from all eternity to everlasting damnation ; but I believe there are few now, if any, who openly avow that sentiment. Instead of saying the elect and reprobate, now, they say, the elect and the passed by.

The other view of the doctrine of

